that there would be an amount of $24.5 million per year to fund forestry in the Territories.

We do not have much of a problem regarding forest fires in the Northwest Territories. I recall that a few years ago we had a dry season, and many people around the Inuvik area were concerned that fire would affect the area, because there was not sufficient equipment to fight fires. However, we now have sufficient equipment, and according to Senator Barootes we now have two water bombers. I do not know how many fires can be dealt with in one day, but it helps to have that equipment.

The majority of the members of the territorial council are native people. There are 122 persons who work in the forestry, but we could not find out how many of those people live in the Territories or are being transferred from the Fort Smith, Yellowknife and Inuvik regions to work for the Department of Forestry or the Department of Indian Affairs. Today the native people want more control over their resources. They want self-government and the responsibility of looking after their own facilities. The government now appears to be more in favour of transferring responsibility to the Northwest Territories Council, and the fact that there will be more control over forestry is a good step forward.

Since I have lived in Ottawa I have learned a little about trees. I bought property here in Ottawa, and the Ontario Forestry Department prepared some plans for me. I have been able to watch my trees grow over the past three years. There are about ten sawmills in the Northwest Territories, and some of the trees up there are of better quality than many of those in the south. From 1970 to 1975 I was on the territorial council, and we used to visit some of those sawmills. In those days financing was never successful, because the operation up north is different from that in the south and costs are higher. During the winter prices go up and operating costs are twice as high. Because of the weather, more power is used, people live in bunkhouses, and it costs a good deal to operate the sawmills.

I have heard that some of the trees between Yellowknife and Hay River are of very good quality. Some of them are used in factories to build furniture. Nahanni is a very nice, small community, and houses there have to be built of logs. The people who live there prefer to live in log houses. Southerners suggest that we have their type of houses. But the people up there say, "No, we want our houses built from our own trees." I think that is a good thing. The people up there have the facilities to do that. However, our houses are a lot more expensive because of transportation costs, and so on. The costs are high and houses are expensive to construct. As I say, it is a good thing to have our forests administered in the territory.

Around 1967 the government in Ottawa started to move into Yellowknife. Transair used to operate between Winnipeg and Churchill. At that time Stu Hodgson, with his staff, was moving from Ottawa to Yellowknife. Students from all over the Territories and northern Quebec used to have to go to high school in Churchill. At the time I was working for the military. We were told that the commissioner would be coming through and that there would be new headquarters in the Territories.

All the Inuit living in Churchill had to go to the airport to meet with Stu Hodgson and officials from the Department of Indian Affairs and the then minister, the Honourable Arthur Laing. That was about 1967, and the move was to Yellowknife.

● (1540)

In 1970 I moved from Churchill to Rankin Inlet. Later that year I ran for the territorial council and served on the territorial council from 1970 to 1974. Part of the council was appointed by the Minister of Indian Affairs in Ottawa. There were seven appointees. We learned a lot from these people, because they served in high positions either in the Government of Canada or in private companies. Today the council consists of 24 elected members. There are the ministers and one commissioner. In my time the commissioner held all the power. Today the commissioner is John Parker, who is a good friend of mine. In my time on council he was deputy commissioner to Stu Hodgson. I do not think there is any difference today between the duties of the commissioner and the duties of the lieutenant governor in, for example, Ontario. Today ministers and members of the council make their own decisions. I hope that we will be successful in transferring the treaty to the Government of the Northwest Territories. We will see what happens at the First Ministers' Conference today and tomorrow, but I hope that there will be more control for the local people and the Government of the Northwest Territories.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER COMMISSION YUKON ASSETS DISPOSAL AUTHORIZATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. R. James Balfour moved the second reading of Bill C-45, to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-45 provides for the transfer of ownership and responsibility for the Yukon assets of the Northern Canada Power Commission from the federal government to the Yukon government. The bill reflects the desire of Yukoners to gain more control over their political and economic destiny, and it has received the support of all parties in the House of Commons.

Bill C-45 is an important and historic step in the political evolution of the Yukon. That evolution began in 1898 when a parliamentary decree established Yukon as a separate territory governed by a commissioner and six appointed members. Many changes have taken place since that time. In 1979 the commissioner and appointed members were replaced by a wholly elected executive council. The party system as we know it emerged, and elected representatives were assigned portfolios by the leader of the majority party. Today the Yukon Assembly consists of 16 elected members.

But the political evolution of Yukon is ongoing. Northerners are eager to accept responsibility for institutions, programs and services now provided and administered by the federal government. They are ready and they are able to assume control of their daily lives. The federal government has welcomed this development, and this is reflected in its commitment to devolution of responsibility to the north. That commitment is based on some key principles. Government services should be administered at a local level as close as possible to the people served. Canadians should not be subjected to overlap, duplication and extra costs in the delivery of government programs, and northerners have the same rights as other Canadians to run their own affairs.

Concrete measures have already been taken to facilitate the devolution process. For example, the former financing arrangements established between Ottawa and both territorial governments are enabling the Territories to plan and govern more effectively based on a predictable cashflow. Devolution of ownership and responsibility for the Yukon assets of the Northern Canada Power Commission is an important step in the devolution process.

I would like to provide honourable senators with some background on the Northern Canada Power Commission and the important consultations leading up to Bill C-45. The NCPC was established in 1948 as the Northwest Territories Power Commission, a crown corporation set up to provide electrical power to mining operations in the Northwest Territories. In 1950 the corporation's services were extended to include the Yukon, and in 1956 its name was changed to reflect this broadened mandate. Today the NCPC has evolved into the principal agency generating and transmitting electrical power north of 60. As such, it is central to economic development prospects in the north. Clearly, control of this utility must be placed in the hands of northerners.

That was a conclusion of the subcommittee on NCPC of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which was chaired by Mr. Keith Penner, M.P. When it examined the role of NCPC in 1982, it recommended that separate crown corporations be established in each territory to assume the commission's assets.

On coming to power the current federal government immediately entered into discussions on this issue with both territories. In November 1985 a memorandum of understanding was signed by the federal and territorial governments establishing the following principles for the NCPC transfer negotiations. First, that the quality and integrity of electrical service in the Territories be maintained; second, that the legal and financial integrity and mandate of NCPC be maintained during the transition period; third, that the interests of northern power consumers be protected, and, finally, that NCPC employees affected by the transfer be given fair and equitable treatment.

Those negotiations resulted in an historic agreement in principle signed by the federal and Yukon governments in December last year. Bill C-45 is the enabling legislation to implement that agreement.

I am sure that honourable senators will join me in commending the two levels of government for negotiating an agreement that is fair to Yukoners and to all Canadians. As a result of this agreement, Yukoners will soon be managing their own utility according to what they believe is best for them.

I would now like to outline for honourable senators the basic elements of the agreement which, quite appropriately, was announced in Whitehorse by Yukon government leader, Tony Penikett, and the Federal Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Bill McKnight. The two governments have determined the value of NCPC's Yukon assets at $95 million as of March 31, 1987. The Yukon's equity in the utility will be $39 million. Half of this amount will be in a cash payment to be made by the Yukon while the remaining $19.5 million will be provided by the federal government through conversion of NCPC's current debt to equity and the transfer of this equity to the Yukon. The remaining $56 million utility debt will be held by the federal government in two separate bonds.

The first—a $16 million bond—will be based on commercial terms, requiring a minimum annual principal payment of $400,000. The Yukon will be entitled to repay the bond at any time in whole or in part, without notice or bonus. Interest on the bond will be 9 per cent for ten years, after which the outstanding principal will be refinanced by the Yukon utility.

The second bond—for $40 million—will be held on much more flexible terms. Payment of principal and interest on this bond will depend on the economic conditions prevailing in the Yukon. Interest will be charged at 7 per cent for 40 years. These flexible payment terms—which were also recommended by the standing committee in 1982—will provide the Yukon power consumers with long-term protection from rate increases brought on by major economic downturns.

Ownership and control of the transferred assets will be placed with the Yukon Power Corporation, a crown corporation of the Yukon government. It is important to note that the Yukon Power Corporation will offer jobs to all current NCPC employees located in the territory, with comparable salaries and benefits.

Under the terms of the agreement, the Yukon Power Corporation will acquire all NCPC assets located in the territory. These include four hydro stations, five diesel generating stations, related transmission and distribution facilities, houses, and other related utility assets.

An important element of this agreement is that the Yukon Power Corporation will freeze consumer rates at current levels for a minimum of two years from the date of transfer. Along with the flexible bond payment terms, this will enable the utility to provide consumers with some much needed stability during the transition period.

The agreement also ensures local control over rates, subsidies, equalization programs and services. The new utility will be regulated by the Yukon Utility Board. It will be directly accountable to the people of the Yukon and will make important decisions on capital projects using the territory's electrical system to stimulate economic development and diversification. In this regard, plans are already under way in the territory to proceed with engineering and feasibility studies of two major projects: The upgrading or replacement of the Mayo Dam and construction of the North Fork hydro plant in Dawson. As the utility's manager, the Yukon Electrical Company will be responsible for providing a high standard of service to all customers at reasonable rates.

I spoke earlier of a new optimism in the north. Today Yukoners have good reason to be optimistic about their economic future. Activity in the mineral industry—historically the backbone of the northern economy—is on the rise. In the past year the Yukon has experienced a 6 per cent increase in full-time employment, an 8 per cent increase in tourism, and a 10 per cent increase in retail trade. In conjunction with this economic health, devolution is clearly progressing at a reasonable and practical pace.

Discussions are proceeding on the transfer to the Yukon of responsibility for health services and inland fisheries. Negotiations are expected to begin soon in areas such as mine safety and the Attorney General function. These discussions reflect the federal government's commitment to the devolution of program responsibility to a local level and ensure the continued political maturation of the northern territories.

Honourable senators, we can do our part in this political coming of age by providing quick and unanimous passage of Bill C-45.

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, it is a good day for not only the Yukon but the Northwest Territories. I think Senator Adams and I both appreciate the fact that Senator Barootes and Senator Balfour have given us not only an introduction to the legislation but a good history of both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, which is kind of nice to hear when you represent those areas. It is good to know that other people are aware that you are alive and well sometimes. I thank both Senator Barootes and Senator Balfour for that.

I would also like to make a few personal remarks on this bill. Again, I do not need to go into the details on it. It has already been very well covered by Senator Balfour. However, I would like to make a few remarks. First of all, I think that Mr. McKnight, the minister representing the federal government, and Mr. Penikett, the representative of the Government of the Yukon Territory, should both be congratulated on arriving at a deal that seems to be good for the people of both the Yukon and the people of Canada. I believe it was Mr. Penikett who stated that the transfer price agreements are fair to both Canadian taxpayers and Yukon consumers, and that employee interests have been protected in a fair and equitable manner. Honourable senators, those are important statements when you are dealing with something like this. The fallout from this type of arrangement can sometimes be pretty devastating for the people in the north, and it is nice to know that these concerns were met.

There are a couple of statements I would like to read. The first is by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Bill McKnight. He said:

This historic agreement marks an important turning point for Yukoners to chart their own economic future, set their own priorities and acquire complete jurisdiction and control over electrical energy.

Honourable senators, Yukoners have always been very vocal when discussing provincial government types of operations where they make their own decisions. I have always been one of the people who spoke against provincial status for the Yukon.

I know that I have been in the wilderness on that many times. Our member in the other place has always thought that the Yukon should have provincial status. I have never doubted that the Yukon will have provincial status some day, but I do not think that should take place now. I do not think the people of the Yukon want that now. The type of action that is being taken by the federal government and by the Government of the Yukon Territory is the action the people of the Yukon want to see.

● (1600)

To suggest that we were prepared at some earlier stage, or to suggest that we are prepared at this stage, to take on the full responsibility of running the territory is just not realistic when one thinks of the fact that there are 25,000 people living there, 15,000 living in the city of Whitehorse alone, and the fact that the land size is the same as that in the four Atlantic provinces combined.

Senator Doody: Including Labrador?

Senator Lucier: I did not include Labrador.

Senator Doody: That is the Canadian view!

Senator Lucier: Yukoners are now running a large part of their own operations and they are doing that very well. We have some very competent people in the Yukon. Those people will continue to do a good job of running facilities when we do take them over.

Mr. Penikett said that Yukoners will use the acquired authority responsibly and responsively, that they will maintain a viable and financially accountable utility operation while responding to Yukoners' wishes for stable and predictable power rates, and using hydro resources as an economic development tool.

The Yukon has great hydro potential. We think the Yukon has a lot of development potential because of its mines and its natural resources. So this is not a small transfer; this is a meaningful transfer as far as we are concerned.

[Senator Lucier.]

I should also like to say something that is not said often enough, that is that we from the north have two good friends sitting in the other place. I know there are many friends of the Yukon sitting in the other place, but there are two especially good friends, and I am speaking of Mr. Keith Penner, the member for Cochrane-Superior, and Dave Nickerson, the member for Western Arctic. Mr. Penner was the chairman of the subcommittee of the legislative committee of the other place which studied the NCPC and came up with the report on which this bill is based.

Both of those gentlemen are good supporters of the north and are gentlemen who work hard for their constituents. I do not think that is recognized often enough. In the north we associate the work of the House of Commons with Question Period, but that is not the way it is. In many cases there are many people, such as the two gentlemen I have just referred to, who work hard on behalf of Yukoners and the people of the Northwest Territories. I think that should be recognized from time to time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I should also like to mention people such as Mr. Jack Beaver and Mr. James Smith, a former Commissioner of the Yukon Territory. He worked hard for the Northern Canada Power Commission and put it into good shape. It is not a bad operation now, considering it is a very capital intensive facility and serves very few people. Anyone who might suggest it will make a great deal of money quickly is not being realistic. A great deal of good management has gone into the Northern Canada Power Commission. That commission has received its knocks in the past, but many employees have done a good job on behalf of Northern Canada Power Commission.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I should like to say that we appear to have a very unusual deal on our hands. I say that because it seems to please both the federal and the Yukon governments as well as the people of the Yukon.

Senator Neiman as chairman of the committee talked to the Mayor of Whitehorse, Mr. Penikett, members of his cabinet, and other people from the Yukon. There is general agreement that this is a good deal, and it is very unusual to have everyone agreeing that it is a good deal.

I hope there is enough built-in flexibility to accomplish what this bill sets out to do. As long as this is treated with some careful thought in the future, this will work, but we must remember that we are dealing with a small population base, very few customers, and a very capital intensive operation.

If things do not go right, I think Mr. Penikett and members of his cabinet will have to answer to the Yukoners, as they should. That is what this is all about.

I congratulate Mr. Penikett and his government and the federal government of the day for putting this together. I will support this bill. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to give it third reading now so that it gets on its way.

I thank Senator Balfour for bringing this forward.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. R James Balfour, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(2)(b), moved that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

● (1610)

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 1, 1987-88

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-48, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving third reading of this bill I had undertaken to get an answer to a question that was raised by Senator Stewart regarding the implications of a statement by the Minister of Energy regarding the implementation of the program as quoted in a newspaper article.

I am informed that no money will be given out until legislation is passed or supplementary estimates are given Royal Assent. I am told that this is verified by the Department of Energy, the Department of Finance and the Treasury Board. The program indeed starts on April 1, but no money will be disbursed until the necessary authority has been given by Parliament.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF COAL IN CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, March 25, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of coal in Canada, or any matter related thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than 31st March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, may I address briefly the two motions, Nos. 5 and 6, standing in my name and presented to the Senate on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The two motions refer to two vital aspects of Canada's energy affairs: the state of our domestic coal industry and the outcome of natural gas deregulation.

The Canadian coal industry has shown remarkable growth since the mid-1970s as disruptions in world oil trade and huge price increases for petroleum turned attention to Canada's abundant coal resources. The industry responded to this opportunity, developing both its domestic and foreign markets as it rapidly expanded productive capacity.

In 1985 Canada produced a record 60.7 million tonnes of coal—55 per cent for domestic use and 45 per cent destined for the export market. Coal now accounts for 17 per cent of Canada's primary use of energy, and that share has been steadily increasing. Coal exports earn approximately $2 billion annually.

Today, however, the situation has changed dramatically. An oversupply of both metallurgical and thermal coal in world markets is driving down coal prices. The domestic coal industry is struggling with about ten million tonnes of excess capacity, and foreign purchasers are pressuring Canadian producers to lower prices further and reduce shipments.

In British Columbia's coal industry, for example, the return on equity fell from 16.2 per cent in 1982 to 1.1 per cent in 1985, and earnings as a percentage of revenues dropped from 12.1 per cent to 0.7 per cent over the same period.

Canada's coal industry is at a watershed, and the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources proposes to undertake a comprehensive study of its present condition and future prospects.

The second energy matter that requires the close attention of Parliament is the outcome of natural gas deregulation. Natural gas has increased its importance in Canada's energy system since the upheavals of 1973-74. The second price shock of 1979-80 and consequent federal policy to promote the substitution of gas and other fuels for oil accelerated this change.

Today natural gas accounts for approximately 30 per cent of Canada's consumption of primary energy. It is steadily overtaking oil as Canada's primary energy commodity.

Natural gas is also one of Canada's most important export commodities. In a typical year one-third of our production is sold to American customers. In 1985 the value of those exports was about $4 billion.

It had been hoped that deregulation would resolve many of the problems facing the gas industry, but deregulation has proven to be a complicated, complex journey.

A difficult transition has been made worse by depressed petroleum prices and recent regulatory initiatives of the United States Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, and there are now indications that some provincial governments may move to regulate in the wake of federal deregulation.

Many detailed issues await resolution in the direct purchase of natural gas, in third-party gas carriage, in bypass regulations, in moving larger volumes of gas under short-term contracts, and in service charges. Your Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources considers it most important that these situations be closely monitored as these issues are resolved. The committee proposes to follow this evolution in the Canadian gas industry and report on the state of gas marketing in the aftermath of deregulation with its resultant impact on producers, consumers and other interested parties.

Honourable senators, I commend the motion to you and ask you to approve these two timely and vital topics for study by the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF NATURAL GAS IN CANADA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, March 25, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of natural gas in Canada with particular reference to natural gas deregulation, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than 31 March, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, I think I covered any remarks that I might have wished to make with respect to this motion when I spoke to motion No. 5. I also commend motion No. 6 to honourable senators and on behalf of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources seek your approval for this study.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 31, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act and to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Maritime Code Act and the Oil and Gas Production and Conservation Act in consequence thereof (Bill C-39, Chapter 7, 1987)

An Act to amend the Territorial Lands Act (Bill C-43, Chapter 8, 1987)

An Act to authorize the disposal of certain assets in the Yukon Territory that are held or used by the Northern Canada Power Commission and to provide for other matters in connection therewith (Bill C-45, Chapter 9, 1987)

The Honourable Marcel Danis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service:

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988 (Bill C-48, Chapter 10, 1987)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 31, 1987, at 2 p.m.

• (1630)

At 4.45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER TABLED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the period ended March 31, 1986, as required by the Privacy Act.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is that report automatically referred to the Joint Committee on Official Languages or must we have a motion to do that?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have a motion here covering that matter.

Senator Frith: Very well, thank you.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-28, to amend the Criminal Code (torture).

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, bill place on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-38, respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave, later this day.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we find it impossible to deal with second reading of this bill today. We would need notice until Thursday.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if leave is not forthcoming, obviously we will have to wait until Thursday to deal with this bill. It was our hope that we would have leave today, since this is the last day of the current fiscal year. It was part of the financial plan of the government to try to have this divestiture completed by the end of this fiscal year so that the proceeds can be included in this year's accounts.

However, since that is not to be, of course, we will have to wait until Thursday, which will be the next fiscal year.

As I pointed out last Thursday, the government felt it important that the bill should be passed as quickly as possible, although the deal itself will not be negatively affected if the bill is not passed. I understand that somewhere around the middle of June is the cut-off date for the deal. However, the government feels it important to have access to the proceeds of the deal today for this particular fiscal year.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the bill has arrived from the House of Commons today, and in order to deal with it on March 31 it would mean we would have to give it first, second and third reading and Royal Assent in a matter of a few hours. I believe that that should be done only in the most urgent circumstances, particularly when we take into account the important principle involved, that is, the fact that we have not yet had a report from the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, although I understand we will have it today.

It seems to me that in a matter of this kind it is reasonable to have the normal amount of time to examine the bill before proceeding to second reading. That principle is important. The proceeds will be available to the government perhaps a few days later, but they will be available.

Senator Doody: On that point raised by Senator MacEachen, I would like to point out that the subject matter of the bill has been studied in committee and I understand that the report is available and will be tabled today. Copies have been prepared and are ready for honourable senators should they wish to study them in anticipation of second and third reading. However, if it is not the will of the Senate to proceed to second reading today, then that is all we can do.

I would point out as well that Royal Assent has been arranged in the expectation of third reading of Bill C-49, dealing with the Supplementary Estimates (A), on this final day of the fiscal year, and it would be convenient, of course, to deal with Bill C-38 at the same time. However, as I have said, we are in the hands of the majority.

Senator Argue: We are not a rubber stamp.

Senator Doody: Is that the royal "we"?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Doody, seconded by the Honourable Senator Macdonald, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations) presented Bill S-6, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Bill read first time.

On motion of Senator Doody, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Thursday next.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT— PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the following petition:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes in Bill C-22 will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health-care programs and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and

WHEREAS the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian government's concession to the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

FISHERIES

FOURTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Jack Marshall, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 31, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Fisheries has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on October 28, 1986, to examine all aspects of the marketing of fish in Canada, and all implications thereof, respectfully requests that the date of presenting its final report be extended from 15 September 1987 to no later than 31 March 1988.

Respectfully submitted,

JACK MARSHALL
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, the committee requests that the date of presenting the final report be extended from September 15, 1987 to March 31, 1988.

The committee hopes to publish an interim report on the west coast phase of our study of the marketing of fish by June 30 next. Preparations are now under way to undertake the third and final phase of the study, the east coast, and this extension is required to enable us to submit a budget for the whole fiscal year 1987-88, with the final report published by March 31, 1988.

So, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1987-88

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc, Chairman of the Standing Committee on National Finance, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 31, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

NINTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred Bill C-49, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March 1988, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Thursday, March 26, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

● (1410)

[English]

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): With leave, later this day.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Doody if the bill is needed later this day? Is it necessary that this bill be passed before the end of the fiscal year? Earlier today the Deputy Leader of the Government made reference to the anticipation that Royal Assent would be given today to two bills. Apparently, one of those bills is not going forward. Is there any reason why we should give third reading to this bill today?

Senator Doody: My understanding, honourable senators, is that this bill is needed today in order to make payments to the farmers under the grain assistance program. In committee this morning I put this question to the witness:

Assuming that we do not get this bill today, what will happen to the program?

The gentleman from the Treasury Board, Mr. Darling, answered:

The short answer is that we would not be in a position to make payments to the farmers entitled to receive funds under this program until such time as the supply bill is passed. So we would be holding up payments to individual farmers.

I can only say, once again, that we are at the disposal of the chamber. If honourable senators wish to give us leave, the bill will receive Royal Assent this afternoon. If honourable senators do not wish to give us leave, the bill will not receive Royal Assent today. We will simply pass the bill when the rules permit us to do so.

Senator Frith: Which is tomorrow.

Senator Doody: Yes, which is tomorrow.

Senator Stewart: In response to that, may I say that it is obvious that if there is no money that can legally be paid tomorrow, cheques cannot be written. The crucial question is: Is there a need to write cheques tomorrow?

Senator Balfour: Ask the farmers!

Senator Stewart: I have here the testimony of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture when he appeared before the committee. He was asked whether the government needs this money by April 1. The record of the committee shows that he responded as follows:

We have started calculating the returns, the application forms and the confirmation forms which will continue into early April, and we expect to begin issuing cheques in May. The bulk of them likely will be issued by the end of May.

That evidence indicates that the government does not anticipate writing cheques tomorrow.

Honourable senators, I really have no great objection to giving the bill third reading today. What I do object to is the tactics that are being employed to wring from senators agreement to waive the rules. That is my point. The Deputy Leader of the Government knows very well what I am talking about, because he was surprised to hear the evidence in the committee. I think he will agree with me that I have given a fairly accurate summary of the evidence that was heard in committee. As I have said, I am prepared to let the bill go forward if other honourable senators agree; but let us not base that agreement on the notion that there is an urgent need for the bill to be passed and to receive Royal Assent this day.

Senator Doody: On that very question, senator, I raised it in committee this morning. I said:

When do we need Supplementary Estimates (A)?

That is pretty straightforward. I said:

I have been under the impression that they are necessary for the end of this fiscal year; the new fiscal year begins

April 1, spending authority is required before that date, and so on. Is that not so?

The answer from Mr. Crandall of the Treasury Board was:

Mr. Darling said that the funds were not needed until fiscal 1987-88, and that is right. But that fiscal year begins tomorrow. Those funds, as we have pointed out, are not in the Main Estimates. Therefore, beginning as early as tomorrow, there could be charges against this appropriation. The purpose of these estimates is to supplement a vote of the Department of Agriculture, vote 35. This is vote 35a . . .

This is vote 35a, which is a very small portion of that vote. They have about $7 million in vote 35, and they can use it in the absence of this vote; and that is a decision which honourable senators can make here and now. They can start working on their cheques up to $7 million, and then they will stop the payments.

I am not trying to wring assent out of anyone. I am not the recipient of farm aid in any way, shape or form. I do not get any grain payments at all from the Government of Canada and, considering the terrain in which I live, I do not anticipate getting any for quite some time. But, nevertheless, there are those in this country who are very dependent on this vote and want to get it as quickly as they can. I simply ask the Senate to give us leave to get these cheques going, or to refuse us leave and let them suffer the consequences.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I do not want to belabour the point.

Senator Doody: I don't care if they never get the cheques. This is your decision, not mine.

Senator Argue: We care.

Senator Stewart: I believe Senator Doody has not been following this agricultural program.

Senator Doody: I have been following this interminably.

Senator Stewart: The truth of the matter is that the Department of Agriculture has put out, as they say, certain confirmation forms, and they will be processing those. If the Deputy Leader of the Government were to ask the Department of Agriculture if it intended to write any cheques to farmers tomorrow, the answer would be negative, but that there would be certain continuing expenditures because they have personnel engaged and accommodations rented. Those bills can be paid out of the money which is now available. But the real pay-out, as Mr. Noreau said, will begin in May, with the bulk of the cheques being issued by the end of May.

So let there be no uncertainty. No farmer will suffer at all if the bill does not pass today. Nevertheless, as I have said twice before, I see no reason why, if we have time this afternoon, the bill should not be read the third time; then the government can arrange for Royal Assent at the first convenient time.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I would like to ask a question of the Deputy Leader of the Government. It seems to me that the question really is: Why has the government delayed so long in providing those cheques? The promise was made in November, and we are now at the end of March. My specific question is: Why has the government failed—and apparently it has failed—to take the required action to make certain that those cheques are in the hands of the farmers before seeding? Why so much delay? Why the announcement of failure to make the cheques available before seeding and the announcement that the cheques will go out in May, or even toward the end of May? If this legislation is passed today, and Royal Assent is given today, why cannot the cheques be made in April prior to seeding?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, that is a question that could have been raised at any of the various committee meetings that were held dealing with the subject matter. Notices of the meetings were sent around and all honourable senators who were members of the committee were welcome to attend and ask all the questions they wanted to ask. I am simply asking here and now for permission to pass this bill this afternoon and to give it Royal Assent later this day. That is about as far as I am willing to go. If honourable senators have other questions that they would like to raise, I will undertake to try to get answers. I do not pretend to have the technical expertise in this field, but I certainly have an interest in getting this legislation through.

I say it again for the third time, it is entirely up to the Senate whether or not it wants to give us leave to pass this bill today. Senator Stewart has stood up three times and said that he has no objection to passing this bill today, and three times he has made a speech telling us all the reasons why we should not do it. I do not know whether he can have it both ways, but I fully anticipate a fourth speech any moment.

Senator Argue: This is your fourth!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with respect, that is not what took place. The point that Senator Stewart made is about why we should give leave. If the rules are to be abridged, with leave, on a particular matter, I think it is a useful procedure to ask why.

Senator Doody: I did that.

Senator Frith: Yes. The reason given was that it would allow the government to start writing cheques tomorrow if the bill were passed today.

Senator Doody: Yes.

Senator Frith: Then we hear that the Deputy Minister of Agriculture said that they would not start to write cheques until May, even if they got the bill. So the point we are making is that the explanation does not seem to accord with what was said by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. If the deputy leader is saying to us, "I want it because I don't see any reason why we shouldn't do it today, and it's a convenient day for Royal Assent," then, frankly, I would be inclined to give leave.

Senator Doody: That is not what I said.

Senator Frith: I want to make it clear that if there is a problem with giving leave, it is simply that the reason the government gave the deputy leader for needing the appropriation today is not supported by the evidence before the committee. Apart from that, there is no reason why we cannot pass the bill today, as long as it is understood that that is not the reason, because it is not a valid reason.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, quite frankly, I have difficulty with what the honourable senator has said. I have read from the record of this morning's meeting the answer to a question that I asked exactly on that point. The Treasury Board officials, Mr. Darling and his associate, Mr. Crandall, said that they need the funds now. They said, "beginning as early as tomorrow, there could be charges against this appropriation."

Senator Argue: Does that mean cheques to the farmers?

Senator Doody: Yes, exactly. They said: "The purpose of these estimates is to supplement . . . vote 35," that they have $7 million in the vote now, and that they need additional funds to start the payments. I am not saying that the Deputy Minister of Agriculture is in error. I am simply saying that I asked a question, and that this is the answer I got. I pass it on to honourable senators, and honourable senators can make the decision themselves. I cannot do it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I believe, on the undertaking that they will start writing cheques to the farmers tomorrow, that we should give leave.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is leave granted to have third reading later this day?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading later this day.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-38 TABLED

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, in the absence of the chairman, Senator Sinclair, who is storm-bound in Toronto, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to table its Eleventh Report respecting the subject matter of Bill C-38, respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada. I might add that all members of that committee were unanimous in asking that the bill be favourably considered.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE STUDY OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED: "A STUDY TEAM REPORT TO THE TASK FORCE ON PROGRAM REVIEW (NIELSEN TASK FORCE)—SERVICE TO THE PUBLIC—VETERANS"—FOURTH
REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Arthur Tremblay, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, presented the following report:

Tuesday, March 31, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology has the honour to present its

FOURTH REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on December 16, 1986, to examine and report upon the Document entitled: "A Study Team Report to the Task Force on Program Review (Nielsen Task Force) - Service to the Public - Veterans", dated May 1985, tabled in the Senate on 12th March, 1986, and also matters arising from the report as well as any subjects of interest to the present and future requirements of Canada's veterans, respectfully requests that the date of presenting its final report be extended from 1st September 1987 to no later than 31st March 1988.

Respectfully submitted,

ARTHUR TREMBLAY
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Excuse me, but I was involved in another conversation.

What is the report about?

Senator Tremblay: I don't have the text in front of me, but it concerns the study on veterans that was referred to the Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology. A subcommittee, chaired by Senator Marshall, was created to carry out this study. The request submitted in this report is simply an administrative request to postpone from September 1—

Senator Frith: I understand now. The subject had escaped me. Thank you.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Tremblay: Considering the debate we have just had, I could hardly ask the Senate for leave to have this report considered now. I will therefore be a little less demanding, and unless the other side wants to pressure me into asking for leave to have the report adopted now, I will defer consideration of the report until the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Senator Tremblay is not using the right precedent. Before the debate on the other motion, the Senate gave leave to adopt a motion proposed by Senator Marshall who made exactly the same request. And that is why I think he should have the courage of his convictions!

Senator Tremblay: Seconded by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, I have the courage to ask for leave to adopt the report this afternoon.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not mind dealing with the report, but I was struck by the request, as I understood it, to have an additional year to complete the study. I thought I heard March 31, 1988; it is now March 31, 1987. Could the chairman of the committee tell us why an additional year is required to complete this study? Could it not be completed in an additional three months' or six months' time?

Senator Tremblay: Perhaps I expressed myself wrongly, but the fact of the matter is that the committee is supposed to report in September 1987. We are asking to delay the report until March 1988, which would mean an additional six months or so. In any case, that would be within the same fiscal year.

Senator MacEachen: The answer arouses further curiosity rather than appeasing existing curiosity. The honourable senator has told us that the committee had intended to report in September 1987, but now, several months before September, the members of the committee have concluded that it will not report until March 1988. So I look with curiosity upon that request and would like a clarification, but I will not ask a third question.

Senator Tremblay: With respect to the question referring to the substance of the work to be done, I would ask Senator Marshall, who is chairman of the subcommittee concerned with that problem, to clarify the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, with respect to the task force review headed by the former Deputy Prime Minister, Erik Nielsen, there are many parts within that review that must be taken into consideration, and it will take quite some time. Our schedule was disrupted by the prorogation of Parliament, and at the moment we are waiting until after the fiscal year is over in order to get a budget. There are many other aspects to veterans' legislation that arise and that are ongoing. One of those aspects is the problem with veterans who served overseas and who, in order to qualify for War Veterans Allowance, must return to Canada for 365 days.

In the past a piece of legislation was advanced by the Minister of Veterans Affairs which contained a duality provision which satisfied a certain number of the wives of deceased veterans who were also receiving Prisoner of War compensation. However, there is another aspect of the regulations as they relate to veterans who died and whose widows are in receipt of a disability pension of under 48 per cent. In those circumstances the duality provision is different.

Honourable senators, considering the number of days that are allotted for Senate committees between now and the summer recess, it is my opinion that consideration of this matter will take longer than the period to September of 1987. Also, there are other matters that have to be taken into consideration. There is the amalgamation of the Pension Review Board with the War Veterans Allowance Board, for example, and many other changes being considered.

Veterans Affairs is a subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, and in order to ensure that we will have enough time to produce a report covering all of the aspects necessary, I think this will take longer than the period to September 1987. I therefore ask that the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs be allowed to consider this matter until March 1988.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, that this report be now adopted.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CLOSING OF MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY, BEDFORD
INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTIONS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, April 2, 1987, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the policy and actions of this government with respect to research and development, having particular reference to the closing of the Marine Ecology Laboratory (M.E.L.) at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday next, April 2, 1987, I will move:

That the present formal procedure of Royal Assent be retained and that it be used (a) at the request of the Governor General or of either House of Parliament and (b) at least once a session, for example at the prorogation of a session;

That, in addition to the present practice, a simpler procedure be established based on the following principles: (a) that the procedure involve representation from both the Senate and the House of Commons, (b) that it be public, and (c) that the declaration of Royal Assent be subsequently reported to both Houses of Parliament; and

That representatives of the Senate meet with representatives of the House of Commons to draft a resolution for a joint Address of both Houses to be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General praying that she approve such changes to the Royal Assent ceremony as described in this motion.

PATENT ACT

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Thursday, April 2, 1987, I will move:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto;

That the Bill be referred to the said special committee, in due course;

That nine Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

[Translation]

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Excuse me, Your Honour, could I have a copy of the notice of motion, since it is quite possible that I will have something to say about it?

Senator Frith: Certainly.

[English]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I see that this is a notice of motion to appoint a subcommittee to examine the subject matter of Bill C-22. I simply wish to say that normally a notice of motion of this kind would ask for leave of the Senate and would be presented notwithstanding that rule of the Senate which requires that Bill C-22, in this case, be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Honourable senators, the notice of motion is there. I simply wish to enter my reservation and to establish my right to raise a point of order with respect to the content of the motion when it comes before us tomorrow or the next day.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Report of the Commissioner of Official Languages for the calendar year 1986, tabled in the Senate on 31st March, 1987 (Sessional Paper No. 332-265) be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

THE CONSTITUTION—ENTRENCHMENT OF RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT—FAILURE OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE TO REACH AGREEMENT—DEFINITION OF "SELF-GOVERNMENT"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether he would throw some light on the failure of the federal-provincial conference last week, which was called to establish a way of providing self-government for the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am not sure I can add very much to what the Senate already knows.

The failure of that First Ministers' Conference to agree on entrenchment of the right to self-government for aboriginal peoples in our Constitution is much to be regretted. We have reached the end of this particular constitutional process.

The compromise position put forward by the Prime Minister on behalf of the Government of Canada, built on previous drafts by the Provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, is still on the table. If at any time it appeared that the political will existed to address the matter again, the Prime Minister would not hesitate to convene another conference. Meanwhile, I note that a number of provinces have in the course of the conference re-affirmed their commitment, with or without constitutional amendment, to proceed with the negotiation of self-government agreements. This is a commitment that the Government of Canada shares enthusiastically, and we will call upon the provinces which have made those commitments to honour them.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I wonder if the minister could tell us what objections were raised by the dissenting provinces against the draft constitutional amendment which had been circulated by the Government of Canada. What, in particular, did the provinces which disagreed find difficult with that amendment?

Senator Murray: While I hesitate to make myself spokesman for those provinces, my honourable friend will be aware that, in particular, the western provinces had reservations about the draft put forward by the Prime Minister.

The objection, basically, is that entrenching the right to self-government in the Constitution without very considerable definition is a bad idea, in their view, and makes them particularly vulnerable to various forms of litigation. I say "particularly vulnerable," because those provinces have such a high proportion of the total aboriginal population of Canada living within their borders.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the representatives of the aboriginal peoples were favourably disposed to the federal draft, or did they also have difficulties with it.

Perhaps I can add another question: Can the Leader of the Government put any flesh on the concept of self-government, as the term was used in the draft? I understand that it was expected that future negotiations would determine exactly what the form of self-government would be. Indeed, it would be negotiable in particular instances. Were there in the course of the discussion any emerging points on which all parties agreed as to what self-government might be?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, again I hesitate to make myself the spokesman for the aboriginal groups. Chief Erasmus and the leaders of the Inuit Committee on National Issues, the Native Council of Canada, and the Metis National Council all spoke for themselves and for their people at the close of the conference.

The right to self-government was not to be negotiated. We were prepared to recognize the explicit right of the aboriginal peoples to self-government in the Constitution, and we were also prepared to entrench in the Constitution the commitment of the federal government and the provincial governments, where applicable, to come to the negotiating table. We were prepared to entrench the agreements that were thus negotiated. We were prepared further to stipulate in the Constitution that nothing in any of those agreements would derogate from any rights that the aboriginal peoples have now, or think they have, by virtue of section 35 of the Constitution. The right to self-government was not to be negotiable. What would be negotiable would be the division of powers as between the federal, provincial and aboriginal governments; the kinds of institutions that would be set up; and the question of lands, resources and financial resources. All those matters were to have been negotiated in a political process—the agreements, as I say, to be entrenched in the Constitution.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that negotiations would take place to determine precisely what self-government would consist of. Perhaps I put my question improperly, but I wanted to find out whether, in the absence of a total agreement, there were any emerging signs of consensus as to what might constitute self-government?

I noticed that in the draft it is indicated that negotiations could refer to land, resources, and so on, and that the question of funding was mentioned. I wonder whether that was interpreted to include taxes. Would a self-governing body of the aboriginal people potentially have the power to levy its own taxes and make its own expenditures within the area of competence of its governing body?

Senator Murray: The answer to that question is in the affirmative, honourable senators.

ESTABLISHMENT OF MODELS OF SELF-GOVERNMENT NORTH OF 60

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, on the same subject, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question concerning Indian self-government.

Indian leaders have criticized the federal government several times, as they are prone to do, for not being definite on what the federal government was prepared to accept as Indian self-government. I believe that no one really knows what the term "Indian self-government" means. In fact, I believe people are being very careful not to define what Indian self-government would entail.

Since the federal government was being criticized by the Indian leaders for not having staked out a position of what their view of self-government is, are there any plans for the government in the near future to set up some models of Indian self-government in the territories north of 60, an area which is totally under federal government control, where they would not have to deal with the provinces, and where they might be able to set out what the parameters for Indian self-government would be?

easier and more practical to proceed then to constitutionalize them or to have a constitutional amendment about the right of self-government. It may be easier once we have created some models of the kind to which my honourable friend refers.

● (1450)

The difference between the federal government and the representatives of the aboriginal peoples, at the end of the day, comes down to the fact that the leaders of the aboriginal organizations have made it clear that what they are seeking is recognition in the Constitution of a general, undefined and immediately enforceable, through the courts, right to self-government arising, in their view, from the unsundered sovereignty of aboriginal nations within Canada. My friend may have heard Chief Erasmus, in particular, but others as well speak of a true Confederation and of an alliance between nations in which the existing governments would have to deal with aboriginal governments on a nation-to-nation basis.

Frankly, we find that concept to be incompatible with Confederation as it now exists.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I have had a great fear from the beginning—and I have said so several times—that as long as the positions staked out by the aboriginal leaders were as rigid as they are on entrenching the rights in the Constitution that it would not be acceptable to the provincial premiers. I do not know why everyone ended up so surprised this weekend that the conference ended up the way it did; I could not see how it could end up any other way. Especially in the Yukon, before we started speaking of Indian self-government, we had a model in place that would, in effect, give the Indian people of the Yukon a large say in the running of the affairs of government as it pertained to them.

My question is—and I know that it is difficult for the government leader to answer—will he bring back to his government the view that it may be time for the government to take a look at north of the 60th parallel, where they have jurisdiction? Forget the Constitution; because of the provinces, you will not get it into the Constitution for a sizeable number of years. Forget entrenching it in the Constitution at this point, and let us come up with some models to see how it can be done. There are a lot of areas where Indian self-government can be made to work very well. The problem is not with Indian self-government, it is with entrenchment.

Senator Murray: That is the most obvious alternative in the meantime, I agree with that. However, there may be others, and we all have to reflect on the experience of not only the conference last week but also of the past five years and more in this whole process.

I want to emphasize that the amendment that we put forward and, indeed, the amendments that were put forward by Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia would not have required the aboriginal people to give up anything that they have or thought they have by way of rights that are now contained in section 35 of the Constitution.

I am not sure that the conference was doomed to failure. This is sheer speculation, and no one will ever know, but I believe that if the aboriginal representatives had shown any real interest in one of these amendments, the pressure might then have been on some of the provincial governments to come on board, and vice versa. However, the rigidity of each provided a pretext for the other to—

Senator Frith: What is the vice versa exactly?

Senator Murray: If the provincial governments had shown any interest, there would have been some pressure on the aboriginal groups—two of which had agreed in 1985 to a proposed amendment—to come on board. As it was, their rigid positions were mutually reinforcing.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—COURSES ON RESERVES—LEVEL OF FUNDING—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF OUTREACH PROGRAMS

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, last Thursday I gave notice that I would be asking questions today about the off-campus post-secondary education programs for native people.

The uncertainty in this area is now understandably heightened by the tragic failure of the Constitutional Conference on Aboriginal Rights last week.

Some of the native leaders from Alberta shared this uncertainty. In particular, the Cree nations of Hobbema expressed to some of us their fear for the future of the University of Calgary Outreach Programs at Maskwachees Cultural College in Hobbema.

For the information of senators, these programs are for adults who are pursuing degrees at the colleges in education, social work, business management, psychology and law. Through the outreach programs, they take their first two years on the reserve and finish their degrees at the university.

We are advised, honourable senators, that the college has been told that no funding has been designated after the spring session for next fall or winter, and that the whole question of off-campus post-secondary education, which has been well established for several years, is to be considered in June by the cabinet.

Could the government leader in the Senate indicate exactly what the situation is for government support for these outreach programs, which have had tremendous results for the native people?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I read the question that Senator Fairbairn asked on March 26. While she referred to concerns about the level of funding for off-campus post-secondary education courses on reserves, until now I had not been able to get to the bottom of it and ascertain exactly what the concern is. She now tells us that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development refuses to give any commitment that off-campus post-secondary education courses will be funded after the spring session.

I will look into that matter. I obtained plenty of other information about post-secondary education and expenditures by the department, which seemed to be going up at a considerable rate in recent years. In the fiscal year that ends today the expenditures went up by 16.7 per cent, and they are forecast to go up by almost 15 per cent in the fiscal year that begins tomorrow—but that does not answer my friend's question. I will try to find out what the problem is.

Senator Fairbairn: Thank you; I would be grateful for that.

Could the government leader in the Senate try to give us an assurance that the federal funding for native post-secondary education off campus will not be offered in such a way as to force the native students to go to the universities rather than having what has been a tremendously successful program to get them into the post-secondary stream on the reserves, with all of the support that that gives them?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will ask for a statement of the policy and objectives of the government in this respect. I don't know how many native students are taking courses on campus, but in the fiscal year ending today it cost over $81 million. Yes, I do know—approximately 12,000 of those students attend courses on campus. I will, however, make inquiries as to what our objectives are in this respect, and I will certainly look into the plans of the department with regard to off-campus courses.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—NATIONAL FORUM— ABORIGINAL REPRESENTATION

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have one final question. With the welcome news of a national forum on post-secondary education for Saskatchewan next October, which was announced yesterday, I believe by the Secretary of State, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate urge his colleague to include on the list of those who are named to the organizing committee of the conference a native spokesman who is familiar not just with the education system from the university perspective but who is actually from one of these off-campus colleges on a native reserve?

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—COURSES ON RESERVES— LEVEL OF FUNDING

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I attended the meeting with the Hobbema people along with Senator Fairbairn. I simply want to add my concern to the questions she has raised. There were serious policy implications in the presentation made to us by the Hobbemas in that the government would appear to be backing down from the funding of off-campus university education.

[Senator Murray.]

I might tell the Leader of the Government in the Senate that in the province of British Columbia off-campus programs providing university education have been very successful. One of the most backward steps this government could take would be to discontinue the funding of these special programs. So often we hear stories of native students being unsuccessful in terms of their education—there are high drop-out rates, and so on. Through the use of these off-campus programs, universities have been providing a proper environment in which these people can become educated. Their natural abilities can be challenged. In British Columbia there is what is called the Native Indian Teachers Education Program, or NITEP. Under the NITEP program, a few hundred teachers have been educated in the province of British Columbia in the last few years—a tremendous number of people have come through the system. After completing three years of study, they go on to take their final year on the university campus. For this they receive a real university degree. This program has been extremely successful.

Could the Leader of the Government in the Senate look into this question on a policy basis for the whole of the country? Could he inquire whether there is going to be a deliberate attempt on the part of the government to discontinue the off-campus education in the universities?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—SNOWBIRDS AEROBATIC TEAM— RECIPROCAL VISITS TO NATO ALLIES

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last Sunday a documentary on the Snowbirds, Canada's aerobatic team, was aired on the CBC network. The Snowbirds are one of the best aerobatic teams in the world. Is the Leader of the Government aware that Canada has been hosting for several decades a number of aerobatic teams from different countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom, France and Italy? Does he know that outside of Canada the Snowbirds have only performed in the United States? Will the Snowbirds have an opportunity to pay a return visit and to display their superb skills to our NATO allies in Europe? Will the government leader support such an initiative?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall make inquiries of the responsible minister about the possibilities in this respect.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to say, as a former Air Force member and aerobat, that I fully support the suggestion of Senator Bosa. I hope that it will be taken seriously.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

THE CONSTITUTION—ENTRENCHMENT OF RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT—DRAFT AGREEMENT—DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I address to the Leader of the Government a question on the matter of self-government for the aboriginal peoples. I am sure there is an obvious explanation for this, and perhaps the Leader of the Government will provide it.

The draft circulated by the Government of Canada, if effective, would provide a constitutional right to self-government. Subsequently, a further section states that self-government would not in any way abridge the powers of either the federal or the provincial governments. Presumably, if there were a negotiation and if self-government were to be achieved for the four communities, it would involve sharing, or some divestiture of the powers of provincial legislatures or of the Parliament of Canada. Would the Leader of the Government try to relate section 35.01 to section 35.06 and explain to me how they are reconciled?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not have the draft in front of me, but the point is that the amendment itself recognizes that the right to self-government is not to derogate from any of the powers of the federal Parliament or the provincial legislatures. It would be the agreements themselves that would later be entrenched that might—indeed, probably would, by conferring certain powers on the aboriginal self-government institutions at that time—derogate from the powers of the federal Parliament and of the provincial legislatures. The amendment itself was not to so derogate.

As I recall it, the New Brunswick draft stated that the amendment would not derogate from the rights of federal and provincial parliaments except in accordance with agreements that were later to be negotiated and entrenched.

Senator MacEachen: I thank the minister for that comment. Perhaps he is correct in saying that the aboriginal peoples, through this amendment, would lose nothing that they presently have in hand through the Constitution.

Senator Murray: Or think they have.

Senator MacEachen: Or think they have, but they would gain nothing if the amendment were accepted, because any gain would have to come by way of a negotiation with provincial governments, which, if the concept of self-government were to be realized, would have to yield some of their powers to the aboriginal communities. My interpretation, therefore, is that if the amendment had been accepted, there would be a process of negotiation which might or might not lead to additional governing powers for the aboriginal peoples. That is my understanding. I am really asking for clarification as to whether that understanding is correct.

• (1510)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, they would have had entrenched in the Constitution the right to self-government. The division of powers would have been negotiated in a political process. The agreement so negotiated would become entrenched. The agenda to be negotiated would have been put in the Constitution, including lands, resources, taxation powers, and so on, and the Constitution would have further stated that the amendment did not derogate in any way from the rights that aboriginal peoples now have, or think they have, by virtue of section 35.

So, yes, it was an amendment to entrench a right and a process that would give effect to the right and define it and decide on the division of powers.

Senator MacEachen: I agree with that, and I think it validates the interpretation that any gain by the aboriginal peoples would have to be derived from a successful negotiation with, say, a province, which would yield to that community some of its current powers. So they gain nothing in the sense of new governance from the amendment, but they would gain a process which might lead to self-government.

Senator Murray: I suppose the alternative would be to have a free-standing, unequivocal and immediately enforceable right to self-government, which would leave it to the courts to create the self-government institutions, divide the powers and assign the resources and the powers of taxation to the government so created. We believe that in our system that is not an appropriate role for the courts, but it is an appropriate role for the political process.

Senator MacEachen: All I wish to say is that one can understand the point of view of the aboriginal peoples. One may not agree with it, but one can understand their perspective in taking the attitude which they did at the conference.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government says that the distribution of powers would be the subject of constitutional amendment. Presently the legislative power of the two levels—two “areas” of government would be better than saying two “levels”, because it is not a matter of seniority—are set out in sections 91 and 92. Section 91 gives the federal Parliament the power to enact laws in certain classes of subjects that are enumerated, and section 92 does likewise for the provinces.

I am glad that the Leader of the Government is getting some help from a former Minister of Justice on the subject. I am serious in saying that. I do not quarrel with that. This is really for information. We will find out in due course whether or not it is helpful. I merely want to understand this for information purposes. The proposal, then, was that there would be another section that would say that aboriginal peoples living on reservations, or having proven their ethnicity, would have power to enact laws with reference to the following subjects.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator is getting quite a bit ahead of the process. Basic to the concept all along has been the understanding that the conditions and circumstances of the aboriginal peoples vary from place to place and from group to group in this country. Therefore, the agreements would be different, and therefore one assumes that the powers, jurisdictions and rights set out in those agreements might differ from place to place and from group to group.

Senator Frith: Yes, I agree with the description of the situation. What I really want to understand is that under section 92 of the Constitution municipalities have the authority to pass by-laws and to raise taxes. But they derive that from the province; they are creatures of the province. Can the Leader of the Government tell me whether the intention with regard to powers to pass laws or by-laws, and to raise funds by taxation, was going to be a derivative right—that is, derived from powers of the federal government in the Constitution or from the province—or were they going to have it on their own?

Senator Murray: The discussion is becoming somewhat hypothetical; but the fact that we were going to entrench those agreements in the Constitution would mean that the powers, rights and jurisdictions in those agreements could not be changed without the consent of the parties to the agreement.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPOSITION OF PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION TO INDIA—EXCLUSION OF SENATORS
INVITATION TO ATTEND BRIEFING ON COUNTER-TERRORISM MEASURES—ORDER OF PRECEDENCE—PROPRIETY OF INCLUSION OF STAFF
INVITATIONS FROM DEPARTMENT TO PARLIAMENTARIANS—
ORDER OF PRECEDENCE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have in one document the delayed answers to three questions asked by Senator Corbin on March 19 and 26 regarding the Department of External Affairs and the composition of parliamentary delegations to India and the exclusion therefrom of senators. I can read it if Senator Corbin prefers.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: May we have the answer read, please?

Senator Doody: The answer reads as follows:

The expression "parliamentary delegation" used in the External Affairs Communiqué, refers to a group of members of Parliament who will be travelling to India to strengthen ties between our two countries. At no point was this delegation considered representative of Parliament as a whole. M.P.s were selected on the basis of their longtime interest in Canada-India relations and particularly, the importance of their constituency of Indian origin.

It might be noted that no meetings are scheduled with members of the Indian Upper House, the Council of States.

[Senator Murray.]

The briefing on terrorism referred to by Senator Corbin on March 19 is one in a series of information sessions being organized by the Department of External Affairs to provide general background on the current status of certain issues as well as the Canadian position. Previous briefings were offered on Consular Services, Arctic Sovereignty and Canada-Japan Relations.

It is not the department's purpose to provide confidential information during these sessions. Rather, it is an opportunity for parliamentarians and their staff to learn more about an issue and to ask questions of those in the department who are knowledgeable. This is part of an ongoing effort to provide Parliament generally with more information on a range of foreign policy issues.

It should also be noted that departmental officials have provided confidential briefings to the Senate Committee on Terrorism, and will continue to do so.

The Department of External Affairs has taken note of the error in protocol raised by Senator Corbin. This mistake will be corrected in all future departmental correspondence.

RADIO ACT

BILL TO AMEND—MOTION BY SENATOR BELL ON THIRD READING—SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, you may recall that last week on third reading of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, Senator Bell moved a six-month hoist motion.

As a result of this motion, contradictory opinions were expressed in this house to the effect that the motion could be introduced only on second reading, whereas other senators believed it could be moved on third reading.

After examining precedents I referred you to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Procedure, fifth edition, specifically to citations 741 and 740 which seem to indicate that this procedure is in order only on second reading. This was also the view expressed by Senator Frith, but Senators Corbin, Doody, Flynn and I were inclined to believe it could be done on third reading.

In light of this jurisprudence, my ruling was that the procedure was acceptable only on second reading and I declared Senator Bell's motion out of order. I was somewhat concerned about the ruling. Over the weekend we had a closer look at the rules and customs of the other place. Here is what we found in Beauchesne's citation 802, page 239, concerning third reading:

802. (1) When an Order of the Day for the third reading of a bill is called, the same type of amendments which are permissible at the second reading stage are permissible at the third reading stage with the restriction that they cannot deal with any matter which is not contained in the bill.

If we interpret this citation properly I think the ruling I made was wrong and I should have declared that Senator Bell's six-month hoist motion was in order.

Still my ruling did not invalidate the proceedings we had on third reading because the motion of Senator Bell was not aimed at rejecting the bill outright, but simply at delaying it.

I wanted to set the record straight to be fair to Senator Bell, and also to follow the precedents established in such cases so as to respect long-standing parliamentary customs in both the House of Commons and the Senate.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 2, 1987-88

THIRD READING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government) moved the third reading of Bill C-49, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, Bill C-49 is based on Supplementary Estimates (A). It is the third abnormality which we have seen in the month of March in the management of the Crown's financial business. Early in the month of March the government made use of section 39 of the Financial Administration Act to borrow $600 million, when Parliament was in session and without any attempt to get borrowing authority from Parliament in the normal way. Then we saw the borrowing authority bill. That bill, if not enacted until after March 31, would have increased retroactively the borrowing authority of the Crown in the fiscal year 1986-87. Then we come to the third abnormality, the one now before us. Supplementary Estimates (A) is a request for supply to provide money for the special Canadian Grains Program outside the Main Estimates for 1987-88, although that program was established in 1986 and although $300 million has already been appropriated by Parliament for it. So we have had three abnormalities in one month. Perhaps, if this bill goes through today, the package of abnormalities will be completed and we can start with a fresh month tomorrow.

Earlier today there was discussion about the urgency of this bill. In the course of that discussion I quoted the testimony of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the payout, the contributions under the appropriation, is to take place chiefly in May. The deputy minister said, "We expect to begin issuing cheques in May. The bulk of them will likely be issued by the end of May." Earlier this afternoon the Deputy Leader of the Government quoted the evidence given at the National Finance Committee meeting this morning. I do not have that transcript. The minutes of that meeting have not yet been made available to honourable senators. What I do have is Supplementary Estimates (A). Supplementary Estimates (A) show that the operating expenditures for the program will total $2.06 million and that the transfer payments will be $697.940 million. In other words, it is conceivable that obligations might be incurred tomorrow for personnel, for rentals, for supplies, or for something else within that $2.06 million. But the government can cover such expenditures and, in any case, those bills do not have to be paid tomorrow. The great bulk of the program, $697.940 million, is to be paid out in the month of May. So the argument of great urgency, when examined, is not really credible. I do not think that the Deputy Leader of the Government really intends to urge it very strongly.

The reason I asked that this bill go to the National Finance Committee was that I was curious to know where the expenditure would fit into the budgetary framework for 1987-88. I know that honourable senators do not yet have the record of the committee hearing of March 25, 1987, so, with your permission, I will read a few exchanges that occurred during that meeting. I asked the Minister of State for Finance, the Honourable Tom Hockin, if this amount, the $700 million, was included somewhere in the budgetary papers or in the expenditure plan for 1987-88. I said:

Is that $700 million included in the amount of financial requirement which was put forward on February 18?

Mr. Hockin replied:

Yes, it is part of the 1987-88 requirement, and let me explain that further. Under the column "Total envelopes", the expenditure is $121,330 million, and under the column "Reserves not allocated by envelope", there is $2,380 million, and in that there is $700 million.

● (1530)

I then asked Mr. Hockin what document he was referring to, and he said:

I am referring to the 1987-88 Estimates, Part I, the Government Expenditure Plan, page 9. I was referring to the figures that are indicated in blue ink.

I then asked for greater certainty:

And you are saying that that $700 million is in the column headed "Reserves not allocated by envelope"?

Mr. Hockin replied:

Yes. That is the way the Supplementary Estimates always go.

That seemed fairly conclusive, and I thought I understood the situation, but then last week the government announced a $350 million assistance program for the financially-strapped oil and gas industry. On Thursday, March 26, 1987, that announcement was discussed by the Deputy Prime Minister on the CTV network. He was being interviewed by Pamela Wallin. She said:

Mr. Mazankowski, where are you getting the money from? When it was budget time, there wasn't any. Michael Wilson said no to you in the negotiations leading up to the budget, that there wasn't going to be a package in that—where did you find it?

Mr. Mazankowski replied:

Well, the budget this year wasn't a Christmas tree budget, Pam, and we said that any initiatives for the agriculture, the resource industries or Western or Atlantic diversification programs would be outside the budgetary framework.

Later he went on to enlarge upon the need for diversification. He said:

It's a matter of redirecting our focus on the diversification of the western Canadian economy, so that when we do have a collapse in our two basic industries, we have something else to fall back on—in high technology, in crop diversification, in value-added processing, in things of that nature; and centres of excellence, for example, in helping develop an aerospace industry—

We had been told, not in Parliament but on television, that these programs would be outside the budgetary framework. I undertook this morning to ascertain just what the facts were. At a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance this morning, Mr. Cook, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, was present, accompanied by officials from the board. When I asked where the moneys were coming from, I got a clear but complicated answer. I do not have the transcript here, because it has not been published and is not available to senators generally, but it is my recollection that we were told that contrary to what Mr. Hockin said, the $700 million is not to come out of the provision in the expenditure plan headed "Reserves not allocated by envelope"; rather, it is to come from a reserve allocated for the economic and regional development envelope. In other words, there was a conflict between what we were told by Mr. Hockin and what we were told this morning. I do not make much of that.

But it is important, I think all thoughtful senators will agree, to know where these various programs fit into the budgetary framework and that, indeed, they do fit into the budgetary framework, contrary to what the Deputy Prime Minister said.

Liberal senators support this program in general. When Supplementary Estimates (A) were being considered by the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance questions were raised about the program. Senator Olson, for example, had serious doubts about the suitability of the program as a remedy for the problem in all of its details, and attempts were made to let him know that the department was not oblivious to some of the problems to which he referred. I think it is fair to say that as far as Senator Olson is concerned his doubts remain; he is waiting to see what the committee, which is advising the department, will recommend by way of solutions to the problems to which he made reference.

Generally speaking, we should like to get on with this now. There is no objection to the aim of the program. The difficulties which have surfaced have been largely related to the abnormal way in which the government chose to put this request for supply before Parliament. I hope that when the bill is passed we will not have closed off this initiative, that Parliament will not have dealt with it conclusively, and that any effort to deal with any aspects of the problem which have not yet surfaced will not be dismissed as being too late. I hope that that is not the intention of the government in bringing in a supplementary estimate which would seem to deal once and for all with this matter. But on the assumption that the government is dealing with this matter seriously and in good faith, I think we can agree to the motion before us this afternoon.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, unlike Senator Stewart, I am not going to talk about when the bill was introduced, how it was introduced, and so forth. I am going to speak on the general agricultural situation on the prairies, what this legislation is doing, and what it fails to do.

Along with my wife, Jean, I spent the past few weeks in Saskatchewan and in Manitoba going from place to place visiting farmers, farmers' wives, councillors and business people. I talked to them about the financial crisis that exists in western Canada. I can say that the situation is very grim. People are seriously disturbed. They are uncertain as to what they should plant this spring. Indeed, some are saying that they are not going to plant any seed because they do not have the financial resources to do so. Financial institutions are pressing farmers hard. There is great emotional stress. Farmers resent very much the fact that after putting a lifetime or almost a lifetime into building their farm businesses and their communities, they are seriously threatened. They see economic failure staring them in the face. In the case of many farms, they represent the second or third generation. The governments' response has been very inadequate and has not really dealt with the situation that is threatening serious loss to so many farmers in western Canada.

Honourable senators, I want also to say that this deficiency payment is not adequate. The people who came down from the Lethbridge community, the mayors, farmers, reeves and business people, said to our caucus, as I am sure they said to every other caucus, that what has been done to date represents about 20 per cent of what is required to deal effectively with the economic crisis that is out there. The promised $1 billion announced by the Prime Minister of Canada did not materialize as far as the west is concerned. Western farmers thought that the $1 billion was for their benefit. However, they find that some of it has been siphoned off to farmers in other provinces in Canada. Indeed, a typical farmer in Ontario will receive twice as much per acre as a typical farmer in Saskatchewan.

Approximately 30 per cent of the payment has been made, and this bill deals with the remaining 70 per cent. In southern Saskatchewan and in Manitoba there is a great deal of resentment because of the way in which these payments have been calculated. First of all, large parts of that area suffered a series of droughts and crop failures, and consequently the crop insurance yield average on which these payments are based in a given district is less in the south than the farmers feel they are entitled to on the basis of long-term yields.

Second, there is very strong objection to the fact that summer fallow acres were not included. Therefore, a farmer who did not receive any payment on his summer fallow acres under this deficiency payment is really in a dilemma as far as spring seeding this year is concerned. A farmer who summer-fallowed half his land feels that by doing so he made a contribution to the production of fewer bushels of grain than he or she was capable of. However, the way in which this payment has been administered penalizes those farmers who did not plant all of their acreage. In other words, it helped farmers who had planted all of their acreage, and so there seems to be a built-in prejudice against farmers who followed a 50/50 summer fallow practice in areas where, by long experience, they feel that this is the best way to handle their land and to handle the problem of lack of moisture.

There is another thing that has caused great resentment with the result that what might otherwise have been a fairly acceptable program, as far as it went, has stirred up a great deal of animosity and bitterness: That is with respect to the acres that have been taken out of normal grain, wheat, oats and barley crops and seeded to specialty crops such as mustard, peas, lentils, sunflowers or some other specialty crops. Those farmers have been excluded from receiving anything by way of a deficiency payment on the acres that have been seeded to specialty crops. The farmers are therefore saying that this is a penalty for their having taken steps to produce less wheat and to diversify their production.

What the government's total program has not done is to come to grips with the tremendous exodus of farmers from rural communities that is taking place today. The situation in the west is catastrophic. A very deep crisis is occurring that affects not only the farmers but the business communities. I was in a town in southern Saskatchewan the other day. In that town there is a young man who has invested in a repair shop where he repairs farm trucks, tractors and machinery. He told me that the day before, which was a business day, he had been in his shop all day without orders, without work, and that he received only one telephone call. He told me that a year ago he was busy; that the farmers had enough money to bring in their machinery for repair work.

His neighbour in that town is a professional welder, who told me that he, too, has practically no work this spring, because the farmers lack the money to bring their machinery in to have it repaired.

On going into other business places in many communities, we discovered that the business people are afraid not only for this year but for next year. As farmers leave the farms, there are fewer students in the schools and the schools are in danger of closing. One business after another is closing down. The railways are threatening to take up the branch lines; churches and community endeavours of all kinds are becoming more and more difficult to run, and, step by step in communities on the prairies that once were thriving, there are businesses being boarded up, farmers are leaving the farms, and the towns are in danger of becoming ghost towns, one after the other.

Honourable senators, the story I am about to relate is frightening but true. We spoke to a group of farm leaders north of Winnipeg. One farmer in the group said to me: "I am 74 years of age; I have rented my farm to a tenant farmer for a number of years. This spring that farmer said to me that he is not able to make any money farming my land and is therefore handing the land back to me." That farmer told me that he went around trying to get someone else to farm his land, but was unable to do so. He told me: "I could find nobody interested in farming my land, because prices are so low." He said: "So at age 74, I have to go back on to the tractor and seed my own farm."

Another farmer in southern Manitoba told me of his experience. Approximately three years ago he went to his bank and the bank valued his farm assets at $1.1 million, and at that time he had from the bank a $400,000 loan. One year later he went back to the same bank and discovered they had written down his assets from $1.1 million to $700,000. Still one year later he went back to his bank and discovered that they had written down the $700,000 asset value to $400,000. They said to him: "You still owe us $400,000. Your land is not worth more than $400,000. We think you should pay up." Then when the farmer could not pay the $400,000, they started foreclosure proceedings.

Honourable senators, I say that the challenge to the government is to take emergency steps to stop the erosion of farmers, to stop bank foreclosures, and to stop financial institutions from taking more and more land. My advice to the farmers—and that of my wife, Jean, who is also a farm leader—is: Do not sign off when you are under pressure; hang on tight; do not give up; don't throw up your hands, because if you do hang on tight, perhaps this situation will eventually turn around. Perhaps even this government will come forward with additional and more substantial help so that those farmers may, in fact, be able to weather the storm until things get better. What aggravates a great many farmers—and I feel the same kind of aggravation—is that a government that operates the Farm Credit Corporation that charges certain borrowers up to 14 per cent interest is seemingly powerless and is unwilling, or perhaps incapable of bringing in measures to reduce the interest rates being paid by the farmers.

When the Ford Motor Company wished to buy Versatile in Winnipeg, this government provided a loan of $45 million at 10 per cent interest, that is, $4.5 million of interest, and said to the Ford Motor Company, "If you provide research to that extent in Winnipeg, there will be no interest." In fact, it was an interest-free loan.

In today's Globe and Mail there is an announcement of a government initiative to save the General Motors Plant at Sainte-Thérèse, Quebec. They are providing a $220 million aid package to General Motors Corporation. It is a pretty good aid package. It will be interest-free for 30 years. They are guaranteeing 3,500 jobs until 1994. For a guarantee of 3,500 jobs—not for the 30 years of the interest-free loan but for seven years—they are being provided by a joint scheme of the Province of Quebec and the Government of Canada with $220 million interest-free. They will not have to pay anything until April 1, 1917.

Honourable senators, the General Motors Corporation used to be the biggest company in the world. I believe right now it is the second biggest company in the world. Whether it is the biggest or the second biggest, it is big and it has lots of money. However, because the government felt that there were reasons that this should be done, the General Motors Corporation has $220 million for 30 years, interest-free. Wouldn't 3,500 farmers out there—indeed, any of the 140,000 farmers in western Canada—like to have an opportunity of getting a capital advance of $220 million interest-free for 30 years?

If the farmers of western Canada got the same kind of treatment as the Ford Motor Company, and especially the same kind of treatment as the General Motors Corporation, then they would feel confident that they could survive and save their job, their occupation—farming.

Farmers who are in great difficulty have not been asking for a General Motors type of loan. I guess they have not read about it yet. They have asked for a reasonable interest rate and a chance to pay a reasonable amount for their land. They are asking for a second chance.

In the mid-1930s the people of Canada elected a Liberal government. With the debt review legislation of that time, the Farmers Creditors Arrangement Act set up a scheme whereby farmers could go before the courts and have their own debts reduced to a reasonable level, have established a fair rate of interest, and have their debt spread over a substantial period of time. There are farmers in Saskatchewan today, their sons and daughters, who are successful farmers, because their parents had a chance to take advantage of the Farmers Creditors Arrangement Act.

Now the banks are in control; the financial institutions are in control, and they are foreclosing. They are putting land on the market, and as they do that the price drops lower and lower. They destroy their own equity in the farms, and they destroy the equity of every farmer who has land in western Canada. I realize this general situation applies to some farmers in other parts of the country.

I was in the small community of Virden in Manitoba speaking to the editor of the local newspaper. He told me that the only farmer within his newspaper area—which was not totally Virden—who bought a new tractor this spring was the farmer who had a contract with the local banks to farm bank land which the banks had obtained in recent months, and the contracts read that they will summer fallow only. The Royal Bank of Canada undertook a major program a few years ago where they told farmers who borrowed money that they would show them how to farm and how to make money. Any farmer who followed the advice of the Royal Bank is in terrible trouble today, and the Royal Bank is taking the land. When the Royal Bank has to farm the land and their experts are able to manage a farm, I would wager that they will win the prize for losing the most money for the size of the farm they are operating.

[Senator Argue.]

Honourable senators, I suppose I have made this speech in the Senate a number of times now. Senator Flynn knows it by heart.

Senator Flynn: In the House of Commons, too.

Senator Argue: The situation was not as bad then as it is now.

Senator Frith: He is the same great champion here as he was there.

Senator Argue: I have a very learned friend in Senator Flynn who, in the House of Commons, gave me the same kind of detailed attention as he gives me in the Senate. He is one of my favourite colleagues, in spite of his abrasiveness. I have no trouble handling or appreciating it.

Honourable senators, we are in a crisis situation. There are things the government could do by way of producing new policies which would give farmers a chance to have a write-down of debt and a new chance to operate their farms. Many of these things can be done without a major financial commitment. Further major financial commitments will be necessary if farmers are to survive.

I will now return to the interchange we had earlier in the afternoon. I do not expect Senator Doody to know exactly when the cheques may be issued, although he may have read the evidence, but it looks as though some cheques will be issued very quickly. I doubt very much if a single cheque is likely to be issued in April to any of the farmers under this program. If a cheque is issued, it may be issued for administrative costs, for some powerful advisers or for other officials.

I think it is a great and serious mistake that the farmers out there, who are depending on the few thousand dollars that are involved in this per-farm payment, are not able to receive that money in time for their seeding operations. They need that money in April to buy fuel, to undertake repairs, to buy fertilizer and herbicides, and all the other expenses that are attached to farming. I would say to Senator Doody and to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that I hope, even at this late date, they may find a means to speed up the cheques and to get them out in the mail so that farmers who are desperately in need of money may have money before seeding.

With all of those comments, we support this legislation, inadequate as it is, but we say to the government that much more decisive action will have to be taken and taken soon, because the financial crisis in western Canada is so severe that we are in danger of losing our agricultural industry as we know it. If the government takes the steps required to save that industry and to save our businesses and our communities, we can have a viable agricultural industry when these difficult circumstances are behind us and there is another economic turnaround.

Senator Doody: I would take just a moment of the Senate's time to recognize the plea of Senator Argue on behalf of the farming community. He is well known as a champion of that part of our country and of our economy. I will certainly, once again, forward his concerns to the appropriate authorities. I agree that the more quickly these cheques are issued the better, and I will certainly pass that concern on.

With reference to the comments made by Senator Stewart and which I appreciate very much, it seemed to me that there was one statement which, I thought, further confused what I had thought I had straightened out in my own alleged mind today, and that is the question of the finding of money in the Department of Regional Economic Development to cover the program cost.

● (1600)

That, as I understood it, was the—hypothetical at that time—program dealing with the General Motors plant, and that to deal with that particular grant to General Motors, should it happen, they would go to the contingency vote in the envelope for Regional Economic Development. I did not think that that had anything at all to do with either the $350 million Energy vote that we talked about, which we all agreed would have to be provided for under supplementary estimates or under specific legislation, or the other program, the $700 million program which we are talking about now, which is an Agriculture vote.

I may be confusing the point even more, but I yield to Senator Stewart.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, may I ask Senator Doody a question? There is no envelope headed Agriculture, so I assume that when they said that it was in an envelope that it must be in Economic and Regional Development. It is not in the votes for that specific department, but that is a general envelope. That is my interpretation of it.

If it is not in there, is Senator Doody telling us—and I think that he has the transcript of what was said this morning—that it is covered, as Mr. Hockin said earlier, in reserves not allocated by envelope?

Senator Doody: The point is that it is in the Economic Development rather than in the Economic Expansion Department. I understand the point that Senator Stewart is making. I misunderstood him in his earlier comments. He was not referring to a vote in the Department of Regional Economic Expansion but, rather, in the Economic Development envelope, which is a collection of departments.

So, honourable senators, I have nothing else to add. I thank the Senate for passing this bill. It is important, as I said earlier, to try to get it through as quickly as possible.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
K1A 0A1

31 March 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 31st day of March, 1987, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

MARRIAGE (PROHIBITED DEGREES) BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Tremblay, for the second reading of the Bill S-5, An Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons.—(Honourable Senator Neiman.)

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I intend to say only a few words on Bill S-5 today, because I understand that Senator Nurgitz will propose that it be referred to our Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs at the completion of the debate on second reading.

Senator Hicks, in his intervention, voiced his objection again to there being any provision in Bill S-5 which would prohibit the marriage of persons who are related lineally by adoption. His comments point out the fact that this area of the bill is the only one that causes us some concern, some measure of discussion, and also causes some differences of opinion. It is important that the committee look again at these provisions.

The committee will get some up-to-date opinions from the witnesses who have already testified before us as well as from the provinces, because, after all, the provinces will have to administer the Marriage Act in whatever form it is finally passed by Parliament. We hope that we can respect the opinions and wishes of the people, but at the same time not create a situation where there may be possible jurisdictional conflicts in the future. The committee would be well advised to look at that area again as it is dealt with in Bill S-5.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I assumed that the thrust of Senator Neiman's comments would be that the committee would still have one last look at the matter. There is a question of being updated again on how many outstanding applications there are, so I move that the matter now be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fourth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (budget regarding examination of Canada's participation in the international financial system), presented in the Senate on March 26, 1987.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I move that this report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DAYS OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

DESIGNATION OF JULY 2 AND 3, 1987—CONSIDERATION OF MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

● (1610)

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 4:

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the message from the House of Commons requesting the Senate to unite with that House in the designation of "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship".

Hon. R. James Balfour: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Resolution by filling in the blank space left therein with the words "the Senate of Canada"; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Perhaps it would assist honourable senators if I read the form of the motion as passed by the other place. It was moved:

That the House of Commons and—then we are to insert these words "the Senate of Canada", —resolve that July 2 and 3, 1987, coming between July 1, Canada Day, and July 4, U.S. Independence Day, be designated "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship" in recognition of the close and peaceful relations that exist between the two countries, the warm, personal links that prevail between neighbouring communities along the length of the common border and the commitments to freedom, democracy and human rights shared by the two nations; and

That a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house in the said Resolution by filling in the blank with the words, "the Senate of Canada".

As honourable senators will see, it is the intent of the motion to designate July 2 and 3, those days coming between July 1 and July 4, as Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship. A similar joint resolution has already been passed unanimously by both houses of the U.S. Congress and has been signed into law by the President.

The object of this resolution is to encourage Canadian communities along our common border, the longest undefended border in the world, to join with adjacent U.S. communities in celebrations marking the close relations between our two countries. These festivities would be coordinated by groups on both sides: associations of mayors; professional, labour, educational or religious organizations; public service clubs and other special interest groups.

I emphasize that no official actions or expenditures by the federal government are contemplated by the United States government and none is proposed by the Canadian government. In short, it is to provide an initiative for groups at the local level and would utilize the time, energy and talents of the citizens in neighbouring communities.

These festivities are intended to celebrate the history of our countries' close ties, while bringing Canadians and Americans from all walks of life, from school children to senior citizens, into closer relationships, and thus to expand our national and international contribution to peace and friendship.

The celebration dates, July 2 and 3, coming between Canada Day and U.S. Independence Day, are symbolic and practical. They would commemorate our two countries' achievement of independent democratic governments and free societies and would salute our having lived in peace and harmony for 175 years.

These are also dates when hundreds of thousands of Canadians and Americans are on holiday, many of whom cross the border to visit each other's country. These celebrations would highlight the cultural, ethnic, philosophic and historic similarities that bind our two nations together.

Our advocacy of activities to celebrate these close relations does not obscure the fact that Canada and the United States have had and will continue to have differences of opinions on various issues. However, the strength of our long and harmonious relationship should enable us to work together to resolve these differences in a peaceful manner.

This year, 1987, marks the 175th anniversary of the War of 1812, the last war between Canada and the United States. It would be a fitting tribute to mark this occasion by designating July 2 and 3, 1987, as "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship".

I should tell honourable senators that I have discussed this resolution with my predecessor as co-chairman of the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association, Senator Stanbury. It was not possible for Senator Stanbury to be present today. However, he has asked me to say that he wholeheartedly supports this initiative.

I should also like to pay tribute to Mr. David Boyer, a private United States citizen and a senior editor with the National Geographic magazine, who worked tirelessly in both the United States and in Canada to have this motion passed. He deserves our sincere thanks for his efforts.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I second Senator Balfour's motion. Senator Stanbury had intended to do so, but for the reasons mentioned by Senator Balfour he did not. I associate myself wholeheartedly with the comments made by Senator Balfour. I suppose that two matters will always cause problems for governments in Canada—and to talk about a final solution to either one is fruitless—they are regional disparities and Canada-U.S. relations. It is impossible to escape the complications that flow from the fundamentally wonderful relationship between the people of Canada and the people of the United States; it is something that needs constant nourishment.

Anything we find on which we can agree I believe we should support. I must say that I am not sure of the implications of naming these as special days in terms of negotiations as to holidays in labour contracts and other effects under the banking and bills of exchange acts, but it seems to me that the worthiness of the motion—particularly the words that are used in the motion itself—give it enough momentum to carry it over some of these technical consequences. Therefore, I support the passage of this motion.

On motion of Senator Petten, for Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Marsden).

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, on March 11 last Senator Fairbairn brought to our attention the very important question, and problem, of illiteracy in Canada. I was very pleased to see the Globe and Mail editorial yesterday which referred to her speech, echoed her concerns, and urged action. In her speech she described both the scope and meaning of this problem in our society. Honourable senators will recall that in describing the scope of the problem she told us that illiteracy affects people in all age groups, of all social classes, from all language and cultural groups, and in all regions of our country. The best estimates, as Senator Fairbairn told us, indicate that today approximately four million Canadians can be counted as illiterate.

There is no question that this is a problem of major dimensions. There is disagreement, however, among experts on how one measures literacy or illiteracy. I am sure that all honourable senators recognize that this is not easy to measure any more than it is easy to measure what is poverty or what is not poverty. A great deal depends upon the circumstances. Literacy can be conceptualized as on a continuum from those unable to read at all to those with reading, writing and comprehension skills at the most sophisticated level and sometimes in several languages.

UNESCO uses as a definition for developed societies like ours nine years or more of education. It feels this to be a kind of cut-off point by which to define the question of literacy; and it is on that rough guideline that most of the estimates we use are based. That is the rule of thumb to estimate the extent of the problem among adults in Canada.

I would like to comment on the measurement of the dimension of literacy, first pointing out that we cannot dismiss the problem of illiteracy by suggesting, as some have done, that the way in which it is measured is not scientifically accurate, because scientific accuracy, in the usual sense of the term, is not a feature of this problem except at the extremes of the continuum. We know that illiteracy is a major problem because of the effects that it has on the social, economic and political lives of people in this country—the effects which Senator Fairbairn described so eloquently.

I argue that the definition used contains a level that, far from being debatable at the current level, will be raised very shortly, and that illiteracy, instead of declining, will increase unless we take the kind of action that Senator Fairbairn is suggesting.

There are those who ask whether we require such great skills in reading, writing and comprehension in order to be part of an economy and society in which so much information is conveyed on television or by other such visual images which do not require reading and writing ability. I suggest that we do need to be concerned.

Last year I had the pleasure of interviewing Dean Patricia Graham, head of the Harvard School of Education. In discussing the problem of illiteracy, Dean Graham described a good example of the escalation in demand faced in both our countries by talking about three generations of her own family who are still living. Her grandfather, a farmer in the American mid-west, needed to be able to sign his name and do a little reading, but literacy was not a very high demand in his life and his rural community. Her father had to be sufficiently literate to get a driver's licence, to use the fertilizers on the farm, and to fill in the kinds of forms that are required. So he had education which was much greater than his father's, but not much relative to that of his daughter. She points out that her father and grandfather were very effective farmers who prospered. She is the third generation member, now head of the Harvard School of Education; and it is quite clear that no longer is she a member of farm life but, like so many families, her family has spread out into many walks of life, all of which have required intensive sophisticated reading and writing skills. What she described is a good example of the escalation in demand for sophisticated levels of literacy in our society, which have accrued very rapidly over generations of people still alive today. There are thousands of Canadian families who have had exactly the same experience, including probably most of the families represented in this chamber.

But we do not have to look simply at the escalation in demand over time; we have but to look at the challenges posed by the programs for which we in this chamber are responsible. What challenge to reading and writing skills are posed by our current pension plans, our income tax, our government programs of all kinds, from Unemployment Insurance to health programs and to job training access programs? We all encounter in our daily lives Canadians who have real difficulty in just using the programs which are designed to help them. I have a friend—and I am sure that all honourable senators know similar people—who is a very intelligent man, the father of a family, with children at university, who earns a good living, makes his own way very successfully in the world, but who regularly asks for assistance with his banking matters, pension and other issues which are now part of his everyday life but which were not part of his preparation for everyday life in this country.

So, in the sense illustrated by the examples I have given, we should be raising the standard measurement of literacy, especially in a society such as ours in which we want to pursue a vigorous democracy and what we call “an information society”.

Those honourable senators who read David Suzuki's column in the weekend edition of the Globe and Mail will have seen his useful comments on this question. He was referring to the challenges of science and technology, and he argued that if a few years ago we had made the information available, Canadian citizens would act and vote intelligently on those issues. This weekend he was recanting. He did that because of the complexity of information and information overload faced by the average citizen who is called upon to make decisions and to cast an informed vote in our society.

I agree with Dr. Suzuki that one of the great dangers that we face in this country is the oversimplification of information, which we all have to face in various parts of our lives in which we are not expert. If we are not to have simplistic solutions to complex problems, it is very important that all citizens be able to read about and understand the issues in their own way and in their own time. That means the ability to read and write at a sophisticated level, which has been achieved to a far greater extent in other societies, and which we are perfectly capable of achieving here.

So I join Senator Fairbairn in urging action and support for helping people who are challenged by illiteracy, and helping those who are working with people who suffer from that problem.

[Senator Marsden.]

Honourable senators, there is something that we can do, and do soon, in this chamber. Senator Fairbairn pointed out that 70 per cent of those regarded as illiterate in Canada are Canadian born, and that a great many of them are young Canadians. It is those young people on whom I would like to focus your attention this afternoon. They are Canadians who, for a variety of reasons, are emerging illiterate from our education system. It is that variety of reasons that we must understand. Senator Fairbairn spoke about those with learning disabilities, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, about parents who are either ignorant of the symptoms which lead to illiteracy or are sometimes indifferent to them.

We are all aware that about one in five Canadian children have some disability, and we know of other Canadian children who because of social circumstances may lack the ability to concentrate on learning at that stage in life when other children in their age group are mastering the skills of reading and writing. This goes on to complicate the lives of those who have missed that skill forever after.

● (1630)

Honourable senators, the report of the National Finance Committee on the Financing of Post-secondary Education in Canada, tabled in this chamber last week, makes the point on the subject of accessibility to post-secondary education that when it comes to university admission, reducing tuition fees to zero would not result in much of an increase in university enrolment. The report explains that barriers to entry to post-secondary education come much earlier in life than those posed by paying the fees at the moment of admission. They come in elementary school and in secondary school, in the choice of courses which stream a young person toward or away from university, and in the encouragement or lack of it which young people are given when they think about going on to some kind of post-secondary education. But the worst barrier, the most fundamental barrier to any kind of retraining or education later in life now demanded by our economy is the lack of the ability to read, write and comprehend. As our labour force becomes more and more dependent on high literary skills, even in jobs which are in many ways not very demanding of a high degree of education, it can become the ultimate barrier to a decent life and independence for all too many Canadians. Who is responsible for the problem of illiteracy among young people in Canada? As the Senate Special Committee on Youth heard, some people blame teachers, some people blame parents, some people blame trustees, all groups are blamed in their turn. But Senator Fairbairn suggests that we are all responsible and that we can all act. Clearly, it is pointless to focus the blame on the school system or the parents or the teachers or some other group in our society. The problem is a problem for us all, and we must act collectively in order to get to a solution.

The act to which we can contribute here is to share the burden with teachers and parents by taking a very serious look at the child-care discussion which now faces us in Parliament. We can promote an active interest in the current discussions on the issue of child-care, the major report of which was tabled in the House of Commons yesterday as were the minority reports of the critics, Lucie Pépin and Margaret Mitchell. By the time children get to grade one and into school, years are lost, crucial years of development. If they have some sort of disability which goes unrecognized, this is a special problem. Even if they have no disability to learning, those early years are very important to the skills of reading and writing. Honourable senators will all have seen the very popular television program "Sesame Street", which began in 1969 with exactly this problem in mind, the need of encouraging young children to enjoy learning and to develop their reading and writing skills as soon as possible. Child-care provides an opportunity for teacher, health-care worker and parent together to assess the child to see if there is some special need which can be met in the early years before schooling starts. But that, of course, is not the limit of what a good child-care program in this country could offer, for most children do not have any sort of disability.

Good quality child-care provides an opportunity for children to learn with other children, and provides opportunities for them to learn preparation skills for those crucial early years of school in all sorts of ways. I would like to quote from the report tabled by Lucie Pépin yesterday called, "Choices for Childcare, Now and the Future", in which she says:

Beside encouraging the earlier development of literacy skills, these programs—

She is referring to early child-care programs.

—have greatly assisted children and families by allowing an opportunity for the earlier discovery and treatment of disabilities and impairments of all kinds. These programs also stimulate the early development of social interaction skills, without the pressure for educational achievement encountered once the child begins regular schools. In isolated or multicultural communities and for handicapped children, the childcare setting can be particularly helpful in developing social skills, including tolerance and awareness of others.

Good quality child-care with well-trained child-care workers is probably the greatest benefit we could provide to our country for our future.

In the debate on child-care you will no doubt hear a great deal about financing and about jurisdictional questions between the provinces and the federal government. Those are important matters. But the most important matter is the opportunity which could be provided to our society by the increased provision of good child-care for Canadian children. It is those very children who are most at risk, who receive the least attention from their parents who are struggling to make ends meet, who stand to gain the most from child-care. Again, I quote the Pépin study:

Six longitudinal studies conducted in the United States showed striking differences between children raised in poverty who had attended a quality preschool program and those who had not. Those who attended the program showed much higher rates of high school completion, college or vocational training, much lower rates of teenage pregnancy, higher employment rates, less reliance on welfare and much lower crime rates.

Unfortunately, we do not have comparable studies in Canada, but we can rest assured that the problem needs investigation and will be investigated if good child-care programs are supported by this Parliament.

I therefore suggest that we put the problem raised by Senator Fairbairn in the forefront of our minds in considering the child-care issues as we debate them in Parliament. I urge every senator to take the opportunity to look at this important initiative in the context of what has been brought to our attention here. That is, the very large number of young Canadians who emerge from the school system unable to read, write and comprehend sufficiently to take a place in modern economic life.

On motion of Senator Spivak, debate adjourned.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

FIRST REPORT OF FRENCH CONSTITUTIONAL DRAFTING COMMITTEE—SENATE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO INCREASE MEMBERSHIP FOR STUDY

Hon. Joan Neiman, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 17, 1987, moved:

That, for the purpose of its examination of and report upon the First Report of the French Constitutional Drafting Committee (Sessional Paper No. 332-159), the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be increased to fifteen members, and that Rule 67(1)(k) be suspended in relation thereto.

She said: Honourable senators, you will notice that the purpose of this motion is to examine and report upon the first report of the French Constitutional Drafting Committee. In order to do so and to do justice to the report of that committee, I have proposed that the membership of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be increased, for that purpose only, to 15 members. I should tell you that in the Foreword to the report we read the following:

Section 55 of the Constitution Act, 1982 makes the Minister of Justice of Canada responsible for preparing a French version of the parts of the Constitution of Canada mentioned in the schedule to that Act, which consist primarily of constitutional Acts enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom from 1867 on, in English only.

The minister decided, as well as the officials in his department, that in order to commence this work they wanted to avail themselves of the assistance of a group of expert scholars and linguists and not depend only on the department's staff, even though they are eminently capable of doing that work.

The report points out that there were a number of expert advisers used. I will not list all of those advisers, because their names are contained in the report, but among them was the late Honourable Louis-Philippe Pigeon, who attended 23 of the 28 meetings of the committee prior to his much-regretted death. M. Gérard Bertrand, Q.C., who was at that time the Chief Legislative Counsel of the Government, was the chairman of the committee.

In the opening comments of the report, it is stated:

3. For obvious reasons, the committee chose to begin with the Constitution Act, 1867, originally known as the British North America Act, 1867, and fourteen Acts that amended it.

The report further states:

4. While the committee did not as a matter of course reject the unofficial French version of the Acts of the Parliament of the United Kingdom that are found in the Appendices of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, some of which, as in the case of the British North America Act, 1867, were prepared as early as 1867, neither did the committee use it as a starting point because it is a literal translation from the English and therefore contains anglicisms and faulty syntactical constructions and usages. The committee is of the opinion that long usage of such incorrect words or turns of phrase should not, for that reason alone, justify their retention in the official French version of a constitutional Act.

Therefore, the proposed texts are not a literal translation from the English. The committee members were conscious that there would be alternative wording that might be equally suitable. For that reason the committee felt that the texts should be submitted for the approval of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislative assembly of each province pursuant to the procedure provided for. I believe that copies of the report have already gone forward to the provinces.

This is a substantial document. It is the opinion of the Senate committee that when this first report is referred to it, it would like to have the services of a number of senators who are experts in the field but who are not presently members of the committee. For that reason we have asked for a temporary increase to 15 members. We propose to establish a subcommittee that will deal with this matter and report thereon to the full committee in due course.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 24, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[Senator Neiman,]

He said: Honourable senators, I originally gave notice of a similar resolution—with one difference—back in 1982. I have forgotten the exact date in 1982. At that time I did not move the motion, because I was looking for support from both the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, and I was also awaiting reaction from the Department of Justice, which has a similar duty to look at all bills to see whether or not they infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I was told by Senator Perrault, the then Leader of the Government in the Senate, that Mr. Chrétien, the then Minister of Justice, opposed the motion, because he felt that that work was already being done by his department. I arranged to have a meeting with Senator Perrault and Mr. Chrétien. It was quite obvious that the bureaucrats in the department made a unilateral decision that they did not want the Senate looking into this, since Mr. Chrétien said at the outset that he had not heard about the matter before our meeting.

I then met with the bureaucrats concerned and we argued for about an hour. I got absolutely nowhere. I then moved the motion, but at that time I requested that the matter, instead of being referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs as in this motion, be referred to the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

I spoke on that motion for one hour and a half on February 9 and 10 of 1983. I have no intention, honourable senators will be relieved to hear, of speaking at that length on the merits of the motion today. I am just going to go through the history. There is no point repeating what has already been said in my previous speeches in this chamber on this matter.

I was told after I had spoken that there was a better chance of this being adopted if it were referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs instead of the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I agreed with this change, and I arranged with Senator Neiman, the Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, to move a similar motion. She gave notice of that motion. Then nothing happened for approximately ten months. Senator Neiman never did move the motion. On June 21, 1983, I received a letter signed by Mr. MacGuigan, which went into various arguments against my motion, none of which I thought had any validity whatsoever, and which I answered in a speech I gave on March 13, 1984. What was most significant, though, was a handwritten note at the bottom of the letter. That said:

John, this letter was prepared for me by the department. Feel free to discuss the matter further if you wish.

In other words, the bureaucrats were still ruling the roost and calling the shots.

On March 13, 1984, I moved my motion again and gave another speech. Senator Frith adjourned the debate. Nothing further happened and the election intervened.

I then moved my motion again on December 11, 1984, still providing for the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, and Senator Roblin took a somewhat different view from that of the previous powers that be. He said that he thought the Senate should run its own affairs, and that the Senate did not have to refer to the Minister of Justice and bureaucrats to determine whether or not we should adopt such a motion. He supported the motion, and the motion was adopted by the Senate in February 1985.

The matter was then referred to the House of Commons, and nothing happened. I presume nothing happened simply because it was referred to the Department of Justice, and the same bureaucrat said, "Just sit on it and don't do anything."

Now I am moving this again, but this time I am doing an end run around the bureaucrats in the Department of Justice, who, I suspect, were causing the difficulties again when it went to the House of Commons. I am moving that the matter be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs so that the Senate can decide this question on its own, without the concurrence of the House of Commons. We do not have to worry about the bureaucrats in the Department of Justice; we do not have to worry about the House of Commons. This is certainly something that should pass. We have already passed it once and I ask that it be passed again.

● (1650)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Godfrey could clarify the mechanics. The authorization is to examine the subject matter of clauses of bills; not the clauses themselves, I take it, but the subject matter of clauses of bills introduced in the Senate or in the House of Commons where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, infringe upon the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I suppose that there is a potential for infringement in every bill.

Senator Godfrey: Yes.

Senator Frith: Therefore, you want this committee to look at every bill that is introduced.

Senator Godfrey: Yes. Obviously, the members of the committee themselves are not going to look at each bill. These are highly technical matters, and staff assigned to the committee from the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament will do this work. The sole purpose of this resolution is so that any committee of the Senate or the House of Commons which is looking at a bill will be alerted by the staff of the Research Branch through the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee as to a possible infringement so that they can look at a bill and make a decision, in order that any possible infringement of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will not go through unnoticed. It is not for the members of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee themselves to make a decision as to whether there is an actual infringement.

Senator Frith: I understand that. I am just thinking of how it gets to them. You say that the staff of the committee will make the decision as to whether the committee should look at a bill or not.

Senator Godfrey: Every bill will be referred because of this motion.

Senator Frith: Every bill?

Senator Godfrey: Yes, every bill will be referred, and the staff of the committee will look at every bill that comes before a Senate or House of Commons committee in order to see whether there is a possible infringement. This will be automatic.

On the original motion, I must say that four years ago we had a long discussion on this subject. There was slightly different wording and we had suggestions from Senator Flynn. I do not remember how many times the matter came up in the Senate, and finally we ended up with this simple procedure. I am sure honourable senators do not wish to go into the matter all over again so I will refer honourable senators to the Debates of the Senate for the discussions that we had at that time.

For example, every regulation is now referred to the Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee. By this method every bill will be referred in this respect to the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee. Of course, the members of the committee will not look at the bill unless the staff who do the actual examination draw the attention of the Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to some particular wording in a bill. That committee, in turn, through the Senate, would alert the particular committee dealing with that particular bill that the wording of a specific clause perhaps infringes the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Godfrey would entertain a question. At what point in the progress of a piece of legislation through the system would the subject matter be referred to this Zaharoff in the back room whose task it would be to flag the possible infringements? Would it be done prior to first reading in the house of introduction, or would it be done when the bill had been passed by the other place and had come to the Senate for first reading, or would it be done before it is referred? Where would a bill meet the new roadblock?

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, the minute a bill is given first reading, either in the House of Commons or in the Senate, it would be referred and the staff of the committee would look at it. There is no point in waiting until a bill has passed in the other place. The point is that the committee in the other place should be told to look at the wording if there is a possible breach. It would be too late to wait until the bill had passed in the other place. I know that the Department of Justice does look at all of these matters, and I think they do a good job. It is simply to ensure that in certain cases something does not slip through without the committee having had this matter drawn to its attention. I must tell honourable senators that this is done in Australia.

Senator Doody: Senator Godfrey, do you anticipate that the House of Commons or the Senate, whichever house is introducing a piece of legislation, would wait until the committee had passed the wording, or would it just proceed with the normal flow of legislation and then, in some instances, the procedure would come to a screeching halt while the committee examined the wording of a bill?

Senator Godfrey: I am sure that legislation would proceed in the normal way. In fact, the houses probably would not even be aware that the committee was looking at the wording. It would only be on those very rare occasions when the experts decided that there was some possible breach that it would be drawn to the attention of the committee concerned in either house. Therefore, there will be no possible hold-up of legislation, except where they draw the attention of a committee to a possible breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Then, if it is a House of Commons committee, hopefully they will say, "Thank you very much. We would not have noticed that. We will consider it and have our experts give us advice, and if there is an infringement in our opinion, we will do whatever is necessary to correct it."

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I understood that Senator Godfrey was merely presenting historical background on the motion, and that he was not introducing the motion on its merits. I understood that he would do that at the next sitting.

Senator Godfrey: If the Senate wants to hear my one-and-a-half hour speech again, I will oblige. Incidentally, I read it again last week and it is very good. It makes good reading after four years. You might like to hear it again. However, if any honourable senator is interested in reading it, it appears in the Debates of the Senate of February 9 and 10, 1983. However, if honourable senators want me to, I will go into the merits of the matter once again, although it has already passed the Senate in a previous session.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, debate adjourned.

SENIOR CITIZENS

OBSERVATION OF SPECIAL WEEK IN TRIBUTE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. David A. Croll, pursuant to notice of March 24, 1987, moved:

That the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada and to individuals and organizations in Canada that, in honour of the senior citizens of this country, the last complete week of August of this year and of each and every year thereafter, be kept and observed throughout Canada as 'Senior Citizens' Week' as a way of paying tribute to the diverse contributions being made to Canada by the older citizens of our society.

He said: Honourable senators, I introduced this motion on March 24 and Senator Robertson has seconded it. The record shows only my name, but the rule is that these motions are self-starters. They do not need to be pushed.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Honourable senators, I want to speak of Senior Citizens' Week. Today more people are living into their 70s, 80s and 90s as part of the "seniors' boom" that has hit Canada in recent years. Many seniors are living healthier and longer lives than their parents did. Some people are describing the "seniors' boom" as the most important population development since the "baby boom" that followed World War II.

Honourable senators, I will give you a few statistics. I am sure you are aware of them, but, in any event, I will simply remind you. There are presently 2,700,000 Canadians who are 65 years of age or older. This figure is likely to increase to 4,000,000 by the turn of the century. Boys born in 1984 or later can expect to live to the age of 73, while girls can look forward to celebrating their 80th birthday.

One of the most important features of western society is the enormous heritage of social capital left to us by our ancestors, to which we have added from time to time. Our parents were motivated by affection as well as a sense of duty to provide for the material welfare of their children.

In those days immigrants often arrived in Canada with little more than the clothes on their backs, but they gave their children a good education, and within a generation many of them were able to pass on to their children prosperous farms or businesses.

The inheritance of private wealth is important, but it does not compare to the huge accumulation of social capital passed down from earlier times. There is much talk these days about what we owe to our children and to our grandchildren. I am more concerned at the moment about what we owe to the elderly who have given us so much within living memory. Young people take for granted the priceless gift of arable land, roads, utilities, hospitals, schools, museums and stately public buildings that contribute so much to the general welfare. Some of the outstanding contributors to our well-being, even politicians, are recognized and honoured. Usually when they are dead, we name schools, parks, mountains or even highways after them. This, doubtless, pleases their living descendants, but it would also be pleasant and fitting if we could honour some of the other contributors to our society while they are still with us.

We have done this selectively by the designation of particular days to pay tribute to mothers, fathers, veterans and to labour. Such celebrations are confined to family relationships or to specialized groups. Incidentally, I have forgotten to mention that our elders made contributions to two world wars and one great depression.

I should like to propose a broader concept—a tribute to the elderly. Just as we owe younger members of our family love and respect for their care and nurture, we owe elderly people our gratitude for their material and spiritual legacy. I do not think it is nearly enough to set aside a single day to honour senior members of society. I propose, instead, to dedicate a week in which special attention can be devoted to honouring our senior citizens. Specifically, I would like to propose that the last full week of August every year be designated "Senior Citizens' week". It is a golden time of the year in our country, a time for harvesting and festivities. I suggest to you that it would be a fitting time to pay tribute to the seniors in the community who have borne the heat and burden of the day and who have left us such a rich inheritance. All I am asking you is to let us make a little fuss over grandpa and grandma.

On motion of Senator Robertson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1710)

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker:

The Honourable Marcel Danis, Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, addressed the Honourable the Deputy Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service:

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1988 (Bill C-49, Chapter 11, 1987)

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE

REPORT OF STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE
ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-38

TUESDAY, March 31, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-38, An Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobes Canada, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, 18th February, 1987, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill and now reports as follows:

Purpose of Bill C-38

The purpose of this Bill is to enable the Government to sell Teleglobes Canada to Memotec Data Inc. of Montreal. The sale is part of the Government's overall privatization programme, which over the past two years has resulted in the transfer of six government enterprises to the private sector.

Teleglobes Canada is a Schedule C, Part II, Crown Corporation under the Financial Administration Act with a legislative mandate to establish, maintain and operate Canada's international telecommunications services and to coordinate their use with telecommunications services in other countries. It is the exclusive provider of overseas telecommunications services.

Memotec Data Inc. is a data communications and data processing firm with headquarters in Montreal. It employs a total of approximately 750 people in Montreal, Toronto, the U.S. and London, England. The company's sales for the nine months ended 30th September, 1986, were $31.6 million, and its assets at that date were $83.6 million.

In the view expressed by the Honourable Barbara McDougall, Minister of State (Privatization), divestiture from government will enhance Teleglobes's ability to develop by allowing it to expand its mandate and seize new business opportunities. The Minister also expects that the alliance with Memotec will give Teleglobes a further boost. Bolstered by Memotec's considerable technical and marketing expertise in data processing and systems integration, Teleglobes will be much better able to exploit its own technological strengths and international links to grow into a world-class telecommunications company. At the same time, the regulatory framework within which the privatized Teleglobes will be required to operate will ensure that it continue to serve the public interest.

Scope of inquiry

A few days preceding public announcement of the sale of Teleglobes, the value of Memotec stock rose sharply amidst heavy trading in the company's shares on the Montreal and Toronto stock exchanges. The Quebec and Ontario Securities Commissions, the Montreal and Toronto stock exchanges and the federal government have launched investigations into the possibility of insider knowledge behind that trading in Memotec stock. Since any impropriety leading to enhanced activity in Memotec stock was under inquiry by competent authority, and since the movement of the stock was unrelated to the merits of the transaction, the Committee decided not to review this aspect of the deal.

Background to the sale

According to evidence received by the Committee, the intention of the Government to privatize Teleglobes was announced on 30th October, 1984. On 25th March, 1985, Dominion Securities Pitfield Ltd. and Lévesque Beaubien Inc. were engaged as financial advisors in the planned sale. A call for offers to purchase Teleglobes was issued in August 1985.

This bidding round was completed on 18th October, 1985. Eleven bids were received, including three from non-residents. However, because the bids were prepared on the basis of differing policy assumptions, it proved impossible to compare them in a consistent way, and this bidding round was cancelled.

On 19th November, 1986, the Minister of State (Privatization) announced a new bidding process based on a statement of conditions and process of sale tabled that same day. Among the criteria set out in that statement were the following:

- Ownership by domestic telephone companies will be limited to 40%, and would be reduced to one-third after the initial public offering.
- Non-resident ownership will be restricted to 20%. Non-resident telecommunications carriers will be totally excluded from Teleglobe's ownership.
- Within three years of privatization, the purchaser will have to offer at least 5% of Teleglobe's shares to employees and a further 10% to the public.
- The "new" Teleglobe will be required to assume the current public policy mandate of Teleglobe Canada.
- The Government undertook to maintain for at least five years Teleglobe's monopoly in overseas telecommunications.
- Teleglobe will be subject to government directives for a narrow range of national security, foreign relations and international communications policy considerations.
- Teleglobe will be subject to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) regulation under the Railway Act and other relevant legislation.
- Effective 1st January, 1988, Teleglobe will be required to reduce the weighted average collection rates for overseas telephone calls by 13.5% and charges for telex services by 10%. Thereafter, for a transitional period extending to the end of 1991, the CRTC will accept as the allowed rate of return on common equity a rate that is two percentage points above the allowed return on common equity of Bell Canada and the British Columbia Telephone Company (B.C. Tel).

- The purchaser must propose pension coverage after the sale that is at least reflective of the norm for the telecommunications industry and must agree to enter into a reciprocal transfer agreement to permit the portability of pension credits from the employees' current plan to the new plan.
- The terms and conditions of employment in force at the time of sale will be binding on the purchaser of Teleglobe insofar as employees at the time of sale are concerned.
- Teleglobe's headquarters and existing operational facilities shall remain in Montreal.

Fourteen companies signed the confidentiality agreement for this second bidding round. Of these 14 companies, seven submitted bids by the deadline of this bidding round, 9th January, 1987. The financial advisors, working with Canada Development Investment Corporation (CDIC), reviewed these bids between 9th and 27th January. On 30th January, the bidders were provided with additional information on two points — concerning communications policy and the tax depreciation base — and were asked to adjust their bids in the new context and respond by 5th February. At the end of this process, the bids which complied with the prescribed terms and conditions of sale were the following six, ranked here by bid value:

Parties submitting bids	Bid value ($ million)
1. Memotec Data Inc.	488.3
2. Inter-City Gas Corporation	484.0
3. First City Financial Corporation	465.0
4. Power Corporation of Canada	445.4 - 460.6 (453.0)
5. Gordon Investment Corp. (1)	430.8
6. Caisse/SPAR/CTCI	418.3

- (1) This bid contains provisions that would increase the proceeds to the Government, based on a subsequent public offering of the equity of new Teleglobe, by approximately $25 million.

According to Mr. Paul Marshall, President and Chief Executive Officer of the CDIC, the terms of reference of CDIC were to consider the bids purely on commercial and economic grounds. In addition to the bid values and the ability of bidders to close, the board also considered the capacity of the bidders to provide Teleglobe with ongoing financial support. However, in view of Teleglobe's status as a successfully managed and operated utility, the board concluded that this aspect of the deal did not raise any concerns that would justify re-ranking the bids. Accordingly, in a letter to the Minister of State (Privatization) dated 5th February, 1987, the board unanimously recommended the Memotec bid.

On 11th February, 1987, the Minister announced that a letter of intent had been signed to sell Teleglobe to Memotec.

Structure of the sale and effect on public accounts

The Bill authorizes the Government to establish a new corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act. This new corporation will take over the assets and liabilities of "old" Teleglobe in exchange for securities (a combination of about $143 million in debt and $235 million in equity) that it will issue to "old" Teleglobe. Accumulated cash, of approximately $102 million, will be left in "old" Teleglobe. The new Teleglobe will then be sold to Memotec as a going concern.

The Government will retain a special share which will entitle it to receive a dividend on 31st December, 1987 equal to the excess earnings Teleglobe will receive until then by virtue of the fact that Teleglobe's rates to the end of this year will remain fixed at their present level. This dividend is estimated at $18 million.

Accordingly, the estimated gross proceeds to the Government from the Teleglobe sale to Memotec are as follows:

Accumulated cash	102.0
Special dividend	18.0
Sale price	488.3
Total	608.3

The cost of the sale is estimated by CDIC at about $7 million and another $10 million has been set aside for contingencies. On the Government's accounts, the only asset with respect to Teleglobe is a loan for approximately $2 million. The effect of the sale therefore, will be a reduction in the public accounts deficit and debt of approximately $589.3 million.

Employee concerns regarding pensions

In accordance with the conditions of sale announced on 19th November, 1986, Bill C-38 provides that employees of Teleglobe will have the option of either keeping their accrued pension benefits in the Public Service Superannuation Plan or transferring them into the new plan to be established by the purchaser of Teleglobe.

Representatives of Teleglobe employees appearing before the Committee expressed concerns on two main points respecting the Bill's provisions on pensions. Subclause 24(1)b of the Bill provides that to avail himself of the above option, an employee would have to be employed up to the time when he actually avails himself of the option. An employee dismissed before that time would lose the right to the election offered to other employees.

The Teleglobe employees also voiced concerns about the effect of the sale on their pension benefits and about the calculation of the transfer value of pension benefits for those employees electing to transfer their past service to the plan offered by Memotec. They testified that while they had indications that those issues would be covered by regulations under Bill C-38 and by the terms of the sales agreement between the Government and Memotec, they found these means of dealing with their concerns inferior to statutory provisions. They therefore argued that the provisions of the Pension Benefits Standards Act concerning continuity of service and methods of determining the current value of the pension credits be incorporated in Bill C-38.

In her appearance before the Committee, the Honourable Barbara McDougall, Minister of State (Privatization), stated that the Government had agreed to delete subclause 24(1)b from the Bill. An amendment to this effect was adopted by the House of Commons Legislative Committee which reviewed the Bill.

Concerning the second recommendation of the employees, Ms. Mercédès Chartier-Gauvin, Senior Policy Advisor, Pension Group, Treasury Board Secretariat, argued that all of the protection afforded by the PBSA is already covered either under the Bill or under the agreement with Memotec.

According to Ms. Chartier-Gauvin's testimony, there are basically three elements covered by section 30 of the PBSA. The first is the possibility of leaving accrued benefits up to the point of sale in the pension plan of the vendor employer without further accrual. Clause 24 of the Bill does that, with an additional advantage: indexation of benefits commences on date of sale rather than on the date that benefits are paid.

The second protection offered by the PBSA is the possibility of moving to the successor employer's plan without penalty (i.e. prior service is taken into account). This element is covered by the reciprocal pension transfer agreement and by the contract of sale. Moreover, these agreements take into account all previous service, whereas the PBSA provisions would only recognize service back to 1st January, 1987, when the PBSA came into effect.

The third requirement under the PBSA is that for the purpose of determining pensionable service, the period of employment shall be deemed to include employment with both the vendor employer and the successor employer without interruption. Such a requirement is stipulated in the contract of sale and the reciprocal pension transfer agreement.

In testimony before the Committee, the Minister also indicated that Memotec offered a pension plan equivalent to that of the current Public Service Superannuation Plan, the provisions of which are significantly more favourable to the employees than the industry norm. The actuarial assumptions that will be used to determine the value of the pensions being transferred to the Memotec plan will be the same as those that would be used under the PBSA. It is worth noting, nevertheless, that since the Memotec pension plan is a defined benefit plan, any unfunded liability which may arise will in any event have to be met by the employer: employee benefits would remain unaffected.

In the view of the Committee, the provisions contained in the Bill, the reciprocal pension transfer agreement and those to be inserted in the contract of sale meet the concerns expressed by the employees with respect to pensions.

Your Committee has reviewed the subject-matter of Bill C-38 in accordance with the Order of Reference and recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN OTTAWA—SENATE REPRESENTATION AT STATE FUNCTIONS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In light of the paramount importance of Canada's relations with the United States, on the forthcoming state visit by President Reagan to Ottawa next week, are the Leader of the Government in the Senate and the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate invited to participate in all state functions? Such an invitation would enable them to report back fully to the Senate on this important event.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think not. We are invited to attend in the House of Commons when President Reagan speaks to the joint session of Parliament. However, I am not aware from my own schedule that there are any other functions that I am required or invited to attend, nor am I aware that there are any matters on the agenda that relate to my particular ministerial responsibilities.

Senator Grafstein: Could the Leader of the Government inform us as to whether or not the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate was invited to the state dinner?

Senator Murray: I suppose I could obtain that information, but the more direct route for my honourable friend to take would be to ask the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate that question.

INDUSTRY

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—REQUEST FOR INTEREST-FREE LOANS TO FARMERS—REMOVAL OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Could the leader give us some details of the arrangement that has been made between General Motors, the federal government and the Government of Quebec concerning an interest-free loan of some $220 million?

An article in the Globe and Mail of today states:

This enables the auto giant to avoid up to $110-million in taxes that otherwise would have been payable in future years.

I wonder if the leader could give us a comprehensive statement regarding the details of this particular arrangement.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can tell Senator Argue that, yes, there has been a $110 million interest-free loan made to General Motors by the federal government, which is matched by an identical amount from the Province of Quebec.

Senator Frith: For how long?

Senator Murray: The loan is interest free and it is repayable in 30 years.

Senator Frith: Are there no instalments?

Senator Murray: I may say that this loan will help make possible an investment of some $650 million by General Motors to modernize the Sainte-Thérèse assembly plant. That investment will comprise an immediate expenditure of $450 million and a further expenditure of $200 million after 1990. I am further informed that the project will result in the maintenance and creation of over 11,000 direct and indirect jobs.

Senator Argue: I wonder if the Leader of the Government could be more specific in answering the question.

It further states in that article:

Ottawa and Quebec will each contribute $110-million.

That is clear. The article further states:

But the key to the tax break for GM was getting the government money in the form of an interest-free loan—payable in one lump-sum after 30 years—rather than as a grant.

This enables the auto giant to avoid up to $110 million in taxes that otherwise would have been payable in future years.

I just wonder if that is an accurate statement, and if that is a further benefit that flows from this almost unheard of arrangement of an interest-free loan for 30 years.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not know how unheard of it is for a federal government, or indeed provincial governments, to involve themselves in assistance of various kinds, and quite substantial assistance to the automobile industry. My honourable friend, who was a member of the previous government, should know something about that. I regret that he finds this initiative not to his liking.

In any case, I have no information in front of me at the moment on the tax implications to which the article in the Globe and Mail refers, but I shall inquire to see what information can properly be brought forward on this matter.

Senator Argue: I was asking whether the article is correct or not. If the minister does not have that information, I can appreciate that.

The article further states:

Having received a loan, GM can also utilize the investment tax credit program, giving the company a 5 per cent benefit, worth an additional $11 million.

I understand that General Motors made a large profit last year—it ran over $5 billion—so it was not short of money. It could have undertaken this venture by itself. General Motors is now going forward because of the interest-free provisions of that loan, and I would think also because it can get some important tax concessions.

I have done a little arithmetic on this $220 million figure. If General Motors should take the $220 million and invest it at a rate of return of 7 per cent per year compounded—and that is not a high return—at the end of the 30-year period the $220 million will have resulted in a liquid asset for General Motors of $1.76 billion. So when they pay back the original $220 million, they will have gained $1.5 billion.

My question is: Is there any consideration at all—and this is a serious question—being given to the provision of any interest-free loans to the ailing agricultural industry of Canada, an industry which I submit in all seriousness is just as important in terms of job retention as is the General Motors plant?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: I also ask if there is any consideration—never mind an announcement—being given to the possibility of a rescue package for the farmers of this country which would provide interest-free loans to them for 30 years, because that would be most welcome. Farm jobs are just as important as any other jobs.

[Senator Argue.]

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the bona fides of this government when it comes to assisting the agricultural sector are well known and well demonstrated in the two years that we have been in office.

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: That is what worries us!

Senator Murray: It is very much to be regretted that an honourable senator will stand up in this place and try to divide Canadians: farmers against auto workers; west versus east; and so on and so forth. I hope that before this Question Period ends we might hear from some honourable senators from Quebec and Ontario, where jobs are being protected by this initiative, rising in support of what the government has done.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: Well, now, the minister is upset. I think that the remarks that he has made are quite despicable, and I have not even gone so far as to say that the government should not have done it. All I am saying is that since the government, in its wisdom, decided to give the biggest corporation in the world what amounts to a grant of $1.5 billion over a period of 30 years, what consideration is being given to the farmers? The answer I received is that they have done a lot.

You have done very little, sir—and I say this with great respect. That deficiency payment is $1,800 for the average farmer and it will be $4,000 in the next payment for the average farmer. That is not nearly enough.

So I say: Is there any consideration being given to interest-free loans to farmers? Obviously, none is being given.

Can the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations say whether it is correct that the Farm Credit Corporation is about ready to remove the moratorium on farm foreclosures so that we shall have the regrettable result of a Conservative government becoming the biggest landowner in Canada through its agency the Farm Credit Corporation?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, if the honourable senator wants to talk about aid to agriculture, we can talk about aid to agriculture. I would hope that he would not do so—

Senator Argue: I did it yesterday.

Senator Murray: —in the context of criticizing and trying to denigrate an important initiative taken by the government which, as I say—

Senator Frith: He did not denigrate it at all.

Senator Murray: —will maintain 3,700 assembly jobs at Sainte-Thérèse. As well as direct jobs, the plant supports approximately 2,800 supplier jobs in Ontario and another 1,500 in Quebec. With the increased plant output, supplier jobs will increase to over 5,000 in Ontario and to over 2,000 in Quebec. This is an important initiative.

● (1410)

I have already told the honourable senator that in the mind of any fair-minded person in this country, the bona fides of this government are not in doubt when it comes to agriculture. We shall continue to support the agricultural industry in Canada in the very difficult times in which it finds itself, largely due, as the honourable senator must know—

Senator Frith: —“to the Liberal government.”

Senator Murray: —to lower commodity prices and over-supplies of those commodities. This is not a short-range problem that is susceptible to a short-range fix. The honourable senator must know that.

Senator Frith: Thirty years is not a short-range fix.

Senator Argue: I would not mind if there were a fix of any kind. There is no fix. The farmers are just going down the drain without protection.

The minister said my statement was denigrating the deal with the General Motors plant and that this would be divisive to Canadian unity. What is divisive to Canadian unity is to have one set of rules in one place and another set of rules in another.

Senator Murray: Show us where that is.

Senator Argue: The farmers are not getting anything. There are no interest-free loans for them. If you want some unity in the country, as I do—

Senator Murray: What are you saying? Is it that Quebec is getting too much?

Senator Frith: The west is not getting enough.

Senator Argue: Not at all.

Senator Murray: Sit down!

Senator Argue: I won't sit down with a statement like that from you. “Shut up!” I could say to you, if you want to say to me, “Sit down!”

Senator Frith: The west is not getting enough.

Senator Argue: I am saying that the farmers in western Canada could have some interest-free loans for 30 years—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: —with no payments made, and we could save 140,000 jobs or more on the prairies, because the family farm usually involves three jobs, the husband's, the wife's and one son's or one daughter's. That is the average.

Senator Flynn: The farmers are not paying any interest on the money they receive from the government.

Senator Argue: Well, what I am asking about is whether there is a mortgage provision which will give the farmers of western Canada the same kind of treatment. If there is anything that the prairie people and farmers will resent, it is the idea that there is one law for General Motors, which is in pretty good financial shape, and not anywhere near the same treatment for farmers, who are relatively destitute.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: I think he finally got the point.

Senator Argue: I have been at it a long time.

Senator Frith: It is obvious.

Senator Argue: He tells me to sit down! And I tell him to shut up! It is all “parliamentary” language!

TRANSPORT

CLOSING OF CN SHOPS, MONCTON—PLIGHT OF NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would not want my question to be perceived as divisive, but, coming from the far east, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate what the CN shop workers in Moncton and, indeed, the people of New Brunswick can expect from this government to make up for jobs lost in the province of New Brunswick as a result of decisions taken by the government and its crown corporation.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, four million bucks, in the context of the Moncton shops problem, is, shall we say, a drop in the bucket. At any rate, it sounds to me as though it is. What really offends me as a senator from New Brunswick is that there could be this type of decision—indeed, there was a rush to make it—for the province of Quebec. I should remind the Leader of the Government in the Senate that Bob White is not my master, and that I couldn't care less what Bob White says or what the unions say. What concerns me is that New Brunswick will lose—and lose overall—as a result of the initiatives taken with respect to the Moncton shops.

New Brunswick needs something to make up for those lost jobs and lost revenues. That is what concerns us. We are not in the happy situation of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, where jobs are being created every day. We in New Brunswick find ourselves facing a net loss in terms of jobs, or so it appears to me—and I stand to be corrected.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if Premier Hatfield and the people of Moncton can expect something other than four million bucks for all they are presently losing. Four million bucks is just not enough. It is incredible that we should get an answer like that. Speaking of the hypothetical lost jobs in Quebec, those jobs have not really been lost, because they are saving in other areas, but Moncton is losing totally. Moncton is suffering a net loss. What will we get in New Brunswick? Are we out of the national picture?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, so far as Moncton is concerned, the honourable senator knows that Premier Hatfield and ministers of the federal government have been absolutely tireless in trying to save those jobs and, in particular, in trying to persuade the unions and others concerned to accommodate the GE facility in Moncton. That did not happen for reasons that are well known to the honourable senator. The decision that was taken by Canadian National, a crown corporation, was to close those shops because of a reduction in CN's volume of related work in the Atlantic region. The fact is that more than 65 per cent of CN work takes place in western Canada, so CN had to take a decision in the interests of that crown corporation. Every effort was made to locate the alternative facility in Moncton. The honourable senator knows why this has not been possible.

HOUSING

INTEREST-FREE MORTGAGES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I am a senator from Quebec. I believe the Leader of the Government in the Senate hoped that one of us here would have niceties to say to him and to that aid granted to General Motors.

It is my hope that coming from the government this is something that will be ongoing, and that perhaps they will start giving mortgages at 0 per cent interest. If the calculation made by Senator Argue is accurate, 30 years from now the owners of these new homes will all be in a position to repay their mortgages to the government and will have had an opportunity to invest that money and make large profits and thereby significantly stimulate the economy.

We know very well, and the Leader of the Government more than anyone else, that an investment in the residential construction industry can be expected to create the most jobs. Can we therefore, expect that this government will come up with 0 per cent interest rate, 30-year mortgages?

INDUSTRY

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—EFFECT ON FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—TARGETED SUBSIDIES—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. I had done some quick mental arithmetic quite separate from that of Senator Argue. We were pretty close. I came out at $1.6 billion at the end of 30 years. I was using a slightly lower interest rate than the honourable senator. If we take this simple calculation that was done by Senator Argue, at the end of 30 years—

Senator Flynn: As a simple—

Senator van Roggen: I will finish my question shortly, and you can then assist the Leader of the Government in answering it, as you so often do.

Senator Flynn: You don't have to assist Senator Argue.

Senator van Roggen: If we take that calculation of $1.6 billion over 30 years during which this money can be invested, and if you take an ordinary rate of inflation of three or four percentage points over that same period, it will be paid off with 10-cent dollars. It is, in effect, a grant of $220 million to General Motors. You can dress it up as a loan, if you like, but, in effect, you have given them a grant of $220 million.

According to the press they have a tax advantage of approximately $100 million because it is a loan. I have two questions. My first specific question is: Could the Leader of the Government get me the figure that would have been required to give the same amount of money to General Motors if it had been done in the form of a grant? Considering the tax benefits they have received from this, it would probably be a grant of approximately $300 million.

My second question is in two parts. What consideration did the Cabinet—I know that the Leader of the Government cannot tell me cabinet secrets—what consideration did the government give to the effect that this exercise will have on the ongoing free trade negotiations with the United States; and, second, can he give me an assurance that whatever deal is signed in the way of a trade agreement with the United States, it will preserve Canada's right to provide this type of subsidy to industries in Canada?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will try to get the information sought by the honourable senator. As for the assurance he has asked for, it is rather highly hypothetical at this point.

Senator van Roggen: As a supplementary, do I understand the answer to be that my questions about free trade negotiations are highly hypothetical?

Senator Murray: That is correct.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, the second part of my question was not at all hypothetical. I was asking for an assurance that whatever agreement is made with the United States, Canada's right to enter into this type of subsidy will be preserved.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition and I had an exchange about this general subject the other day, in the course of which I stated that the capacity of the federal government to assist in regional development is not under negotiation in the trade negotiations with the United States.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, is it not a fact that the Americans are requesting, as part of the trade agreement on subsidies, a prohibition on targeted subsidies which, if granted, would exclude this type of package? Is it not a fact that the Americans are asking for that; and is the minister now prepared to say that Canada will not give that concession to the United States?

Senator Murray: I am not sure that it is the case that the Americans are asking for that. They may indeed be asking for it, but the Americans may be asking for a great many things at the table, and so may we. We will see how it all comes out in the end.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I think that is a rather bland and cheerful dismissal of an important question: "We will see how it all comes out in the end."

Senator Frith: He didn't expect to get away with it.

Senator MacEachen: I want to know whether the Americans have asked for it—that is a question of fact—and has the government made up its mind as to what it will do with the American request?

Senator Murray: I do not think the honourable senator can expect that I or any other minister will divulge in the Senate, even if I knew the answer to the question—which I must confess that I do not—the details of the discussions that take place at the negotiating table.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, maybe I should ask this question: Why is it that this information is freely given to the provinces? They know perfectly well that the Americans have asked for this concession, and that the Government of Canada is considering it. Why can we not get the same information that is given to the provinces? I can ask a question in the Senate about what the Americans are asking for and not get an answer, while at the same time it is not difficult to find out by calling a provincial official in any province of Canada.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I should be very sorry to hear that provincial officials are violating the confidentiality of this important relationship that has been established between the federal government and the provinces in respect of these negotiations, and I should be extremely disappointed to have to think that my honourable friend was encouraging them to do so.

Senator Argue: Everything leaks! Don't you know that?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the honourable minister is saying, "Of course, we tell provincial governments and provincial officials, and we tell them to shut their mouths and please don't speak to them." Has the government not told Mr. Walter Light, the head of the private sector advisory group, about this matter? Why can you not tell us?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we have entered into a very close relationship with provincial governments in regard to these negotiations. In the course of our discussions with the provincial governments, it is probably true that we are divulging information of a confidential nature to them. So far, and insofar as I am aware, the confidentiality of those discussions has been respected by the provinces and by all others who may have been privy to them.

Senator MacEachen: But what about the private sector? Has the government not told the private sector? Mr. Walter Light was told all about what is going on. Why can we not be told?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when my honourable friend says, "Haven't you told him all about what is going on?", I rather doubt that that is the case. There are ways of imparting certain information on a need-to-know basis to people who are essentially in an advisory capacity to the government, and the honourable senator, who is quite experienced in these matters, knows all about those methods. He should not expect, I repeat, that any minister would at this stage of the negotiations divulge in Parliament or publicly the details of discussions taking place at the negotiating table.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

Senator Flynn: Senator Guay is standing.

Senator Frith: —on that point, it seems to me that we are seeing an example of the style the government is adopting when it is asked for any information about the government's policies on important issues relating to the trade negotiations. In the debate on the subject of free trade in the other place, that was the position taken by the Prime Minister and the minister responsible—"Don't ask us anything about it, because it is all very secret, delicate negotiations, and therefore we can't give you information."

Senator Murray: He said more than that.

Senator Frith: Of course, he said a lot more. The debate went on all day. I agree that it is not unreasonable for the government to take the position that it cannot give all the details or keep everybody up to date on all the details of the negotiations day by day, but "detail" is the word that is always used. It seems clear to me that targeted subsidies is hardly a detail. I mean, that is something that surely the government has a policy on and about which people are entitled to know. So, with respect, I think that the Leader of the Government, in trying to avoid taking a position on the question of whether or not the Americans have asked for targeted subsidies, is also trying to avoid giving the government's position on targeted subsidies, which is not really a detail of the negotiations. It is a very large policy question. The Leader of the Government can still say he will not tell us, but please do not tell us that it is a detail. You are just not going to tell us? What is the answer to my question?

● (1430)

Senator Murray: Was there a question?

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Guay?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, five or six weeks ago—

Senator Frith: Yes, there was a question. Will you tell us whether it is part of your policy in these negotiations—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Order! The Chair has recognized Senator Guay.

Senator Frith: Order—

Senator Flynn: I rise on a point of order.

Senator Frith: Yes, but you know—

Senator Flynn: The Chair has recognized Senator Guay.

Senator Frith: The Chair does not have to recognize anyone in this place.

Senator Flynn: Yes, when two senators rise at the same time. You know that very well, and when I rise on a point of order, you should resume your seat.

Senator Frith: There is nothing in the rules to that effect.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Under the rules here, when two senators rise at the same time the Speaker recognizes one of them, and that is what he did in the present case. He recognized Senator Guay.

Senator Guay: I yield to Senator Frith!

Senator Flynn: That really proves the point that I wanted to make.

Senator Frith: The question that I asked was whether it is the policy of the government in the comprehensive trade talks to resist any suggestion that Canada abandon the policy of targeted subsidies.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the question is hypothetical—

Senator Frith: It is true that what is hypothetical is whether you have a policy. I take that answer.

Senator Murray: —because it is based on the hypothesis that there is an American demand to be resisted.

Senator Frith: It is not. I said whether or not they have asked for it.

Senator Murray: My friend is suggesting that we should go in saying: "Before you bring that up, we want you to know that our position is such and such." The question is hypothetical. Senator Frith has asked whether we are resisting a certain American demand, and I am saying that that is based on the hypothesis that the Americans have made that demand, and I am not aware that they have.

Senator Argue: It is a correct hypothesis.

Senator Murray: Senator Argue says it is a correct hypothesis. Perhaps he has been talking to one of the provinces as well.

Senator Frith: Nice try, but if you pay attention to the question, you will realize that what I asked was, whether the Americans asked for it or not, what is the government's position on targeted subsidies. Because it is not believable that any government anywhere entering into free trade talks would not give attention to the question of targeted subsidies. I cannot believe that the government is so amateurish that they have not long ago developed a policy on targeted subsidies, and that is what I am asking about. The answer that we are getting is that it is a detail; that it is hypothetical. It is not hypothetical—

Senator Argue: It is a cover-up.

Senator Frith: The question is: Have you a policy on the question of targeted subsidies? That is not a hypothetical question. It might be. If you do not have such a policy, tell us, and then we'll see.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I can tell the Deputy Leader of the Opposition that our negotiators have a mandate from the Government of Canada outlining the objectives of this country in those negotiations and the positions that our negotiators are to take. However, that mandate as such, and the details of those negotiating positions, are not being made public for a very good reason.

Senator Frith: What is that reason?

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Guay?

Hon. Peter Stollery: I would like to remind the Leader of the Government—

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Guay?

Senator Guay: It is the same subject, and I yield to Senator Stollery!

Senator Stollery: I would like to remind honourable senators that the Senate participated a year ago in a joint committee with the House of Commons to study this subject. This has been the subject of both public and parliamentary debate. We now have an example of a very large subsidy being given to what, in effect, is a subsidiary of a U.S. corporation, and I do not think that it is a legitimate excuse for the government to say that this is not something for us to talk about or know about when everyone in the country is talking about it, including a special joint committee which was given the task of looking into this matter as part of its terms of reference. I do not think that it is really good enough for the government to say that this is a subject that is only to be dealt with by the negotiators of the free trade talks and is not something that can be discussed in public or in the Parliament of Canada. This is clearly an issue that will have severe repercussions for the very negotiations the government is undertaking.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for reminding me that the subject of the trade negotiations came up in the context of the initiative that we have just announced at Sainte-Thérèse. The fact of the matter is that the initiative we have just announced at Sainte-Thérèse was taken in the context of our present laws, our present policy and our present guidelines governing assistance to industry. To speculate whether it would be possible to do so five or ten years from now in the context of another agreement with the United States is, I repeat, wildly hypothetical.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, as I understood the last answer of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, it was that this subsidy was given under existing laws and that therefore a free trade agreement with the United States might well alter that situation so that such targeted subsidies would not be available in the future. Is that what he is saying?

Senator Murray: What I have said is that in the context of a free trade treaty with the United States, whether this or any other particular subsidy would be possible is a wildly hypothetical question.

FREE-TRADE AGREEMENTS INCLUDING TARGETED SUBSIDIES

Hon. George van Roggen: Perhaps if the Leader of the Government cannot answer this question now, he could obtain an answer from departmental officials. My question is: Is there any other free trade agreement anywhere else in the world—and there are many such agreements within Europe, Australia, New Zealand and elsewhere—that would permit such a clearly defined, massive, targeted subsidy as this?

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Guay?

Senator Guay: I think the Leader of the Government in the Senate is going to answer that question.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Guay?

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators—

Senator Guay: If it is on the same subject, go ahead.

Senator Gigantès:—while doing this research for Senator van Roggen, would the honourable leader look at the latest of the so-called free trade agreements signed between the United States and Israel and tell us whether targeted subsidies are allowed in that agreement?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend is perfectly capable of looking at the agreement between the United States and Israel. However, I suppose I could have that research done for him also.

EMPLOYMENT

ST. BONIFACE, MANITOBA—CLOSING OF HOG DIVISION OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT—SUGGESTED INTEREST-FREE LOAN FROM GOVERNMENT

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Some five or six weeks ago I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate to bring to the attention of his colleagues in the cabinet an important event which had taken place in my area of St. Boniface where, through the closing of the Canada Packers Hog Division, we were about to lose 1,000 jobs in no time flat. If I recall correctly, the Leader of the Government in the Senate told me that he would do that. I have not heard anything about the matter since that time.

However, I heard the leader say today that the grant that was given to Sainte-Thérèse was following the guidelines of the government industrial policy. If that is the case, perhaps the government would follow the same industrial policy and extend the same courtesy to my area where Canada Packers has now closed down its main killing plant. Canada Packers had indicated that because of the aid given to the new plant at Neepawa, and because of the fact that the plant Canada Packers had in Winnipeg was outmoded and needed new equipment, they had no alternative but to close that plant. It was then that I brought to the attention of the Leader of the Government that 710 employees would be laid off on April 10 and approximately another 300 would go in the near future.

I felt that several hundred of them could not get unemployment insurance benefits because the company was trying to arrange some kind of severance pay.

I asked the leader if he could do anything to encourage them to keep those jobs, because many of the employees of Canada Packers had made those jobs lifetime jobs, and because many were committed to mortgages, car loans, and everything else one can think of, and because they had families, young families in many instances. I felt that something should be done.

In view of what the government has given to the General Motors plant at Sainte-Thérèse, is there a possibility the government will consider giving an interest-free loan to Canada Packers so that it can modernize its plant and keep those thousand or so jobs in my area?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I recall—

Senator Guay: An interest-free loan for 100 years?

Senator Murray:—the occasion some weeks ago when Senator Guay asked about this matter. I recall having a word with Senator Roblin about this as well. I apologize if a report has not been brought in. I shall try to obtain one quickly.

Senator Guay: Do I also understand that the leader will make further representations on my behalf to his colleagues in the cabinet?

Senator Murray: I shall convey Senator Guay's representations to the government.

Senator Argue: If it's good for General Motors, it's good for Canada Packers—even though it is located in Winnipeg!

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, if I might once again rise in my place to make a request for cooperation from honourable senators, yesterday, honourable senators will recall, I asked leave to introduce second reading of Bill C-38, respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada. At that time the information I had available to me was not sufficient to convince honourable senators opposite that that particular leave should be granted, so it was not granted.

Further information has come to my attention which I have shared with my friends opposite. I understand that Senator MacEachen has been in conference with senior officials of the company, and that he has received copies of correspondence from the unions, and so forth.

It appears that an excellent case has been made for the movement of this bill through this chamber and on to Royal Assent later today. I wonder if I could ask leave of the Senate now to introduce that bill for second reading, and perhaps later today, or immediately thereafter, ask leave for third reading and, subsequently, Royal Assent.

I can obtain further details if they are necessary and if honourable senators wish me to, but I believe a case has been made and that it would be most responsible of the Senate to pass this bill today.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, what Senator Doody has said is correct. For the reason he mentioned—namely, that there have been some discussions with the Leader of the Opposition on this subject—I wonder if this matter can stand until a little later. I know that the Leader of the Opposition is talking about it right now. I suggest we stand it and go on to Order No. 1 so that Senator MacEachen may be in the chamber when this matter is considered further.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DAYS OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

DESIGNATION OF JULY 2 AND 3, 1987—CONSIDERATION OF MESSAGE FROM COMMONS—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the following Message from the House of Commons:

WEDNESDAY, March 25, 1987

ORDERED,—That the House of Commons and resolve that July 2 and 3, 1987, coming between July 1, Canada Day, and July 4, U.S. Independence Day, be designated “Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship” in recognition of the close and peaceful relations that exist between the two countries, the warm, personal links that prevail between neighbouring communities along the length of the common border and the commitments to freedom, democracy and human rights shared by the two nations.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the said resolution by filling in the blank with the words “The Senate of Canada”,

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

[Senator Doody.]

That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Resolution by filling in the blank space left therein with the words “the Senate of Canada”; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Petten stood this order in Senator MacEachen's name believing that Senator MacEachen wanted to speak on the matter. He does not want to, so on his behalf I yield to any other senator who wishes to speak about it.

Order stands in name of Senator Corbin.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF COAL IN CANADA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hastings, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of coal in Canada, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than 31st March, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I support this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY PRODUCTION AND USE OF NATURAL GAS IN CANADA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Hastings, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to examine the production and use of natural gas in Canada with particular reference to natural gas deregulation, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee present its report no later than 31st March, 1988.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I support this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (post-secondary education) tabled in the Senate on 25th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Simard).

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I do not intend to comment on this report today. However, I would have a question for the chairman of the Standing Committee on National Finance, but he has just left. I saw him here a moment ago. In his absence, I might direct my question to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.

Here is my question. Could the majority in this house agree to the request I made to Senator Leblanc and a few members of the opposition as to whether the opposition would be prepared to undertake a pre-study of Bill C-44? The connection between Bill C-44 and Order Paper Item No. 7 is that in the conclusion of the report the committee members deplore the weakness of the equalization formula. Since Bill C-44 concerns federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and even though it is still under consideration in the House of Commons, our committee would have a good opportunity to study the subject matter. Keeping in mind a recent tradition to study the subject matter of bills, I wonder if the opposition can tell us today or tomorrow whether the Leader of the Opposition agrees to letting the Standing Committee on National Finance study the subject matter of Bill C-44.

For some time now a few senators on this side of the house have had the impression that the Leader of the Opposition is somewhat reluctant to use the handy process of studying a bill before it gets here, particularly those measures which are of more direct concern to us.

Considering the somewhat heated debate we witnessed this afternoon between representatives from Saskatchewan, Quebec and Manitoba, and considering the interest of the five provinces that are affected, namely Manitoba, New Brunswick, Quebec, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island, I think both the opposition and the government would benefit from having honourable senators examine this bill.

Today I was able to talk to some officials from New Brunswick, who generally said they were happy with the bill. However, they were worried about the slight restriction the Minister of Finance made when there was a question of forgiving the $270 million the provinces were supposed to pay back to the federal government before the proposed amendment, as a result of population adjustments.

So if we are really interested in the welfare of our respective provinces, and I am sure all senators share this sentiment, I wonder whether we could not examine this bill right away so we will know where we are. I would therefore ask the Leader of the Opposition or the deputy leader to let us know whether they intend to give the Standing Committee on National Finance the go-ahead, so that we can examine Bill C-44 either today or tomorrow or at least as soon as possible.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it is the first time I have been asked to state what would be the position of the opposition on a subject. I will refrain from answering for fear of setting a precedent. I suggest that the senator was right when he decided at the start to direct his question to the committee chairman. Every honourable senator can look at the suggestion put forward by Senator Simard. I just cannot take a position on this.

Senator Simard: Thank you, honourable senators. I am not sure which part of my remarks according to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition would create a precedent. I was told that I could direct a question to any standing committee chairman just about any time in this chamber. In view of his absence, I felt I could go to the source and direct my question to the nearly supreme authority of the official opposition. I repeat that this is a matter in which we are truly interested.

First of all, it would make it possible for us, I mean for me and others, to study and assess more accurately the report tabled last week and Bill C-44. I will wait for his answer with my usual patience.

Senator Frith: This comment was quite in order. What was slightly out of order was to direct a question to the Deputy Leader of the Opposition on the position his party is likely to take on a motion or a suggestion.

• (1450)

[English]

Senator Sinclair: Hypothetically.

Senator Frith: Ce n'est pas "wildly hypothetical." What was the other term you used for hypothetical? Was it highly hypothetical?

[Translation]

But all I can do is assure you that my colleagues are prepared to consider your suggestion and report to you.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: With considerable sympathy!

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I feel this procedure is somewhat irregular. Senator Simard just asked if the official opposition in the Senate was prepared to do this or that in committee. It seems to me that it is the government which controls the agenda of the Senate and it is its responsibility to refer this type of question to the committee. Is that not the usual way to proceed?

Senator Flynn: No, it is up to the Senate to decide.

Senator Corbin: Yes, but who in the Senate determines how we are to proceed?

Senator Simard: The majority rules.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I do not see why Senator Simard insists on proceeding by way of question or inquiry. If he wants to do this or that, why does he not table the motion immediately? The Senate shall deal with it and we shall refer the question to committee as soon as possible. Otherwise, private negotiations apply.

Senator Flynn: It is not a point of order.

Senator Simard: Honourable senators, the reason I have asked this question is that I have already consulted the chairman of the Standing Committee on National Finance who has told me in the kind fashion for which he is known that there are possible problems. We all know that the opposition, through its leader, has made it clear that it is less and less interested in preliminary consideration procedures. Yet we know that the same opposition blames the government for giving too short a notice to the Senate and blames the House of Commons and our leader in that house for affording them too little time to consider bills for which assent is sought. Over the last few years, we have recently built a wonderful tradition whereby bills which are of interest to citizens, as well as senators, can be given preliminary consideration. This seems to be less and less the case. To respond to Senator Corbin's question, I may say that I have sought the advice of Senator Leblanc, who seems slightly puzzled and who is waiting for a general directive. We will then truly have the last word.

[English]

Perhaps I may ask the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate since I have failed to obtain an answer to my question from Senator Frith.

Will the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate agree that the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance can start the pre-study on Bill C-44?

Senator Corbin: Make a motion!

Senator Simard: Well, I have asked the question. I am prepared to make any motion, but I did not think that we always had to be so formal. If that is the case, I am prepared to make a motion, but I would like to get an answer from Senator MacEachen if he so wishes to let us know what his views are.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I will take a leaf out of the book of the Leader of the Government and say that I will reflect upon his question and give him an answer in due course.

Senator Frith: Hypothetical as it is.

[Translation]

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, does Senator Simard move that we adjourn debate until later this day or until the next sitting of the Senate?

Senator Simard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move adjournment. However, before doing so, I would like to invite the Leader of the Opposition in this house to be at least consistent with the position he has repeatedly put forth and therefore to allow senators to discuss a bill which is important to them and to all Canadians.

I thought that given today's Question Period Senators Argue, Guay, Corbin and others have indicated that they wish to discuss and to put forward the needs of their respective provinces. These senators might want to consider the bill on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements in pre-study.

In my view, it is not logical to argue on the one hand that there is insufficient time to consider bills and, on the other, to refuse to use the time at our disposal over the next few days to consider a bill such as Bill C-44.

[English]

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. The honourable senator is stretching not only the rules but also the patience of honourable senators. He has instituted a debate. He is well aware that our rules provide for a debate on any subject. If he wishes to put a motion or a question before the house, let him do so. I am sure that the Leader and the Deputy Leader of the Government, the Honourable Senator Flynn and our colleague the Honourable Duff Roblin—whenever questions were, with temerity, put to them when they were on this side of the house—quite properly stated that under the rules they had no obligation to answer questions. Questions were directed only to the Leader of the Government, a cabinet minister or the chairman of a committee.

Senator Frith: About the work of his or her committee.

Senator McElman: About the work of his or her committee, yes.

• (1500)

Honourable senators, we would do well to stay within the rules in that respect, but if the honourable senator wishes to have a debate on this subject, then he should put down a motion to that effect and proceed with it. I suggest to my colleagues that a debate of this nature is not appropriate, nor is it appropriate to be putting questions as has been done in the last ten minutes.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to raise a point of order on two points. One relates to the statement made by Senator Corbin that the government controls the agenda of the Senate. I do not think the government controls the agenda of the Senate in a situation like this. I think the Senate itself controls the situation and makes the decision as to whether a bill should be pre-studied. On the same point of order, I do not think it is up to Senator MacEachen, the Leader of the Opposition, to decide unilaterally whether a bill should be pre-studied; it is the Senate itself which should make that decision.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, on a point of order, with respect to the same matter, Senator Simard would lead one to believe that earlier this day, when I rose during Question Period, I was addressing myself to questions of equalization payments with the provinces. I raised no such matter. I simply wanted to know why the government was so cheap with the people of Moncton when it was so generous with the General Motors plant at Boisbriand, Quebec.

[Translation]

Senator Simard: Mr. Speaker, I took good note of the point of order raised by Senator McElman, my friend from New Brunswick. I am certainly not going to criticize his contribution, it is not for me to do so.

My impression has been over the two years I have been attending Senate proceedings that the rules are quite flexible in this place. That flexibility I have enjoyed, both during Question Period and at other times.

However, if I have no answer soon to my question, I will consider putting forward a motion to that end, if need be. Of course, I knew Senator Corbin had not referred to equalization, but I wanted us to discuss, in a pre-study or otherwise, equalization and the proposed changes. Not only is equalization a basic principle for which the New Brunswick government and its Premier fought and which they insisted on enshrining in the Constitution, but now that we have before us federal-provincial agreement proposals, it would seem essential that this primary source of revenues that is recognized in the Constitution could be discussed here.

Clearly, we can refer to plant shutdowns in Moncton as we can refer to grants given to GM in Boisbriand. But the most significant, the most effective yet of basic tools for helping certain provinces is equalization. What is involved is not $4 million, or $200 million, but a $5.6 billion a year program that mainly concerns five provinces, a few of which are home to some senators who rose earlier during Question Period.

This being said, I appreciate that Senator Corbin did not wish to deal with the equalization program, but I personally wanted to do so. Unfortunately I somewhat missed the goal, but there may be other opportunities to come back to that. Thank you.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I insist on rising once more on a point of order.

Not only did I not deal with the matter of equalization, but I reserve the right to do so on whatever occasion. I did so last week in course of the debate on Bill C-3. Today, I felt that the matter of the CN plants in Moncton was of prime importance, in the light of what is going on in Quebec.

If Senator Simard is interested in referring the matter to or proposing that the matter of equalization be discussed in committee, let him do so, as was suggested to him a number of times today. Let him put forward a motion to that end.

On motion of Senator Simard, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with respect to Bill C-38, the Teleglobe Canada Reorganization and Divestiture Bill, I do not wish to appear to be needlessly urgent, but there are some logistics involved if there is to be Royal Assent today.

Senator Sinclair: I do not want any more trouble.

Senator Doody: We will have to set the wheels in motion and notify the judge if it is to be.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in connection with the Teleglobe bill, yesterday when the deputy leader asked for consent to waive the notice requirements, I declined because I did not feel the reason given was very powerful, but when I left the Senate chamber I received further information to the effect that any delay in passage of this bill would cause a financial penalty or hardship of some significance to the purchasing company. That is information which we did not previously have before us. I do not think the Deputy Leader of the Government had it, so it is new information.

Further to that, since that time we have received the report from the committee; I have had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the chairman of the committee; and I see no difficulty, if other senators are agreeable, with giving the bill passage today.

I would ask the Deputy Leader of the Government whether it is his intention to have Royal Assent today.

Senator Doody: Yes, it is, honourable senators. That is why we need some preliminary notice so we can issue the necessary invitation to the Deputy of the Governor General and set the wheels in motion for a Royal Assent later this day.

Senator MacEachen is absolutely right. The information that came to hand was not available when I first asked for leave. I mentioned that in my comments earlier. I also mentioned the fact that both of us had been in conversation with people of knowledge in this particular matter who acquainted us of additional facts.

If the Senate is willing to give leave, I ask that the motion for second reading of Bill C-38 be moved now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Martial Asselin moved seconding reading of Bill C-38, respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, I have been asked to introduce in the Senate Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada.

I want to take only a few moments to talk about the principle of the bill, since it was given thorough consideration in the House of Commons and also in the Senate when we proceeded with preliminary consideration of this legislation.

Honourable senators, the bill provides the statutory framework for privatizing Teleglobe Canada, which, as you know, is responsible for Canada's international telecommunications facilities and services. The sale is in line with the government's privatization policy, the objective being to privatize crown corporations where government participation is no longer necessary to achieve public policy objectives.

It is perhaps fair to say that the policy to privatize crown corporations does not necessarily meet with the approval of all Canadians and all parliamentarians. The fact remains it is a Government policy and a government decision. We can of course criticize, accept or reject, but nevertheless, today we are being asked to consider a government decision to privatize Telelobe Canada.

The Government of Canada is privatizing Telelobe Canada by selling the corporation to Memotec Data Inc. in Montreal. The federal government will receive $608 million in proceeds from the sale, while consumers, as of January 1, 1988, will benefit from rate reductions on international telephone calls averaging over 13 per cent. Telex rates will go down 10 per cent as of the same date.

The important thing is that consumer interests will be protected by the CRTC. This protection does not exist under the present configuration of Telelobe Canada. Employees will have a pension plan that is comparable to the present government plan.

Furthermore, they will be able to purchase shares in the new company on very favourable conditions. In fact, one of the conditions of sale is that about 5 per cent of the new company's share capital will be available to employees, who can purchase the shares at 90 per cent of cost through interest-free loans repayable over five years.

In addition, Telelobe employees will also remain subject to the Canada Labour Code as far as labour relations are concerned. This means that all existing collective agreements will remain in effect and that headquarters will remain in Montreal.

Telelobe Canada will be in a good position to seek new markets under the expert guidance of the private sector.

Basically, within the parameters of the sale process, this bill authorizes the creation of a new company which will eventually be sold by the government.

The current assets of Telelobe will be transferred to the new company in exchange for securities.

The statutes of the new company will set ownership restrictions on national telephone companies, non-residents, and non-resident telecommunications carriers.

At first, national telephone companies and their affiliates, that is telecommunications companies so designated, will be authorized to hold a maximum of 40 per cent of the voting shares of the new company. As soon as the company goes public, this limit will drop to 33.3 per cent.

Non-residents will not be allowed to hold more than 20 per cent of the company voting shares.

Non-resident telecommunications carriers will be totally excluded from ownership now and in the future.

Legislation will allow telecommunications companies designated as such and which hold new company shares either to vote for membership on the board of directors or to appoint directors, of course to the extent that such directors do not make up more than one third of the board of directors. In addition, the voting rights of designated companies will be restricted to prevent them from acquiring control of Telelobe.

The new company will continue to perform the operations which were done by Telelobe before the sale. It will be responsible for providing public telecommunications services such as coordinating telecommunications services between Canada and places outside Canada; for making use of developments in cable and radio transmission or reception for public telecommunications services; for conducting research and development in the area of telecommunications; and for representing Canada in international agreements such as Inmarsat, Intelsat and the Commonwealth Telecommunications Organization.

It will be impossible to wind down this corporation, except if other bills are adopted to this effect, and its headquarters, as I said earlier, shall be located in Montreal.

Except in certain individual cases, the directors of the new corporation will not be authorized to act as administrators or directors of a designated telecommunications common carrier or as their associates.

No one has questioned, I think, the principle of the sale. Some have nevertheless questioned the principle of privatizing crown corporations. But as to the value of the sale and the price paid, there has been no mounted argument. I should like to indicate briefly here what were the offers which we had received from private corporations for the purchase of Telelobe. First, I should say that the department headed by Hon. Barbara McDougall had convened a panel of experts to look into this privatization from all angles and to advise later the minister and her department on the way to proceed to select the most deserving bidder.

The government received several offers, including one for $465 million from First City Financial, another one for $484 million from Intercity Gas, another one for $430 million from Gordon Investment, La Caisse de dépôt, $480 million, Power Corporation, $445 million, and Memotec Data Incorporated, $488 million.

I think that if you consider these various bids, you will, as the experts did, conclude that the sale to Memotec Data Incorporated was a sound financial transaction, because Memotec will pay $488.3 million, a premium of $110 million over the revised book value of Telelobe Canada which was $378 million. This is quite a good return on the investment made by Canadian taxpayers in Telelobe Canada.

There have been a few problems in connection with the employees' pension plan; some claimed that the actuarial assumption was not high enough and would not make it possible for Telelobe employees to benefit from a pension plan that would be comparable in every detail to the plan now in the federal public service, but their concerns have been allayed because other actuarial studies have been carried out. It seems to me that now the employees are satisfied with the amount which will be transferred to the private pension fund, so that they will be able to benefit from the pension fund when they decide to retire.

As I said a while ago, one is for or against privatization. It's a political decision. The government has decided to seek new opportunities for growth and job creation. Up to now, we think that the government has not erred in that policy. If we look at the performance of de Havilland in Toronto, it has sustained a vigorous economic growth since its privatization and many jobs have been created. The same holds for other companies that have been privatized. In fact, the government, in taking this policy decision to privatize crown corporations, provides them with an opportunity to grow and expand and create more jobs.

When she talked about this legislation before the Senate or the House of Commons committees, the Minister summarized her views on the privatization of Teleglobe in the following terms:

Rapid technological development requires some adjustment, not only to face competition but to get ahead of world competitors in the delivery of services and telecommunication equipment. The merge of a new Teleglobe corporation with Memotec will promote industrial dynamism and serve the interests of all Canadians, while allowing Canada to remain a world leader in the telecommunication field.

Those are in a few words, honourable senators, the principles of this legislation which I have tried to explain to the best of my ability.

This legislation, as you know, went through a pre-study in committee and a report was presented in the Senate yesterday. Honourable senators had the opportunity to study it. I do not think it would be useful, unless some particular problem comes up, to refer this bill to a committee for further study. Therefore, I ask honourable senators to pass this bill on second reading. Thank you.

[English]

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was a member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee which studied this bill, and I congratulate Senator Asselin on his complete exposition of all of the facts. I see no purpose in repeating them. However, on the question of privatization, there is one other possible reason why the government wanted to privatize Teleglobe. I believe that Teleglobe was always a source of embarrassment to the private sector because it always did so well. The conventional wisdom is that the private sector always does better than anything run by the government. However, under Mr. Delorme the reputation of Teleglobe within the business community was absolutely first class. It was founded as a result of a government takeover, because originally, I believe, the Marconi Company had it up to 1949. It was then taken over by the government under an international agreement which required companies engaged in international telecommunications to be taken over by governments, and it has since done extremely well.

It was Sir Harold Macmillan who, when talking about some of the privatization that was going on in England, said that it was like "selling off the family silver." It is selling off a very valuable asset, and it helps the government to present a better financial picture—not last year, as it now turns out, but for this fiscal year starting today. Since the proceeds are shown as revenue, it reduces the government deficit by some $600 million.

When the committee studied it, my first question was: Why not a public issue? Why are they selling it to a private company when we have been reading so much about what has been going on in the United Kingdom regarding all those public issues? I must say that the advice received by the government from their advisers in the United Kingdom, where the price of the stock immediately went up spectacularly, was not of the highest calibre. The answer here was that the government was prepared to go either route. One of the bids came from the Gordon Investment Corp., which was going to sell it off to the public. The result would have been $430 million plus $25 million; in other words, $455 million as opposed to the $488 million that the government was getting from Memotec. So on the basis of the higher price, I believe the government was quite justified in following the course it did.

Another matter that concerned the members of the committee was the fact that Memotec is a very small company. Did the company have the financial ability to do this? Mr. Paul Marshall, president of the CIDC, appeared before the committee, and I must say that he was a very impressive witness. He arrived with a number of experts. They had obviously studied the matter in great depth and had received the best advice they could get—at a cost, I might say, of $7 million. These privatizations have been a great boon to the investment dealers who have been used to give advice to the government. He pointed out that they had also received advice from auditors and others. I was quite convinced that Mr. Marshall as the ultimate negotiator did an excellent job, and the committee was satisfied that Memotec could get the financing, that assurances had been given by their underwriters.

Senator Asselin mentioned the concerns of the unions about employees' pensions. The committee looked into that very closely, and it is documented in detail in the committee's report. The report includes a positive statement in the second last paragraph, which says:

In the view of the Committee, the provisions contained in the Bill, the reciprocal pension transfer agreement and those to be inserted in the contract of sale meet the concerns expressed by the employees with respect to pensions.

There was one particular item that they were concerned about. One of the clauses with respect to pensions originally in the bill—I will not bother honourable senators with the details—was taken out by an amendment proposed by the minister because of the representations of the unions. So I agree with Senator Asselin that the bill should receive the support of the Senate. There is no point in sending it back to the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee which originally met on this matter on February 25 and the last meeting was on March 19. The committee recommends its passage and I support the bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, before proceeding, I should like to thank Senator Godfrey for the information he has given to the Senate. I know that he was a member of the committee which yesterday presented the report to the Senate. With regard to the Gordon Investment Corp., I should say that experts have considered very carefully all of the submissions that were made to the government, and the minister could make no other choice. The minister followed the advice of the departmental experts. I wish to thank Senator Godfrey for his participation in the debate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

1 April 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 1st day of April, 1987, at 5.00 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

MOTION TO AUTHORIZE JOINT COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF CLAUSES OF CERTAIN BILLS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John M. Godfrey, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 24, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be authorized to examine the subject-matter of clauses of Bills introduced in the Senate or the House of Commons, where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms or contains the powers set forth in Paragraph 2 of Part 9 of the Cabinet directive on the preparation of legislation approved on 16th April, 1981, the said Part 9 reading in part as follows:

"9. REGULATIONS

In the preparation of proposals for legislation, departments and agencies should observe the following principles respecting regulation-making powers:

(1) When bestowing the power to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority, care must be taken to ensure that the statute is not couched in unnecessarily wide terms.

(2) Specifically, certain powers are not to be granted unless the Memorandum to the Cabinet requesting the authority for preparation of the legislation by which such a power would be conferred specifically requests authority for the power and contains reasons justifying the power that is sought. These powers include the following:

(a) power to make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties;

(b) power to make regulations involving important matters of policy or principle;

(c) power to amend or add to the enabling Act or other Acts by way of regulation;

(d) power to make regulations excluding the ordinary jurisdiction of the Courts;

(e) power to make specific regulations having a retrospective effect;

(f) power to subdelegate regulation-making authority;

[Senator Godfrey.]

(g) power by regulation to impose a charge on the public revenue or on the public other than fees for services;

(h) power to fix by regulation, rather than by the statute itself, the penalties for breach of a regulations; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House thereof and to invite them to join with this House in the aforementioned action.

He said: Honourable senators, I would like to give a brief history of this motion. It really dates back to 1971. At that time the Honourable John Turner, as Minister of Justice, issued a directive about enabling clauses in bills. Enabling clauses are those clauses that permit the government or somebody in authority to pass regulations. That directive, which was sent around to all ministers and all departments, was really a consolidation of practices that had built up over the years. All these prohibitions, such as that which says you should not make regulations that might substantially affect personal rights and liberties, and you should not make regulations that might have a retrospective effect, had been policy. Mr. Turner merely codified everything, and said, "You shouldn't do this unless you give the reasons to cabinet for it before the enabling clause is passed."

There can be valid reasons for including these powers. The point is that the reasons must be given, and attention must be drawn to the fact that they are unusual. This directive was issued long before there was legislation covering freedom of information. The general public did not know about this directive as it was never publicized. It turns out that a Professor Malloy at McGill University had heard about the directive in some way and spoke about it later. He drew it to the attention of counsel to the Regulations Committee, who wrote to the then Minister of Justice, the Honourable Mark MacGuigan, who pointed out that he not only had that directive of 1971 but that subsequently a lengthy document on the preparation of legislation which included this Part 9—which is really a reproduction of the 1971 directive by Mr. Turner—had been approved by cabinet in 1981. It was the opinion of the Regulations Committee that the legislators, the people who consider bills, should have the same kind of information as cabinet, and that if the government chose to put in some of these clauses which Mr. Turner had originally warned against, then the committee considering the bill should have the same explanation—given, say, by some official from the department—as had been given to cabinet under the terms of this directive.

I first set down my motion in 1982. I spoke on that motion on April 21, 1983. Senator Frith spoke against it on April 26, 1983. I would like to quote from his speech. He said in part:

Also, if I am correctly informed, the Minister of Justice has publicly taken the position that he supports a reform of the type proposed in this particular motion. But he prefers that a whole scheme be brought forward relating to reform of legislation—both the primary enabling clauses and subordinate legislation and the relationship between them—which may or may not include this particular motion but will certainly include some of the questions raised by it. So it is not a question of whether something should be done but who should do it and how.

In other words, let us wait to see the whole package, which was not an unreasonable request. However, nothing happened for ten months. I got a little impatient so I moved the motion again on March 6, 1984. In that speech I replied to certain of the arguments Senator Frith had originally raised. Nothing happened again. After the change of government, I moved the motion yet again, and it was adopted by the Senate on February 20, 1985. On April 15, 1986, Mr. Hnatyshyn appeared before the joint committee, and I would like to quote from his testimony.

Senator Frith: What did you say happened in 1985? A minute ago you said that something happened.

• (1540)

Senator Godfrey: It was passed by the Senate in 1985.

Senator Frith: Why, then, must we do it again?

Senator Godfrey: Because it needs the concurrence of the House of Commons since the Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee is a joint committee.

Senator Frith: And it did not get there?

Senator Godfrey: It did not get its concurrence.

Senator Frith: I understand; it passed here but not in the House of Commons.

Senator Godfrey: Yes, it passed the Senate, and being a report of a joint committee, it was also referred to the House of Commons for their consent. At that time I was of the opinion that we did not need the consent of the House of Commons; that we could have gone ahead on just the authorization of the Senate, and there were quite a few precedents on that. In the past the joint committee had gone ahead on motions from the House of Commons which had not been concurred in by the Senate. I think Senator Frith will recall the debate we had on this. Although I have forgotten the circumstances, I believe our Speaker went so far as to rule that a joint committee could not proceed on the motion of the Senate alone; that it also had to have the concurrence of the House of Commons. Therefore, the action was blocked.

Mr. Hnatyshyn then appeared before the joint committee on Tuesday, April 15, 1986, and at that time he said:

With respect to Senator Godfrey's motion, adopted by the Senate on February 26, 1985, the government has certainly noted its content. You will know that it has only been since February 13th of this year that I have had responsibility for regulatory matters and only since April 1, 1986, that a secretariat has been established within the Privy Council Office. I have, members of the committee, asked officials from the Privy Council Office to review the Senate resolution with regard to what action might be taken by the government. I think to comment further, before that review is completed, would be premature.

As I have said, that was on April 15, 1986. Again, nothing happened.

The next thing to happen was that recently Mrs. McDougall, the minister now in charge of regulatory reform, came before the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments and produced a document which dealt with various aspects of regulatory reform under such headings as "Guiding Principles of the Regulatory Policy"; "Citizens' Code of Regulatory Fairness"; "Regulatory Programs Reform Initiatives"; "Regulatory Process Action Plan". However, not one word in this document related to the question of enabling clauses, in spite of the fact that it is one of the most important aspects of regulatory reform since it is the basis of all regulations.

At this point I will quote from a speech that I gave back on December 11, 1984. I said:

I refer to the report of the Commonwealth Conference of Delegated Legislation Committees that was held in Canberra, Australia, in September, 1980. This question was discussed, and the report reads as follows:

I am now quoting from the report of that conference.

Many delegates reported that problems they encountered with delegated legislation were found, upon examination, to have sprung from the parent statute. It was emphasised repeatedly that there is a need for closer control over delegated legislation at its source, that is, in the regulation-making clauses in bills which are passed by the parliaments. Some committees undertake the scrutiny of the empowering clauses in bills, and delegates from those committees stressed the importance of this work.

We then had another Commonwealth conference in April of 1983 which took place in this chamber, and that report said:

Governments come very easily to regard statutes as convenient vehicles for the conferring of powers on the executive. Far too often, it seems, remarkable administrative or discretionary powers are contained in Bills which also very often seek to confer delegated law-making powers which the experience of scrutiny committees suggests will be troublesome, lend themselves to the making of unfortunate subordinate laws and be used to by-pass Parliament. Parliamentarians have every cause to be troubled by broad or vague enabling powers.

And here they are using the same words, in effect, as were used in the cabinet directive.

Indeed, the construction and interpretation of enabling powers in Bills is a subject which lies at the heart of any effective parliamentary control of delegated legislation. Parliament must see to it that it understands and approves the precise powers to make delegated legislation granted to the executive. Too often the enabling powers in Bills are passed without examination.

[Senator Godfrey.]

Honourable senators, what I am trying to accomplish with this motion is to ensure that what has happened in the past will not happen in the future. I would remind honourable senators that some years ago the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee was considering bills confirming international tax treaties. After I joined that committee, I drew to the attention of the committee the fact that the enabling clause was faulty. They were merely copying enabling clauses of previous acts, and, in effect, it allowed the government to increase taxes by regulation, which is against every concept of regulation. The committee had not been aware of that, and when I drew it to the attention of the committee because of the fact that counsel for the Joint Committee on Regulations had drawn it to my attention, it was very embarrassing in that we had already passed four previous bills without spotting this problem. We then proposed an amendment, which the government accepted, for the fifth bill.

The same problem came up again in connection with some energy bills. I can remember writing to Mr. Lalonde and pointing out the faulty enabling clauses in these bills. I got a letter signed by Mr. Lalonde with all of the arguments why the enabling clause was correct, but overlooking the fact that five days previously he had sent me another letter saying he had moved all of the amendments that I had suggested.

I wrote back to Mr. Lalonde saying that I preferred the advice given to him by the bureaucrat who wrote the first letter rather than the advice given by the bureaucrat who wrote the second letter, and never the twain had met. In other words, Mr. Lalonde had already agreed to amend the bill and then, five days later, I received a two-page letter giving the reasons why they would not accept the amendments that I had suggested.

Again, honourable senators, I want to emphasize the points that I made yesterday. It is not up to the joint committee to decide whether there is something wrong with the enabling clauses of bills. Its function is merely to alert the committees considering these bills so that the matter will not be overlooked. The appropriate committees will themselves make the decision. As I pointed out yesterday, it will not hold up any legislation. The committees will not even be aware of it in most cases. The work will be done by the lawyers on the permanent staff of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, who will go through these bills and advise the joint committee. In the past on several occasions we acted in an informal way, which amounted to the sending of a simple letter from the joint chairmen of the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments to the chairmen of the committees considering specific bills pointing out these matters, and then leaving it up to them to make whatever decision was necessary.

When this process started two and a half years ago, I made a speech at that time, and I remember saying: "This thing has been going on for two and a half years. Please do something about it." It is now two and a half years later. It is not the fault of the Senate, because we did pass this motion. It is the fault of the House of Commons. However, I do not think that

Mrs. McDougall was really aware of this problem. I do not think she has been alerted by her officials as to the importance of enabling clauses. However, it was because of the meeting with Mrs. McDougall that I decided to bring the matter back again and have another go, hoping that we will be more successful with Mrs. McDougall than we have been with her predecessors.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I draw to the attention of Senator Godfrey that by the way in which the motion is worded, it gives the authority to examine the subject matter of clauses of bills:

... where such clauses may, by express words or otherwise, bestow powers to make regulations upon a person or a rule-making authority which is couched in unnecessarily wide terms ...

● (1550)

If the authority depends on its being "unnecessarily wide," you have to determine—

Senator Godfrey: "Or—"

Senator Frith: Yes—"Or—", and then it goes down to "9. REGULATIONS", and the first part of Part 9 deals with unnecessarily wide terms again. I do not know why you put the word "unnecessarily" in there.

Senator Godfrey: Because we are not going to look at the bill or draw it to anybody's attention unless it has "unnecessarily wide terms," or unless it "contains the power" set forth in paragraph 2 of Part 9.

Senator Frith: You do not understand my point.

Senator Godfrey: I understand your point.

Senator Frith: I do not know why you have put the word "unnecessarily" in there. Why not "very wide terms"? Why "unnecessarily wide terms"? That is what you are going to find out after the study has been conducted—that is, that it is unnecessarily wide.

Senator Godfrey: That is right.

Senator Frith: That means that in order to get the authority to conduct that study, you have to prove that it is unnecessarily wide. In fact, what you are trying to prove is that it is unnecessarily wide.

Senator Godfrey: To begin with, the lawyers on the committee staff will look at this. The members of the committee will not have anything to do with this. The lawyers will draw to the attention of the members of the committee those instances where they find that it is unnecessarily wide, or that falls in a category covered by one of the other prohibitions.

Senator Frith: But they will have come to that conclusion before they have done the examination, then.

Senator Godfrey: The members of the committee will not have come to that conclusion.

Senator Frith: I don't care who comes to the conclusion.

Senator Godfrey: In any event, I did not want to improve upon the directive.

Senator Frith: Then forget it!

Senator Godfrey: Five years ago I had it worded differently. I had "draw to the attention of the Senate," and someone objected to that then. I think we must have revised it three or four times five years ago, but as far as I am concerned, and as far as the members of the committee are concerned, this will give the committee the authority. We had this passed once before, and all we want is to have it passed again so we can have another go at the House of Commons to see whether they will agree.

Senator Frith: My advice has not cost you anything, and perhaps it is worth exactly what you paid for it, but you still did not get my point. If somebody does not want a statute to go there, they will say, "You only have the authority to examine things that are unnecessarily wide." You can then say, "Well, we have to examine it to find out if it is unnecessarily wide." That is the mouth getting the tail.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question. I tried to listen attentively to all of what Senator Godfrey has said, but did I understand him to say that the lawyers of the committee are doing that now, but in an unofficial and unauthorized way? Did I understand that correctly?

Senator Godfrey: You did to a certain extent. Four or five years ago they did that. They have not been doing that since. We had an unofficial trial run, and that may have been against the rules, but I was the joint chairman of the committee at that time. I believed that there should be a government supporter from the Senate as joint chairman, because when the joint chairman is a government supporter, the reports made by that committee to the government carry much more weight than if the two joint chairmen were members of the opposition.

We had a trial run then, and I wrote unofficially to those people and pointed out that the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce pointed that out approximately five years ago. I said: "Well, we had an unofficial trial run that may not be covered by the rules, but I got these people to do that, and it worked."

Senator Corbin: Again to Senator Godfrey: Does the senator really need this type of authority to do this sort of thing? I admit that I do not understand this, but must he have this type of authority to carry on this type of work?

Senator Godfrey: That is right, though we could have gone on as I did in the past on an informal basis, and perhaps on an illegal basis, allowing some nit-picker to stand up and start complaining about what we were doing, but this will carry more weight if it is legalized.

Furthermore, I must say that the lawyers who were advisers to the committee at that time were hard workers. They did this work voluntarily for a year or two, and unofficially and informally, but when they did not receive this authority, they used that as an excuse not to look at the bills.

I was not going to tell them to go ahead and spend that extra time on this, but they were quite prepared to do so to demonstrate the necessity. I can tell you that they have similar legislation in Australia which is working.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, to give these people some time to get along with each other, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before we adjourn to await the arrival of the Deputy of Her Excellency the Governor General, there is a motion standing in my name which is found at page ix of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate dated March 31, 1987 for Thursday, for moving on April 2, 1987. It is motion No. 2.

I have spoken to Senator Doody and Senator Murray about the establishment of this special committee of the Senate. Senator Murray suggested yesterday that he was going to raise a point of order, and that is one reason why I wanted to speak to him about bringing it forward now. I did not want to deprive him of doing that since he was going to be absent for part of this afternoon's sitting.

In talking to Senator Murray he told me that he had abandoned his point of order, and that he supports the motion. For that reason I ask leave to bring this matter forward and have it disposed of today.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, we have no problem with the principle of this motion, as Senator Murray has indicated. However, there are some questions that should be answered. I suppose the principal one in my mind is why it is not suggested to refer it to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and another relates to the number of senators proposed to sit on the special committee. Is the Deputy Leader of the Opposition going to explain why he proposes nine senators, and give us the breakdown of that number and tell us how he arrived at it, and so forth?

The Hon. the Speaker: Perhaps the Honourable Senator Frith could put the formal motion before the Senate.

PATENT ACT

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition), pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 31, 1987, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto;

That the Bill be referred to the said special committee, in due course;

That nine Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): As I said earlier, honourable senators, we have no problem with bringing this matter forward today, but is it absolutely necessary that it be disposed of today? Senators on this side may have some questions. Perhaps they might wish to raise them in a speech on this motion tomorrow or on Tuesday of next week.

Senator Frith: On the first point raised by Senator Doody, that is, why the subject matter is not being referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—strictly speaking, this comes under one of the areas that that committee deals with, namely, patents, but the feeling is that this should be more appropriately dealt with by a special committee of the Senate because, while “patents” is the subject matter, the real subject matter is the cost of prescription drugs. So the feeling is that it would be better if the matter were referred to a special committee of the Senate rather than the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

As to the number of senators, I picked nine because I thought that could be distributed by having six members of the opposition and three members of the government side sit on the special committee. However, that number is not fixed in concrete.

• (1600)

Senator Hicks: It is if you cast a vote.

Senator Frith: It is not fixed in concrete as to why I picked it.

When we were discussing it, Senator Petten suggested eight—five and three.

Senator Marshall: So he is the culprit!

Senator Frith: However, if that is going to be a stumbling block, I can change it.

On the third point, that is the question as to adjourning it so that someone can speak to the motion itself, my objective in proposing the motion is to get the committee going as soon as possible. That apparently is part of the reason for Senator Murray's support for it, because he, as a member of the government, would like to have any processes that will take place on the studying this bill commence as soon as possible. In fact, he wanted a pre-study done some time ago by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. So he is in favour of the pre-study and accepts the idea of the special committee.

That is the only reason why I wanted it disposed of today. I would not press it for the matter of 24 hours, but the committee will probably want to hire some help. I am not asking for that power now, because the committee has to prepare a budget, and so on. However, there are certain organizational details that have to be worked out, and I would like to get that clock ticking as soon as possible. Certainly, I will not press for it today if someone wants to speak to it tomorrow, but I would appreciate it if we could dispose of it tomorrow.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, before commenting on the motion made by the Honourable Senator Frith, I would like to question him first on the membership of the committee. He mentioned a membership on the committee of six-and-three or five-and-three. The figure of five-and-three appeals to me as being much more reasonable. However, we could run into the problem of a tie vote. If the committee membership were eight—five-and-three—we could have a tie vote.

Senator Argue: How would you have a tie vote?

Senator Phillips: A more appropriate number would be nine, but maybe we could divvy up the numbers five-and-four as being more reasonable and reflective of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Give him an inch and he takes a mile!

Senator Doody: That is a long, slow curve.

Senator Frith: I do not understand. If you had eight, you will not get a tie vote because you have a chairman.

Senator Phillips: The chairman can vote in committee.

Senator Frith: But the chairman does not vote unless there is a tie, and there cannot be a tie if the membership ratio is four-and-three.

Senator Argue: It is four-and-three—unless you have a defector!

Senator Frith: I suggest that working out the number—

Senator Doody: Can we leave the number for now?

Senator Frith: —is a good reason to put it off until tomorrow, because in the meantime the two whips can discuss it and settle on it. However, if a membership of nine is not acceptable, five-and-three is. But moving up to five-and-four is not acceptable.

Senator Flynn: Is it indiscreet to ask whom you have in mind for chairman?

Senator Frith: No, it is not at all indiscreet. In fact, somebody said once that there are no indiscreet questions, just indiscreet answers. I cannot give you either a discreet or an indiscreet answer, because that has not been settled yet.

Senator Nurgitz: Can we know who the candidates are?

Senator Doody: Are you receiving applications?

Senator Frith: We are, yes.

Senator Marshall: I will not run.

Senator Frith: Get in line!

If five-and-three is acceptable, I suggest that we do it today. However, if there is a feeling that there has to be further negotiation between the whips, then we can put it off until tomorrow.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, in order to allow for negotiations with my opposite number, Senator Petten, I move the adjournment. This will give us a chance to debate it.

Senator Doody: I have a question before we move the adjournment. As Senator Frith pointed out earlier, the rules of the Senate specifically mention patents and royalties as being in the domain of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

Is it necessary to have a separate motion to change that rule, or do we set up another committee and refer the matter to it in defiance of this rule, without mentioning the fact that it is notwithstanding that specific rule?

Senator Frith: No. I looked into that and noticed that rule 67(1)(I) concerning the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce states:

... to which shall be referred, if there is a motion to that effect, bills, messages, petitions,—

Since there is no motion at the moment for referral to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, this motion is in order.

I also checked some precedents. The one that immediately came to mind was CSIS. We set up a special committee for that. We were going to send it to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, or at least we thought about it, but we set up a special committee. So I think it is in order.

However, I understand the point taken. In fact, I thought that that was the point that Senator Murray was going to raise, but when I spoke to him he said, "No, that was not the one that I was going to raise." I thought about that and I was worried about it, too, but I think that it is in order.

On motion of Senator Phillips, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE SENATE

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to give notice of a serious question of privilege. I am giving notice because a question of privilege is supposed to be dealt with at the first opportunity, and this is the first opportunity I have had for a number of reasons, including bad weather which caused transportation problems yesterday.

Another reason I give notice is that the proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce are not available yet. I checked on that again this morning. Of course, I have a copy of the "blues", but the proceedings are not generally available to honourable senators because they have not yet been printed.

My question of privilege involves a serious matter, in my view. I was prevented by the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce from pursuing a line of questioning that I believed was relevant and pertinent to the issue when the Minister of State (Privatization) appeared before that committee.

A second aspect of my question of privilege relates to the report of the committee respecting the pre-study of Bill C-38. I do not want to go any further at the moment than to say that that report is inaccurate. It says that the committee made a decision not to allow the line of questioning I mentioned a minute ago. After careful perusal of the committee's report, I found the committee made no such decision in the committee room. It may be that that decision was made in somebody's back room and was purported to be a decision of the committee, but there was no motion or resolution passed by the committee that said that senators could not pursue a certain line of questioning.

Honourable senators, I hope we can get to this matter at the next sitting of the Senate; however, if honourable senators who are interested in this matter are unable to be present then, perhaps it can be dealt with at the sitting on Wednesday or Thursday of next week. I should simply like to say that I am prepared to pursue this matter at the next sitting of the Senate.

[Later:]

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I listened to my colleague, Senator Olson, and look forward to hearing what he has to say, and also look forward to listening to him discuss "relevancy". Unfortunately, honourable senators, I cannot be here Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, but I can be here on Thursday of next week.

However, I can read, and if he feels he wishes to proceed at the next sitting, I will read with interest what he has to say, and likely I will have something to say when it is appropriate for me to do so.

Senator Frith: Really?

Senator Olson: I could give notice for Thursday, and hopefully Senator Sinclair will be here to hear my enlightening remarks.

Senator Sinclair: I still say that I can read, and I would not like my honourable friend to put himself out. If he is ready to proceed on Tuesday, then he should do so.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a question of privilege, namely, the privileges of honourable senators.

Yesterday, in an exchange with Senator Flynn, we debated the question of whether the Speaker has the authority to choose between two senators when the two want to speak at the same time. I said that there is no such provision in the rules. If I can insert a parenthetical comment, the whole event, as it transpired, recalled H.L. Mencken, the famous sage of Baltimore.

Senator Doody: He was an iconoclast.

Senator Frith: An iconoclast and a great agnostic.

Senator Macquarrie: And a great writer.

Senator Frith: A terrific writer, a magical writer, as Russell Baker once described him. In any event, someone is supposed to have said to him: "H.L., supposing when you die the first thing that happens is that you find yourself before Jesus and the 12 Apostles. What will you say then?" He answered: "I will say, 'Gentlemen, I was wrong'".

In that tenor, rule 26 clearly supports what Senator Flynn stated yesterday. That rule states:

When two or more senators rise to speak, the Speaker shall call upon the senator who in the Speaker's opinion first rose; but a motion may be made that any senator who has risen "be now heard" or "do now speak".

So, honourable senators, I was wrong.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next I will call the attention of the Senate to Canada's international relations.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 7th April, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I must inform honourable senators that Senator Murray will not be able to join us today. He is detained on government business. I would be happy to take notice of any questions senators might have and see that they get to the proper authorities.

Senator Frith: You mean you promise you won't try to answer any of them, and you will make no comment?

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES DISPUTE

SENATE REPRESENTATION AT NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I refer to a series of questions raised yesterday by me and other senators in connection with the Canada-U.S. trading arrangements. We all know the answers we received.

I notice that in the discussions between Canada and France on the fisheries and boundaries dispute provision has been made to include as observers at these discussions two members of the House of Commons. In fact, the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in the House that members had been included because of their interest in the question of the boundaries and fisheries.

It is evident that a number of senators also have an interest in this question. We have been pursuing it in Committee of the Whole. I would merely ask whether consideration has been given to including senators as observers, as has been done for members of the House of Commons.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly take notice of the question, senator, and see that it gets to the appropriate minister.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN OTTAWA—SUGGESTED CONTENTS OF PUBLICATION

Hon. Keith Davey: Honourable senators, I am disappointed that the Leader of the Government is not here.

Senator Doody: Oh, oh!

Senator Phillips: You should have been here yesterday!

Senator Davey: I hold him in high regard and, indeed, I wanted to make a suggestion which I think could even further enhance his career. With honourable senators' permission, I will make my suggestion to the deputy leader. Perhaps he would be good enough to convey it to the leader. Either the leader or the deputy leader might wish to comment.

I have in my hand a document entitled "Canada Today", Volume 17, No. 2, 1986. It is subtitled "Summit '86". I thought it might be helpful to the leader, and now to the deputy leader, to review this publication. It is comprised of 16 11 x 8-1/2 glossy pages of which more than 50 per cent are taken up with photographs. There are 19 photographs in total, and their breakdown is interesting, honourable senators. There are 11 photographs of the Prime Minister and President Reagan together; 6 photographs of the Prime Minister alone, that is, without the President; 2 photos of Mrs. Mulroney alone, that is, without either the Prime Minister or the President, and one of them is the only black and white picture in the book. In all of those 19 pictures, honourable senators, not one was taken of President Reagan by himself.

The copy is tough, hard-hitting and informative. I think two examples will suffice:

A rainstorm had been forecast but none came. The night was warm, the moon was bright, the guests were glamorous and the menu strikingly Canadian . . .

Senator Doody: Where was the Rainmaker?

Senator Frith: Yes, where were you when we needed you?

Senator Davey: The Rainmaker did not make the cut to the state dinner, let me assure you.

Here is another example of the hard-hitting nature of this prose:

The glow of harmony would prove to be a silver lining attached to a considerable cloud.

Honourable senators, I am not a cynical fellow. I am confident that the government will produce yet another hard-hitting, tough document about next week's summit. Therefore, I want to make just one or two helpful suggestions. Perhaps we could have more pictures—let's shoot for 75 per cent this time. Why not have less copy and try to make it softer? Could we not include more pictures of the Prime Minister? Indeed, why not print a centrefold that would be suitable for framing? Third—and sadly, here is where politics enters the picture—common courtesy, it seems to me, would dictate at least just one small picture of President Reagan all by himself. Remember, that would be one more than there was last time.

● (1410)

But, for heaven's sake, honourable senators, get rid of all those pictures of the Prime Minister and the President together, because this year that kind of stuff will no longer play Peoria, or even New Waterford. Instead, I would suggest, why not a group picture of the Business Council on National Issues or the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, or even the Tory Senate caucus?

My plan will virtually guarantee that something bigger will come out of Summit '87. I believe that the Shamrock Summit of '86 just could become the Thistle Summit of 1987. I would like your comments, sir.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first comment that crosses my mind is the fact that I am grateful that Senator McElman is not here, because yesterday he called our attention—I see that he is here. He is just not in his place. I apologize—to the stretching of the rules, which was almost as intense as the stretching of our patience. I think that same comment might apply this afternoon.

Having said that, I share the honourable senator's disappointment that Senator Murray is not with us today. I know that we all like to see him around as much as possible, and he very rarely disappoints us.

As for the brilliant analysis of the document, I will have to leave that to the peers of the publishing industry who can always make a better comment on it than I can. I have not seen the photos. I am sure they are all delightful. As for President Reagan's being alone, perhaps he likes being alone.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, would Senator Davey also permit the inclusion in those recommendations that the menu be changed so that we can get rid of that "Angel Hair Pasta" to which our attention was drawn by the honourable senator's leader in his absence?

TELEGLOBE CANADA

REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE—APPARENT LEAK RE MEMOTEC BID—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to ask a question—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): That would be a change!

Senator Olson: Well, I am not quite sure where that—

Senator Doody: The last one was a speech.

Senator Olson: I see. In that context, I accept the comment.

May I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government when we can expect to receive some answers to questions I raised respecting what appears to be a leak out of the Department of Privatization or the minister's office with respect to the Memotec bid for Teleglobe? I know that we passed the bill yesterday, but I was promised by the Leader of the Government that we would have answers to those questions, but we did not get them. There is something lying there smoking, smouldering, and it is giving off a very bad odour, if I may say so. So why does the government not give us some answers—and, by the way, I need them for next week when we are going to pursue this other matter—because, you know, we had some problems in the committee regarding running interference for the ministers, when we had only one opportunity to have her before the committee. Can the Deputy Leader of the Government give us some answers today as to when those questions will be answered?

Senator Doody: No, I cannot, honourable senators. I will certainly make inquiries for the honourable senator. My understanding was that this matter was under investigation. But, in any event, I will certainly make inquiries and see what I can find out.

Senator Olson: Would the Deputy Leader of the Government go a little further than that and give us an undertaking that he will do his level best to get some answers before next Tuesday so that I will have them in time to raise a matter that I have tried to raise for about six weeks? I am quite sure about what I want to raise, and I am sure that the ministers who were there also knew what I wanted to raise. It is a matter of answering, that's all.

Senator Doody: I will certainly try, honourable senators.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I should like to draw your attention to the fact that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee does not run interference for ministers. What it does is deal with relevant matters in the proper manner.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I just want to say that I do not agree with that; and I was not directing my question to the chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee at this time. If he wants to answer, I will comment on it.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN OTTAWA—ELIMINATION OF ANOMALIES IN MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING RE SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In view of the interest that was displayed by the President of the United States at the time of the "fast track" negotiations on trade enhancement with the United States, and in view of the fact that a memorandum of understanding was entered into under considerable time constraint last December 30, I wonder if the Leader of the Government can inform the Senate whether there is on the agenda for next week a discussion between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States with respect to methods of alleviating or eliminating the anomalies, the inequities and the unfairness that are so apparent in that memorandum of understanding dealing with the softwood lumber industry.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will make an inquiry respecting that matter. I do not have an answer right now.

SUMMIT MEETING IN OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COMMUNICATIONS TO PRIME MINISTER FROM PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, would the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to table in the Senate sometime next week any correspondence or messages between any provincial legislature and the Prime Minister with respect to issues which they petitioned the Prime Minister to raise at the Summit Conference between the Prime Minister of Canada the President of the United States next Monday?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I will certainly ask if such correspondence is indeed available, and if it is proper to table it I will ask that it be done.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TOBIQUE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—DEFINITION OF "TECHNICAL BREACH CLAIM"

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, on December 19 last I put a question to the Deputy Leader of the Government with respect to specific land claims. The deputy leader at that time answered by saying that he would certainly make representations to the minister in that respect when, in fact, I had asked for a comprehensive response. There may have been a misunderstanding between us as to what, specifically, I was seeking, because we were then talking about comprehensive land claims and specific land claims.

However, in the interval it seems that the bureaucracy has fathered and mothered a new type of claim which they now designate as a "technical breach claim". I have been led to understand that that matter has now been before cabinet for some time for the purpose of some legal definition. I would ask the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate to inquire as to when the native people can expect a definition of, or a conclusion by cabinet with respect to, the meaning of this new term since it seems that no one is quite sure exactly what it means and how it will apply. This has the effect, of course, of putting a stop to many of the undertakings by the native people with respect to their land claims, so I would ask the deputy leader to inquire about that matter and possibly give me a response fairly soon.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I certainly will try. I will make representations and get the answer as quickly as I can.

INDUSTRY

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—TERMS OF CONTRACT RE JOB GUARANTEES—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, before we leave Question Period, I would like to ask a further question with respect to the General Motors deal. My question is based on an article in this morning's Gazette, and I refer to parts of the article in which Suzanne Michaud, press aide to Quebec Industry Minister Daniel Johnson, is quoted as saying:

"I haven't actually seen the agreement, but that's part of the deal. I should know, since I work for Mr. Johnson who signed it."

[Senator Olson.]

CAW president Bob White was also under the impression that the plant and its 3,500 workers would remain open until 1994.

• (1420)

Then further on it states:

But a federal government official would neither confirm nor deny the date.

The federal official stated:

A contract exists between the government and General Motors, which is confidential.

As an aside, I would think that a contract like that, involving large sums of public money, should be open to public view and should not be kept in secrecy. The federal official goes on to say:

But you must assume the government doesn't give away money without some guarantees—

Senator Olson: Well, we know that; they have proven themselves.

Senator Argue: It is pretty unclear. But then there is this—I will call it a blockbuster:

However, GM Canada president George Peapples has denied that jobs are guaranteed until 1994. "There aren't any guarantees ever in this business," he said—

My question is: Will the contract be made public? Will the Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us why the government has apparently made a contract with General Motors that has led the General Motors president to deny that there are jobs guaranteed until 1994? It is a give-away to General Motors, but something was to be received in return. Now we have the president of General Motors saying that there are no guarantees whereas we have been informed that there are job guarantees in this contract. I would like to know what, in fact, the situation is.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I will certainly make an inquiry on the honourable senator's behalf.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, could he also make an inquiry and advise senators how they get access to this information?

Senator Doody: I am sorry, I missed that question.

Senator Olson: I would like the Deputy Leader of the Government to give us an undertaking that he will advise senators how we can seek this kind of information under the Access to Information Act.

Senator Doody: I do not know if I can give an undertaking to do that research; I do not have any assistants myself.

Senator Argue: Just bring us the contract; bring us the contract.

Senator Doody: I will certainly try. I will make that inquiry—I have already undertaken to do that.

Senator Argue: A man of your understanding should be able to deliver the contract.

Senator Flynn: He cannot take it, even if he wanted to.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill C-28, to amend the Criminal Code (torture).

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-28 is a rather short piece of legislation and one of which I think I can offer a not too lengthy explanation. It is a bill that amends our criminal law to conform with the United Nations Covenant against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. This is a convention of the United Nations of which Canada became a signatory in August of 1985.

There are two major amendments contained in the bill. The first is to criminalize both mental and physical torture.

The second amendment is a new provision that would give Canada jurisdiction over acts of torture committed on Canadian ships and aircraft, as well as acts committed by or on Canadians anywhere in the world. Canada would also have jurisdiction over offences of torture, wherever committed, where the alleged torturer is afterwards present in Canada. Indeed, this breaks new ground in what most lawyers would call jurisdictional matters.

There is always the view that one had to be prosecuted in the place where the offence took place. This is quite an expansion of those rules of jurisdiction.

Two additional provisions in the bill prohibit the use of evidence obtained as a result of torture, and provide that exceptional circumstances such as states of war or other public emergency cannot be used to justify the commission of torture. Of course, these provisions are in conformity with the United Nations Convention. Torture is defined in the bill as "any act or omission by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person" for reasons of discrimination or for other purposes such as punishment, coercion, intimidation or for the purposes of obtaining information. As outlined in the convention, the offence applies to torture committed by officials such as police officers, public officials, members of armed forces and foreign officials who perform equivalent functions under foreign law. It applies also to any person acting with the consent or acquiescence of such an official.

Quite apart from allowing the prosecution of acts of torture committed within Canada, it also gives jurisdiction to prosecute a torturer, if the act occurred on a Canadian aircraft or ship, if either the accused or the victim is a Canadian citizen, or if the accused is, after the commission of the offence, present in Canada. In the latter case, Canada has the option to either extradite that person or to prosecute him right here in our country under our laws.

These amendments to the Criminal Code effectively expand Canada's existing legal obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which prohibit torture or other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. These obligations have also been given constitutional status under section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which asserts that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel and unusual treatment or punishment. It was in 1975 that the UN General Assembly adopted the declaration on the protection of all persons from being subjected to torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The assembly subsequently called upon all member states to reinforce their support for the declaration by making a unilateral declaration against torture. Canada did just that in a declaration made in 1982.

Believing that more was needed than the declaration, the United Nations General Assembly in 1977 requested the Commission on Human Rights to elaborate, and asked that commission to proceed with the drafting of a convention, which it did, based on the 1975 declaration. Canada participated quite actively in the working group of the Commission on Human Rights, and supported the initiative as a concrete manifestation of international action against such treatment. In 1983 Canada sponsored a procedural resolution requesting the Commission on Human Rights to afford the matter the highest priority. A draft convention was submitted and adopted by the General Assembly on December 10, 1984. The United Nations Convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment was opened for signature on February 4, 1985, and Canada signed it on August 23, 1985. It is intended that Canada will be in a position to ratify the convention in 1987.

Honourable senators, my understanding of the matter is that the eight or nine basic elements of the convention are contained in Bill C-28, the amendments to the Criminal Code. It is my suggestion, after all members have had an opportunity to speak, that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs where such questions as may arise, both with respect to our obligations under international law and with respect to pure Canadian law, will be answered by officials of the Department of External Affairs and, perhaps, the Department of Justice. I urge the adoption of this bill.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Stanbury, debate adjourned.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Richard J. Doyle moved the second reading of Bill S-6, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

● (1430)

He said: Honourable senators, if you will indulge me for a moment for a personal observation. Some years ago I was dispatched in the name of the late King George VI from small town Ontario to the big city of Vancouver where I was required to find billets in the Kitsilano Beach area, which I did. I found a home operated by a pleasant couple. They provided clean rooms and reasonable meals. The only problem was that the landlady watered the tomato juice—half and half, I would say. It turned out, however, she did not water everyone's juice, only the juice of guests who came from Ontario.

There was nothing personal in that discrimination, for the good woman of the house herself came westward from the great province which I have the honour to represent in the Senate, but that migration had occurred as part of the upward mobility of the 1920s, and with the true zeal of the converted, she believed that no one new to British Columbia should be allowed all of its advantages without establishing residency for at least five years. What's more, people from the east were not likely to tell the difference between watered tomato juice and the real thing anyway.

Later on I would have been protected from such an outrage—at least, if it had been corporately committed and the offending product had been shipped from one province to another. Regulations sensibly set out under the federal Food and Drugs Act, and which have been in effect in one form or another for a hundred years, set standards which specify required or permitted ingredients for any product labelled "tomato juice"—and for hundreds of other food items ranging from sunset yellow food colouring to allspice; from cold pack cheese to sweet basil extract; from Irish stew to wieners and beans or, on the other hand, from wieners and beans to wieners and wieners. The regulations governing the recipe list are quite particular. Did you know, for instance, that ice cream shall not contain more than 100,000 bacteria per gram?

Product identities are established by stipulating the "common name" of most foods which must be displayed on the labels. There must be so much of this, there may not be so much of that. Inclusion of all other ingredients is prohibited. While there is no ban on marketing foods that do not meet the standards, consumers purchasing a food, relying on its common name, essentially get what they expect. You might grind up cumquats, add synthetics and get something that tastes like tomato juice. You may sell it, but—landladies, please note—you can't call it tomato juice.

While the primary responsibility for the Food and Drugs Act rests with the Department of National Health and Welfare, administration and enforcement of food standards is carried out jointly with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Health, of course, deals with health aspects, Consumer and Corporate Affairs with fraud.

When I mentioned the range of products governed by the recipe list, I failed to include beer—and beer is the trigger of the amendment to the act which demands our attention today. We have come to the famous Labatt Lite Beer case, which some senators with an interest in such things may remember sprang from the introduction in December, 1977, by Labatt's Brewery of a special malt liquor product called Special Lite, which contained 4 per cent alcohol by volume. Inspectors for Consumer Affairs seized some of the stuff on the not unreasonable assumption that Special Lite—l-i-t-e—might be mistaken for a light—l-i-g-h-t—beer, the standard for which stipulated a maximum alcoholic content of 2.5 per cent by volume.

However, in a judgment dated January 9, 1978, the Honourable Mr. Justice Collier of the Federal Court of Canada, Trial Division, Vancouver, found that Labatt's Brewery Limited had not packaged or advertised its Special Lite product in a manner likely to be mistaken for the standardized product.

This decision was appealed, and on April 11, 1979, the Honourable Mr. Justice Pratte and Mr. Justice Rhodes Smith of the Federal Court of Appeal in Vancouver set aside the judgment of Justice Collier and granted leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada as part of their decision.

The appellate court felt that there had been a violation of section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act, and stated that this section is "calculated to protect the food-buying public not only against dangerous foods but against being misled concerning the composition of foods."

The matter—the storm in a stein—came before the Supreme Court of Canada in June, 1979. The decision given in December, 1979, reversed the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal, once again finding in favour of the plaintiff, Labatt Breweries of Canada. The Supreme Court ruled that two sections of the Food and Drugs Act were ultra vires in that the criminal law power did not apply to recipe-type food standards involving no health or economic fraud considerations. Consequently, this decision jeopardized not only the validity of the malt liquor standards found in the Food and Drugs regulations but also other comparable standards like those for ground beef, enriched bread, salad dressing, sausages and strawberry jam. And certainly tomato juice!

There was, of course, thorough review by an interdepartmental committee. A number of different options were considered, and in 1986 it was decided by the ministers that a nationally-consistent system of food standards be retained in Canada, subject to limitations imposed on federal authority by the "Lite Beer" decision of the Supreme Court.

The decision of the Supreme Court restricted the authority of the federal government to promulgate food standards which could be enforced if such products were sold only within a province. The insertion of the "Trade and Commerce Limitation" into section 6 of the act would simply revalidate food standards if the product were imported or crossed a provincial border.

Cabinet also decided that the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, should initiate further discussions with the provinces to foster the evolution of a nationally-consistent system of federal and provincial food standards.

● (1440)

All provinces have signalled an interest in maintaining a nationally-consistent system. All but two of the provinces have indicated that referencing of federal standards will be considered as the first option, as it is probably the least difficult and the least source-intensive mechanism by which to close the loop and cover standardized products sold only within a province.

The major food trade associations as well as the Consumer's Association of Canada have supported the revalidation of food standards by legislative amendment of the Food and Drugs Act. Since the Labatt decision, the recipe-type food standards under the Food and Drugs Act have been difficult to enforce. They have just not been enforced. However, it should be noted that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been carrying out monitoring surveys to determine levels of compliance while taking no actual enforcement action because of the legal jeopardy of the standards.

In the seven and a half long years since the decision of the Supreme Court, the marketplace has changed to some degree with respect to standardized food products. The brewing industry has introduced other new products on to the market, and has set 4 per cent as the industry norm for the product now sold as "light beer".

The baking industry, the meat industry, the dairy industry, the fruit and vegetable industry, the confectionery industry and the distilled alcoholic beverage industry have also introduced new products, and have requested the amendment of federal standards during the seven-and-a-half-year period of uncertainty. But because of a ruling by the Department of Justice, it has not been possible to either amend food standards or promulgate new standards in the Food and Drugs regulations.

The recognition of the names of a number of foreign alcoholic beverage products such as Cognac, Armagnac, Irish Whiskey and Scotch Whisky in the Food and Drugs Act has trade implications in that a reciprocity arrangement exists to protect the name and identity of products such as "Canadian Whisky" in overseas markets. Clearly, these appellations are not related to health, and are only indirectly related to fraud.

However, no existing federal statute, other than the Food and Drugs Act, appears suitable as an alternative to deal with the identity of these products, which have considerable economic significance at both international and national levels of trade. Thus, industries involved with these products are anxious to have any uncertainty removed about the validity of the legal standard.

As a participant in the Codex Alimentarius Commission, Canada has an obligation to review and adopt internationally recommended food standards to the degree possible. During the past seven and a half years it has not been possible to adopt such standards under the Food and Drugs Act in accordance with our international obligations. Amendment of section 6 of the Food and Drugs Act would remove this impediment, and work to adopt a number of international standards could once again proceed.

The amendment being proposed would introduce a number of new sub-sections into section 6. Section 22, dealing with the powers of inspectors, would also be amended as a consequence to the revision of section 6. The new section 6(1) would prohibit the importation and inter-provincial movement of an article of food that is intended for sale unless that article complies with the standard prescribed for that food. The new subsection 6(2) would provide an exemption for carriers and operators of conveyances where they could not have reasonably ascertained that there had been a contravention of any of those paragraphs. The new subsection 6(3) would amend the present section 6 by limiting the application of that section to only those foods that are imported, or that are sent or conveyed or are intended to be sent or conveyed from one province to another.

A new section 1.1(1) would provide the Governor in Council with the power to identify a prescribed standard or a portion of a prescribed standard for food as being necessary to prevent injury to the health of the consumer or purchaser.

A new section 6.1(2) will prohibit the labelling, packaging, selling or advertising of any article of food unless the food complies with any standard or portion of the standard prescribed for that food that has been identified to prevent injury to the health of the consumer or purchaser of the food.

A new paragraph 22(1)(a.1) would permit an inspector to enter any conveyance being used to transport an article of food in order to determine whether there has been compliance with these sections. This change to the powers of inspectors is necessary as a consequence of the introduction of the concept of conveyance or inter-provincial movement.

I believe that few consumers would be sympathetic to a deterioration in the quality of staple foods, to say nothing of the quality of tomato juice.

Food manufacturers and ingredient suppliers have suffered certain lost opportunities since the landmark Supreme Court decision in 1979 in that they have not been able to have food standards amended in response to new technology and changing consumer demand. The inability to amend or develop standards also conflicts with the international obligations of Canada.

Honourable senators, I commend the bill to your consideration, and would ask that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask Senator Doyle a question. Is there any explanation given by the government as to why it has taken seven and a half years to come up with a very obvious solution to a problem that has existed all this time?

Senator Doyle: I can only say that there seems to have been a great deal of good intention. The previous government, represented by the gentleman opposite, did indeed draft very similar legislation, but for some reason it came to naught.

As I mentioned, changes were going on within the industry. There seems to have been a great deal of effort expended in trying to keep abreast of these changes so it would not be necessary to come back to Parliament.

[Senator Doyle]

It is, I will agree with Senator Godfrey, very discouraging—and I believe that implication was contained in my remarks that it takes Parliament seven and a half years to plug a loophole.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

PATENT ACT

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto;

That the Bill be referred to the said special committee, in due course;

That nine Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.—
(Honourable Senator Phillips.)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on rare occasions the silent Senate receives the odd, begrudged word of praise and recognition. It usually begins with criticism of the Senate and trails off with the sentence, "However, it must be admitted that their committees do good work." This is usually followed by a reference to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce.

In this Parliament the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, first under the chairmanship of Senator Murray and, after his appointment as Leader of the Government, under the chairmanship of Senator Sinclair, has continued on in the tradition. I may as well admit publicly that there are those of us on this side who had some doubts about Senator Sinclair becoming chairman of the committee. We doubted that he would have the ability to be impartial. We on this side have found him to be absolutely impartial and an excellent chairman.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: That is part of the reason why I am sorry to see that the Leader of the Opposition and the party opposite feel that very important measures like the amendments to the Patent Act should be taken away from this well known committee of the Senate—a committee which over the years has built up an excellent reputation. In this motion we are now saying, "No, those guys are not good enough to deal with these amendments. We must set up a special group that can be directed, a group the opposition feels they can influence to bring in a report based on their views."

This is rather unfortunate. The rumour mill has been circulating a disturbing story to the effect that the Leader of the Opposition and the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce do not see eye to eye on a number of subjects, including Bill C-22. Perhaps this is one of the reasons behind this motion. If so, it is a very disturbing reason. There is another rumour to the effect that the Honourable Senator Argue will withdraw his motion to set up a health committee to be appointed chairman of the committee proposed in this motion. We on this side have nothing against the appointment of Senator Argue as chairman of any committee. We are sure of his ability. We even trust his impartiality. However, we do feel regret that this motion will remove the study of the Patent Act from Senator Sinclair's committee.

Earlier I mentioned the respect that has been given the Senate committees. I will point out that this is the second assault by the opposition upon our committee system since the beginning of the new year. The Fisheries Committee was not capable of handling the cod treaty with France. That had to be dealt with before the Committee of the Whole.

Honourable senators, it is not my wish to imply motives to the opposition.

Senator Frith: But you are going to anyway.

Senator Petten: Perish the thought!

Senator Phillips: However, I think certain senators opposite felt that they would obtain a good deal of publicity from the Committee of the Whole. That did not happen, and now, since that technique was a failure, there must be yet another change. Now we will set up a new committee, send it out on the road, and try to get publicity that way. I do not really mind so long as that publicity is for the Senate and not for the Liberal Party.

In my brief intervention yesterday I raised the question of the size of the committee. At that time I suggested that the committee consist of five Liberal supporters and four P.C. supporters. Since then my views have changed, and for a very simple reason—attendance in the Senate. Let me illustrate that by referring to yesterday's attendance record. The Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate lists 74 senators in attendance yesterday. My recollection would indicate that that would be about the average attendance. However, two committees met while the Senate was sitting: Banking, Trade and Commerce with 12 senators on it and the Joint Committee on Official Languages with nine. A number of senators, after Question Period, follow the pattern established in the House of Commons. They leave—they find business elsewhere. The Senate chamber is of no importance to them.

By the time Senator Frith moved his motion yesterday, which was around 4 o'clock, if my memory is correct, the attendance in the Senate had been reduced to 17. That, I might add, had nothing to do with the fact that Senator Frith was speaking.

Senator Frith: I am sure they heard I was going to speak—can't blame them a bit. In their place I would have done the same.

Senator Doody: Don't be so silly!

Senator Phillips: I just want the record to show that that is normal attendance for that hour of the day. I do not want to insinuate that Senator Frith drove them out.

If we take from the chamber another nine members and send them out on the road in committee, attendance would be reduced to about ten senators, which would be less than the quorum. Therefore, I suggest, honourable senators, that the committee consist of five members, three from the Liberal supporters and two from the government supporters. Its main function will be to hear evidence and to receive briefs. Our rule governing committee hearings requires that only three senators be present to hear evidence. It does not require nine or twelve, it requires only three. I would suggest that we consider the number five so as to leave a few people in the Senate. Someone has to look after the shop. It is still necessary to run the chamber, regardless of how many committees the opposition may desire.

Yesterday Senator Corbin rather surprised me when, in a rather naive fashion, he said surely the government runs the Senate agenda. Honourable senators, I think this motion clearly demonstrates that the government does not operate or manipulate this chamber. It is its own master. I hope it will consider that we do have standing committees established. They have operated for years under the rules of the chamber, and I find it rather disturbing that every time the Leader of the Opposition or the Deputy Leader of the Opposition decide they would like to have certain people hear the evidence on specific legislation, they do not change the membership of the committee. No, they change the rule and establish a new committee. I hope that this will be the last that we see of that pattern for some time.

● (1500)

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the honourable senator a question. Why would you confine the membership of this new committee to senators who actually sit here in the Senate until 4 p.m.? Why not include those who are not around at that time, pull them out of their offices and have them sit on this committee?

Senator Doody: Violence is against the rules.

Senator Phillips: That is somewhat like a theory developed by a political scientist: it works very nicely on paper, but try practising it. It is an entirely different thing. If the honourable senator can get them out of their offices at 4 p.m., then I am sure his whip will be glad to have his assistance.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: I wish to inform honourable senators that if Senator Frith speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this motion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I am bound to say that the only really pleasant and encouraging thing that I heard Senator Phillips say was that he was disturbed by this motion; and I find that very encouraging. There must be something very right about this motion if it disturbs the honourable senator for the reasons he put forward.

Honourable senators, he made two basic points, namely, the fact that this committee will be dealing with a subject which includes the subject of patents, which finds its place in our rules as one of the items of the mandate of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. But, of course, the intention is not to suggest that the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is not able to deal with it. We have some evidence that the committee feels that this particular branch of the subject of patents would be better dealt with elsewhere.

I have tried to make notes on facts that I could deal with arising from Senator Phillips' speech, but I did not take up much space in doing so.

Senator Simard: You must have a good memory.

Senator Frith: The question of extraneous things such as agreements or disagreements between the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and the chairman of the committee, and so on, is just not factual. However, I give Senator Phillips his due. He did say that they were rumours; but that did not prevent him from using them and presenting them as reasons to vote against the motion. But I am not clear that he wants to vote against the motion. He just does not want any more special committees to deal with subjects that are found in the list of items in the mandates of the various standing committees.

His second basic point was a good one—the question of attendance; but I think that Senator Godfrey's point was that it is a non-sequitur to say that there were 74 senators here, that senators leave after Question Period, and therefore we should not establish a committee that will make more demands on the time of honourable senators.

As to the number, honourable senators, I am prepared to amend the motion to make it read eight at five-and-three instead of nine at six-and-three. I think that is a reasonable distribution. If we are trying to reflect the proportion in the membership of the Senate, I think that is a reasonable division. There are 66 Liberals and 32 Conservatives; so it seems to me that if we try to establish the committee on some proportionate basis, then that is quite reasonable.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am sorry to interrupt—

Senator Frith: You are not sorry to interrupt at all. You are glad to interrupt. Be honest—you want to interrupt, and you are happy to interrupt. Now interrupt.

Senator Phillips: I merely wanted to ask the Deputy Leader of the Opposition about his former colleagues who now list themselves as being Independent. Where does he count them?

Senator Frith: I don't, and I didn't, and don't intend to. If you want any independents on the committee, they will come out of your three.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

So, honourable senators, I know there is support from both sides of the house to get on with this study. I do agree with Senator Phillips that when we are setting up committees of this kind there are two things that we must do: when we are putting members on the committee, we must make sure that we obtain undertakings from them that they will attend the committee hearings; also, we should have it understood that we will continue to need a quorum to operate in the chamber. I believe that the point raised by the honourable senator is one that we must keep raising when any development, by way of committees or otherwise, tends to sap attendance in the chamber itself. Therefore, I seek leave to amend the number of members on the committee to eight, and ask honourable senators to support the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will read the modified motion. It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Patten:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, in advance of the said bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto;

That the Bill be referred to the said special committee, in due course;

That eight Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee; and

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, may I ask one question of Senator Frith with respect to his motion? The motion says:

That the Bill be referred to the said special committee, in due course;

Does that mean immediately?

Senator Frith: No. We could not do that until we get the bill. That is why we are referring the subject matter of the bill immediately.

Senator MacDonald: I am sorry, I meant the pre-study.

Senator Frith: Yes. The wording of the motion is that the subject matter be referred—which is the formal vocabulary for “pre-study”. We will start on the pre-study, and when the bill arrives in the Senate it will be referred to committee. At that time I assume that the committee will be in the course of its pre-study, because it is the intention to start right away.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Deputy Leader of the Opposition. Should we consider this desire for a pre-study period as a policy which could apply to all bills which committees would like to consider, including Bill C-44? Are we to conclude that you intend to accept the proposal I made yesterday in the same spirit with which you introduced this motion?

Senator Frith: If I may reply in English—

[English]

Nice try, but no comment.

Senator Simard: No comment, no vote.

[Translation]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, Senator Simard did not move a motion before the Senate.

Motion, as modified, agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the Committee; and

That the Committee report to the Senate no later than 15 December, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Phillips.)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, when I adjourned the debate, I did so in the name of Senator Doody. It is my understanding that Senator Marshall wishes to speak this afternoon. I am quite willing to yield the floor to Senator Marshall. However, before doing so, I would like to say that I personally would be happy to support the re-establishment of the committee.

● (1510)

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words in support of the motion of Senator Lafond, dated Tuesday, March 10, to appoint or re-establish a special committee of the Senate to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence.

Since the committee began its work back in 1980, as I am sure honourable senators are aware, it has provided an analysis on various aspects of Canada's forces which has served as a basic reference document for much of the national debate on defence issues. The committee has played an important role in recent efforts to clarify those defence issues and to examine the state of Canada's armed forces. It has conducted detailed inquiries into the structure of the forces and the capabilities of two of our major commands.

The former committee began its work with a study on Canada's armed forces manpower, and then focussed on maritime command and air command dealing, in the latter case, with territorial air defence and military air transport.

It is the hope of Senator Lafond, a hope that is certainly supported by all members of the former committee, I think, that in order to complete that analysis of Canada's total force, we should examine our land forces, including Mobile Command, Training Command, Communications Command, Northern Command and Canadian Forces Europe. As pointed out by Senator Lafond in his remarks on March 12, this objective is urged with strong emphasis by recognized and prestigious military associations across the country.

I think it is appropriate to say, and also significant, that the reports of the committee have been praised not only by defence ministers, senior military officers and retired military personnel, but also by a very broad spectrum of public opinion. If I may be so bold, I would like to quote just one of many articles of support from recognized defence journals. I refer to Jane's Defence Weekly, which in 1984 stated:

... that the committee had begun playing a key role in defence circles ... not as an apologist for past government doctrine but as a catalyst for change.

That article went on to say:

The committee has spent three years conducting an unusually intensive study of military matters. Starting with manpower requirements and more recently moving to the formidable problems faced by our navy, the senators have sought to bring defence issues from the periphery of debate to front and centre. Their report on maritime command in particular is a devastating assessment, not least because it is well documented and clearly argued.

Honourable senators, Senator Phillips alluded to the credible reference to committees and the work that they are doing. I would like to endorse that and say that if the Senate gets a little credit for its work, it is in the area of the studies conducted by its committees, and the Special Committee on Defence is no exception.

Similarly, if ever there was a need for a continuation of sober monitoring of Canada's ongoing military establishment fitted to Canada's true needs and representing our nation's determination to uphold its self-respect, not only towards its defence at home but as an important member of the international community, then that time is now.

Therefore, honourable senators, I appeal to this chamber to adopt the motion of Senator Lafond to reconstitute the Special Committee on National Defence in order that it might complete its worthwhile effort.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was a member of the former committee, and when this motion was first made I was very much in favour of it, because I presumed that the committee would be looking into the government's new white paper on defence. So I have certain questions in my own mind as to why the committee would commence sitting at this moment, without waiting for the white paper. Therefore, honourable senators, in order for me to have an opportunity to look at Senator Lafond's speech, I wish to adjourn the debate, and I will speak to the matter on Tuesday.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Senator Godfrey adjourns the debate, I would like to speak to it in the meantime.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: I also wish to speak to it, and perhaps Senator Godfrey could adjourn the debate after that.

Senator Godfrey: Very well.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the Special Committee on National Defence has in the past received well-deserved praise in the press, and, as Senator Marshall has pointed out, particularly in the military press, and has certainly brought favourable attention to the Senate.

However, there are some senators who feel that if the work done by this committee is to continue to be done on a long-term basis, then it should be done by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee's mandate is set out in rule 67(1)(h), which concludes by saying:

... papers and other matters relating to foreign and commonwealth relations generally, including:
... (iv) defence;

Throughout the existence of this committee, Senator Lafond has been very candid, and he repeated that candid position on page 617 of the Debates of the Senate of March 12 when he said:

As honourable senators are aware, I have been an advocate for a number of years of there being a standing committee of the Senate on national defence.

Senator Bell: Hear, hear!

Senator Lafond: However, the Senate has not judged it appropriate to create such a committee up to this time and until further notice.

In light of the fact that there are, I believe, many senators who feel that the work of this committee would best be carried on as a subcommittee of Foreign Affairs, or as the work of the Committee on Foreign Affairs itself for that matter, I believe that the motion as it stands goes further than it should. I had understood that, in spite of the feelings that some senators had that the Special Committee on National Defence should operate through the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, the committee wanted to be re-established in order to complete its work on Mobile Command. At least, that was what I was originally told. Either that, or I misunderstood, because it is quite clear from Senator Lafond's speech at page 617 of the Debates of the Senate of March 12, 1987, that he has in mind much more extensive work for the committee. In fact, I think Senator Lafond would frankly admit that since he would like that committee to be a standing committee, then as long as it is not he will make it a permanent special committee—which will not make it a standing committee in law but will make it one in fact. I do not criticize Senator Lafond for that; that is his viewpoint. I just do not agree with it.

At page 617, for example, we find him saying:

... to invite the Senate to reconstitute this special committee so that it will be in existence when the white paper comes down—I am still optimistic—and also to complete our studies on Canada's Armed Forces, by looking into Mobile Command and our land forces generally.

Then further down he said:

Of course, getting into a study of our land forces involves looking into a variety of commands such as Mobile Command itself...

And as Senator Marshall also said—

... Canadian Forces Europe; Training Command; Communications Command and Northern Command. This may become extensive in terms of time.

I think that looks to be an understatement. Nevertheless, the motion states that the committee must report by December 15, 1987.

Honourable senators, I am prepared to support this motion with an amendment, because the present form of the motion is as follows:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

However, if you look at rule 67(1), the word "defence" appears under the Foreign Affairs heading. Therefore, it is clear that if we continue with a study as extensive as that which is stated here, in effect, we are taking subsection (iv) out of rule 67(1)(h) and transferring it over to the new committee. I would like to limit the work of the committee to completing that cluster of good work that it did on the other studies mentioned by Senator Marshall.

Honourable senators, I see Senator Phillips is back with us. When he was speaking about the special committee on Bill C-22, he said he hoped that this would be the last time that anyone wanted to establish a special committee when that committee's mandate fell under the mandate of a standing committee. Honourable senators, it was not the last time. It took approximately ten minutes for another one to come down, and Senator Phillips stood up and supported it. Politics makes strange supporters, doesn't it?

● (1520)

Senator Flynn: Perhaps he changed his mind.

Senator Frith: He is entitled to change his mind, I agree.

Senator Flynn: No, you changed his mind.

Senator Frith: I changed his mind? That will be the day when either one of us changes the other's mind! But it might happen!

[Senator Marshall.]

Senator Phillips: Let us change his mind.

Senator Frith: My amendment, honourable senators, is:

That paragraph 1 of the motion be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider the following matter relating to national defence, namely, Canada's land forces including mobile command, and such other matters as may from time to time be referred to it by the Senate;"

I will have a few brief words to say on the amendment.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten:

That paragraph 1 of the motion be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider the following matter relating to national defence, namely, Canada's land forces including mobile command, and such other matters as may from time to time be referred to it by the Senate;"

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wish to speak briefly to the amendment.

As I mentioned when speaking to the main motion, I believe that the study that is set out and explained in the third-to-last paragraph on page 617 of the Debates of the Senate of March 12, 1987, is much more extensive than I believe is necessary to complete that cluster of studies that the committee commenced some time ago.

Senator Marshall: Would you repeat the paragraph that you are referring to?

Senator Frith: Yes. It states:

Of course, getting into a study of our land forces involves looking into a variety of commands such as Mobile Command itself; Canadian Forces Europe; Training Command; Communications Command—

Senator Marshall: That is okay.

Senator Frith: All right.

I want it understood that the members of the committee are much more familiar and much more knowledgeable about the extent of this study than I am. So it may be that I am unnecessarily concerned, and they will, in fact, be able to deal with all of those subjects by December 15. But I want to make it clear, by reason of the amendment, that I do not feel that we should assume that the white paper will be referred to this committee, nor do I think that the committee should assume that it will get an extension past December 15 if it turns out that my fears are well founded, namely, that it will take much longer than that to deal with the subjects referred to in that paragraph. Indeed, the chairman himself stated that he felt that it would be difficult to meet that target and include all of those subjects.

I mention that as a caveat and as an explanation as to why I am proposing the amendment and, in particular, the context in which I am including our land forces in the amendment.

Senator Marshall: I think that the land forces do not stop at Mobile Command; they take in the other variety of commands.

Senator Frith: That is what I am saying.

Senator Marshall: Oh, you recognize that.

Senator Frith: What I am saying is that if I had enough information and knew as much about the subject as some other honourable senators do, I would have had the amendment simply say "Mobile Command." However, I was told by some colleagues here and Senator Marshall what was wanted. The speech itself makes it clear that they want more than Mobile Command. They also want Canadian Forces Europe, Training Command, Communications Command and Northern Command. I am saying that I am including that because I have been asked to include it on the subject, that if it is not as extensive as I thought it was, then there is a chance, at least, that it can be done by December 15.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I think that the committee, if constituted in accordance with Senator Frith's amendment, can still discharge its function and complete its study of Canada's defence forces. That is to say, having done a study on Maritime Command, a general overview of manpower, and two studies on air command, namely, Air Defence of North America and Air Transport Command, I think that this reference is sufficiently broad to enable the committee to complete its study of the land forces, including Mobile Command and these other commands which are clearly a part of our land forces.

Therefore, I am willing to go along with the amendment, and I do not think that it is necessary for me to expound upon the reasons why I accept the amendment. When the question of the white paper comes, the Senate can deal with it in any way that it likes. It is quite clear that the white paper is not automatically, by this reference, a subject for study by the Special Senate Committee on National Defence. If the Senate wishes to refer the study of the white paper to any other committee, or not refer it to any committee, or, indeed, if it wishes to constitute, extend or reconstitute a National Defence Committee to deal with it, the Senate can deal with that in the way that it wants to at the appropriate time.

Therefore, as a member of the predecessor committees, I accept the amendment, and express my interest in becoming a member of the committee that we are establishing today, and urge honourable senators to pass the motion as amended so that this committee can be constituted and can set up its working schedule before the Easter recess. Otherwise, any possibility of our completing a study of the land forces and reporting by December 15 will be extremely remote. This, I think, is the immediate job that we want to do, and the job that this reference, as amended, will permit us to do. Therefore, I urge honourable senators to support the motion as amended and to get on with the creation of this committee.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the honourable senator a question. I have been a member of the committee, but I have not been in on any consultations about reconstituting it. Can you remember the last time the Standing Senate Committee on National Defence met? I believe it is some time ago. Why have they suddenly decided to look into Mobile Command when they are bringing out a white paper? Would you mind going into that? I would like to understand why there is this sudden activity, and why they said that they could not wait until Tuesday to argue this matter. Why this sudden decision to go ahead after this lapse of time? What value will this study be when you have a white paper coming out?

Senator Hicks: I do not think that the committee's study of the previous aspects of our defence forces involving Maritime Command and Air Command was dependent upon the existence of a white paper.

Senator Godfrey: No.

Senator Hicks: Indeed, it certainly wasn't, because there was not a white paper.

Senator Godfrey: Right; I agree with you.

Senator Hicks: This white paper has been promised by successive governments over a period of at least four years. We all felt confident that we would see it this spring, but we have now learned that it will not be produced at least until the fall, and I would not be the least bit surprised if the study of our land forces by this committee that we are composing today might very well be completed before we see the white paper.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Hicks: I do not think that there is any necessity to wait for the white paper before giving this mandate to the Special Committee on National Defence.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to Senator Frith? In his remarks he reminded the Senate that rule 67(1)(h)(iv) uses the word "defence". Rule 67(1)(l)(iv) uses the word "patents". What is the difference between the emphasis on paragraph (h) and the fact that he can completely ignore paragraph (l) of the same rule?

Senator Doody: It has something to do with arithmetic.

Senator Frith: I was not ignoring them at all. In fact, I made reference to both of them in the context of saying that I agreed that it was covered by another section, and that there are occasions when we should establish a special committee, even when it is in the mandate of an existing committee.

Senator Flynn: When it is convenient to you.

Senator Frith: Exactly. There are times when I should support that kind of thing, and I was supporting it. I merely made the passing comment that Senator Phillips was hoping that this would be the last time that there would be such a request, and I was sympathizing with him in that it only took

• (1530)

On motion of Senator Godfrey, debate adjourned.

CANADA-UNITED STATES DAYS OF PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

DESIGNATION OF JULY 2 AND 3, 1987—MESSAGE FROM COMMONS CONCURRED IN

Leave having been given to revert to Order No. 6:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the following Message from the House of Commons:

Wednesday, March 25, 1987

ORDERED,—That the House of Commons and resolve that July 2 and 3, 1987, coming between July 1, Canada Day, and July 4, U.S. Independence Day, be designated "Canada-United States Days of Peace and Friendship" in recognition of the close and peaceful relations that exist between the two countries, the warm, personal links that prevail between neighbouring communities along the length of the common border and the commitments to freedom, democracy and human rights shared by the two nations.

And that a Message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House in the said resolution by filling in the blank with the words "The Senate of Canada",

And on the motion of the Honourable Senator Balfour, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said Resolution by filling in the blank space left therein with the words "the Senate of Canada"; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.—(Honourable Senator Corbin.)

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, Senator Doody was so kind as to come to me after I had stood Order No. 6 to explain that time was of the essence with respect to the adoption of this motion by the house. My intention in adjourning the debate yesterday and standing the order today had nothing to do with any opposition to the motion. I was unaware that the House of Commons had passed the resolution unanimously and had, in fact, expedited its passage so that we could do the same here in the Senate. It has to do with the forthcoming visit of the President of the United States of America. I had intended to write a few notes and say a few words of wisdom to the Senate. As honourable senators know, my riding—"my riding," forgive me.

An Hon. Senator: Your former riding.

Senator Corbin: The territory of Madawaska where I come from has a very special position along the Canada-United States border. It has been involved in pork-and-bean wars and potato wars and the object of special negotiations with the United States of America, all of which ended with the Webster-Ashburton Treaty of 1842. The people who live on both sides of the Upper Saint John River come from the same roots. Madawaska was founded by the people who lived through the Acadian dispersion. People from the lower St. Lawrence River valley joined those Acadians at about the same time, and they founded what was known for many years as the Territory of Madawaska. Indeed, it took more than a century for Great Britain and the United States to agree to determine where the border between the United States and Canada should be. As a result of that border, families were split, and the Territory of Madawaska was divided between the United States and Canada. It took even longer to determine the border between the Territory of Madawaska and the Province of Quebec, but that is another piece of history in itself.

So all I wanted to do in delaying this motion is, as I have just done, to relate in a few words that history to the Senate. Over the years we citizens of the "American Madawaska" and the "Canadian Madawaska" have maintained a strong friendship, both as a result of family links and as a result of this common history. A resolution such as this one has very special meaning for the people of the two Madawaskas, and I simply want to indicate my support for this motion. I hope the motion will obtain the unanimous consent of honourable senators today, and that the message will be concurred in, so that we can send it along its merry way.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 7, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 7, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

NATIONAL EXECUTIVE OF HADDASSAH-WIZO

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I wish to bring to the attention of honourable senators the presence in the South Gallery of a large contingent of Canada's Haddassah-Wizo, one of Canada's leading and outstanding voluntary women's organizations. In particular, I should like to recognize the National President of that organization, Mrs. Cecily Peters, an outstanding Canadian who has continued to give this organization the kind of leadership that has marked its seven decades of public service.

Haddassah-Wizo has dedicated itself to the assistance of children, youth and indigent women in Canada and in the State of Israel. We are proud to welcome 150 members of the executive of this body, who are meeting here in our capital city to begin the celebration of the organization's 70th anniversary.

I have some personal knowledge of the kind of dedication and commitment these wonderful women have brought to their cause, because in and amongst their 17,000 members are members of my own family, not the least of which is my own mother who has dedicated many hours and days of service to that organization.

In an age when I think we have the responsibility to engage and to encourage the energies of volunteer organizations, no finer example could be found than Haddassah-Wizo of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I rise to welcome our friends from Haddassah-Wizo and join with Senator Nurgitz in saying that all of our families have been involved. I do not see my wife to any extent unless she is with me in Ottawa, because she is usually busy at home working for Haddassah-Wizo raising money for various causes.

[Later]

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I should like to add my words of welcome to those of Senator Nurgitz and Senator Buckwold in acknowledging the presence of the women of Haddassah-Wizo. I am proud to say that I have been a member of Haddassah for many years, and I encourage them in their worthwhile work.

THE HONOURABLE DAVID A. CROLL

TRIBUTES ON FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF GENERAL MOTORS STRIKE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, I take this opportunity to draw to the attention of honourable senators the fact that this is the fiftieth anniversary of the General Motors labour strike. Doing so gives me an opportunity to pay tribute to Senator Croll.

I am sure that many of you saw on "The Journal" a short presentation on that strike. It was really a major turning point in labour relations in Canada. One of the focal players was Senator Croll who, at that time, made the classic statement that he would rather "march with the workers than ride with General Motors." That statement will go down in history with other great statements such as General Douglas MacArthur's "I shall return!"

Senator Croll, even 50 years ago, showed great compassion for working people and for those who were underprivileged. That has carried forward to this chamber, where, as also in the other place, he has shown great interest in the elderly, the poor, in children and in many other social causes.

In honouring Senator Croll today on the fiftieth anniversary of that strike, we also pay tribute to him for the contributions he has made to the life of this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

RONALD W. REAGAN PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I move that the Address of the President of the United States of America, delivered on April 6, 1987, to members of both houses of Parliament, together with the introductory speech by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada and the speeches delivered by the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of speeches see appendix, p. 861.)

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the tabling of documents:

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, could I ask the Deputy Leader of the Government if the practice put into effect today with respect to those documents tabled is to become a matter of general practice? If so, I would like to encourage it.

Today all of the items that he referred to were on my desk—and I guess on all senators' desks—with the morning mail. If it is possible—and I know that it is not always possible—to have those documents on the morning of the day they are tabled here, it would certainly make this aspect of our work much more simple.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, it is our intention to get them out as quickly as we can, yes.

Senator Frith: If possible, before?

Senator Doody: If possible, before, that is right.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT— PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have several petitions to present, and I am prepared to read all the names on the petitions if it is the wish of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: Yes.

Senator Croll: Even if it is not the wish of the Senate!

Senator Bonnell: Even if it is not the wish of the Senate, Senator Croll tells me that I should read them, because he wants to know who they are.

Therefore, I have the honour to present the following petition which I received on April 4, 1987:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes in Bill C-22 will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health-care programs and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and

WHEREAS the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian government's concession to the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF MURRAY RIVER, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, POST OFFICE—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have another petition, the wording of which is different. Therefore, I should like to read the preamble in this case.

PETITION TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to effect widespread closures of rural post offices, and

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to change the locations of many rural post offices, and

WHEREAS such changes are more likely to take place in areas where the postmaster or postmistress is about to resign, retire or become promoted, and

WHEREAS the Murray River postmaster/postmistress will soon be reaching retirement age.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community and to take strong and immediate action to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with super mailboxes or any other inferior service.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

Honourable senators, I ask that this petition be printed in the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate for today.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Explain.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has asked me to explain. I have made this motion several times in the last number of weeks without explaining.

Senator Frith: That is why I asked.

Senator van Roggen: If the honourable senator wishes me to explain, I will simply say that under the allocation of committee time, where the whips have tried to slot committees so that they do not conflict with one another, my committee was assigned the time slot from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Tuesday morning. The management of my party in the Senate decided to change the Liberal Senate caucus meetings to 12 noon on Tuesday, and therefore the time available for my committee to sit was truncated. As a result, I have had to fit my committee meetings informally into the 4 p.m. time slot on Tuesday afternoon. The clerk of my committee is looking into the question of whether or not I can make this motion and have it operate automatically until the end of June, but until I can ascertain whether or not that is proper, I make this motion each Tuesday.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, if that explanation is satisfactory to honourable senators, I cannot see any reason why we cannot give the committee power to sit in that time slot until the end of June. I would like to hear from the whips on the matter, but if Senator van Roggen is right and, in effect, his committee has been assigned an informal time slot and will have to operate on the basis of that informal time slot, then I suggest that we formalize it.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, obviously I did not impress either Senator Frith or Senator van Roggen when I suggested last week that some senators had to be in the Senate in order to form a quorum on specific days. My comments regarding the special committee to study Bill C-22, dealing with amendments to the Patent Act, applies to this. I realize that there is difficulty in scheduling witnesses and saying, "We do not know whether it will be 4.30 p.m. or 5 p.m.," but the function of the Senate requires that we have a quorum of senators. There are various other times available for committees to sit when the Senate does not meet. I am sure that Senator Petten will agree with me that we would be happy to schedule Senator van Roggen's committee for Monday afternoon. I have not had the opportunity to discuss that with him, but the Monday afternoon time slot is wide open should the committee wish to use it.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I appreciate the offer of Monday afternoon, but I would ask honourable senators from Ontario, Quebec and central Canada to keep in mind the fact that while a Monday afternoon meeting is convenient for those senators from Toronto, or even Winnipeg, in that they can leave the same morning and be here for an afternoon meeting, I, coming, as I do, from British Columbia, have to leave at the very latest by noon on Sunday in order to be here for a meeting at any time on Monday—something which I have done for the past six weeks, but it is not something that I feel should be imposed on me indefinitely.

Insofar as this afternoon's meeting of the committee is concerned, I can deal with that rather than with the larger question. We are just finishing our draft report, which will be going to the printers, and we have some summaries and other things to settle this afternoon. I would therefore appreciate it if the committee could meet this afternoon at 4 p.m., as I have staff and other people coming at that time.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, the suggestion made by the government whip that we meet on Monday would create a conflict for some members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, including myself, in that we also sit on the Special Senate Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety which also meets on Monday.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, as one who believes that the main justification for the Senate is its committee work, I believe that ordinarily committee meetings should take precedence after the first hour of sittings of the Senate. I have been a member of the Senate for 14 years, and not once have I seen us lacking a quorum in the Senate because of committee meetings. In fact, there could be two committee meetings going on while the Senate is sitting. We all know that we get down to approximately 30 senators after Question Period. So from a practical point of view, there is no difficulty whatsoever, and we should encourage committees to meet. There is no difficulty over this in the other place. They do not have nearly as many MPs in attendance. When I was there the other day, there were only five members in the House itself.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame, shame!

Senator Godfrey: We would not do that; but normally we do not have more than 30 senators present after Question Period, and there is a lot of scope for committee meetings.

• (1420)

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, I have been here for 18 years.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Petten: For a good number of those years I have been the whip for the Liberal Party. I say to Senator Godfrey and to any other of my colleagues who care to listen that it is very difficult to keep a quorum in this house after Question Period. If we could have 30 senators here—and I am sure Senator Phillips would bear me out on this—we would be very happy, would we not, Senator Phillips?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

Senator Petten: Often the attendance falls much lower than that. I merely wanted to draw this fact to the attention of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to three questions. If I am not asked to read them, I shall ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS—SCHEDULE OF MEETINGS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, the first answer is in response to a question raised on March 26 by the Honourable Senator MacEachen regarding Fisheries—Canada-France Negotiations—Schedule of Meetings.

Senator Frith: Whose question is it?

Senator Doody: Do you mean that you were not paying attention to me?

Sentor Frith: No, but I am now.

Senator Doody: I am crushed. And last week he wanted an encore! How fleeting is fame. It is in response to a question raised by Senator MacEachen on March 26 regarding Canada-France negotiations and the schedule of meetings. It is a fairly short question and I can read the answer if the honourable senator wishes, or I can ask to have it printed as part of today's proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

A negotiation meeting between Canada and France on reference of the maritime boundary dispute to an international judicial tribunal took place in London on March 5-6, 1987. The second meeting is scheduled for April 22-23 in Paris.

The first meeting on fisheries took place in Ottawa March 24-25. Dates for a second meeting in Paris later this spring are under consideration now.

TELEGLOBE CANADA

REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE—APPARENT LEAK RE MEMOTEC BID—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a somewhat longer answer in response to a question raised in the Senate on April 2 by Senator Olson regarding Teleglobe Canada—Reorganization and Divestiture—Apparent Leak Re Memotec Bid. I can read that answer if the honourable senator wishes.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would be glad to read it in Hansard and ask a further question tomorrow.

(The answer follows:)

Strict security procedures were observed within government during the Teleglobe bidding process.

If the honourable senator has information which indicates that the leak came from within government, he should so state and pass this information to the appropriate regulatory bodies.

The issue of unusual trading in the shares of Memotec Data Inc. is being thoroughly investigated by the Ontario Securities Commission, the Quebec Securities Commission and the Director, under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The investigations are of a routine nature which is the normal approach following a lot of activity in a stock prior to an announcement.

The government wants this matter thoroughly investigated and has cooperated fully with the regulators and has provided names and addresses of individuals who knew details. Memotec is also cooperating fully. It would be quite improper for the government to influence the investigation and insist that the appropriate securities authorities not conduct their investigation in the manner, and over the timeframe, they feel is appropriate.

If it is found that there was an impropriety or illegality in this matter, the government expects and fully supports that the full force of relevant laws would be brought to bear on the situation and the individuals involved.

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a somewhat lengthier answer to a question asked in the Senate on March 12 last by the Honourable Senator Olson regarding Agriculture—Farm Credit Crisis—Government Action. I can read it or ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings. It is rather lengthy.

Senator Olson: Let it be printed.

The Minister of Agriculture has given a lot of attention to the issue of farm credit since he took office. Since last summer, the farm debt review boards were put in place and are now working to help farmers and creditors work out agreements.

The Farm Credit Corporation is charging its lowest interest rate since 1979. Under the commodity-based loan program that FCC offers to its existing clients, close to $300 million was loaned last year. It is expected that FCC will lend an additional $400 million this fiscal year.

This program can bring interest rates down to as low as 6 per cent and, by the same token, increase substantially the cash flow of the farming operation.

The payments on the $1 billion program will continue to grain and oilseed farmers throughout the spring. In total, last year, direct payments to producers under federal programs came to nearly $2 billion.

This year, that amount will increase substantially because of the $1 billion. As well, the stabilization programs will deliver record-setting payments this year. This money will help farmers meet their payments.

Although these measures will help offset the adverse effects of low commodity prices, the minister has made it clear that farmers in Canada should not base their seedling decisions on the expectation of what the government might do next.

In his February budget, the Minister of Finance increased the farm fuel tax rebate to farmers. Farmers won't have to pay the one cent-per-litre increase on gas and diesel fuels and they will continue to receive the rebates they already receive.

The Minister of Agriculture recognizes the credit problems that the agricultural community is facing. He has met regularly with his provincial counterparts and will continue to do so in the future. These meetings help to change the way farm policies are developed.

Under the national agriculture strategy, the Minister of Agriculture has made a commitment with the provincial ministers to cooperate on policies and programs that serve farmers. The government has taken action and will continue to do so. The issue of farm credit is closely monitored and if more intervention is required, the government will act.

THE SENATE

OFFICIAL REPORT—MINISTRY LIST

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to raise a point of order with respect to the appendix to Hansard of Thursday, April 2, wherein is listed the ministry, together with the officers of the Senate, and so on. I do not know who is responsible for the preparation of the list, but I believe at least in one respect that the ministry list is out of date.

Senator Murray: I will not rise to that one. I will find it.

Senator Doody: You are always the last to know.

Senator Frith: I hope you will notice how courteous he was in leaving out the omission.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Doyle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Barootes, for the second reading of the Bill S-6, An Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Doyle made a very good speech indeed on this motion at second reading—

Senator Flynn: He always does.

Senator Frith: —the other day, and I congratulate him on it. He drew to our attention the fact that this bill became necessary because of a 1979 Supreme Court decision that ruled the Food and Drugs Act regulations prescribing standards for lite beers, spelled l-i-t-e—and, as it turned out, that was an important underlining in the court's consideration—as being unconstitutional. As a result, that ruling placed in jeopardy almost 300 similar food standards which set out consequential requirements, what they called “legal recipes” for a wide range of manufactured foods.

Senator Doyle, both in terms of his personal experience with tomato juice—and unregulated tomato juice—and in a scholarly way with regard to other products, told us about the consequences that I have just referred to. He also referred to clause 6 of the bill as “a trade and commerce clause.” At page 836, he pointed out important effects of the bill, and I quote him:

Food manufacturers and ingredient suppliers have suffered certain lost opportunities since the landmark Supreme Court decision in 1979 in that they have not been able to have food standards amended in response to new technology and changing consumer demand. The inability to amend or develop standards also conflicts . . .

And this is important:

. . . with the international obligations of Canada.

[Senator Olson.]

I thought Senator Doyle illustrated the problem very well when he picked as an example tomato juice, and told us that behind all the detail, it comes down to the fact that when you see the words “tomato juice” on a can, no matter who manufactures it, you are entitled to assume that it contains certain ingredients. When you apply that principle to all of the other products that we buy and upon whose labels we rely, we can well understand the importance of this bill.

As did Senator Doyle, I commend the bill for support and for study by the appropriate committee. However, I do want to elaborate its constitutional aspect. What happened is that the Supreme Court held that these regulations could not be supported under the subsection of section 91 that deals with the criminal law. Also, the Supreme Court did not find that it could be supported under the trade and commerce subsection because it did not have the kind of trade and commerce aspect dealt with by the section or by the clause included in this bill. As Senator Doyle said, the problem was that it could not be considered as supportable under the trade and commerce heading since it did not deal specifically with interprovincial trade and commerce, as this bill does. However, the corollary is that if this bill solves that problem, and clearly—we hope—makes constitutional any regulations made under this bill relating to interprovincial commerce, it then leaves for further regulation or further settling the intraprovincial dimension. Senator Doyle pointed out that that gap is filled by the government's assurance that discussions are taking place, probably at this very moment, in various provinces between the federal government and the provinces to fill that gap by competent provincial legislation.

If you add to that the fact that the provinces, this federal government and the previous federal government, the consumer associations, the manufacturers, the merchandisers and the distributors all support this bill, then I believe we should send it quickly to the committee for study and hope that it will soon receive a favourable report and third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Doyle, bill referred to Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle moved the second reading of Bill S-7, to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.

He said: Honourable senators, I need only take a few minutes of your time to speak on this matter.

The purpose of this bill is to grant a corporate charter to a regional vicar, a religious officer responsible for the spiritual and religious needs, as well as for the management and control of the property, affairs and interests, of the personal prelature of which he is Canadian vicar.

The bill before you, then, would constitute the Regional Vicar for Canada of The Prelature of The Holy Cross and Opus Dei as a corporation sole.

A corporation sole, as senators will know, is a corporation consisting of one person only, usually a person of high office, who, together with his successors in office, is incorporated by law. In this way the officer enjoys the legal capacity and benefits of a corporation which, as a natural person, he would not otherwise enjoy.

One particular advantage is that of the continued existence of the corporation over the lifetime of many successors in office. This is the way in which ecclesiastical jurisdictions of the Roman Catholic Church and other churches are given juridical personality in Canada.

Perhaps a brief explanation of the special terms appearing in the title of the bill would be in order. In the tradition of the Roman Catholic Church, a prelature is a jurisdictional entity, that is to say, part of the hierarchy of the Church, and is established by the Holy See as an instrument, within the pastoral hierarchy of the Church, for the realization of particular pastoral or missionary activities.

At its head is a prelate, who is appointed by the Pope, and who exercises a jurisdictional power similar in nature but different in scope to the jurisdiction that a bishop exercises in his diocese. The difference is that the prelate's power is personal, instead of territorial like that of a bishop, and his pastoral care for all the faithful of the prelature extends only to the particular aims of the prelature.

The Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei is composed of priests and laity who work together towards the goals of the prelature which can be summarized as the promotion of the ideals of Christian holiness in the midst of one's everyday occupations.

[English]

At present the prelature has centres in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and carries out various activities of a spiritual and religious nature in British Columbia and Alberta. Since the prelature conducts its activities throughout the country, it is desirable that it be incorporated by Canada rather than by one or another of the provinces. As neither of the two federal statutes of a general enabling nature governing the creation of corporations—that is, the Canada Corporations Act and the Canada Business Corporations Act—provides for the creation of a corporation sole, it was necessary for the vicar to petition Parliament for a private bill.

● (1430)

Honourable senators, I should point out that during the 1984-85-86 session Bill S-5, to provide for the creation by amalgamation of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, and Bill S-7, to amend the Act of Incorporation of Pine Hill

Divinity Hall, were passed. Further, that in 1984 Bill S-15, respecting the Wesleyan Church of Canada, and that during the session of 1980 to 1983 Bill S-35, respecting the Eparchy of the Eparchy of Saints Cyril and Methodius of Slovaks of the Byzantine Rite in Canada, and Bill S-16, respecting the President of the Lethbridge Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, were passed by the Senate.

Since this is a private bill, it will be necessary for a committee to examine the allegation of facts set out in the preamble to the bill. I propose, therefore, if second reading is granted, to ask that the bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which is the committee of the Senate that normally examines private bills.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if it is possible to ask the senator one or two questions before this is referred to committee. I have two questions by way of clarification. Who is the person who will occupy the role of Prelate? Second, is the expression "the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei" a reference to a worldwide organization that is more commonly known as Opus Dei?

Senator Bélisle: If the honourable senator has a copy of the bill, he will see that the following appears in the preamble:

Whereas the Very Reverend Gregory V. Haddock, of the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, has by his petition represented—

That was read last week.

Respecting the second question, this institution has two names. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, it is also known as Opus Dei. According to the legal terminology, the words "Holy Cross" must come before the words "Opus Dei", but it is the same thing.

On motion of Senator Le Moyne, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Doyle:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider matters relating to national defence;

That 12 Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the Special Committee;

That the Committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the Committee report to the Senate no later than 15 December, 1987,

And on the motion in amendment of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that paragraph 1 of the motion be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"That a special committee of the Senate be appointed to hear evidence on and to consider the following matter relating to national defence, namely, Canada's land forces including mobile command, and such other matters as may from time to time be referred to it by the Senate,".—(Honourable Senator Godfrey).

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, when this motion was originally proposed by Senator Lafond, I was under the impression, because the committee had not met for some time, that the motion was to get the committee ready for the promised white paper so that when the white paper was tabled, the committee could swing into action. Therefore, when I was sitting here last Thursday and heard the debate, and that there was a proposal to consider Mobile Command, land forces, and so forth, I was somewhat surprised. At that time I asked what was the value of this study, in light of the fact that we are told that a white paper is to be tabled. I have given some thought to the matter over the weekend, and I have come to the conclusion that such a study of our land forces will have some value, even though it is expected that there will be a white paper produced before the end of the year.

What I want to speak on primarily, however, are a couple of statements made by Senator Frith in his speech on Thursday. He said, and I am quoting from page 840 of Hansard:

However, there are some senators who feel that if the work done by this committee is to continue to be done on a long-term basis, then it should be done by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee's mandate is set out in rule 67(1)(h), which concludes by saying:

... papers and other matters relating to foreign and commonwealth relations generally, including:
... (iv) defence;

Later, Senator Frith says:

... Senator Lafond would frankly admit that since he would like that committee to be a standing committee, then as long as it is not he will make it a permanent special committee—which will not make it a standing committee in law but will make it one in fact. I do not criticize Senator Lafond for that; that is his viewpoint. I just do not agree with it.

Still later, he said:

... I do not feel that we should assume that the white paper will be referred to this committee, nor do I think that the committee should assume that it will get an extension past December 15—

I would like to remind senators of the history of this committee. Back in the 1970s both Senator Lafond and Senator Hamilton McDonald, who were keen on questions of defence, kept "bugging" Senator Aird, when he was chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and then Senator van Roggen to do something about their mandate to look into defence. Nothing was done; they concentrated entirely on trade matters—and you cannot blame them for that, because they only have a certain amount of time to do certain things.

Finally, Senator Lafond, in June of 1980, moved that a subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be formed in order to look into questions of matters of defence.

Senator Frith: Sorry, who proposed that?

Senator Godfrey: It was first constituted on June 12, 1980, as a subcommittee of the standing committee.

This was approved. At that time committees had 20 members, not the 12 that they have now. Although the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs had 20 members, they could not find enough members within their ranks who were sufficiently interested in defence to form a subcommittee so they added an extra ten members to the committee. The committee now had 30 members out of which a subcommittee of 12 was formed, including, essentially, the ten new members.

I do not know exactly how many members of the Foreign Affairs Committee constituted the subcommittee at that time, but Senator Hicks did, and there may have been one or two others. They went along on that basis for four years, and they brought out two reports—"Manpower in Canada's Armed Forces" and "Canada's Maritime Defence"—the latter in May 1983.

In 1984 it was decided between Senator van Roggen and Senator Lafond that this was a sort of artificial situation. Any time this subcommittee wanted permission to do this or that, or get a budget approved, they always had to work through the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs; so it was agreed by Senator van Roggen and Senator Lafond that this should be a special committee. It operated as a special committee commencing January 17, 1984. Of the members on that special committee, Senator Hicks is the only one who was also a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

This committee held hearings and, as I said, brought out two reports, the second report being produced in February 1986. I might point out that in the foreword of that report, this statement was made: "The committee's repeated calls for a government white paper on National Defence are about to be answered, judging by the assurance given by the Minister of National Defence and the associate minister in late 1985 and early 1986." A year later there is still no white paper, and we know that we are not getting it until the fall.

I can understand the reluctance at that time of Senator Lafond to go ahead with another investigation into the land forces. Then, as Senator Lafond became ill last September and was out of commission for a couple of months, it was not until lately that other members of the committee suggested that the committee should be re-activated. I think it is a good idea to look into the land forces for one reason and one reason only: This committee will gain a certain amount of expertise by doing such a study, which will enable them to deal with the white paper more effectively when it comes out—which, as I said, looks as if it will not be until the late fall.

Senator Hicks: If that.

Senator Godfrey: If that, as Senator Hicks says—and I will not be here then.

I have been a member of the committee for about the last three years. I started going to committee meetings when I was not a member, because I was interested in territorial air defence as an ex-Air Force man. After I had been going to the committee for several meetings, they put me on as a permanent member. I found that the committee consisted of members who were keen and knowledgeable about national defence, and faithful in their attendance at the committee meetings.

We have had the experience of making it a subcommittee—and it worked perfectly all right—but it had no real advantage; indeed, it had some technical disadvantages. By having this special committee reconstituted, it does not make it into a permanent standing committee. The only time that it will sit or ask for a mandate is when the members feel they have something specific to do. When they have finished this study and when they have finished their study of the white paper, the committee will disappear again. But if you put it back under the umbrella of the Foreign Affairs Committee, which over the last few years has demonstrated that it has absolutely no interest in defence whatsoever, the result, if it is a subcommittee, will be that if it wants formally to bring out a report, such a report will have to be approved by the parent committee—which is sort of ridiculous, because the members will not have sat in on any of the meetings; they will only have Senator Hicks as a liaison between the two committees.

I will not be here when this matter is decided next fall, or whenever the white paper comes in, but I would like to put in a plug for Senator Lafond and his committee and say that when the white paper comes out, it should be referred to a committee that knows what it is talking about and not to a committee that has shown no interest whatsoever in defence for the last 15 years, even though technically the subject of defence comes under its mandate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion, as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FOURTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments (Customs Tariff) presented in the Senate on March 19, 1987.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report, although the matter may be adjourned if any other senator wishes to speak.

At the outset I should mention that although this report also affects fruit and vegetables, it is not the same matter which was raised a few weeks ago and which was contentious in probably the caucuses of the two parties.

Basically, this report deals with customs tariffs affecting fruit and vegetables. In early 1985 the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments reviewed the regulations that were imposed and found that they had the effect of imposing a duty at a time prior to the coming into force of the particular order. In other words, it was a regulation which had the effect of imposing duties retroactively. The committee took a rather dim view of that and in early 1985 informed the Department of National Revenue of its concern. In fact, in an attempt to be helpful, it was suggested that it might be simpler to validate the collection of these duties by means of a legislative provision, that is, to have a bill passed through Parliament.

The unhappy point of this short story is that the Deputy Minister of the Department of Customs and Excise wrote to the committee on May 26, 1986, indicating that after a review of all of the considerations of the committee, the department did not wish to have remedial legislation, and even had the temerity to say that it was not likely that the validity of the orders would be challenged in a court of law and that, therefore, we should have these regulations, legal or otherwise.

The committee then took it upon itself to have my co-chairman, Mr. Kaplan, representing the House of Commons, and myself write to the minister, the Honourable Elmer MacKay, to point this out. We are very happy to report that the minister wrote back indicating he was in complete agreement with our statement that citizens should not be deprived of their property, except in accordance with the law, and noting that remedial legislation would be introduced in the very near future.

Very simply, the purpose of the fourth report of the standing committee is to give effect to the minister's undertaking, that is, to have on the record of both houses of Parliament his undertaking to introduce validating legislation.

That, honourable senators, is in as brief a form as I can give you all of the meat and potatoes of the fourth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CLOSING OF MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY, BEDFORD
INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTIONS—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Henry D. Hicks rose, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, March 31, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the policies and actions of this Government with respect to Research and Development, having particular reference to the closing of the Marine Ecology Laboratory (M.E.L.) at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.

He said: Honourable senators, when I was summoned to this chamber in 1972, there was a committee under the late Senator Lamontagne that addressed itself to the problems of research and development under the general name of a Science Policy for Canada. That committee was just finishing volumes two and three of its very large, very worthwhile and very comprehensive report.

I, at the time, was not in sympathy with some of the recommendations which the committee had made, particularly those having to do with the National Research Council, and I did not join the committee, though invited to do so, because I felt that coming in at the eleventh hour, my voice would not have a significant influence on the findings of the committee.

Among the findings of that committee in 1972 was the recommendation that if Canada were to play its part among the developed and industrialized nations of the western world, we should be spending much more money on the general problems of research and development, particularly scientific research and development. Indeed, the committee proposed that the Government of Canada should adopt a goal of spending 2.5 per cent of the gross national product on research and development, and should attain this goal by the year 1980.

Well, the government of the day paid—perhaps I should not say “no attention”—certainly very little attention to this recommendation and very little, if anything, was done.

The committee then proceeded some five years later, in 1977, to update its recommendations, and issued a fourth volume of its report which it called “Progress and Unfinished Business”. I did join the committee and was a member of it for the preparation of volume four, a copy of which I have before me.

On page 57 of volume four of that report, there is a listing of the sums of money expended by developed countries, the countries of the OECD, on research and development. In 1975, the last year for which figures were then available, the United States, Germany, The Netherlands and Japan all spent 2 per cent or more of their gross national product on scientific research and development. France spent nearly 2 per cent; Sweden spent nearly 1.6 per cent; and Canada spent 1 per cent.

The committee again made a recommendation, this time somewhat more modestly, suggesting that the Government of Canada should at least try to move our R&D effort up from the 1 per cent in 1975 to 1.5 per cent by 1982. I am glad to say that the government of the day did begin to take some measures to improve Canada's effort in research and development. Indeed, the proportion of the gross national product spent on R&D efforts in 1983-84 reached 1.3 per cent. I think that was the high point in Canada's effort in this important effort of policy, including government policy.

I was one of those who listened to the campaign promises of the present Prime Minister of Canada, and to his statement of intention to double Canada's research and development efforts, with great enthusiasm and great satisfaction. Indeed, I looked forward to the improvement which was to be brought about by the Mulroney government.

Instead, what has actually happened is that the 1.3 per cent has almost, but not quite, been maintained. Since the coming into power of the present government, Canada's effort in research and development has slipped back slightly. Perhaps this is not significant, but certainly there has been nothing done to attempt to meet the sound expectations which Prime Minister Mulroney, during the election campaign of 1984, led us to hope would take place if he and his colleagues formed the government of this country.

Since then I have come to know the Minister of State for Science and Technology, the Honourable Frank Oberle, and I think very highly of him. I think he may be one of the best ministers in the present government. I sympathize with him in the difficult task that he has had in trying to reconcile the aims and objectives of his party, as pronounced by the Prime Minister himself—or, at least, by the man who was to become the Prime Minister, because I am not certain that he made any such declaration after he did take that office—with the fact that he actually has to preside over a department that has been cutting back on Canada's research and development efforts. This department has been cutting back in such important areas as the National Research Council, which is certainly one of the most respected institutions in this country. Not only is it respected in this country but it is respected by scientists and scientific researchers all over the world. The cut-backs in the NRC's budget have even gone so far as to eliminate completely some areas of research in which Canada had an international reputation.

I say that I sympathize with Mr. Oberle, because I am sure that it was with the greatest personal reluctance and regret that he presided over the department under these circumstances. We know something of the proposal of the present government to support university research. Indeed, the theory, if senators will pardon me for not making a long-winded explanation of it, is that the government would ask private industry to take over the support of large portions of university research and development. A scheme was proposed in which the Government of Canada would match grants that universities could receive from private industry in order to help them with research projects. I must say that my former colleagues in the academic world set about trying to do this with a very hopeful spirit, although I am afraid that most of them felt, as I did, that it was unlikely that they would meet with much success.

Honourable senators, it is too early yet to judge this program. It may very well be that it will work in the industrial heartland of the Ontario peninsula, where there are a great many industries and a number of very good universities that can, perhaps, induce those industries to make direct grants to them for carrying out research programs. It is almost certain that such a proposal will not work in many other parts of Canada where the universities play just as important a role, but where they do not have the good fortune to have as neighbours industrial concerns that can afford to make the large grants that would qualify for matching grants from the Government of Canada, nor, indeed, do they have the kind of industrial complexes that can refer research problems to those universities. I am afraid that while the academic world is doing its best to make this program work, it will not be as successful as we all hoped it might be.

The other consequence that is inherent in supporting research in this way is the fact that we almost ensure that research moneys will go to applied research, to the solving of practical problems of industry on a day-to-day or week-to-week or, at best, month-to-month basis. But surely it is essential that universities, of all research institutions, should spend a good deal of their time and effort in basic scientific research, because it underlies the accomplishments that can be made in applied research, in addition to opening the secrets of the world of science and the mysteries of the complicated environment in which we live today. Therefore, I think that basic research, even if this program is as successful as everyone hopes, is bound to suffer in competition with applied research, or, as some people call it, mission-oriented research.

I am not one of those who are against applied research. I am not one of those who think that universities do not have any place in trying to help industry solve its problems, even specific problems relating only to a particular industry. I believe that universities should do that, but I think they ought not to do so to the exclusion of inquiries into the basic nature of our universe; in other words, I do not want to see a departure from the traditional role which universities have played and the considerations which dominated their inquiries into so-called basic research.

I do not know whether some of the writers in our newspapers have been fair to Mr. Oberle or not, but certainly some of them have been fairly sceptical. I have in front of me an article which appeared in the March 26, 1987, edition of The Ottawa Citizen. It was written by Don McGillivray, who states:

There's been a gush of colorful documents lately from Frank Oberle, the minister of state for science and technology.

On March 12 he issued something called The National Science and Technology Policy brightly printed in four colors with the coats of arms of all the provinces and of Canada.

On March 16 it was an 80-page book on The Government of Canada's Support for Technology Development.

On the silver cover are five maple leaves, a red one, an orange one, a yellow one, a green one and finally, largest of all, a maple leaf in beautiful Tory blue.

And this week, again in the ruling party's silver and blue, there's The Canadian Strategy for Science and Technology which apparently is known by the fabricated word "InnovAction."

"Minister Oberle," as he is called in these documents, is clearly up to something. There have also been a couple of laudatory columns, which suggests that somebody is setting up interviews with Oberle for selected columnists.

It has the feel of a campaign, as organized and run by federal bureaucrats. But what it all means is a little obscure.

When Oberle announced at a Financial Post conference the Canadian Strategy for Science and Technology, some churlish reporter asked what it meant in practical terms.

"Specifics will come later," said the science minister.

While we're waiting, it's my duty to remind Oberle of the "four-color rule" of government documents.

This simply states that the more colors a policy is printed in, the less it means . . .

Honourable senators, I do not want to be cynical about my friend, Minister Oberle. I do hope that he will manage to put more substance into the announcements that he makes in the future on behalf of his department. It is my wish that he will be successful in maintaining the level of research and development of Canada, and even in increasing it, even if he cannot attain the laudable goal of doubling it, as Prime Minister Mulroney at one time talked about doing.

I must not forget, however, that in this inquiry of which I gave notice a few days ago, I said that I would make particular reference to the Marine Ecology Laboratory of the Bedford Institute of Oceanography. This laboratory, honourable senators, was set up a number of years ago by a group of scientists under the auspices of the Bedford Institute, which is one of the major oceanography research institutes in the world, by far the largest one in Canada, comparable to the great institutions at Woods Hole in the New England states and the Scripps Institute of Oceanography in California. Canada is really in the forefront of ocean research largely, but not exclusively, as a result of the activities of the scientists at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.

I know something of some of the scientists from that institution and some others who came to the Bedford Institute specifically to support the work of the Marine Ecology Laboratory. It also has a reputation for excellence throughout the world. Indeed, when the dismantling of the Marine Ecology Laboratory was first announced to take place on April 1, there was a letter, according to the Halifax Chronicle Herald, from two different scientists, who said:

● (1510)

"Disbanding MEL will mean that Canada loses a respected and influential voice in marine ecological questions, thus increasing the dominance of U.S.A. scientists in marine policies, especially regarding ecological problems," Dutch scientists said in a letter to Fisheries Minister Tom Siddon last month.

There are further quotations from the letter, including the following:

"Our fear is that—"

These are two scientists from the Netherlands:

"—the proposed reorganization will result in a serious loss to the world's ability to develop and implement a coherent long-term policy of wisely managing its marine environment, since such a policy can only be based on sound scientific advice. MEL has proved to be a reliable partner in formulating such advice."

Honourable senators, it is a great pity, indeed, that that institution is being broken up. I understand that the scientists will not lose their jobs. They are to be scattered about other areas of the Bedford Institute, and some of them will go to other research institutions in Canada.

But I say again, honourable senators, that the quality of research in the complicated technological fields in which we work today is such that it requires the greatest concentration of the largest number of first class minds that we can afford to bring together to tackle a particular problem; and we had just that concentration of first class scientists in the Marine Ecology Laboratory.

If we are going to accomplish anything on a worldwide basis—and, mind you, that is difficult enough for a country like Canada with only 25 million people when we are competing with the great colossus of the United States to the south of us with approximately ten times our population; when we are competing with the European Economic Community, with the Japanese, and with the Soviets, and so on—it is difficult enough for Canada to get into the front row in any aspect of research; and if we are to do so, we have to concentrate the resources that we have and work together, each scientist in his discipline supporting the purpose of the institution concerned and working with scientists in related disciplines.

As a matter of fact, the first newspaper report of the breakup of this laboratory—which appeared in the Halifax newspapers—said that the scientists concerned were being reprimanded because they had objected to the breakup of the Marine Ecology Laboratory, and they were to be reprimanded because they had spoken out against the government's policy of breaking up that laboratory. Yet, Mr. Siddon, the Fisheries Minister, was quoted in the Chronicle-Herald of April 1 as saying:

"I think the fuss—"

Referring to the scientists who questioned the MEL breakup:

[Senator Hicks]

"—has been exaggerated. I would ask why we haven't heard a word for six months" since the decision to alter the department's scientific efforts were first announced.

So with one hand, Mr. Siddon reprimands the scientists for speaking out, and in another statement only a day or two later, he questions why they have not spoken out more strongly and at an earlier date.

Honourable senators, I am much concerned about the breakup of this laboratory. I believe that when we have a good thing in Canada, which is of world ranking quality and is recognized as such by scientists in other parts of the world—

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Hear, hear! Especially those of the Soviet Union. It's true.

Senator Hicks: —we should support it rather than cut the feet from underneath it. There have been subsequent reports—and I am afraid that I have to rely only on a television newscast which I saw in part the other night—which indicate that the minister is now going to consult some of the scientists concerned, and that they are to have some input into the future of their own activities at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography and perhaps elsewhere. But as yet we do not know, and in the meantime the Marine Ecology Laboratory is going down the drain, is going to be dismantled.

Honourable senators, I urge this government—as I would urge any government—because this is not peculiar to the present government by any means—to allow senior public servants to speak out in relation to the policies of the department in which they are working. I believe they have to be trusted to exercise some judgment and good sense. They should be allowed to speak out, and, indeed, I even think that a public servant—such as the one in Toronto who was fired recently because he criticized his superiors for the way in which they were mishandling certain problems in relation to immigration—should be protected so that he can point out these errors and call attention to serious misconduct or misjudgment on the part of his superiors.

Honourable senators, I conclude by urging the government to continue to work seriously, even to the extent of increasing the spending of public moneys, to improve and increase our research and development efforts. It has never been as important as it is in today's highly competitive technological society. It is highly important with respect to the quality of our life, with respect to our industrial effort, with respect to our whole economy, and certainly with respect to our export trade. We can only do that by building on strength, and, when we find strength, rather than tear it down we must build it up and support it more.

We Canadians, and particularly we maritimers, have had a very bad record in this respect. In the maritime provinces, if something is going well in Halifax, you can be sure that the people of western Nova Scotia and of Cape Breton will want it distributed among the whole province, and thus destroy the concentration, which is the only thing that will put us, and keep us, in a first class situation.

When we have institutes such as the one about which I have been speaking today, we should be very careful to nurture and support them, and not kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.

Hon. John B. Stewart: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Senator Hicks: Certainly.

Senator Stewart: I do not know the Bedford Institute of Oceanography nearly as well as does Senator Hicks, but what I have heard about it is highly laudatory; and I have heard particularly good things about the scientists in the Marine Ecology Laboratory. I was wondering whether the honourable senator had given any thought to asking the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, which will shortly be considering the Main Estimates for the fiscal year which began on April 1, to make a special inquiry into the decision of the government to terminate the work of the Marine Ecology Laboratory. We could have the minister and the appropriate scientific advisers to the department appear. We could perhaps have before the committee the gentlemen from the Netherlands, to which the honourable senator made reference, who obviously are highly competent in this field, to help the committee decide whether the estimate of the department should be approved by the Senate. Has the honourable senator considered that possibility; if not, would he consider it now?

Senator Hicks: The answer to Senator Stewart's question is no, I had not considered doing that; but Senator Stewart and I are both members of that committee, and I should be very glad indeed to discuss it further with him to see whether it would be appropriate to have the committee make the kind of inquiry he has suggested. I thank him for his interest and advice.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I should like to give a short preamble before asking Senator Hicks not so much a question as seeking his opinion. I was looking forward to hearing the honourable senator, and I congratulate him on what he has said. I, too, know something about the institute and the MEL section of it. I think that Senator Hicks was extremely moderate in the way he presented his case. Certainly, Senator Hicks was kind enough to suggest that whatever the Prime Minister's views with respect to an increase in R&D, perhaps financial constraints had interfered with them. With all due respect to Senator Stewart, I believe that possibly some other action might be taken. There seems to be some puzzlement as to what the government intends to do with these people by scattering them around. It does not seem to involve savings or to be some form of deficit-cutting measure. It is very mysterious.

The opinion I seek from Senator Hicks is: What might be done? The honourable senator indicated that there has been some encouragement with respect to consultation, but then he went on to make reference to the fact that the MEL might be disbanded. Did the honourable senator mean that its disbanding could possibly be stopped, or is it too late?

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I do not know the answer to that question. I hope it is not too late and that the whole matter will be reconsidered. Dr. Lloyd Dickie, who appeared briefly on the television newscast to which I referred, spoke with some, what shall I say, optimism that perhaps the situation could be retrieved. I was not able to get him on the telephone to talk with him over the weekend, and I have not been able to talk with anyone else from the institute, because, frankly, I did not know who was the best person to call. I shall try to renew my inquiry when I go back to Halifax this weekend.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, before Senator MacDonald moves the adjournment, I would like to make a short comment. It may be that my support as an Ontario landlubber will not be welcomed. In fact, it might be a minor kiss of death, but I will say what I have to say anyway.

Some years ago, when I was active in television, I interviewed a Dr. Barton—I believe that was his name—of the Bedford Institute. Some very good research had been done in preparation for this interview. From that research I found that indeed, as Senator Hicks has said, this institute is genuinely and justifiably internationally famous. It does original research that many other nations bordering on oceans rely upon. It exchanges information with these nations, and writes and contributes very consistently to international scientific journals on the subject. I know from the program research I mentioned that the institute is very highly thought of by all oceanographers, including, for example, those in the Soviet Union. Then, of course, I had the good fortune and the luck that goes with this kind of assignment to go to the institute and see it in operation. So, unlikely though the source of this support is, I support everything that Senator Hicks has said about Bedford.

As a footnote to what Senator MacDonald asked of Senator Hicks, I remind Senator MacDonald and others that the Canadian embassy in Helsinki was virtually boarded up and padlocked when we began our efforts to persuade the Secretary of State for External Affairs to re-open it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs listened to submissions that were made not only by us but by others, and, as a result, said that there was now no plan to close the Helsinki embassy. So perhaps we can hope that with some effort we will persuade Mr. Oberle, if, indeed, he is possessed of the fine qualities as a minister that Senator Hicks says he is, to change his mind also.

On motion of Senator MacDonald, debate adjourned.

ROYAL ASSENT

ALTERNATIVE PROCEDURE—MOTION STANDS

On Motion No 2:

By the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the present formal procedure of Royal Assent be retained and that it be used (a) at the request of the Governor General or of either House of Parliament and

(b) at least once a session, for example at the prorogation of a session;

That, in addition to the present practice, a simpler procedure be established based on the following principles: (a) that the procedure involve representation from both the Senate and the House of Commons, (b) that it be public, and (c) that the declaration of Royal Assent be subsequently reported to both Houses of Parliament; and

That representatives of the Senate meet with representatives of the House of Commons to draft a resolution for a joint Address of both Houses to be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General praying that she approve such changes to the Royal Assent ceremony as described in this motion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I plan to move this motion tomorrow or Thursday. I just want to mention that any senators who are interested in this somewhat esoteric subject might want to make reference to the Debates of the Senate of May 10, 1983, when I shared with honourable senators in some detail the research that had been done on the subject. I admit that there is a certain amount of argument, persuasion and rhetoric in the speech I made at that time, but mostly it is a matter of factual historical material. That is why I hope that honourable senators will not consider it unseemly of me to refer to my previous intervention. I do not mean to repeat everything that is in that intervention, but I do intend to refer to it and to provide honourable senators with what is now fashionably called an executive summary.

Motion stands.

THE SENATE

CONCURRENT SITTINGS OF THE SENATE AND COMMITTEES— ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, before we adjourn, I would like to call to the attention of Senator Phillips and Senator Petten, the two whips, that the only member of the Foreign Affairs Committee who is sitting in the Senate right now is Senator Hicks, who just gave a speech. This makes my point that honourable senators are not necessarily here but are in their offices and therefore can attend committee meetings without affecting the quorum for Senate sittings.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I point out to Senator Godfrey that the committee does not meet for another 15 minutes, that is, at 4 o'clock, so honourable senators have no reason to be absent.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ADDRESS

OF

RONALD WILSON REAGAN
PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

TO

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

IN THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA

ON

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1987

of
RONALD WILSON REAGAN
President of the United States of America

to Both Houses of Parliament
in the
HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA
on

Monday, April 6, 1987

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate and Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please.

Mr. President, we welcome you to this Chamber where the Canadian people are represented by Members of Parliament and Senators who comprise the Parliament of Canada.

[Translation]

We are honoured to have you in our midst.

[English]

I now invite the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. President, in the House of Commons, for me, that is known as 82 per cent of a standing ovation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But we are not going to forget it.

Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Mr. President and Mrs. Reagan, Mesdames et Messieurs:

Mr. President, I welcome you to this House. I should at once thank you for arranging your schedule so that your visit here would result in the cancellation of Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: If you would like to stay around all week—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Almost 30 years ago, Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, in introducing President Eisenhower here in this Chamber, described him as the "leader of a mighty state" and as "someone who comes to us as a good neighbour and friend". There are Hon. Members of this Parliament here today who were present in this Chamber three decades ago. They would agree, I am sure, that much has changed since then, but they would agree as well that unchanged is the sincerity of our friendship and the profound respect our peoples have for democratic values and for each other.

[Translation]

We are aware this is the bi-centennial year of the American Constitution—a declaration of freedom and independence which has been a light of inspiration and hope to so much of mankind for two centuries.

Our two countries—different in so many ways—share more than a common border in a continent. We share in the advance of liberty and human dignity in a world still darkened by oppression, still bearing the stain of racism and intolerance. We share, as well, respect for our sovereign right to act in the best interests of the people we serve. We would hope for other peoples and other nations something of our own ongoing experience of trust and confidence and mutual respect.

Mr. President, you will know that much is different from your last visit to the House of Commons. The change is reflected in our joint agenda.

[English]

Canadians view with increasing concern the effects of acid rain upon our environment. But this is more than a Canadian problem. It is a transboundary problem which requires a transboundary response.

I urgently invite the United States administration and the American Congress to join with this Parliament, and the Government of Canada in concluding a firm bilateral accord which will provide a North American solution to acid rain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1445)

Mr. Mulroney: In this matter, time is not our ally but our enemy. The longer we delay, the greater the cost. For what would be said of a generation that sought the stars but permitted its lakes and streams to languish and die?

[Translation]

Mr. President, you have described our present bi-lateral negotiations as presenting the opportunity for concluding—in your words—an "historic trade agreement".

[English]

With regard to trade and the trade agreement, Mr. President, if such a trade agreement is fair to both countries, it will be good for both peoples.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: We are determined that this opportunity shall not pass in this generation, because the prosperity and competitive advantage of the next generation may well depend on it.

[English]

As we are linked in commerce and trade, so are we linked in the defence of our continent through NORAD, and in the defence of the Atlantic Alliance through NATO. As we are partners in progress, so are we partners in defending our democratic way of life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canada is not a neutral nation. We are not, and never have been, mere spectators in the struggle between freedom and tyranny.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canada's credentials have been richly earned both in the defence of freedom and in the pursuit of peace.

Geographically situated between the two superpowers, Canada lives in the shadow of nuclear armaments.

[Translation]

Our people, deeply concerned about the arms race, are now encouraged by recent prospects for arms reduction. If the United States and the Soviet Union can conclude an agreement on short and medium range missiles, other arms reductions accords can follow.

A new day can begin. As President Eisenhower said in this House: "Beyond the shadow of the nuclear cloud, the horizon is bright with promise." Regrettably, after three decades that promise remains unfulfilled.

[English]

But with strength, solidarity and resolve, that promise may yet be secured.

It is the promise of a world in which a liberalized trading system works for the benefit of the developing, no less than the developed nations.

It is the promise of a world free of international terrorism, which our two Governments remain firmly resolved to combat.

It is the promise of a world free from the evil of apartheid, because the majority in South Africa cannot and must not remain in political and economic bondage.

It is the promise of a world where children learn tolerance and lead lives that exemplify it.

[Translation]

Those are but a few of our mutual obligations to a larger world, a world which looks to our two countries as beacons of liberty, of prosperity and generosity of spirit.

[English]

Mr. President, Sir Winston Churchill described the relationships between our nations as "an example for every country and a pattern for the future of the world". In testimony to that, this unique and enduring relationship has been celebrated recently by a joint resolution of the American Congress and the Parliament of Canada which proclaims July 2 and 3, the two days between our respective national days, as the "Canada-United States days of peace and friendship".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Our respective legislators have served their constituents well.

Six years ago, on your first visit to this Chamber, Prime Minister Trudeau said: "I wish you well in your task and comfort in your burden. May part of that comfort come from the assurance of Canada's abiding friendship for your country and your people".

Mr. President, I make mine the words of Prime Minister Trudeau. As we once again welcome you and Mrs. Reagan in our midst, you will know that that sentiment remains indeed unchallenged and unchanged in this House, in this Parliament, and in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: May I say to you, Mr. President, and to you, Mrs. Reagan, that in Canada you are among friends.

Ladies and gentlemen, the President of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ronald W. Reagan (President of the United States): Mr. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, honourable Senators, Members of the House of Commons, distinguished members of the diplomatic corps, ladies and gentlemen:

It is a great honour to speak to you today. As you know, this is my third official visit to Canada. My last two were the first foreign trips I had taken after each election. But our constitutional prohibitions being what they are, I thought it was not wise to wait for another election before visiting you again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reagan: I also wanted to time this trip after March so people would not think that these state visits are just an excuse for Prime Minister Mulroney and me to celebrate St. Patrick's Day together.

On each of these occasions I have been struck by how much our two nations have in common. Despite our many important differences, you see the similarities of our national characters in, among other things, the sports we share; hockey, baseball, football—with some modifications—and that fourth sport which seems to be as popular on both sides of the 49th parallel, giving a hard time to political leaders of Irish descent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reagan: It is truly an honour to have a second opportunity to address this august body, this great democratic legislature that has been witness to and shaper of so much of the history of freedom. I remember those days, not so very long after the attack on Pearl Harbour had once again united our two nations in a world conflict, when Winston Churchill stood where I am standing today. Wake Island had fallen just a week before; on Christmas Day, after an heroic defence by Canadian troops, Hong Kong was captured by the Axis; Manila was soon to be swallowed up as well.

But those who might have been expecting a picture of democracy in retreat got something very different from that indomitable spirit. "We have not journeyed all this way across the centuries," he said, "across the oceans, across the mountains, across the prairies, because we are made of sugar candy". Churchill was speaking of the members of the British Commonwealth, most specifically of the people of Canada, but I confess we Americans have always flattered ourselves that, though the thought was unspoken, he had us in mind, too.

As two proud and independent peoples there is much that distinguishes us, one from the other, but there is also much that we share: a vast continent, with its common hardships and uncommon beauties, generations of mutual respect and support, and an abiding friendship that grows ever stronger. We are two nations, each built by immigrants, refugees from tyranny and want, pioneers of a new land of liberty. The first settlers of this new world, alone before the majesty of nature, alone before God, must have been thrown back on first principles, must have realized that it was only in their most basic values that they would find the wisdom to endure and the strength to triumph. And so a dedication was formed, as hard as the granite of the Rockies—a dedication to freedom, a commitment to those unalienable human rights and their only possible guarantee, the institutions of democratic government.

A shared history, yes, but more than that: a shared purpose. It must have seemed to Churchill, besieged and isolated as he was in the one corner of Europe still clinging to freedom, that this American continent, and his two great friends and one-time colonies, had been placed here by a wise and prescient God, protected between two vast oceans, to keep freedom safe. In the crisis of the moment Churchill said it was not then time to "—speak of the hopes of the future, or the broader world which lies beyond our struggles and our victory". We must first, he said, "—win that world for our children".

In a very real sense, that is still our imperative today: to win the world for our children, to win it for freedom.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Today our task is not merely the survival of liberty, but to keep the peace while we extend liberty to a world desperately in need. Today we still contend against war, against a foreign expansionism, and I will speak to that in a moment. But I wish first to talk about a second struggle, one that must occupy an equal place in our attentions, the struggle against the plagues of poverty and under-development that still ravage so much of mankind.

Our two nations have committed many resources to that struggle, but we have it within our power at this moment to take an historic step toward a growing world economy and an expanding cycle of prosperity that reaches beyond the industrialized powers even to the developing nations. We can lead, first, by our powerful example, specifically by the example of Prime Minister Mulroney's far-sighted proposal to establish a free trade agreement that would eliminate most remaining trade barriers between Canada and the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: After the Allied victory over the Axis powers, America and Canada combined their efforts to help restore Europe to economic health. Those were golden years of international economic co-operation that saw the creation of GATT—which knocked down the tariff barriers that had so damaged the world economy; the International Monetary Fund; and 30 years ago last month, the creation of the Common Market. The theme that ran through it all was free and fair trade. Free and fair trade was the lifeblood of a reinvigorated Europe, a revitalized free world that saw a generation of growth unparalleled in history.

We must keep these principles fixed in our minds as we move forward on Prime Minister Mulroney's free trade proposal, a proposal that, I am convinced, will prove no less historic. Already our two nations generate the world's largest volume of trade. The United States trades more with the Province of Ontario alone than with Japan. United States citizens are by far the principal foreign investors in Canada, and Canadians, on a per capita basis, are even greater investors in our country. This two-way traffic in trade and investment has helped to create new jobs by the millions, expand opportunity for both our peoples, and augment the prosperity of both our nations.

Prime Minister Mulroney's proposal would establish the largest free trade area in the world, benefiting not only our two countries but setting an example of co-operation to all nations that now wrestle against the siren temptation of protectionism. To those who would hunker down behind barriers to fight a destructive and self-defeating round of trade battles, Canada and the United States will show the positive way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: We will overcome the impulse of economic isolationism with a brotherly embrace, an embrace, it is not too much to hope, that may some day extend throughout the Americas and ultimately encompass all free nations.

We can look forward to the day when the free flow of trade from the southern reaches of Tierra del Fuego to the northern outposts of the Arctic Circle, unites the people of the western hemisphere in a bond of mutually beneficial exchange, when all borders become what the U.S.-Canadian border so long has been—a meeting place rather than a dividing line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1500)

Mr. Reagan: We recognize that the issues facing us are many and difficult. And just as this proud Parliament is watching our negotiations, so too is the United States Congress. A comprehensive, balanced agreement that provides open trade and investment on a comprehensive basis, an agreement in which both sides are winners—that is our goal.

Augmenting the spirit of the Uruguay trade negotiations, prelude to our economic summit in Venice this June, our free trade discussions here will be a model of co-operation to the world. Mr. Prime Minister, this will be a pioneering agreement worthy of a pioneering people; a visionary strategy, worthy of the elected head of one of the world's greatest democracies. Mr. Prime Minister, we salute you; and I pledge to you now that, for our part, we shall commit ourselves and the resources of our administration to good faith negotiations that will make this visionary proposal a reality.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: And on this, the Canadian people and the Members of Parliament have my word.

Freedom works. The democratic freedoms that secure the God-given rights of man, and the economic freedoms that open the door to prosperity—they are the hope and, we trust, the destiny of mankind.

If free trade is the lifeblood, free enterprise is the heart of prosperity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Jobs, rising incomes, opportunity—they must be created, day to day, through the enterprise of free men and women. We have had to learn and re-learn this lesson in this century. In my own country, we have witnessed an expansion and strengthening of many of our civil liberties, but too often we have seen our economic liberties neglected, even abused. We have protected the freedom of expression of the author, as we should—but what of the freedom of expression of the entrepreneur, whose pen and paper are capital and whose profits and literature are the heroic epic of free enterprise, a tale of creativity and invention that not only delights the mind, but has improved the condition of man, feeding the poor with new grains, bringing hope to the ailing with new cures, vanquishing ignorance with wondrous new information technologies.

In the United States we have found a new consensus, among members of both Parties, in a reformed tax structure that lowers tax rates and frees the spirit of enterprise of our people. Today, that consensus is broadening as your great free market nation seeks the same path back to the first principles of economic growth through rate-reducing tax reform. We see movements in Germany and Japan, as well, to cut tax rates. But this must be only the beginning; for what is simply beneficial to us is a matter of the most dire necessity to the nations and peoples of the developing world. And this is the second great example that, together, we offer to the nations of the world in desperate economic need. For the poorer, the more desperate their condition, the more urgently they need the growth that only economic freedom can bring.

We have seen time and again the healing, invigorating effects of economic freedom: tax rate cuts lifted both Germany and Japan out of post-war stagnation and into the forefront of the world economy; low tax rates catapulted the nations of the Pacific Basin out of the Third World, making them major economic partners today.

A recent study prepared for our Government found a direct relationship between the high tax rates and other statist policies of many underdeveloped countries and a cycle of deepening poverty and despair. On the other hand, the study found that countries with low tax rates and free market policies are among the fastest growing in the world, providing improved living standards and increased opportunity for all their people.

We apply the principles of economic freedom at home; we should not export central planning and statist economics abroad. When the Holy Father came to this country, he spoke of the moral obligation of the wealthier nations to share with those less fortunate—it is time to take up that challenge. Both our countries have been generous donors of foreign aid, and that is important.

But our own experience, the experience of this century, has shown that the only effective way to share prosperity is to share the conditions that generate prosperity. History has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that statism spreads poverty; it is only freedom that begets wealth. Free markets, low tax rates, free trade—this is the most valuable foreign aid we can give to the developing nations of the Third World.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: These are the weapons of peace we must deploy in the struggle to win a future of liberty for mankind. So many have come to Canada and the United States in hope—let us now give that hope to the world.

Throughout our history our two nations have keenly felt our international responsibilities. Instrumental in founding and maintaining the NATO alliance, through co-operative efforts in NORAD, Canada has taken a leading role in the defence of the free world. Meanwhile, we have co-operated in extending every effort to lessen the dangers of a nuclear-armed world.

Over the past six years, the United States—working closely with Canada and our other allies—has sought to achieve deep reductions in Soviet and American nuclear arms. Thanks to the firmness shown by the Alliance, we are moving toward a breakthrough agreement that would dramatically reduce an entire class of weapons—American and Soviet longer-range, intermediate range, INF missiles in Europe and Asia.

We have travelled far to get here—from past treaties that only codified the nuclear build-up, to the point where we may soon see the dismantling of thousands of these agents of annihilation. We are hopeful—we are expectant—but we face many difficulties still. As our negotiators continue to work toward a sound agreement, we are not going to abandon our basic principles—or our allies' interests—for the sake of a quick fix, an inadequate accord.

We will work for truly verifiable reductions that strengthen the security of our friends and allies in both Europe and Asia and that cannot be circumvented by any imbalance in shorter-range INF systems. In short, America will stand where she always stood: with her allies, in defence of freedom and the cause of peace.

We must continue to keep in mind, as well, that a major impetus in our reduction talks has been the growing reality of our Strategic Defence Initiative. SDI supports and advances the objectives of arms control—

Mr. Robinson: No way.

Mr. Reagan:—offering a more stable and secure environment as we pursue our goal of deep reductions in nuclear weapons. We must move away from a situation of Mutual Assured Destruction—so aptly called MAD, the MAD policy. We need defensive systems that threaten no one, that would save human lives instead of targeting them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: We must remember that the Soviet Union has spent 15 times as much on strategic defences as we have over the last 10 years, while their record of compliance with existing arms treaties continues to be a cause for concern. Most people do not understand that Mutual Assured Destruction has left our populations absolutely defenceless. This is an intolerable situation; the truly moral course is to move forward quickly with a new strategy of peace—based not on the ability to threaten lives, but on our confidence that we can save them. Let us choose a defence that truly defends.

As we have pursued better relations with the Soviet Union, we have laboured to deal realistically with the basic issues that divide that nation from the free world. Our insistence that the Soviet Union adhere to its Helsinki human rights agreement is not just a moral imperative; we know that no nation can truly be at peace with its neighbours if it is not at peace with its own people.

In recent months, we have heard hopeful talk of change in Moscow, of a new openness. Some political prisoners have been released; the BBC is no longer jammed—we welcome these positive signs and hope that they are only the first steps toward a true liberalization of Soviet society.

To the extent the Soviet Union truly opens its society—to that extent its economy and the life of its people will improve; to that extent we may hope its aggression will diminish.

Disappointingly, however, there so far has been little movement on the Soviet side toward the peaceful settlement of regional conflicts that today are flaring across the globe.

Despite announcements of ceasefires and talk of national reconciliation, the Soviet's terrible war against Afghanistan remains unabated—and Soviet attacks on neighbouring Pakistan have escalated dangerously. In Cambodia, Ethiopia, and Angola, the Soviet Union continues to support brutal wars of Communist Governments against their own people. In Nicaragua, we see such a campaign on our own shores—

Mr. Parry: Shameful!

Mr. Reagan: Is there an echo in here?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Thank you. In Nicaragua, we see such a campaign on our own shores, threatening destabilization throughout Central America. This is not just a question of self-protection; the higher principle is that the people of Nicaragua have the right to decide their own future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: The surest sign that the Soviet Union truly wants better relations, that it truly wants peace, would be to end its global strategy to impose one-party dictatorships—allow the people of this world to determine their own futures, in liberty and peace. We know that when people are given the opportunity to choose, they choose freedom.

Truly, the future belongs to the free. In our own hemisphere, we have seen a freedom tide sweep over South and Central America: Six years ago, only 30 per cent of the people of Latin America lived in democracies—today, over 90 per cent do. Around the world, resistance movements are rising up to throw off the totalitarian yoke. Even in China, they debate the pace of reform but acknowledge its necessity.

On the border between Canada and the United States stands a plaque commemorating over a century and a half of friendship. It calls the border: "a lesson of peace to all nations", and that is what it is: a concrete, living lesson that the path to peace is freedom, that the relations of free peoples, no matter how different, no matter how distinct their national characters, will be marked by admiration, not hostility.

Go stand along the border at the beginning of July. You will see the Maple Leaf and the Stars and Stripes mixed in a swirling cloud of visitors and celebrants. As a Canadian writer once put it: "What's the difference between Dominion Day and July 4? About 48 hours".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Yes, we have differences, disputes, as any two sovereign nations will. But we are always able to work them out, entre amis.

One area of particular concern to all Canadians, I know, is the problem of acid rain. When the Prime Minister and I met in Quebec two years ago, we appointed two distinguished Envoys, Bill Davis and Drew Lewis, to examine the problem. They issued a joint report, which we have endorsed, and we are actively implementing many of their recommendations.

The first phase of our clean coal technology program is under way. It is the beginning of a $6 billion commitment through 1992, and I have asked Congress for the full share of government spending recommended by the Envoys—$2.5 billion—for the demonstration of innovative pollution control technologies over the next five years.

Literally thousands of firms and millions of jobs will be affected by whatever steps we take on this problem, so there are no quick and easy answers. However, working together, we have made an important start. I am convinced that, as in the past, our disputes will bring us closer as we find a mutual accord, and our differences will become only another occasion for co-operation. Let me assure you that your concerns are my concerns.

I was struck recently by the words of a Canadian—a Hungarian Canadian you might call him—who came to this country, as so many before him, to escape oppression. He said: "I wanted to stretch. I needed a place where I could move mountains or carry larger stones than Sisyphus, and here was the place for it—nobody telling me what I'm supposed to believe as a Canadian—gave me a kind of freedom for my mind and my spirit and my creative energies that I had never experienced before in life. (And) I found that, for me, anyhow, anything could be possible here".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: This is your Canada, and our continent. This is the chosen place in history our two nations occupy: a land where the mind and heart of man are free; a land of peace; a land where, indeed, anything is possible.

May I add a word about our discussions today on two issues of critical interest to our two countries. The Prime Minister and I agreed to consider the Prime Minister's proposal for a bilateral accord on acid rain, building on the tradition of agreements to control pollution of our shared international waters.

The Prime Minister and I also had a full discussion of the Arctic waters issue, and he and I agreed to inject new impetus to the discussions already under way. We are determined to find a solution based on mutual respect for sovereignty and our common security and other interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reagan: Thank you all very much, and God bless you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (The Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Mr. Speaker of the House, Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen:

[Translation]

Mr. President, first of all, I would like to thank you for your visit to this country and to the Parliament of Canada, and also for the words of wisdom and encouragement you have just spoken. They confirm that Canada and the United States of America have in common, as has ever been the case, a desire to build a better, safer and more prosperous world, with a profound respect for liberty and justice. They also confirm that the special ties between our two countries are as important to you, our neighbours and American friends, as they are to us Canadians.

[English]

We are particularly pleased that your visit takes place during the Bicentennial of the birth of the American Constitution, that godchild of Montesquieu's enlightenment. It is a happy reminder of the ties between Europe and America, and gives us reason to believe that the most important event in Europe in the 18th century was the Congress of Philadelphia.

The Bicentennial of your Constitution has a profound significance for us. Without it, our own Canadian Constitution might well have been quite different. Your founding fathers were innovators in their day in that they established a federation, a bold departure in a world dominated by unitary or at best confederative systems of government. We shall always be grateful to them for setting an example of a federative system of government.

Your republican Constitution and a consciousness of the relationship between Canada and the United States played a part, too, in the naming of our country in 1867, the year of Confederation. In calling the new country "The Dominion of Canada" rather than "The Kingdom of Canada", the British Government tactfully deferred to the republican feelings of our southern neighbours. It was a gesture which showed considerable statesmanship, in that it could present Canada as a republican monarchy.

In fact, in 1787, your fellow Americans saw clearly that the office of President closely resembled that of a monarch. They proposed that the President be addressed as "His Majesty". This idea was rejected, but for a time, people still spoke of the President's "throne". As you will know, Mr. President, by another paradoxical situation, the impecunious Hamilton promoted the royal symbols, while the wealthy Jefferson pleaded for the republican emblems.

In 1867 we chose to name our Upper House the Senate, and, like yours at the beginning, it is a non-elected body. After all, it was not until 1913 that by an amendment to the Constitution your country decided to elect rather than designate Senators. In that process, the prestige and influence of the House of Representatives was somewhat diminished. I doubt that my Senate colleagues expect soon to be in a similar position vis-à-vis the House of Commons but, as you know, history has a habit of coming up with some surprising developments!

[Translation]

Mr. President, you are aware of the importance to Canadians of the ties between our two countries. Sharing a continent and common values, we are in the habit of considering you as our American cousins. Although our symbols would seem to contradict each other—the star-spangled banner of the Republic and our country's sovereignty within the British Commonwealth—our relations have always reflected a profound mutual respect.

[English]

Our common political origins and our long history of amity and co-operation allow us to affirm that our friendly relations are destined for perpetuity. Your presence and your words to us today are additional proof of this, and we offer you our respectful gratitude.

We are honoured that you accepted our invitation to address us. Thank you, Mr. President.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Mr. President, many distinguished visitors address both Houses of Parliament in this Chamber, but no occasion is more welcome than when the long friendship that exists between our two peoples is manifested by the presence here of the President of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: On each past occasion, Presidents have spoken of the close friendship between Canada and the United States, and your words today maintain that tradition.

Canadians have reciprocated with the heartfelt welcome our people give to very special friends.

We share a continent and have done so peaceably for many generations. We have fought as allies against tyranny and for the democratic principles which we both share.

[Translation]

We have remained close allies, despite some difficult times. We both know that only mutual cooperation will enable our respective nations to meet their obligations to each other and to the rest of the world.

[English]

We who cherish freedom and parliamentary institutions are aware not only of the advantages and privileges we enjoy as free people, but also of the responsibility we have to set an example of mutual co-operation for others.

The close relationship which exists between Canadian parliamentarians and members of the Senate and House of Representatives is consequently of great significance. That close relationship will be again strengthened later this year when the Canada-United States Parliamentary Association holds its annual meeting in Vancouver, British Columbia.

These meetings exemplify a growing desire of parliamentarians in both our countries to come together to address both the problems and the opportunities which we share as a consequence of our close association as neighbours and friends.

Your visit, Sir, encourages this close relationship, and we are grateful for your personal commitment in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. President, as Speaker of the House of Commons, it is with great pleasure that I welcome you to this Chamber today, on the occasion of your visit and that of Mrs. Reagan.

It is an honour and a privilege to do so, and we thank you for this opportunity.

[English]

You take with you our renewed expression of respect and warm affection for you and for all our American friends. Thank you, Mr. President.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I now adjourn this meeting.

BATTLE OF VIMY RIDGE

SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY—TRIBUTES

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, tomorrow, April 9, at 11 a.m., ten Canadian World War I veterans will take part in the commemorative ceremony to mark the seventieth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. The ceremony will be held at the foot of the huge, majestic Canadian memorial at Vimy, France. This impressive monument was erected to honour all those Canadians who served and who gave their lives in World War I. It was unveiled on July 26, 1936, by King Edward VIII, 11 years after construction began.

It is, as it should be, the mandate of the Government of Canada to perpetuate the memory of Canada's war-time sacrifice and to ensure that all Canadians, regardless of the generation to which they belong, never forget the great sacrifices that were made on our behalf in war-time.

The ten veterans took part in the epic Battle of Vimy Ridge on April 9, 1917, when Canadian troops scored a major military victory in taking the well defended ridge, after French and British troops had failed to do so, at a great cost in lives. The Battle of Vimy Ridge saw the Canadian Corps, four divisions strong, fighting side by side for the first time. More than 140,000 men took part in the one-day battle. There were over 3,500 dead among the 10,600 Canadian casualties.

The names of 11,285 Canadians who died during World War I and who have no known graves are inscribed on the ramparts of the monument.

Last night the CBC showed a short film of a World War I veteran, Mr. R. Henley of British Columbia, visiting Vimy. The producer of the film, Halya Kuchmij, should be commended for an excellent production, which depicts the memories of one who recalled the battle in which he fought 70 years ago in his tender youth.

While the Government of Canada can be commended for providing the visit of these ten World War I veterans, it is unfortunate that some of our youth could not have been given the opportunity to accompany Veteran Henley to Vimy Ridge so that they would be reminded of the horrors of war, which were experienced by Canadian soldiers of their own age, and of the importance of preserving peace.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to thank the Honourable Senator Marshall for his comments. I have made a pilgrimage to Vimy, as he has done and as have many others. What struck me about Vimy is the fact that there are Canadians of every ethnic descent, every religion, every background and every province represented there. It was inspiring to see evidence of united effort and what it achieved in helping to shape our nation. As one who has been critical of the CBC in the past for one or two reasons, which I felt had some validity, I must say that the production by the CBC aired last night was outstanding. Allan Abel and his associates deserve the commendation of all of us. It was a sensitive, thoughtful portrayal of one old soldier's views of the Battle of Vimy Ridge. Extremely well done!

COMMITTEE OF SELECTION

FOURTH REPORT PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, Chairman of the Committee of Selection, presented the following report:

ORVILLE H. PHILLIPS
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXAMINE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-44

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-44, "An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, we have granted leave to have this motion introduced, but we did so to give Senator Doody an opportunity to explain why we should have a pre-study of this bill. I am sure he can convince us, but I think we should establish the principle that if we are going to have a pre-study, some explanation should be given as to why.

Senator Doody: Thank you, Senator Frith. I am pleased to have the opportunity to explain to my colleagues why we found it necessary to introduce this motion and to ask leave at this time for a pre-study.

As honourable senators are aware, C-44 is a bill to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. It deals with post-secondary education payments and health payments, and also with equalization payments. The first two items, I think, are not too important in terms of the time factor. They can be handled under the terms of the bill. However, equalization payments are another matter entirely. The present legislation will expire very shortly and in order for the Government of Canada to make its scheduled payment to the provinces on April 16, it is felt that this bill should be passed before that date, if it is indeed the intention of this chamber to let it pass.

The date suggested is April 14. That will give the government time to promulgate the regulations that are necessary. A special cabinet meeting will have to be called for that purpose at that time. After the regulations have been promulgated, the authority will be given to the Department of Finance to issue cheques to those provinces.

I do not have to explain to honourable senators how important these equalization payments are, or how important their early arrival is. I know that in the case of the Province of Newfoundland, the April 16 payment will amount to some $31 million. The total equalization payment to that province comes to something of the order of 27 per cent of the province's revenue. I think the same percentage is true for the Province of Prince Edward Island. The percentages vary for other provinces, but do not go as high. If these payments do not arrive on time, those provinces will face some problems.

I appreciate the fact that once again we are being pressed for time and being put under the gun. The pressure is on. I have been told by people in the other place and by officials from the Department of Finance that they did not get an opportunity to start putting these arrangements together until late January because of the inability of the Census Bureau to provide them with the statistics they required to compile the figures. I concede that there are problems in offering that as an explanation. Why the Census Bureau should feel that it is in a position to dictate the time schedule, or why a government should allow it to do so, is a question that can be asked at some time in the future.

As I said, I have been told by the officials that they could not start working on these figures until late January. The legislation was introduced in the other place as soon as possible thereafter. For whatever reason, the other place has not seen fit to pass the bill yet. In addition, we are now faced with the Easter recess, which further complicates the matter.

Considering all of these complications, I ask leave of the Senate to refer the subject matter of the bill to the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the legislative schedule the Deputy Leader of the Government wants to try to meet for this bill has been explained. Does he have reason to believe that the other place will be able to meet that legislative schedule? I ask that because the bill itself is not even before the Senate; simply the subject matter of the bill is before the Senate.

Senator Doody: As did my predecessors in this position, I live in hope and very often end up in despair. I have been told by those in the other place that the bill is now at the report stage, that there are several amendments to be voted on, but that they hope to do that this afternoon. They tell me that with reasonable luck the bill will be passed by the House of Commons this afternoon. I cannot give honourable senators any assurance that that will happen. That may not happen until tomorrow; I can only say that I have been told that the bill may be passed tomorrow, but that the government hopes that it will be passed today. One has to consider the adage about the opposition opposing and the government proposing. That we will see as time goes on.

Senator Frith: Does the deputy leader think that he will be able to arrange a meeting of the National Finance Committee to deal with this legislation soon?

Senator Doody: I am pleased to see that the chairman of that committee, Senator Leblanc, is present. I have always been impressed by his cooperation and the cooperation of the members of that committee. I have no doubt that he will do everything he possibly can to arrange a meeting in the shortest possible time so that that committee can examine the subject matter of the bill in great detail. The Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the equalization parts of that act are of great significance to the regions of the country.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

SUMMIT MEETING IN QUEBEC CITY—DECLARATION BY PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT ON REDUCTION AND ELIMINATION OF TRADE BARRIERS—STATUS OF REPORT

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, at the "Shamrock Summit" on March 18, 1985, there was a declaration by the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States regarding trade in goods and services. This declaration was set out in a press release made following that "summit".

In that declaration there were a number of commitments, but I would like initially to read one:

We have charged Ambassador Brock, the United States Trade Representative, and the Honourable James Kelleher, Minister for International Trade, to establish immediately a bilateral mechanism to chart all possible ways to reduce and eliminate existing barriers to trade and to report to us within six months.

Was that report received by the Government of Canada? If so, could that report be tabled in the Senate for consideration?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall have to make inquiries about that.

It will be obvious to the honourable senator that the communiqué was overtaken by events, including the Prime Minister's proposal for the negotiation of a free trade treaty with the United States and the agreement by the U.S. administration and the Congress to enter into those negotiations.

SUMMIT MEETING IN OTTAWA—REAFFIRMATION OF DECLARATION

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Well, a further quote from that declaration states as follows:

We have also directed that action be undertaken over the next twelve months to resolve specific impediments to trade in a manner consistent with our international obligations and our legislative requirements.

The declaration goes on to say:

... and will concentrate initially on:

national treatment, on a contractual, equitable and mutually advantageous basis, with respect to government procurement and funding programs;

My question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate is: Was this aspect of that declaration reaffirmed by Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Reagan during the President's visit here last week? Could he tell us what specific action has been taken on that question since March of 1985?

THE SENATE

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a couple of questions for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but before proceeding to them I would like to raise a small point of order.

I have noticed of late, and again just a moment ago, that some honourable senators rise in their places and instead of addressing themselves immediately to honourable senators, they look to and await recognition by the Chair before they start.

I would simply remind everyone that in this place senators do not require recognition from the Chair. There is a rule that was spoken of last week by the Honourable Senator Frith and the Honourable Senator Flynn about the situation when two senators rise. But when one senator rises, he addresses himself immediately to honourable senators. He does not look for recognition by the Chair, nor, indeed, should he look for such recognition. He looks only for recognition by his peers.

With that bit of information, could I proceed to a question?

Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Frith: With our permission, yes.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Don't look at me!

Senator McElman: In these circumstances, I neither look for nor do I recognize any recognition by the Chair.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—REMARKS BY U.S. SENATOR—NEED FOR EDUCATION

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, in the Ottawa Citizen under a "Kitchener (CP)" dateline, there is an article which starts in the following manner:

Canadian and American cultures should be blended into one and trade conducted between the two as if they were part of the same country, says the chairman of the U.S. Senate's subcommittee on trade.

Senator Spark Matsunaga said the relationship would be one "wherein we practically integrate our economy" and where American and Canadian cultures are blended into one.

The article further states:

Matsunaga is chairman of the trade subcommittee of the Senate's powerful finance committee, which will play a critical role in shaping a free-trade deal with Canada.

I must point out that the name of the honourable senator is "Spark", and he certainly struck sparks from me.

I would ask the Leader of the Government, as one maritimer who is very much in favour of a much freer trade negotiated agreement with the United States as long as there are provisos to such an agreement, does he think it would be appropriate and useful if the government were to instruct our embassy, because of the importance of the senator, to seek an opportunity to educate him on how Canadians regard themselves in approaching such arrangements?

The United States senator in question is obviously a candidate for the "Champ Clark" award for unwelcome comments on Canadian debate.

Canada's ability and our determination to support and enhance Canadian cultures and Canadian identity are not negotiable. The Prime Minister has said that on numerous occasions. Our counterparts in the United States administration and the United States negotiators are fully aware of our position in that regard.

NATIONAL STATISTICS COUNCIL

MEMBERSHIP—REGIONAL REPRESENTATION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, a couple of weeks ago I asked the Leader of the Government in the Senate a question concerning the National Statistics Council and whether certain provinces would be given appropriate representation on that council. He agreed to check into the matter, and I did too, but as yet I have not been successful in determining whether corrective action has been taken; has he?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if it is the matter I think the honourable senator is referring to, I believe I said at the time that corrective action was imminent. It was not as imminent as I thought it was, but it is inevitable.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Senator Olson.

[Senator McElman.]

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to thank the Deputy Leader of the Government for providing the delayed answer yesterday—

THE SENATE

POINT OF ORDER

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I was very serious in what I said a few moments ago. I appreciate that certain things may evolve in the Senate, however, I do not think this matter should be taken lightly.

Honourable senators are in charge of this house, and honourable senators deserve to be addressed by other honourable senators and to be recognized by other honourable senators. The practice here has been very clear down through the years. I am not looking in a certain direction, but I for one would appreciate it if the procedures that have been established over many decades could be properly followed when one senator rises and seeks the recognition of his peers.

● (1420)

Senator Buckwold: What happens when two senators rise?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: May I have the permission of honourable senators to say something on the point of order which has been raised by the Honourable Senator McElman?

Senator McElman: Your Honour, I did not wish to address you; you force me to. When a matter of this kind is raised in the chamber, I believe it is appropriate that honourable senators, if they wish, discuss it before there should be any intervention from the Chair.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I just wanted to say to Senator McElman that I only dare to give the floor to a certain senator because often two senators rise at the same time, and I think the rules permit me to make a choice.

Senator Walker: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: This is why I sometimes have to recognize a senator who wishes to take the floor. I wanted to say to Senator McElman that I have been here so long that I know the rules, and I do not want to offend against them. I also want to give to the reporters a chance to recognize which senator wants to take the floor. This is all.

I repeat that I do not want to offend against the rules. If Senator McElman wants to blame me for what I am doing—I am trying to do my best—he should just do it, and I am going to take my decision.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, it seems to me that the practice that has developed over many years has been changing recently by a method that I fear very much in any area of parliamentary activity—it is gradualism. We have rules, but practice, if permitted to continue over a long period of time, will come to supersede rules. That has been the case in parliaments down through the years. I have no argument with the rule which says that when two senators rise in their places, the Speaker shall recognize the senator who, in his opinion, has first risen to his feet. However, that is not the practice that has, through gradualism, been developing here. It has reached the point, as I said earlier, where some senators will stand, look to the Chair, and actually wait until they have recognition by the Chair before they speak. That is neither necessary nor appropriate. Senators, and nobody else, are in charge of this chamber. The Chair is not in charge of this chamber; senators are. I think that if we continue to stray from that rule, through gradualism we will destroy some of the customs of this house that are very meaningful. It is in that sense that I have raised this matter.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, if I may, I appreciate what Senator McElman has said, but it seems to me that a great many of our practices have been changing in recent years. A fairly extended and sometimes quite lively oral Question Period is something that is relatively new to this chamber. I have looked at Hansards going back some years and I know that the kind of Question Period that we have recently been conducting goes back only to about 1979—

Senator Guay: You don't remember Senator Flynn?

Senator Flynn: Do you remember me?

Senator Buckwold: Who can forget you?

Senator Murray:—when there were three ministers of the Crown in this chamber. I sometimes think that our Question Period has all of the worst features of the Question Period in the other place and very few of the better features. There are not many rules governing the Question Period here, although there are several quite precise rules regarding it, which, I regret to say, are honoured more in the breach than in the observance.

Under the circumstances, I must say that I do not find that Mr. Speaker or his deputy have tried to interfere with the undoubted right of honourable senators to conduct their own affairs; but I raise the question whether, in view of the fact that our customs seem to be changing in this place, we should not give some consideration to changing our rules to take account of this fact and to keep pace with those changing customs; and one of the things that honourable senators might like to look at is the role of the presiding officer in this place.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, speaking to the points raised by the Leader of the Government, I believe that his comments are supported by his research about the changing nature of Question Period.

However, I believe the important point to be made in that connection—and it is related to what Senator McElman has said—is that the change took place as a result of, or evolved from, practices put into effect by honourable senators. That is Senator McElman's point, namely, that the changes in procedures and customs in this place should evolve through honourable senators, not through the Speaker, because it is the senators who are masters of the procedure—and that is the reason senators address "honourable senators" rather than "Mr. Speaker".

Senator McElman may, if he so wishes, speak for himself and make it quite clear; but the present Speaker, His Honour who is in the Chair at the moment, should not feel that anyone is offended by what he did, and we have no intention—I am sure that Senator McElman does not and I do not—of saying anything offensive about him. It is not a matter of personal offence; it is a matter of whether we want to preserve established procedure; and it seems to me that in that context it is very relevant that, as the Leader of the Government suggested, we, the senators, might want to change that. I assume he means that we might want to discontinue the practice of addressing "honourable senators", and start addressing the Chair.

It is a suggestion for reform, but a reform that must take place by reason of honourable senators deciding to do so. The only direct role provided for in the rules relevant to what we are talking about is to be found in rule 15. It says:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum, and shall decide points of order,

So, the practice is that only when there is some absence of decorum or order do honourable senators call on the Speaker to resolve the difficulty. That is why the rules themselves provide for the occasion when more than one senator rises—because at that point there is the need for intervention to bring order. If a senator stands and says, "Honourable senators," it seems to me that decorum and order are not in any way threatened. Decorum and order exists. I think that is Senator McElman's point. A senator proceeds to address "honourable senators", without waiting for permission from the Chair.

● (1430)

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not disagree with the interpretation of the rules as expressed by Senator McElman, but I must say that his point was taken at the very wrong time, because when he rose, Senator Olson also rose. The honourable senator was recognized in preference to Senator Olson. When the honourable senator rose on his second point of order, Senator Olson also tried to be recognized or to take the floor. That is why His Honour finally had to say, "Senator Olson, you have the floor."

It is very difficult during Question Period for any honourable senator rising to know whether he has been recognized by the Speaker and by honourable senators as a whole. In this specific case, Senator Olson had tried to rise three times, and when he was finally recognized by the Chair, Senator McElman rose a second time on his point of order. So even if we agree with the way in which the honourable senator described the problem, I think, under the circumstances, that it was the duty of the Chair to recognize Senator Olson.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, on the same point of order raised by Senator McElman, may I point out that there is no way that people listening to the audio in this place are able to identify the honourable senator speaking unless the Speaker has indicated who it is. One must recognize the voice of every speaker—

Senator MacEachen: In your case, it would be easy. You have a memorable voice.

Senator MacDonald: —in this house to understand who is speaking.

Senator Haidasz: Look them up in the seating plan!

Senator Guay: You can see!

Senator McElman: Senator MacDonald, I think that we recognize each other “by sight” as opposed to “by sound”. In reference to the point raised by Senator Flynn, may I say, with respect, that when the two senators he spoke of rose in their places, I very clearly stated that I was speaking on a point of order, which takes precedence.

Senator Flynn: But two senators rose at the same time.

Senator McElman: But I was rising on a point of order.

Senator Flynn: But the Chair could not know that in advance.

Senator McElman: As the honourable senator, who is somewhat of an authority on the rules, knows, a point of order takes precedence. I was addressing my fellow senators on a point of order, so his example really does not hold water.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, the honourable senator is really pushing, because how can the Chair recognize that one senator is rising on a point of order and that the other one is not?

Senator McElman: I so stated.

Senator Flynn: For God's sake! I mean, push, but push equally.

Senator McElman: I was recognized because I stated that I was rising on a point of order.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators—

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The Honourable Senator Molgat.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, if I may speak to this very interesting point of order, I think that there might be a solution that is in keeping with the reforms of our institution that we could look at. I suspect that the reason that we have not given our Speakers the same power as the Speakers of the other place have is that we have never controlled the choice of Speaker in this place. With no disrespect to present Speakers or past Speakers, our Speakers have been imposed on the Senate by the Prime Minister of the country. Would it not be a proper time now for us to consider electing our Speaker, as is done in the House of Commons? I think it would be a sensible reform with which to proceed at this time in particular. Then we would be prepared to give our Speaker whatever powers we deem necessary.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DRUG ABUSE—NATIONAL STRATEGY FOR PREVENTION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It was announced by the Prime Minister last September, and then in October in the Speech from the Throne, that the federal government recognized drug abuse as a great national problem and that a national strategy to prevent drug abuse would be developed by the government. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate give us at least a broad outline or the highlights of this national strategy to prevent drug abuse in Canada?

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—REPORTED CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT TO COMBAT DISEASE

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Last Monday it was reported that the Prime Minister and President Reagan had reached some kind of agreement on Canada-United States cooperation to deal with the tragic disease AIDS. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate expound or enlarge upon that report?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, what is involved, I believe, is the sharing of information, particularly in the area of research, into this deadly disease. However, I shall inquire to see whether there is any further information or more details that I can bring to the attention of the Senate.

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—TESTING OF DIPLOMATS AND MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, while the Leader of the Government is inquiring into the details of this agreement, would he also find out whether it is the intention of the Canadian government to test all diplomats and members of the armed forces for the AIDS virus?

AGRICULTURE

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—GOVERNMENT ACTION—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DELAYED ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: I was about to ask the Leader of the Government a question of clarification relating to one of the delayed answers that he gave yesterday. First, I ought to say that I agree with Senator McElman's interpretation of the rules and, more specifically, with the part where he said that if two senators rise at the same time, the Speaker may indicate who rose first. I want to say also that if I had realized—and I looked over in his direction—that Senator McElman had not finished with his point of order, I would not have risen at all.

The question I want to pursue with the Leader of the Government is the one dealing with Farm Credit Crisis—Government Action. I do not want to read all of the answer because, as the Deputy Leader indicated yesterday, it is very long, and it remains just as long today. However, there is one paragraph that I do not understand and for which I would ask the leader to get clarification. It is in the middle of the answer, and it reads:

Although these measures will help offset the adverse effects of low commodity prices, the minister has made it clear—

That is, the Minister of Agriculture.

—that farmers in Canada should not base their seeding decisions on the expectation of what the government might do next.

That may be good advice, but I do not know what it means. Perhaps the leader could give us an explanation as to why farmers should not rely on what the government might do next.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, what it means is that there is no short-term fix, as I said the other day, to the problems of low commodity prices, particularly low grain prices and oversupply of these commodities. It would be virtually impossible for the Government of Canada, first, to compete with the kind of subsidies that are being offered by the United States and the European Economic Community or, second, to compensate fully for the serious world conditions affecting those commodities.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, that is one interpretation that can be put on that paragraph. If one reads it very carefully, as I have done several times, it could be considered as giving notice that the government does not intend to continue the programs, including the program of grain stabilization payments. When the government says that the farming community "should not base their seeding decisions... on the expectation of what the government might do," could it be a subtle way of withdrawing from the programs for the grain industry that have been in effect in 1986?

Senator Murray: To what programs is the honourable senator referring?

Senator Olson: That comment causes me to read one other paragraph, and that is the paragraph immediately preceding what I just read. It says:

This year, that amount will increase substantially because of the $1 billion.

That refers to grain:

As well, the stabilization programs will deliver record-setting payments this year.

Those are the payments out of the stabilization fund.

This money will help farmers meet their payments.

Then comes the paragraph which I read, which says that farmers should not base their seeding decisions on what the government might do next. Is the government then serving notice that it is withdrawing those programs?

Senator Murray: No, honourable senators, but I think it is fair to say that people should not expect another special $1 billion program next year.

Senator Olson: Will there be a time when farmers can expect to receive some recommendations from the government with respect to their planting intentions? This is nothing new; this is a practice of announcing the amount of the initial payment and other things that the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board does about this time of the year, just ahead of the planting season, and that is where we are now. Is there any advice that the government, having regard to its expertise in the field, wishes to give to farmers as to whether to seed more barley, less wheat, or whatever else?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, ministers responsible in this area have spoken about the short and medium-term prospects in this field, and farmers have had an opportunity to acquaint themselves with those comments.

The government is continuing to do all it can, particularly in the international field, to try to improve the situation. For instance, the Prime Minister brought the matter to the economic summit at Tokyo. He informed President Reagan the other day of our intention to bring it back to the economic summit in Venice in June, and received President Reagan's support. The Prime Minister will be meeting with farm leaders prior to that international summit. Meanwhile, the Minister for International Trade and other ministers have been meeting with agricultural exporting nations—the so-called Cairns Group—which, by the way, will be meeting in Canada within a couple of months.

Canada is exerting every effort and, indeed, showing remarkable leadership in the world community to try to improve this situation. I can only say that so far as our advice to farmers is concerned, the honourable senator can expect that the announcement of the initial price will not be long delayed.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not want to pursue this matter at length now. However, I must impress upon the Honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate that the farmers cannot change the weather; that if a farmer in western Canada is going to seed wheat at all, he seeds it in April and May. Up until this year there has always been an indication from the government—and particularly from the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board—with respect to these matters. I cannot impress upon the Leader of the Government in the Senate more profoundly that the farmers need an answer now from the body that has the most information and all the other facilities, namely, the Wheat Board. The farmers cannot wait until June, or whenever, to change their seeding intentions. It will be too late by then, so I implore the minister and his colleagues to be as helpful as they can be, and not just simply say there will be a meeting two months from now and another meeting somewhere else at some other time, after it is too late. The farmers need to know right now.

Senator Murray: I am not sure what the honourable senator needs to know right now. I have told him already what the date is, or at least I have given him a pretty good approximation of when the initial price will be announced. I am not sure what other information the honourable senator requires at the moment.

I can tell him that the immediate outlook for recovery in terms of world prices is not very great, as he must know. He does not need me to tell him that.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, what I wanted to have was an explanation of what the government itself said, and I do not want to repeat all that it said, but here it says:

... farmers in Canada should not base their seeding decisions on the expectation of what the government might do next.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I gave that answer in reply to the very first question that the honourable senator posed, after which he chose to rise and give his interpretation of what the government meant. I have told him what the government meant.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, if I were a practical farmer—which, by the way, I am—I could take all the answers that the Leader of the Government has given me and I would not find one speck of information that would be helpful to me in deciding to seed one crop as opposed to another, and I think that farmers in this country expect that kind of information. They have had it from previous governments, and even from this government last year. Why the complete withdrawal now?

SENATE REFORM

INCLUSION ON AGENDA FOR NEXT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We have known for some time now that Premier Getty is supporting a study by the First Ministers of Senate reform. This morning a news story coming from Edmonton reads:

Ontario ready to discuss reform of Senate, Peterson says
So we now have at least two premiers who we know for sure are interested in Senate reform.

Can the Leader of the Government in the Senate indicate to us whether or not this matter will be on the agenda for the next meeting of First Ministers?

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—STATUS OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. A few weeks ago, the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit had the following headline:

Valcourt on guard.

I should like to quote part of this article dated March 16:

The Minister of State responsible for Small Businesses and Tourism, Mr. André Valcourt—

Clearly, the article should read Bernard Valcourt. I continue:

—has promised to “keep a close watch” over the forthcoming constitutional negotiation with the Quebec Government to ensure that they “will not be at the expense of Francophones outside Quebec”.

I wish to ask the Leader of the Government whether Francophones outside Quebec are effectively on the agenda of the First Ministers' Conference to be held at the end of this month. I should like to know whether the issues which concern Francophones outside Quebec—an expression I just don't like—will be considered at the same time as the Quebec constitutional issue.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): First of all, honourable senators, I should like to emphasize that our friend Mr. Valcourt is the only francophone outside Quebec within the current cabinet and that he plays very effectively his role as a francophone outside Quebec representative.

On several occasions, I have discussed with francophones outside Quebec representatives their concerns about the Quebec issue.

Quebec has laid down five conditions for its joining the Constitutional Agreement. Francophones outside Quebec representatives are concerned about each of these five conditions. For instance, they do not want a special status to be accorded to Quebec as the main centre of francophones irrespective of their position. I have listened with much interest to the representations made by these associations. Of course, we will have their views in mind at the First Ministers' Conference on April 30.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I appreciate the comments of the Leader of the Government in the Senate which I must say, I find quite reassuring. As French Canadians not living in Quebec, we are afraid to be taken for a ride.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Quebec!

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I am grateful for your interest in this question.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Following Senator Corbin's remarks, honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Will there be observers from the Francophone outside Quebec group at this meeting? I understand that they will not be on the same level as the First Ministers, but will they be present as observers and ready to give their views, if necessary.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, this meeting will be held behind close doors. There will be only eleven persons around the table, I mean the Prime Minister of Canada and the ten provincial Premiers. There might be a couple of officials to take note of the proceedings. However, inviting observers or other people is out of question.

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

GREEK-TURKISH RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have one delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 26 last by the Honourable Senator Gigantès regarding Foreign Affairs—Greek-Turkish Relations—Government Action.

I ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is monitoring developments in the Aegean. The North Atlantic Council met in Brussels on March 27 to discuss the situation, following which the Secretary General, Lord Carrington, issued the attached statement.

The Canadian government is deeply concerned about the situation in the region and particularly alarmed by reports of the possibility of military action, which could have grave implications for the region and the interests of the alliance as a whole. It fully supports the statement of the Secretary General and joins its allies in urging Greece and Turkey to avoid any use of force and to refrain from making any statement that might exacerbate the situation. It also calls upon Greece and Turkey to seek peaceful means of resolving their dispute. The government strongly supports the Secretary General's offer to use his good offices to help both parties to ease tension in the area.

Officials of the Department of External Affairs met with the Greek Ambassador and the Turkish Chargé d'affaires to ask them to convey to their authorities Canada's grave concerns about the renewed tensions in the Aegean Sea.

The dispute over the continental shelf is not something new. Already in 1976, for example, the UN Security Council was seized of the dossier and called on both parties to refrain from the use of force to settle the dispute and asked them to resume direct negotiations. The North Aegean Petroleum Consortium (NAPC) of which Denison Mines is a major partner is not conducting activities in any disputed area.

STATEMENT ISSUED ON MARCH 27, BY LORD CARRINGTON, SECRETARY GENERAL OF NATO

After an emergency meeting of the North Atlantic Council this afternoon, NATO Secretary General, Lord Carrington, issued the following statement:

"Following receipt of a number of reports that tensions in the Aegean had reached a serious level an emergency session of the Council was called this afternoon. The general feeling expressed other than by those directly involved was, that the present situation damages the interests of Greece and Turkey, and of the Alliance as a whole. Any intensification would make things worse. The issues in dispute were complex. No attempt to resolve them was made at our meeting. Greece and Turkey were urged to avoid any action or statement that might aggravate an already tense situation, and to make full use of the peaceful remedies available to them. Greece and Turkey were also encouraged to begin immediate discussions, and to avoid recourse to force at all costs.

In view of a long-standing commitment of NATO Secretaries General to follow closely questions affecting Greece, Turkey and the Alliance, I am, of course, anxious to help in any way I can, provided that both Greece and Turkey, and the other Allies, would wish me to do so, and provided that I could make a useful contribution."

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, before Orders of the Day are called and because there is some support on both sides for an early meeting of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22, I have been asked to announce that tomorrow, from 8.30 to 9.30 a.m., there will be an organizational meeting of that committee which was established to deal with the subject matter of that bill and the bill itself, in due course.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, for the second reading of the Bill C-28, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (torture).—(Honourable Senator Stanbury).

Hon. Richard J. Stanbury: Honourable senators, as Senator Nurgitz pointed out in his excellent explanation of Bill C-28, the purpose of the bill is to amend our criminal law to conform with the United Nations covenant against torture, of which Canada had already become a signatory in 1985.

There is no desire on the part of Liberal senators to put any obstacle in the way of passage of this bill into legislation. It had its origins in the action of the United Nations at the General Assembly in 1975, with the adoption of a declaration on the protection of all persons against torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. Canada, at the request of the General Assembly, made a unilateral declaration supporting that action, and that was followed by the preparation of a draft convention against torture based on the 1975 declaration. Canada was very much involved in the work of the Human Rights Commission, and supported the initiative which amounted to international action against torture.

In 1983 the then Liberal Government of Canada jointly supported a procedural resolution insisting on top priority being given to the drafting of the convention, and then Canada's aggressive support was continued to bring about the adoption of the convention by the General Assembly in December 1984. Canada then ratified the convention in 1985, and the government is now proposing this bill by way of implementation and enforcement. I should also point out that the bill is complementary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which forbids torture. The timing is also appropriate, in view of the report of the Deschênes Commission.

I congratulate the government on following through with the early initiatives and bringing the matter to an almost satisfactory conclusion. The reason I say "almost" is that the bill still leaves something to be desired. There is a fairly broad exemption in that the definition of "torture" does not include any act or omission arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions. This is an escape clause which can be used by regimes not as dedicated to the principle of human rights. But it is not one which would be necessary in Canada.

I do not want to get into the technicalities of the question at the present time, because I assume that the bill will be referred to committee and that question can be investigated carefully there. The real question is whether, just because an international convention is limited or modified in order to get international consensus, the domestic bill must be similarly limited and modified. It is my belief that it is open to the Canadian Parliament to pass better legislation than the minimum required by the international convention. If that is true, then it becomes our responsibility to pass the best legislation possible rather than just a bill which fulfills the strict limitations of the international convention, such as the one we have before us.

It is my hope that this question will be carefully considered in committee and that competent witnesses will be called to satisfy honourable senators concerning that proposition.

Apart from that one concern, I am pleased with the legislation and recommend that it be referred to committee for consideration.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Nurgitz speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Nurgitz:—I suggest that this bill be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs where these various questions can be asked of officials. In anticipating Senator Stanbury's comments today, the committee has arranged to meet tomorrow at 9.30 a.m. At that time we will have available to the members of the committee officials from the Department of Justice and officials from the Department of External Affairs.

I suppose my one comment in response to the rather positive comments made by Senator Stanbury relating to having the best legislation would be—and I do not want to address this in terms of what I used to be told about half a loaf—in terms of legislation that would emanate from the Deschênes Commission report. I do not think it was intended that this particular legislation would address that question. The Minister of Justice has undertaken to table amendments to the Criminal Code which would address specifically the recommendations of Mr. Justice Deschênes. It is my understanding that such amendments would be quite independent of those amendments. But all of this can appropriately be addressed in the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (post-secondary education) tabled in the Senate on 25th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Simard).

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable Senators, today I should like to take a few minutes to speak to you about the report of the Standing Committee on National Finance on the federal policy on post-secondary education.

As many of you undoubtedly know, this report has been both criticized and commended, depending on viewpoints. Today I will tell you about the two most controversial aspects of the report: our recommendations on established programs financing and those on research. I will also take this opportunity to respond to certain criticisms which are unwarranted, in my opinion.

Certain journalists and certain spokesmen for organizations interested in post-secondary education have openly criticized our recommendations on established programs financing. Basically they all agree with our analysis. Yet they refuse to endorse our recommendations to the effect that, essentially, EPF is a program which was designed by finance ministers to meet financial requirements which have nothing or precious little to do with post-secondary education. They state that our analysis is wide-ranging, but that our conclusions are poorly documented.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Pardon me, Senator Simard?

Senator Simard: "Documented", Senator Frith. Why do they say that?

Simply because our conclusions differ from theirs, undoubtedly. We do not advocate a stronger federal role in the over-all management and the financing of post-secondary education.

No doubt, honourable senators, that many of us here would like that to be so, but we are well aware that in the real world this is impossible without intervention from the federal government in areas of clear provincial jurisdiction. The Canadian government cannot use the principle that might is right or that the richest must lead. Now, if the Canadian government has those resources, it is for the one and only reason that in 1867, the Fathers of Confederation had no crystal ball to distribute this nation's wealth in a way that would still be appropriate in today's political juncture, 120 years later.

They knew that post-secondary education was a national treasure, but they could not foresee what would be the magnitude of that treasure or how much education would cost. They also knew it was logical and desirable to vest that responsibility in the provinces. Therefore it is not fair to state that the conclusions of the Senate committee report are unfounded. I would simply suggest that our critics read the report in the light of today's realities.

If conditions were different, and if for instance the provinces together invited the Canadian government to commit itself further, our recommendations would not be justified. But such are not the facts. We cannot simply turn the clock back 120 years and hope that the problem will somehow disappear.

I would like now to deal with another criticism that has been directed to our report, as regards more specifically our recommendation for transferring financial resources to provinces in the form of tax points. I personally had some reservations about that recommendation when we formulated it. Having held the post of Minister of Finance in New Brunswick, I am very much aware that New Brunswick is not as rich as it would like to be. I know that, in that province, one tax point has a different value than in Ontario or Alberta.

In fact, I still fear that even if those tax points were adjusted under an equalization formula, as is now being done in terms of the EPF, New Brunswick citizens would be the losers. Indeed, the existing equalization principle enables to adjust the value of tax points on a national basis, based on the tax yield of five representative provinces—Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. More specifically, when the have provinces get richer, the New Brunswick tax points are readjusted but the gap is never closed. Rather, the opposite would be true. We can therefore conclude that the equalization formula is not adequate.

Also, we all know that New Brunswick might never be as rich as Ontario, or in this case Alberta. Natural resources in those provinces are too vast, and they have a much better access to markets. Therefore, what danger would there be in the Canadian government ensuring at least that equalization transfers be loaded in favour of some provinces like New Brunswick, even though equalization never can make up for all the financial handicaps of have-not provinces, in allowing them to offer the same quality of services as the richer provinces?

[English]

In fact, for some time I have been concerned that the equalization program has not been delivering the revenue that it should deliver if it were living up to its constitutional obligations. If the program were working as it should, New Brunswick should be able to have national average levels of public service and national average tax rates without having to run large operating deficits that cannot be sustained.

The fact of the matter is that New Brunswick and the other Atlantic provinces' spending on services is well below the national average; those provinces' taxes are around the national average or slightly higher; and those provinces have all been running high deficits.

As a senator representing the people of New Brunswick, I had hoped that Bill C-44 would do more for New Brunswick and, in fact, make up for revenues lost by the province last year when the EPF formula was implemented. As it turned out, the poorer provinces will have more difficulty making up the EPF losses than the richer ones—although some improvements had been made to the equalization formula—despite the fact that the federal government has undertaken to forgive overpayments of equalization resulting from the census. Yes, New Brunswick for one will still be in a net loss position when Bill C-44 is passed.

I know that the present federal government has helped my province in many ways through new initiatives and the beefing up of several federal-provincial agreements. This is appreciated, but we know that the equalization program is the most important transfer program for New Brunswick and, for that matter, for all the Atlantic provinces.

For that reason, I hope that it is not too late for the federal government to look at Bill C-44, which amends the Fiscal Arrangements Act, and to consider further improvements, in addition to those contained in the bill.

Among the improvements that I wish to propose is one that could make effective in the first year of the program the technical changes to the equalization formula. If this were done, New Brunswick would get another $15 million to $20 million in 1987-88.

A second way that the bill could be improved is to change that part of the legislation dealing with the equalization of overpayments, which became evident as a result of that census. The way the federal government has proposed to take care of this problem in the legislation will indeed keep the province from having to pay back moneys owed as a result of the new census, but at the same time it has made it almost impossible for the province to get any additional revenue from equalization for 1985-86 and 1986-87 as a result of the usual process of adjusting for new economic and fiscal data, which would enter the formula over the next two years.

• (1510)

In my opinion, this feature of the act could also be changed to provide for outright forgiveness of what New Brunswick owes, without at the same time keeping the usual adjustment mechanism from working.

Under these conditions, the province could then benefit from the strong economic growth that has occurred in central Canada as well as not having to repay equalization overpayments that became evident because of the census.

Honourable senators, the final amendment that would be of assistance to the provinces in receipt of equalization concerns the proposal to cap equalization payments to the growth in GNP after 1988. This feature of the act means that the provinces will not be able to benefit fully from strong economic growth in central Canada within the next few years if the equalization payments that come out of the formula as a result of that growth increase more rapidly than the gross national product.

I fully expect this to be the case, and that at some point the GNP cap will be put on and thereby limit equalization payments to the provinces. This is another example of where the bill could be changed if the federal government wanted to assist further the poorer provinces. This could be done by simply removing all reference to a GNP cap from the legislation.

Honourable senators, I will have more to say on the subject when the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance meets to study Bill C-44.

Suffice it to say that it is unfortunate that the leadership on the opposition side did not accept my invitation to let this committee undertake a pre-study of the bill. This is obviously a case where petty strategy prevailed over the orderly conduct of the business of the Senate.

[Translation]

To get back to the committee's report, honourable senators, before proceeding with the research question. I first want to respond to claims that the provinces do not spend all of the funds they are allocated for education financing for that purpose.

First of all, the provinces do not agree on the real value of the funds they are allowed for financing post-secondary education. According to the statistics, these transfers total around two or two and a half billion dollars in cash and two or two and a half billion dollars in the form of tax points. But can we really say that tax points come from the federal treasury?

Personally, I believe that tax points are no more and no less than the right to levy taxes that the federal government borrowed from them during the Second World War. If we agree with that assumption, it follows that the actual federal assistance provided by the federal government for post-secondary education financing is only that given in cash. Now, there is no question that these funds are transferred by the provinces to their universities and colleges.

Another issue I would like to discuss today is the false impression that 32.1 per cent of EPF transfers is designated for the financing of post-secondary education in each province. The figure of 32.1 per cent is the result of a calculation that was made on a national basis in 1975-76 so that accountants could more easily distribute the funds that were to be allocated to the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Secretary of State, respectively. This 32.1 per cent was never applied to a particular province, and it was not to be construed as designating what portion each province should set aside for post-secondary education financing. Using this figure now to judge the efforts of the provinces is not only unjustified, it is also misrepresenting the facts.

Now for my second point: the committee's recommendation concerning research. The committee recommended that a Centres of Research Council be created to make grants in support of the full cost of fundamental research in the natural sciences at selected universities engaged in approved research programs.

In other words, we recommend supporting the full range of current research projects at selected locations, in order to finance the direct and indirect costs of each project. The purpose is not to support one particular researcher but research teams that are engaged in research. This procedure differs from that followed by the granting councils. These fund only researchers and not research teams or programs. They do not fund specific centres. Their funds go where the researcher is.

Our committee believes that research must be concentrated in certain disciplines and in specific locations. It also is of the opinion that all research projects should be supported, not just those of a few researchers. We recommend that $100 million more a year be earmarked for that purpose.

Certain people may believe that concentrating research in a few specific localities will favour Ontario at the expense of the other provinces. I do not share this view, if only because a number of top quality research projects are being carried out in the so-called "have-not" provinces. For example, for quite some time now the University of New Brunswick has had an excellent reputation in forestry research. Not so long ago the University of Moncton opened a school of forestry studies on its Edmundston campus. And what about the forthcoming inauguration of the Hugh John Flemming forestry complex which will be located near the University of New Brunswick campus, and its satellite on the Edmundston University campus? This institution will include federal and provincial laboratories, as well as research stations which will be added to the university facilities. The centre was named after a former New Brunswick premier who was also in the Diefenbaker cabinet. This centre is precisely the kind of example we have in mind when we say that research must be concentrated where excellence already exists. Should our proposed Centres of Research Council be approved, a fair amount of money could be set aside for forestry research in New Brunswick.

In addition to being specialized in forestry matters, New Brunswick is also a major marine study and fishery research centre. St. Andrews is the site of a variety of marine institutes, not to mention the Huntsman Marine Laboratories. This research establishment operates thanks to the assistance of several federal and provincial agencies and the cooperation of the University of New Brunswick and the University of Moncton. Not only would it be logical to support marine research in St. Andrews, but it would also benefit thousands of people whose earnings directly or indirectly depend on the sea.

Honourable senators, my remarks today are intended to show how this report on the federal policy on post-secondary education can shed more light on the role of governments in promoting and expanding knowledge.

My colleagues and I do not recommend, as some would suggest, that the federal authorities withdraw from any involvement in post-secondary education. To the contrary, we recommend that they harmonize their efforts with their provincial counterparts to prevent any duplication or mutual hindrance. The federal government never had any role to play in the general operation and implementation of post-secondary education. For ten years, that is between 1967 and 1977, under the old Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, the federal and provincial governments shared the financing of post-secondary education. Neither level of government was satisfied with those agreements. We replaced them, in 1977, with the EPF, but even then, many would not admit the financing of those established programs was purely and simply a financial agreement. That is the reason that led senators to recommend the federal government put an end to those agreements and give directly back to the provinces the funds allocated to the general financing of post-secondary education.

This being said, we have also recommended that the federal government itself get more involved in research in order to re-establish a climate conducive to the development of researchers and scientists likely to become our future university and college professors. These are areas where the provinces and the federal government unanimously agree that Ottawa has a definite role to play.

To conclude these remarks, if I may, I should like to emphasize a good many recommendations and findings which deserve to be debated more openly and at greater length. Some of these discussions could be held even here, while a good many others could be entertained during the national forum on post-secondary education. I understand that this forum is to be held in Saskatoon in late October and my colleagues and I have great expectations. We hope that some of the issues we have raised in our report and other major challenges in the area of post-secondary education in this country will be thoroughly explored. We expect to look to the future instead of dwelling on past mistakes. We hope that it will be an opportunity for Canadians from all walks of life to indicate what they expect from their universities and colleges. Moreover, we hope that it will be an opportunity to consider the relationship between themselves as well as with the private sector, in order to determine if they are likely to help us meet the challenges we will be facing at the turn of the century.

I want to congratulate the Secretary of State and his provincial counterparts for agreeing to hold such a national forum. I wish also to offer my best wishes to Dr. Brian Segal, the Dean of the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute and chairman of the forum, for setting up a constructive dialogue and securing lasting results.

Finally, I would like to tell you that I have been very proud to be involved in the drafting of this report with my National Finance Committee colleagues, and I congratulate them on the wisdom they have shown in the preparation of this document.

On motion of senator Marsden, debate adjourned.

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Spivak).

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, when I was invited to join this select company, one of the arresting ideas that concentrated my mind wonderfully was that I imagined the scope, the potential for advocacy possessed by this institution. Senator Joyce Fairbairn, in her eloquent and comprehensive address to us several weeks ago, has called us to consider advocacy for solutions to the problem of illiteracy in Canada. She has focused our attention on the plight of individuals in a variety of social and economic circumstances—individuals who are unable to function adequately in our society due to their inability to read and write. As we progress as an information society in a global economy, increasingly we understand not only the importance of pervasive literacy but also the importance of possessing a broad range of skills and abilities. Extremely important are abilities such as an openness to new ideas, a penchant for constructive innovation, and some understanding of science and technology, particularly high tech and the micro-chip. Also essential is an appreciation of history, geography, and other cultures with which we share this small planet. These skills and abilities are of great personal and national significance; their development will require concerted effort on the part of both the federal and provincial governments as well as business, industry, and a host of voluntary organizations dedicated to enhancing learning opportunities for individuals of every age, geographic region, ethnic and linguistic group, and socio-economic circumstance. Literacy is a base prerequisite to attaining the higher level intellectual skills that are being demanded increasingly by the complexities of modern society.

Since the 1950s global efforts have been directed to the problem of illiteracy through the efforts of international organizations such as UNESCO. In Canada, as Senator Fairbairn indicated, many organizations have been working actively to eradicate illiteracy in our country. Millions of dollars have been spent on this activity. In Manitoba attempts to combat adult illiteracy have included special initiatives in the community colleges, community-based adult literacy programs, distance education initiatives which advance learning opportunities to individuals and communities throughout the province, day and evening programs for adults in high schools and other community-based organizations, and sheltered workshops. At a preventive level, Manitoba has established early childhood education programs, screening programs for the early identification of learning disabilities or deficiencies, and a variety of compensatory programs to enhance equal education opportunities. In spite of such investments, the solution to illiteracy continues to elude us, at least at provincial and national levels. To a large extent, illiteracy is the product of a failed educational system.

A major stumbling block has been the lack of a conceptual framework for understanding the role of literacy and illiteracy in society. In particular, we have failed to consider literacy in relation to its social and political contexts. I would like to try to bring to this debate further clarity in our understanding of functional literacy.

While the concept of functional literacy appears to have some empirical base, in actual fact behind this notion lies a jumble of gross oversimplifications and largely mistaken assumptions about the economic, social and political dimensions of literacy. We need to explore these assumptions so that we can separate the sound from the faulty and the unproven. In doing so, we are not dismissing the problem but, rather, we are bringing further clarity to the issue so that appropriate action can be taken.

One of these assumptions is that there is a universally valid standard of functional literacy. As Senator Marsden pointed out, there is no agreement on how one measures literacy. The only empirical criterion of functional literacy that has been forthcoming to date is that of approximate grade equivalents. Grade equivalents such as the completion of less than grade IX are widely employed as convenient proxies. It is these benchmarks that enable us to claim, for example, that one in five Canadians is illiterate. But what does that really mean in terms of the needs of those individuals?

We find in these benchmarks the use of academic standards which beg every question about the efficiency and relevance of school training as a route to competence that made the notion of functional literacy necessary in the first instance. But more importantly, we must recognize that the utility of literacy lies in its relation to specific kinds of information and particular information needs. Rather than minimum norms or fixed societal standards, which at present generate a false sense of security for those who achieve them and an unnecessary burden on those who do not, we need to view literacy within particular social contexts. It may be more appropriate for us to think in terms of hierarchies of competencies.

It is necessary to accept that each individual is an expert arbiter of her or his own literacy and information needs. Functional literacy is taken to be the possession of, or access to, the competencies or information required to accomplish those transactions entailing reading or writing in which an individual wishes, or is compelled, to engage. This definition forces us to consider the social context of literacy. This is important particularly in light of the conceptual history of functional literacy. When we examine this history, we find that the core idea of functional literacy developed in the political arena as opposed to community-based initiatives; that is why it is necessary to be cautious when considering how to attack the problem.

Another assumption that confuses our notion of literacy is that a universal level of individual achievement, at whatever level it is established, will result directly in a set of universally desired outcomes such as employment, personal or economic growth, job advancement, and social integration. Missing from this perspective is the recognition of the inflationary effects of education, as Senator Marsden described to us earlier in this debate. Teaching basic reading skills to adults does not guarantee jobs. We find that as more and more people become literate, employees in entry level positions must increasingly demonstrate in the labour market literacy competencies where once a respectable employment record would have sufficed. Thus, even within a specific society, there is no finite level of attainment that is capable of eliminating the disadvantages of illiteracy and permitting the less literate to compete on equal terms for employment, and to enjoy equal status with the more literate. Certainly sympathetic and relevant instruction can provide individuals with the competence they need or want. However, so long as there are people credited with superior or special literacy skills, the least competent will remain vulnerable to discrimination. Altering the official benchmark of functional literacy cannot affect this situation.

We need to make sure that as a society we make accessible a wide range of learning opportunities that accommodate various learning styles and capacities. This is possible. For example, the Diagnostic Learning Centre for Children with Learning Disabilities in Winnipeg, a unique and valuable program, employs the following method in its operation: Each child referred to this program has his or her learning style analyzed and a teaching style is devised to match it. A program is then created, geared to the programs in the child's home school; a volunteer is trained to guide the child in the program, and the volunteer and the student are sent back to the home school where the child continues his or her studies.

Our objective as a society must be more than the development of basic reading and writing skills; it must include learning how to learn so that individuals will be able to adapt to ongoing change. We need to develop intellectual abilities such as asking critical questions, and obtaining, analyzing and synthesizing relevant information to address significant issues in every field of endeavour.

We need to consider the needs of illiterate persons within their own social contexts and aspirations, and our literacy efforts need to be conducted within the framework of a broader effort aimed at improving the socio-economic standing of individuals and communities. We need to support communities in their development; it is in that context that meaningful results will be achieved.

In view of the responsibilities of provincial governments for general education, and the fact that provinces are increasing their efforts in this area, how can the federal government contribute to a solution to illiteracy in Canada? We need to support initiatives such as the recently announced Adult Basic Education Program for federal penitentiary inmates, a program which promises to attack vigorously the problem of illiteracy among federal inmates, 50 per cent of whom have been tested as functionally illiterate.

Through funding, we need to stimulate research and development in the field of learning disabilities. Much more research is required in terms of the diagnosis and treatment of learning disabilities. We need to support the research and dissemination of the latest findings on learning styles and their impact on learning and the implications for literacy training.

We need to encourage professional teacher-training institutions to include, as a critical component of the training program, meaningful instruction on learning as a problem-solving, change process, and the role of the teacher in fostering the development of critical thinking skills—skills so essential in our world today.

We need to support technological developments and educational consortia in the area of distance education. We need to support cooperative ventures of governments, the local communities, the volunteer community—which has had a huge hand in combatting illiteracy—business and industry, as Senator Fairbairn has suggested.

I wholeheartedly agree also with Senator Marsden about the importance of early childhood development, supported through quality child care, in encouraging, among other things, the earlier development of literacy skills.

Early identification programs such as the one in Winnipeg school division No. 1, which screen comprehensively for hearing, vision, motor skills or other learning disabilities or deficiencies in language skills, if integrated into child care programs, would greatly assist in the early discovery and treatment of barriers to education that children may have.

Right now we have the opportunity, as the national debate on child care progresses, to highlight the impact of early childhood development on the future quality of life. The prevention of the tragedy of illiteracy as well as many other social ills can be encouraged through interventions of this nature. I hope that the women and men in the Senate can be instrumental in bringing about such social change.

On motion of Senator Doyle, debate adjourned.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition) rose pursuant to notice of Thursday, April 2, 1987:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to Canada's international relations.

He said: Honourable senators, on this particular inquiry, which is entitled "Canada's International Relations", I wish to make some comments relating to almost current events, namely, the recent "summit" in Ottawa and earlier "summits" between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister; and, in general, some comments on Canada-United States relations.

It is now two and half years since the current government was elected, in part, so they tell us, so that they could repair the relationship with the United States. It had, apparently, fallen into great disrepair during the period of darkness that preceded September 1984.

The government promised to "restore the spirit of goodwill and true partnership between Canada and the United States," and we were also told that under the new government "Canadian internationalism would again be active and constructive in the wider world."

In December 1984 I said that as one who was very much involved in Canadian foreign policy during the bulk of that period—that period of so-called darkness—this description by the new government of past events was "simply nonsense."

Today, in light of the recent visit to Ottawa by President Reagan, I thought it might be useful if I reviewed how well the government has "refurbished", to use the Prime Minister's words, our most important bilateral relationship—indeed, our most important international relationship. What will be the achievement which will rank highest in the constellation of this government's accomplishments? Will it be a free trade agreement, the acid rain accord, or the Arctic sovereignty treaty? Well, perhaps we will have to wait a little longer for those headlines.

However, we can look at the record to see what giving the United States "the benefit of the doubt"—to use one of the Prime Minister's felicitous phrases—has done for Canada. A good starting point is the meeting in Quebec between the Prime Minister and the President. Honourable senators will recall it well. It was the meeting where the two leaders sang before a mesmerized audience, "When Irish Eyes are Smiling".

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: The "Shamrock Summit", as it is called, also provided early evidence of the Prime Minister's dedication to fiscal restraint—that other hallmark of the government! When the bills were finally revealed, we were told that that little extravaganza cost us just over $2.5 million.

In addition to song and festivities, what did we get for our millions? The two leaders signed a "Declaration Regarding Trade in Goods and Services"; and let me read for honourable senators some of that impressive—at least at the time—document. The leaders said:

We embark today on a joint effort to establish a climate of greater predictability and confidence for Canadians and Americans alike to plan, invest, grow and compete more effectively with one another . . . As a first step we commit ourselves to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services.

● (1540)

To some of us that sounded like a commitment from the United States to halt protectionist actions. In light of recent events, like shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, cut flowers, fish, the American levy on our energy exports, the general fee levied on all Canadian imports by the United States, and now potash, that lofty declaration made at the Quebec "summit" rings somewhat hollow. This document also included a handy "Resolution of Irritants Fact Sheet". This document reads as follows:

The President and the Prime Minister today indicated that the two governments had resolved a number of irritants which had marred Canada-United States relations and frustrated traders and investors on both sides of the border. These include the following:

The first item in this list of allegedly resolved trade irritants is the American country-of-origin marking requirements. We were told in that document:

The President is pursuing the necessary legislative steps to eliminate the trade-restrictive effect of a requirement in the Trade and Tariff Act of 1984 . . .

[Senator MacEachen.]

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government to bring us up to date on what progress the President has made in his pursuit of this goal over the last two years. What is the prognosis for the next two years? Did we, in fact, consider the irritant resolved simply because the President was pursuing the matter?

The second irritant mentioned was the Canadian tax treatment of certain tourist literature. We, Canada, promised to remove the federal sales tax on such literature, and I am assured that we have obliged our American friends.

Another matter that was allegedly resolved was the administration of quotas on specialty steel. Here, the President agreed he would facilitate the shipment of Canadian specialty steel. One has only to read about the current problems Canadian steel manufacturers are having to see how the United States has facilitated our exports.

There was also a commitment by the President to make "best efforts" to exempt certain sugar-containing products from American protectionism. I understand that the new U.S. sugar quota has closed even further the U.S. market to foreign imports. Perhaps the government leader would care to tell us what this means for Canadian sugar producers.

Another item that was allegedly resolved was the copyright cable-satellite retransmission issue. This is something the Prime Minister told the President that he would soon resolve through revisions to the Copyright Act that would "accommodate United States concerns." Here again, I would be grateful if the government leader could tell us how this has been resolved.

In addition to these allegedly resolved irritants, the Prime Minister and the President "directed that action be undertaken over the next twelve months to resolve specific impediments to trade," impediments which were duly listed. One of these impediments was the existing Air Transport Agreement. This agreement between our two countries was to be modernized in order to expand the number of available services and reduce obstacles to the introduction of innovative and competitive new services. This effort appears to have gone on a flight of no return—or perhaps it has crash-landed.

Another agreed upon course of action involved:

Strengthening our market approach to Canada-United States energy trade by reducing restrictions, particularly those on petroleum imports and exports, and by maintaining and extending open access to each other's energy markets.

This one I find particularly bizarre, to use a prime ministerial phrase, in light of the President's agreement with the Congressional decision of last October to slap an import surcharge on Canadian energy imports. How does one reconcile this pronouncement with the recent Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ruling on Canadian natural gas exports and the sharing of costs for transmission?

I also recall that the former Minister of Fisheries announced a year ago February the cancellation of the Fishing Vessels Assistance Program, a program which helped our fishermen buy new boats. It was apparently one of the many programs the Americans identified as countervailable in their examination of Canadian fish imports. The then Minister of Fisheries told members in the other place that the elimination of this program had nothing to do with American pressure, although he failed to say why he mentioned the American concerns when he announced the end of the program.

How does one score two years later the Quebec Trade Declaration? It is noteworthy, if only as a catalogue of broken promises and unfulfilled commitments. Surely this is not the way to conduct diplomacy with any nation, let alone the United States. The national interest is best advanced by making a rational appraisal of the situation and then looking to one's own interests. Diplomacy based on showmanship and song does not serve the interests of any country. A document such as the one I have been quoting, that is patched together to serve as a prop for such an event, becomes nothing but a monument to the shallowness of the occasion.

Let me pass on to another year, and let us look at the lasting achievements of the Washington "summit". Well, one of the more lasting mementos is the infamous glossy booklet which, if a little short on the actual substance of the negotiations, certainly provides us with an insight into how this government views and conducts foreign policy. On an earlier occasion I spoke about that glossy booklet, as did Senator Davey. In a background paper disseminated for this "summit" by the Department of External Affairs, we also learned that the Prime Minister was "committed to rebuilding Canada's image as a free, tolerant and independent nation." This is an assertion contained in a publication of the Department of External Affairs dated March 1986, which I found, and still find, particularly distasteful.

On a different level, the Washington meeting was notable for two statements: First, the Prime Minister gave us his assurance that the free trade negotiations would receive "a clean launch," with no preconditions. As the events of April over the "fast-track" authority proved, the "launch" was anything but "clean." I will not use the opposite word. I will simply say it was anything but clean, and the seeds of the debacle we later faced on lumber can be traced, in part, to the President's written promise to the then Senate Finance Committee chairman, Mr. Packwood, to resolve the lumber problem with Canada. Some clean launch!

The meeting was also memorable for the assurance the Prime Minister thought he had received on acid rain. As he told members in the other place on March 21 of last year:

... I believe the wholehearted endorsement of that report by the President, undertaking to seek the funds, and my meetings with Congressional and Senatorial leaders to help ensure that those funds are available, represent substantial progress by Canada.

The report of which he spoke was that commissioned out of the Quebec "summit", with the appointment of the former Premier of Ontario and Mr. Drew Lewis to look at how we could resolve the question of acid rain. Mr. Davis was paid a dollar for his contribution. However, when members of the Special Committee on Acid Rain in the other place looked at the report, they were not sure that Canada had got value for its money. They described the report as inadequate, because it set no targets or deadlines and failed to address the cost of inaction by governments. Let there be no mistake by anyone that this committee report was a partisan document. It had the endorsement of all parties; the committee was chaired by a member of the government party. The committee concluded that if the Davis-Lewis report was accepted, it would:

... provide a framework for acceptable inaction and set the agenda for acid rain beyond the life of this Administration.

The administration mentioned, of course, was the Reagan administration and, in retrospect, how true those words were.

Honourable senators, I know that we had Mr. Bush up here recently in Canada, getting an earful from the Prime Minister. Now the administration has promised, once again, to try to find money for acid rain research. But when we read the fine print, it is merely an undertaking to seek money from Congress. The development of clean-coal technology, to which it is to be applied, is, moreover, a question of research and not remedy. Since it merely reaffirms a promise broken a year ago, I am troubled by the Prime Minister's assertion that that is "very significant movement."

In an article by Robert Abrams in the New York Times on April 5—just a few days ago—it was pointed out that the President was merely "recycling old news by making the same promise again." Mr. Abrams also observed that "no one in the United States or Canada should be fooled into thinking that this is a positive development in the fight for control of acid rain."

Apparently this government sees greater advantage in being fooled than in facing reality, because the Chief of Staff of the President of the United States, in an interview aboard Air Force One returning to Washington, confirmed precisely what the article in the New York Times had said, because he stated quite clearly:

We're not committing ourselves to negotiate a treaty. All our options are open; all our disagreements remain.

So says Howard Baker, the new Chief of Staff of the President of the United States.

I recall how the Prime Minister trumpeted the President's "best efforts" at last year's Washington "summit", and told the President, "I am very grateful for your personal support in meeting this challenge." The Prime Minister subsequently dismissed comments from the opposition, saying that the President's statement was a "major and significant step forward and a vital step towards the resolution of the problem." That was last year, and now we have seen just what a giant step forward it was! In reply to a reporter's question on acid rain on Monday, President Reagan replied that it was "quite a technical problem." That, in fact, echoes the statement he made at the Washington "summit", namely, "Serious scientific and economic problems remain to be solved."

Honourable senators, I suggest that it would be a good idea if the Prime Minister and the government took notice of what the Mexicans are doing. In January of this year they signed an acid rain agreement with the United States; apparently there the "technical" problems were overcome. Perhaps it has something to do with the "special relationship" between the President and his Mexican counterpart. But then, I suppose some relationships are more special than others, and we really should give our friends the benefit of the doubt. After all, the President did agree on Monday to "consider... a bilateral accord" on acid rain. No doubt the Prime Minister will crow about his achievement in having the President actually consider something he suggested. Honourable senators, since when is it an achievement, a stroke of political and diplomatic genius, to persuade one leader to agree to think about something that is suggested to him by another leader? Apparently, for this government that represents progress. It becomes somewhat bitter progress when the President's Chief of Staff makes it totally clear that nothing has changed as a result of the commitment to consider.

Honourable senators, let me turn for a moment to the defence side of our relations. I am told the United States was pleased to have us pay for the North Warning System and for an additional brigade in Europe. I am told we have rejected government-to-government cooperation on the Strategic Defense Initiative, although Canadian private firms are welcome to participate. I recall how last year we renewed the NORAD agreement, and how the Prime Minister secured from the President an "explicit underlining" of the importance to the United States of "full compliance with the ABM Treaty and other existing arms control obligations."

This assertion, the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the other place, should remove Canadian concerns about the absence of an ABM clause in the renewed NORAD agreement. I wonder how the minister and the Prime Minister can reconcile these statements with the American decision last November to break the SALT II Treaty. Perhaps we should not delve too deeply into the matter. After all, this is a government that operates on giving the United States the benefit of the doubt.

Perhaps we could hear a little more about our participation in the United States space station. Senators will recall that despite Prime Minister Mulroney's promise when he was a candidate to "double R&D spending," there were cutbacks at the National Research Council and that they were rationalized by pointing to our participation in the space program. I am told that the government is now having serious doubts about our participation in this venture, given possible military uses of the space station by the United States.

● (1600)

What about Arctic sovereignty? It is now more than a year and a half since the "Polar Sea" violated our northern waters. I remember quite vividly how the government was inclined to treat this as a non-incident until the Canadian public showed how important it regarded Canadian sovereignty. I remember the brave words and promised actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs a year ago last September. The government would build an icebreaker, and we would immediately begin talks with the United States designed to bring about recognition of our sovereignty.

Well, where are we today? Where is the icebreaker? We are told it may be built in Vancouver if the contractor can meet certain requirements. What about those talks with the Americans on Arctic sovereignty? Apparently these talks have a long way to go before any agreement is reached. On Monday we heard President Reagan declare that a "new impetus" would be given to the talks. This, of course, leads one to ask what has been going on with these talks all this time—have they languished? Have they been assigned such a low priority that they now need a "new impetus"?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs tells us he will find a solution that respects U.S. security while guaranteeing Canadian sovereignty. I want to say that in the world of diplomacy, the distinction between security interests and sovereignty is mighty slim. Any deal which gives foreign vessels, whatever their flag, unconditional access to our waters is a surrender of sovereignty.

But these are some of the big things that one worries about on an occasion of this kind when there is an absence of concrete achievements or meaningful progress. The government, I will admit, can point to at least one important subject to which we have resolved a long-standing irritant between our two countries. Yes, we recently signed an agreement on joint management of the caribou in our north that cross the border between Canada and the United States. When they write the history of this government, I am sure this will rank high on its list of accomplishments. However, the final chapter of this triumph is not quite written, as it appears that if the Reagan Administration goes ahead with its plans to develop the oil on its side of the Beaufort Sea, the herd will be adversely affected. I am told that this contingency did not occur to the authors of the agreement.

There is no doubt that if words were substance, then the relationship between these two governments would truly be a model for emulation. Indeed, the public statements of the Prime Minister and the President leave one wondering if there is any border between our two nations, so cosy is the verbal arrangement.

What do our American friends really think of us? What do they think of the government? In May a copy of a telegram from Thomas Niles to George Shultz was made public in a Canadian newspaper. Because it was not intended to be made public, I think it is probably a more accurate reflection of how the United States pegs this government than all the words of comfort that the Prime Minister hauls out for our consumption. The message said:

The (Canadian) government, as expected, is showing signs of panic under attack from the opposition parties.

The message went on to recommend that "despite the most unfortunate language and tone" of the Prime Minister's reaction, the Administration should "not respond publicly." The message, of course, concerned the government's reaction to shakes and shingles. You will all remember that episode—that is where the Prime Minister called the U.S. action "appalling" and "bizarre" and one "that makes it extremely difficult for anyone to be friends with the Americans." Strong words—"verbal hand grenades"—thrown at Washington, to use another of the Prime Minister's phrases.

In the days that followed, the government acted by way of retaliation by imposing a 15 per cent tax on books—that proved to be very popular! It imposed a tax on tea—which it turns out has hurt our British trading partners from whom we import almost three-quarters of our tea; a tax on Christmas trees; a duty on computer parts—which was in direct defiance of the Quebec agreement, but then nothing else about that "agreement" seems to have enjoyed any longevity.

These measures, announced following the shakes and shingles incident, proved so popular that they were quietly dropped in the last budget. I am not sure what they achieved in our relations with the United States. I do know that they caused Canadians and some of our other trading partners considerable difficulty.

Honourable senators, I remember reading at the time these measures were adopted that an aide to the Prime Minister told the press that this was the strongest action taken by a Prime Minister since Prime Minister Pearson spoke at Temple University on the Vietnam War.

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister's strong and vigorous public actions were shown to be at variance with his private utterances. I am referring to the famous "Dear Ron" letter, in which the Prime Minister thanked his friend for his "thoughtful letter," and in which the Prime Minister wrote "quite frankly, this absence of notice was damaging to me personally and to my government." The letter, as we all painfully recall, made no reference to the softwood lumber dispute which had caused such harm to our forest industry, and which was the cause of the exchange between the two governments.

Honourable senators, I really hesitate to speak about the softwood lumber debacle. It is such a tale of woe and ineptitude, and the memory of it is still so fresh, I am not sure whether anything needs to be said. Let me say simply that consistency in approach was not one of this government's strong points. I must also observe that when a decision was imminent, the responsible minister was absent, leaving matters in the hands of the civil servants. This was the government that was going to give their civil servants "a pair of running shoes and a pink slip," and reassert "ministerial responsibility." I suppose asking them to take the drop for a failed policy is the same thing.

We all recall also that at the time the softwood lumber deal was reached, the government claimed it was a victory because a harmful precedent had been avoided. I am now told that proposed amendments to U.S. trade law now before Congress will codify in law the Canada-U.S. Softwood Agreement, and will use it as a model for tougher foreign industrial subsidy rules. If the lumber agreement was a victory, is the government pleased that it can look forward to many more Pyrrhic victories in the future?

Finally, honourable senators, let me turn for a moment to the trade initiative. At various times the Prime Minister has said it is the government's biggest initiative, and one on which his own "neck is on the line." Well, it may be that his own neck is on the line, but there is more than the Prime Minister's neck on the line. Our necks are on the line as well. I believe in opening up as many trade opportunities for Canadians as possible. That policy has been followed by the Liberal Party since the 1930s. I do not intend to review, as I might, the list of events which testify to that interest in trade liberalization.

I do know that the current trade initiative has its intellectual foundation in the Trade Policy Review conducted by the last government. Of course, at the time the Conservative Party found it objectionable. Like his own party, the current leader of the Conservative Party has undergone something of a conversion on trade. I remember well his comments on the idea of free trade with the United States during the Conservative leadership campaign. He said, "It affects Canadian sovereignty." And he said in reply to the idea being bandied about by the current Minister of Transport—and I quote:

... and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns or any other time... This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch-plant economy in certain sectors. All that would happen with that kind of concept would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It's bad enough as it is.

Those were the words of the Prime Minister. But he has undergone a conversion. He has now embraced the concept of a free trade agreement and has made it the centrepiece of his government's international policy.

It is entirely acceptable that the Prime Minister has undergone a conversion from his former status, but his conversion and his utterances since that conversion have hardly been such as to give confidence as to the conviction with which he espouses his new beliefs.

The Prime Minister's approach has been marked by an apparent ambivalence about our objectives and an apparent inability to convince the U.S. Administration, on which he has staked his neck, to deliver. I recall that it took the President about three months before he sent the letter to Congress that started the process in the United States. Even after this process had been started, the Administration seemed indifferent about its reception in Congress.

Today we are told by the Prime Minister that the negotiations and the talks are going well. We are told by the chief negotiator that the talks are making progress. We saw this very week the emphasis both the Prime Minister and the President gave to these talks. However, we may find it more useful to accept the advice given the other day by the Leader of the Government when he told us that we should wait and see how it all comes out in the end, because it is too early to make a final pronouncement on the trade talks. As the Premier of Ontario said yesterday, "we must see what the shape of any agreement is and then make a judgment."

When we examine the statements of the Prime Minister, however, we see that he has been as consistent as a roller coaster when it comes to these talks. Quite apart from his pronouncements during the Conservative leadership campaign, I recall his words of last September when he told a university class in Brandon that if he were a "betting man, right now you'd have to say there's going to be no deal, the Americans are going to shoot it down, the Americans don't want a deal." That is a statement of the Prime Minister of Canada!

The Prime Minister then went on to say that the United States was "not rushing to the altar." I suppose this means that Canada may be jilted. At this point I ask: Does this mean that we will get the dowry back? Because we cannot afford to have these talks fail after all we have delivered to the Americans. The Americans didn't like our National Energy Policy—so whoosh, away it goes! Later, of course, we find that their commitment to an open market system is one designed according to their rules.

What about our means for determining investment in our country by foreigners? The Americans didn't like that; so, "bang, it's gone!"—to use another prime ministerial phrase.

What about foreign ownership of our cultural industries? Well, if the Americans don't like it, we must reconsider—as we saw in the government's decision on Gulf & Western and Prentice Hall. This attitude prevails even in the face of this government's own policy on book publishing.

The United States says that it does not like our policy of drug competition—a policy that gives Canadians with health problems, our elderly, our sick children, and Canadians on limited income, access to the medicine and drugs they need at a reasonable price. Well, that seems to be going too!

We give, to use that phrase, the United States "the benefit of the doubt" in almost every area, and what do we get in return?

The Prime Minister tells us that he is now from Missouri and that he is going to believe the United States "when I see the cash." An unfortunate choice of words, I thought, in light of recent events.

Well, after the next election, perhaps he really will be from Missouri, because I cannot believe that the voters of Canada will want him back.

Two years ago I said in a speech on foreign policy in this chamber that I was afraid that the new government—and particularly the Prime Minister—seemed to think that amiability is the chief element of diplomacy. It is not. If national interests are to be protected or advanced, you cannot always be nice. You cannot always give the other side the benefit of the doubt. One observer described the new approach to our relationship this way—and I quote:

Our new fetish for America is flawed. More fundamental, perhaps, it's wrongheaded. What we're really doing . . . is cementing a partnership of deference. And there's no mystery about who will defer to whom.

The writer went on to describe how "visibly nervous Brian Mulroney was in the public presence of the president" after their first meeting. "No wonder," he wrote, "we're beholden, anxious and fettered. It doesn't make for much of a voice in world affairs."

I don't always agree, honourable senators, with the political analysis—

Senator Barootes: Who was the author?

Senator MacEachen: I am coming to that.

I was about to say that I do not always agree with the political analysis of Stephen Lewis, but in this instance I can only concur with the conclusions he reached when he penned this backpage piece for Maclean's shortly after the Prime Minister visited Washington in September 1984, and shortly before he took up his appointment at the United Nations.

You may say that this is too harsh a criticism of the government, and that things have changed. Well, let me read you one other piece:

Just so there is no danger of my being misunderstood, let me remind you that one of the principal criticisms, in Canada, of our government is that we are too friendly with the United States. Before his election as Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney said that his attitude, in a controversy, would be to give the United States the benefit of the doubt. That . . . has been our practice as a government, and it will continue to be.

● (1620)

The speaker in this case is the former Leader of the Conservative Party and current Secretary of State for External Affairs, and this is an extract from a speech he gave on March 20, 1987, in San Francisco, less than a month ago. This government is still unwilling to recognize that the interests of Canada and those of the United States are not the same. Frankly, this was not the mandate the Canadian people had in mind when they were dunked in the "Big Big Wave," as the Conservative campaign jingle went, that swept over the country in the last election. Now, if public opinion surveys are any indication, they can hardly wait for a lifeboat to take them to safety.

What we have seen, honourable senators, in the past two and a half years is a failed policy with respect to the United States. The United States has not yielded to Canadian demands in major areas of concern. In the meantime, Canada has made major concessions in energy, investment and trade.

In the past few days it was pathetic to watch spokesmen for the government attempting to retrieve from guarded and vague words spoken by the President some consolation for American rebuffs on substance. In the absence of concrete results and actual programs, add-on sentences in the President's speech were grasped like fig leaves to help conceal Canadian embarrassment.

All of this, honourable senators, is the outcome of a policy which, as Mr. Stephen Lewis pointed out, was wrong-headed from the beginning and which was based on wrong premises.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs states that in any controversy with the United States, it is Canadian policy to give the United States the benefit of the doubt. I disagree profoundly with that assertion. It is, on the contrary, the duty of a Canadian minister in any controversy to give Canada the benefit of the doubt.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Even when there is no doubt, as was the situation in the case of softwood lumber, the government is inclined to give the United States the benefit of the doubt.

A policy of giving the benefit of the doubt to the United States will have only one result, and that is to ensure that the pursuit of Canadian interests will occupy and play a secondary role in Canada-United States relations. Personal friendship is excellent, it is fine, but it should not become a substitute for the defence of Canada's permanent interests. That is the failure, the tragedy, of this government's policy towards the United States.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MOTION FOR REFERRAL TO, COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to raise a question of privilege. I did, in fact, give notice of this question of privilege last Thursday, April 2. The question of privilege has to do with an incident that took place in the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on Thursday, March 19. The reason I gave notice last week is that the printed proceedings of that committee meeting were not available to honourable senators at the time. However, they are available now, and have been since, I believe, last Tuesday or Wednesday. I have a few extra copies here if any honourable senator would like one.

My problem is that the chairman of the committee interrupted me when I was asking questions of the minister, the Honourable Barbara McDougall, Minister of State for Privatization, who was appearing before the committee on a matter that was referred to the committee by the Senate.

To make absolutely clear what I am talking about, I would like to quote from Issue No. 18 of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, page 11. At the top, on the left hand side, it says:

Senator Olson: I would like to ask questions on the matter I asked some questions about in the Senate the other day to the annoyance, I think, of one of your colleagues. I refer to the matter of investigation of the unusual trading activity with respect to Memotec's shares.

The Chairman: One moment, Senator Olson. I guess you were not here but we decided that was a matter that was in the hands of somebody else than this committee, that it did not arise out of this bill per se, that it arose out of something in advance and it wasn't a matter that we were going to discuss in committee.

Senator Olson: Well, that's interesting, Mr. Chairman, that you might have decided that, but I don't believe that I am willing to subvert [my] rights as a senator to inquire into things because you might have decided that.

The Chairman: It was the committee that decided that.

Senator Olson: I wasn't at the meeting when it happened, that's clear, but could I have an explanation as to where we make these inquiries?

The Chairman: Yes, in the Senate, where you have already made it.

Senator Olson: The minister hasn't been in the Senate.

That was the only time that senators had an opportunity to make those inquiries of the minister. I would like to demonstrate, if I can, that the so-called decision the chairman claimed was made by the committee was never made.

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I think you should read the balance. Why don't you read the balance of the exchange? Why stop where you did?

Senator Olson: I think that would be useful. The proceedings of the committee go on to say:

The Chairman: There is a member of the government there who can communicate with the minister and get the answers.

Of course, I knew who he was referring to.

The committee considered this, Senator Olson, and made that decision. There were other people here that we could have put those questions to, people from Memotec, people from the investment community, including people who had done some of the financing.

I ask senators to listen to this very carefully:

The committee decided that that was not a matter we were going to discuss when we studied the bill, and I think we should stick to that decision.

Would senators like me to read still more? Senator Olson then says:

Well, Mr. Chairman, I accept that—

Senator Sinclair: "I will accept that." Please read it; "I will accept that."

Senator Olson: I think senators can refer to the text if they so wish.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I will accept that, but I don't agree with it. That is immaterial, I suppose, when I wasn't at the meeting. I believe that it is a wrong decision but now that I know you have taken it, when it goes back to the floor of the Senate I will take it up there.

I say that because I suppose some senators could argue that the committee members should settle these matters in the committee, but not with that chairman in the chair.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh! Oh!

Senator Olson: The chairman then says:

Have you got other questions, Senator Olson?
Of course, I said:

Well, I am having a little difficulty because they are related questions, and I think this one really needs to be taken in.

So, honourable senators—

Senator Sinclair: Please read the next sentence.

Senator Olson: I will demonstrate, I hope, that the committee never made that decision. But I want it to be very clear that whether or not that was discussed in the committee is not my question of privilege. My question of privilege is larger than that. I do not believe that the chairman—or, indeed, the entire committee—has the right to say to a senator that he cannot ask questions about a certain matter that is referred to the committee by the Senate. That is the question of privilege.

I now want to demonstrate, if I may, another point. I went back and looked at the evidence of this so-called committee to try to find where such a decision was made. If senators would look at Issue No. 13 of the Proceedings of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce of February 25, 1987, they will find this passage at page 8:

The Chairman: Dr. Smith, I wish to make one point clear before we go any further. There has been some publicity about investigations by the Ontario Securities Commission, and their watchdogs of SROs, and so on, including a government investigation, having to do with the movement of stock prices before the matter was dealt with. That is something with which we are not concerned in this committee.

What right did he have to say that?

Senator Sinclair: Keep reading, keep reading.

Senator Olson: I will continue:

So if any of the witnesses have comments to make on that, I would ask them to please strike them, because we are not dealing with that issue. Other people are dealing with that matter and we will have nothing to say in the committee's report concerning it, nor will we be asking questions on the matter. That was a decision reached by the committee after the reference was made. I believe that is correct, senators.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Honourable senators can look back to the beginning of that issue and see that not one sentence discusses whether the committee will discuss this aspect of the reference—not one. Where was the decision made? It certainly was not made in the committee.

I want senators to look carefully at Issue No. 13, which contains the proceedings of the first meeting held by the committee on the reference from the Senate. The reference, of course, appears at page 3 and reads:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-38, An Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

That is the instruction given by the Senate to the committee. Surely a question directed to the minister on whether or not she proceeded with the investigation of a possible leak giving rise to the unusual trading patterns of Memotec stock was a matter relating to this bill, because that is what this reference says, "or any matter relating thereto." However, there is not one word, and that, therefore, brings up a really serious charge. I am not going to make it today, because I do not want to be diverted from the real question of privilege. The really serious thing is that the chairman told me something that was not true. There never was a decision made by the committee, because it is not here.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators—

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, there is already a question of privilege being raised here.

Senator Sinclair: Will the senator yield?

Senator Olson: No, I will not yield until I am finished. You will have lots of time when I am finished. You have been interrupting me every two or three minutes for some reason that I do not quite understand, and I do not care, in any event, because I know you will have a full opportunity to say everything that you want to say. So will a few other people, by the way.

Honourable senators, I just wanted to bring this matter up because I think it is fairly important that you know about it. You can check it yourselves, but, as I said, the question is whether a committee, a steering committee of a committee or the chairman of a committee has the right to interfere with and prevent a senator from asking questions that are both relevant and pertinent to the reference that has been sent to the committee. No one questioned that the question was relevant to the reference that was made. No one in their right mind would, of course. However, somewhere or other it was decided—and I do not know where yet, although senators who have been around here for a while probably know where some of these things are done; they are probably decided in someone's back room—that they were not going to allow senators to ask any questions about the investigation as to whether or not there was a leak in the minister's department.

Honourable senators, there is one other thing that needs to be drawn to your attention and that is that we did not have any other opportunity to question the minister. None. One assertion that was made here is that there is a member of the government who can communicate with the minister and get the answers. I know that. I also know that I had been trying for approximately three or four weeks to get an answer to my question, and I know, because I have been in the same position as the Leader of the Government in the Senate, that he can only convey to the members of the Senate the response that he receives from a minister when he refers a senator's question to that minister. Therefore, I am not complaining about that.

However, when we have the minister in front of us—and it was the only time that we had the minister in front of us—the chairman prevents me from asking relevant and pertinent questions. Therefore, I want to refer that matter to committee, and, if I may, I intend to move a motion at the conclusion of my remarks to send this whole matter to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee to examine the circumstances related to the question of privilege, and to report its findings and recommendations to this chamber. If the Senate decides that a chairman has that right and that authority, or, indeed, the steering committee—which is the other place where they claim there was a decision made—or if the whole committee has the right to make that decision, that is fine. However, I do not believe that the Senate ever intended that a committee or its chairman could treat senators in that fashion and decide which questions could be asked and which questions could not be asked. I know that the chairman of a committee has, and ought to have, some authority to deal with relevancy. In other words, if the committee is discussing one matter, a question cannot be asked about a completely different subject, but there is no argument that an investigation as to how a leak may have occurred is relevant to the subject matter. There is no doubt about that at all.

Then, honourable senators, there is the matter of the report of the committee to the Senate on that reference. I only intend to read part of it, because this was on senators' desks only a few days ago, on March 31. I quote, in part:

Since any impropriety leading to enhanced activity in Memotec stock was under inquiry by competent authority, and since the movement of the stock was unrelated to the merits of the transaction, the Committee decided not to review this aspect of the deal.

That is not true, although the chairman said it was true. But if one goes back and examines the report—and I do not want to repeat it—one will see that that was not discussed, except what I have quoted, yet, at the end he says, "Isn't that right? That is a decision that was made." That decision was not made by the committee.

● (1410)

Honourable senators, I will conclude by asking leave to put a motion before the Senate, although I am not sure whether I need leave. But I shall ask for leave now and, if leave is granted, we can deal with this matter now. If leave is not granted, of course, we will have to deal with this at the next sitting. When a senator has a question of privilege as serious as this one is, I think it should be dealt with immediately. When a senator establishes a prima facie case relating to privilege, that senator is obliged to move a substantive motion, and that is what I intend to do.

Therefore, I move, seconded by Senator Corbin:

That the question of privilege raised by Senator Olson, on April 9, (claiming he was improperly prevented from asking a question) be referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to examine the circumstances related to the question of privilege, and to report its findings and recommendations.

I have extra copies of the motion which I would be pleased to have distributed.

[Senator Olson.]

In conclusion, I ask honourable senators to take very seriously this attempt at limiting and subverting the rights of a senator to ask questions at a committee meeting.

I know that the rule book is not absolutely clear, but I do not think that a chairman of a committee, and a steering committee—if the members of the steering committee did this; I do not know if they did or not—have ever attempted to interfere or prevent a senator from asking questions.

I think we should defend a senator's right to do that. It would be a sad day, indeed, for the Senate if it decided to give chairmen of committees the authority that was attempted to be used on me and a couple of other senators who attended that meeting that day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted to have Senator Olson's motion before the Senate?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, the question is whether the motion is in order. I think His Honour should consider whether the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has the authority to consider this matter. I suggest that this be referred to the Committee of Privileges of the Senate, which is a committee of the whole Senate, struck at the beginning of a session. As far as I am concerned, the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders has no power to decide whether a decision made by a chairman of a Senate committee is right or wrong, according to the rules. The Committee of Privileges of the Senate does not sit often. I attempted to have it sit to consider Senator Jacques Hébert's famed hunger strike, but that committee refused to sit then. This may be a good reason to have it sit.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I do not have any particular preference. I am quite happy to refer the matter to that committee. That does not cause me any problems.

I thought that perhaps I would advise that the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders could in fact deal with it. But if there is an objection by a number of senators to that procedure, I do not mind changing it to the "Committee of the Whole on privileges."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator Flynn's intervention was a point of order as to what committee such a matter would be referred to if it were to be referred.

As far as I am concerned, I would like to take under advisement the question whether I will support a motion to send this matter to any committee. However, I have no objection at all to having some committee consider the general question of the role, the responsibility and powers of committee chairmen.

It is a fact, as Senator McElman and I noted in our exchange on another matter yesterday, that we operate in many contexts in this place without the benefit of precise rules. However, on this matter, from what I have been able to hear, the chairman was enforcing the rule of relevance in the committee, and that is well within the powers of any chairman. The subject matter of a certain bill had been referred to the committee and, honourable senators, Senator Olson attempted to ask questions on a matter which, in the judgment of at least the chairman—and perhaps of the steering committee as well—the questions were not relevant. As long as the chairman has the support of the committee, it is well within his powers to make that kind of decision.

Therefore, while I would like to take the matter under advisement—

Senator Olson: Are you saying that the question was not relevant?

Senator Murray:—my first reaction is to support the exercise by the chairman of what I regard as his undoubted powers as chairman.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, speaking to Senator Olson's question of privilege, I find this very distressing. What you are doing is coming perilously close to accusing the chairman of that committee of being a bully, at best, or being untruthful, at worst.

As I understand it, you are making three general points. The first point is the right of any senator to ask a question regardless of whether or not the committee has agreed that that matter is not to be discussed. The second point is the area of relevance, which was explained by reference to the fact that this was because other tribunals were looking into this matter. The third point is the one which you made reference to when you gave your first notice of this question of privilege, and, as you say, "It says that the committee made a decision not to allow the line of questioning I mentioned a minute ago. After careful perusal of the committee's report, I found the committee made no such decision in the committee room."

Well, Senator Olson, you were not present at the first meeting of the committee. When the chairman dealt with this particular matter—and you have just finished reading this—he said, "That was a decision reached by the committee after the reference was made. I believe that is correct, senators."

The honourable senators say, "Agreed."

What I want to know is whether or not a formal motion is required in a committee hearing to deal with a particular subject. Does not the term "agreed" by the senators who were present—not the steering committee, the entire committee—indicate something to you? We were all there—you were not. We agreed with the chairman's suggestion that that matter was not to be part of our mandate.

I consider that your remarks are totally inappropriate.

● (1420)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. Senator Flynn had raised the point of order as to whether this motion was in order or not, and if Senator MacDonald was asking a question, I think that is proper. Other than that, we must decide if we have a motion before us or not.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I draw to your attention rule 39 of the rules of the Senate which states:

A senator considering himself or herself offended or injured in the Senate, in a committee room, or in any of the rooms belonging to the Senate, may appeal to the Senate for redress.

It does not say that the senator may appeal to a committee of the Senate.

I think that since this matter covers the question of privileges, I believe the Committee on Privileges of the Senate is the body which should decide this matter.

Senator Olson: I believe that what is unfolding here is that there is some relevance to what Senator Flynn has just said. He is right, and I think Senator MacDonald is right, too, and I think that not only was I bullied but other senators who were at that meeting were bullied. In fact, they were bullied a lot. I resent that, so I seek redress.

I will accept Senator Flynn's suggestion in that he appeals to the Senate for redress. However, the redress that I am seeking is that someone examine the circumstances and then make some recommendations as to what the chairman's authority is going to be.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I have no motion before the Senate. Senator Olson asked for leave and I put the question, but I did not receive an answer. Since leave has not been granted, there is no motion before the Senate.

Senator Molgat: I do not know if leave is required for this. I believe the rules indicate that there must be a motion and, therefore, I do not think leave is required. I think that such a motion would be proper, but that is for His Honour to decide.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, under rule 39, whether a motion is made or not made, and whether the Senate agrees to receive it or not, the fact is that the matter is now before the Senate. It is here now for our consideration.

While I am on my feet, I want to say that I have lent my name to second Senator Olson's motion—if a motion is indeed required—but I should state that I was not a member of that committee and therefore was not present when these incidents took place. However, I do believe in the fundamental rights and privileges of senators individually, and certainly do not want to reflect on the conduct of chairmen or the members of committee at this stage.

The matter itself is, to me, of fundamental importance and, in that sense, I think it ought to be resolved. Whether it is to be resolved here or in committee is immaterial, because, if Senator Olson feels that his privileges are affected, and if, indeed, they are, then my privileges are also affected. That is why I feel the matter ought to be cleared.

However, I am looking forward to the response of the chairman of the committee so that we can have both sides of the issue which would be helpful.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I refer to rule 33 at page 12 of the rules of the Senate, which reads as follows:

When a matter or question directly concerning the privileges of the Senate, of any committee thereof, or of any senator, has arisen, a motion calling upon the Senate to take action thereon may be moved without notice and, until decided, shall, unless the debate be adjourned, suspend the consideration of other motions and of the Orders of the Day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I will not argue with that; but I refer Senator McElman to rule 45(1)(e) which says:

One day's notice shall be given of any of the following motions:

...

(e) for an instruction to a committee;

I understand that Senator Olson made a motion to refer a question of privilege to the Standing Rules and Orders Committee. If that is so, then according to rule 45(1)(e), he should have given notice that he intended to introduce a motion to refer the matter to a committee of the Senate.

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I submit that rule 45(1)(e) has no relevance in this matter, and that rule 33 would obviously have precedence over anything else. A matter of privilege, which is involved here, takes precedence over all other matters coming before the Senate.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I refer you also to rule 46(k), which states:

No notice is required of the following motions:

...

(k) raising a question of privilege;

So in two rules we appear to say that no leave is required.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: But we are not dealing with a question of privilege. We are dealing with the question to refer a question of privilege to a committee of the Senate. We are not dealing with a question of privilege at this moment, but with a motion to refer a question of privilege to a committee of the Senate.

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, speaking to the point just made by His Honour, rule 46 says:

No notice is required of the following motions:

...

(b) for the referral of the question to a committee;

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: The question has not yet been put. I am ready to put the question before the house and ask for a vote.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I did move the motion, and in doing so I did not get into the procedural argument as to whether or not it was in order. I have looked at the various rules, and I am of the view of those senators who agree with rules 33 and 46(b) that no notice of motion is required to deal with a question of privilege. I therefore move:

That the question be referred to the Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to examine the circumstances related to the question of privilege and to report its findings.

[Senator McElman.]

That is provided for in rule 33, which says:

... a motion calling upon the Senate to take action thereon may be moved without notice ...

That is the rule on which I am relying. I therefore suggest that the question is before the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It has been moved by Senator Olson, seconded by Senator Corbin:

That the question of privilege raised by Senator Olson, on April 9, (claiming he was improperly prevented from asking a question) be referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to examine the circumstances related to the question of privilege, and to report its findings and recommendations.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Are you ruling that the motion is in order?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I rule that the motion is in order.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, this is a very interesting point, when we listen to the honourable senator from Medicine Hat, using his recollection and using language that is offensive. I will not use offensive language, but I will question very much his integrity. We had three drafts of the report. He raised no objections. He says it is wrong.

• (1430)

Well, honourable senators, let me read from the Oxford Dictionary the meaning of relevant: "Bearing on or pertinent to the matter in hand." Certainly, trading in the stock of a company before the government introduced a bill that was referred to the committee is not pertinent to that reference. There can be no question about that. That is why, when honourable senators discussed this matter before we started our review of the reference, we decided that it would not be relevant, that it would be a wild goose chase and would take up a lot of time. So we decided that we would not allow questions, that we would not go into the matter, and that decision was referred to at the first meeting and was agreed to by all senators. The report, after three drafts, was agreed to unanimously by all senators who were party to the drafts.

Now, I do not know, but let me say this: That I am annoyed at the language is obvious. I think it is inappropriate. I think it is stupid and uncalled for, and, under other circumstances I would do something else about it, but I cannot. Notwithstanding this matter, this committee has a job to do. We accept that responsibility, we will do it and we will do it in timely fashion, and we will not discuss irrelevancies, unless we are instructed to do so.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, as a member of the committee who was present, I believe, at most of the meetings involving this particular reference, I, too, must state my objection to the procedure that has been followed by Senator Olson. In my opinion, in his attack on the chairman he is also attacking every member of the committee who participated in the hearings and who, in due course, agreed to the procedures and to the final report. I will not go into a lengthy defence of what went on in the committee. I can tell you that from my point of view—and I have not reviewed the evidence that has been reported—it was not a very difficult decision, after hearing that the possible manipulation of stock on the Toronto Stock Exchange required investigation and that such an investigation was already under way by a very competent body. Since there was a sense of urgency in our committee to get the bill through—because this other matter would have delayed the bill, and I do not think that that was the major reason at all—if we moved into an investigation of stock transactions, it would take literally weeks to deal with, I for one was quite satisfied that a responsible body was reviewing the situation, and that there was no great problem for the committee to say, “It is really not necessary for us to carry on a further investigation.”

I might also say this about Senator Olson: I do not agree that he was precluded from asking questions. I do not agree that he could not have carried his investigation further in the committee. He did not put up a great fight or say, “Let’s keep this thing going.” The chairman did not say, “Shut up,” or “Don’t ask these questions.” He said that the matter was under control through this other body. Most of us who sat on the committee did not find things oppressive. I must say that in attacking him, Senator Olson has also thrown a cloud on those of us who agreed with the chairman and the procedure which he recommended.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I intend to move the adjournment of the debate, unless some other honourable senator wishes to speak after me. My purpose in doing so is to take this matter under advisement, and perhaps to hold some discussions about the matter over the weekend.

To begin with, while Your Honour has found that the motion is in order, I believe we must consider whether there is not some way of separating the particular case from the general issue—the particular question of privilege raised by Senator Olson relating to what happened in the Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and the generality of the powers of committee chairmen. The Standing Committee on Standing Rules and Orders really has no authority under our rules to interpret the rules. That committee can bring in recommendations as to changes or amendments to our standing rules and orders, but it is not empowered to deal with questions of privilege or to interpret the rules. It simply does not have that role. That is a matter to which I would like to give some thought over the weekend, and perhaps we can have some discussions on the matter.

As to the substance of the matter, I shall not repeat what I said earlier. I have been chairman of two committees, one a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons and the other the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Honourable senators who have been in the position of chairman know that it is not always an easy position to hold and that the responsibilities are not easy to discharge. I well recall some time ago, during the period of my chairmanship of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, dealing with a couple of bank failures in western Canada. At the same time there had been referred to the committee a government green paper on the regulation of Canadian financial institutions and the question of deposit insurance. I was very concerned that in the discussion of the overall question of regulation of Canadian financial institutions we would become quickly sidetracked into an inquest or an “autopsy” of what had happened in the case of the bank failures. Therefore, I took steps, with the support of the steering committee, to prevent that from happening. I took steps to ensure that the committee dealt with the matters that had been referred to it, and I took steps to enforce the rules of relevancy as I saw them. In the course of doing so, I had to gavel down honourable senators on numerous occasions. I had to rule out of order lines of questioning which I thought were irrelevant to the reference before us.

Such rulings are always judgment calls. They are never easy to make, and they are usually close calls. Having said that, I am glad to say I think I had the support of the committee on most of those calls. We completed our work on the regulation of Canadian financial institutions and went on to a specific inquiry into the failures of those western banks.

The Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, it seems to me, was in a not dissimilar situation the other day. It had before it a bill having to do with the sale of Teleglobe by the federal government. There is a side issue—it is an important issue, but still a side issue—and it relates to the trading in the stock of Memotec at about the same time as that decision was announced by the government. It may be that at some time in the future the chairman and the Banking Committee may want to look into those matters, but they have not been referred to the committee. The chairman and the committee members took the decision that they thought was the proper one to take at the time.

Therefore, I have some difficulty in accepting that there is even a prima facie case of privilege here. In any case, as I indicated, although His Honour has ruled the motion in order, there are some problems with having this committee look into the matter.

Honourable senators, I would like to have some time to take the matter under advisement, to consider and to consult on it, before next week. Therefore, it is my intention to move the adjournment, unless some other honourable senator wishes to speak at this time.

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, before the adjournment motion—and I commend the Leader of the Government for proposing that motion, because I think it is the wisest course to take at this time—I think we could well look into the point of order raised by Senator Flynn, that this, indeed, might be a matter to be discussed by the Senate as a whole, as the Committee of Privileges. That could be done quite easily by an amendment to the present motion referring it to this committee. Perhaps by taking that course, we might find a much better solution for the good of the Senate itself. I would have great hesitation, quite frankly, to have a committee of the Senate act as a sort of legal body, and then have it report back to this house. I think it would be much better to settle it here, in an in camera session if need be, but that could be accomplished by looking at the question raised by Senator Flynn.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I, too, rise to support the motion for adjournment made by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have listened carefully to the discussion that has taken place on the point of privilege raised by the Honourable Senator Olson. It seems to me that the matter comes down to the committee's decision. I, too, will look forward to spending the weekend looking at some minutes to see whether the committee did in fact make a decision, and whether there is a motion by the subcommittee on procedure and agenda to that effect. The line of questioning that Senator Olson sought to follow would have been out of order, and the chairman had every right to rule it irrelevant, provided, of course, that the decision had been taken. And a decision of the committee or subcommittee is always a minute and can easily be verified. I will study the proceedings of the committee over the weekend. I rise to speak because Senator Sinclair, Senator Buckwold and others have referred to the decision. The chairman of the Banking Committee said that it was made "before we started."

As I have said, then, I support the government leader in his motion for adjournment so as to consider this matter over the weekend. This will give us all an opportunity to review the proceedings and to check the minutes of the subcommittee and the committee.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

CHILD CARE

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE TO STUDY FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE ENTITLED: "SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY"

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, April 14, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Final Report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Child Care, entitled: "Sharing the Responsibility"; and

That the Committee present its Report no later than September 30, 1987.

NATIONAL FINANCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, 14th April, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I should like to say just a word or two about this motion. As senators are aware, there is a great deal of uncertainty as to when Bill C-44 will arrive here in the Senate. There is also a great deal of urgency attached to the passage of that bill. As I explained yesterday, it is very important to the provinces. It deals with equalization grants and the payments that the provinces are expecting, and that are due and that they are entitled to have on April 16.

The difficulty facing us in the Senate, of course, is that the bill has not yet escaped the clutches of the people in the other place. Whether it will get out this afternoon or tomorrow is unknown to us at this time. It may very well be that when the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance examines the subject matter of this bill, it will decide that the Senate should meet again on Monday. Perhaps the bill will come to us and some senators may decide that extra time is needed to debate this important piece of legislation. It may then be necessary to call honourable senators back on Monday. If that is the case, we will send them telegrams, or ask the Speaker to do so. It is our hope that that will not be necessary, but, if it is, I am sure that honourable senators would be only too happy to oblige.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, Bill C-44, to which Senator Doody has just referred, was introduced by the government in the other place on March 11. The government moved second reading on March 19, and the bill was referred to a legislative committee. That committee did not begin its examination of Bill C-44 until Monday, March 30. It dealt with the bill again on March 31, on April 1 and on April 2, and reported the bill that same day, April 2. Here we are on Thursday, April 9, and nothing has happened in the other place. Therefore, Senator Doody has been put, once again, in a very awkward position. The government is saying that it needs passage of this bill urgently, and he has explained why. Yet, the other place moves with all of the speed of the cold molasses we used to hear about.

• (1450)

Of course, the government itself cannot evade all responsibility for this situation, because, as I said, the committee reported the bill on April 2, and as yet third reading has not been moved. So there we are! It seems to me that the proposal that Senator Doody has made is a reasonable one. It leaves open the possibility that those provinces which may want to appear before the Senate committee can do so while we are engaged in the pre-study, and then the Senate can deal with the bill as soon as it comes before it. How long that will take no one knows at this point.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Reports of Committees:

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, April 9, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

FIFTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill C-28, An Act to amend the Criminal Code (torture), has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, April 8, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted,

NATHAN NURGITZ
Deputy Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OFFICIAL VISIT TO EAST BLOC COUNTRIES—SENATE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I have in my hands a communiqué dated April 8, 1987, from the Department of External Affairs entitled: "Visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to Poland, East Berlin, the German Democratic Republic and Hungary." I would like to quote the first paragraph, simply to put things in context:

The Right Honourable Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, announced today that he will pay an official visit in Eastern Europe.

And he will visit the countries I have just named. Further on the paragraph reads:

In addition to the Members of Parliament who will accompany him, Canadian businessmen will be involved in various aspects of the programme.

My question is: Will members of this house be included in the delegation?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CLOSING OF MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY, BEDFORD INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTIONS—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Hicks calling the attention of the Senate to the policies and actions of this Government with respect to Research and Development, having particular reference to the closing of the Marine Ecology Laboratory (M.E.L.) at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.—(Honourable Senator MacDonald (Halifax)).

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I shall be brief and address my first comments to Senator Hicks. When we were discussing this matter just as we came into the house, I was awaiting some material which I have now received. I might say to him that as far as I am concerned, unless someone else wishes to discuss this inquiry, I am perfectly satisfied.

I have spoken to officials in not only Mr. Siddon's office but in Mr. Oberle's office and, from what I have learned, I find that an article in the Chronicle-Herald of April 4, 1987, seems to convey accurately to me the information which I have received. I will just read brief excerpts from that article:

Deputy Fisheries Minister Dr. Peter Meyboom on Friday defused a growing revolt by scientists in the Marine Ecology Lab (MEL) at Bedford Institute of Oceanography (BIO) by granting them direct input into administrative changes being brought about at the institute.

The article further states:

At a press conference after the meeting, Dr. Meyboom said he addressed the scientists' concern that long-term research is being sacrificed at the expense of short-term practical fisheries problems.

And that, of course, was their concern. The article goes on, and quotes Dr. Meyboom:

'I told them that, of course, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans must have long-term research. At the same time, it must be sensitive to the needs of the fishery industry.'

The article then continues:

Dr. Meyboom suggested a body of senior researchers be created at BIO to advise regional science director Dr. Barry Muir as to how a balance between basic and applied research can be achieved.

The article then talks about your contact, Senator Hicks:

Contacted after the press conference, Dr. Lloyd Dickie, who has volunteered to be a spokesman for the dissenting scientists, said he is satisfied they will now have 'reasonable input into what's happening. We believe (Dr. Meyboom) does understand now. And we really don't think he understood before . . . The confrontation has disappeared.'

Dr. Meyboom acknowledged that the scientists' concerns should have been better addressed in September, when the restructuring of DFO was announced. But he refused to assign blame for the breakdown in communications within the department.

Dr. Meyboom is then quoted as saying:

'One never knows how these things all of a sudden go off the rails.'

Dr. Meyboom also visited with Dalhousie University's academic vice president, Alastair Sinclair, Friday afternoon to reassure him changes at BIO will have no effect on the relationship between the two institutions.

I would like to say to Senator Hicks that I, personally, am satisfied that the matter has been resolved. I really have nothing further to say about it.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I wish to reply, but I do not wish to do so this afternoon. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Hicks, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, April 14, 1987 at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, April 14, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

ORGAN DONOR WEEK

Hon. Efstathios W. Barootes: Honourable senators, as you may have heard, April 26 to May 2 is Organ Donor Week in Canada. My purpose in speaking to honourable senators today is twofold: to draw your attention to the serious shortage of donor organs available to those among our fellow Canadians who desperately need them; and to ask you to serve as a role model by making a personal commitment to organ donation.

As a physician by profession, as are four of my colleagues in this chamber—Dr. Bonnell, Dr. Haidasz, Dr. McGrand and Dr. David—no one knows better than we the importance of organ transplantation in the attempt to improve the quality of life and even the survival of thousands of Canadians.

As practising and ex-practising physicians, we were—and in some cases are—exposed to the urgency of this need: the young father with a family to support who was slowly ebbing away because of a defective heart; the infant whose days are numbered as a result of a diseased liver; and the senior citizen whose semi-blindness will become total without replacements for his damaged corneas. We have all encountered situations such as these. Some of them could be helped, others could not—not for lack of knowledge or skill on the part of the physicians but because the necessary donor organ such as heart, liver, kidneys and corneas simply were not available.

I am sure that you are all familiar with that wonderful film of the late 1930s, the "Wizard of Oz". You will recall that Dorothy's three companions decided to accompany her to Oz in order to acquire from that powerful wizard those things that they were lacking. The cowardly lion needed courage, the scarecrow wanted brains and the tin man had no heart. All three got exactly what they wanted and lived happily ever after. Would that it were so in real life! Unfortunately, there are no wizards waiting to grant us our every wish.

Statistics from the Department of National Health and Welfare show how urgent is the need for organ donation. Between June 1 and August 31 last year there were 254 kidney transplants in this country, while 1,103 people remained on that waiting list. In that same quarter, 29 heart transplantations were performed, while 26 patients anxiously awaited one. There were 327 referrals for potential organ donors during that period and only 166 could be accepted.

In London, Ontario, University Hospital recently completed its one hundredth heart transplant—46 of these being done last year. The first was done in 1981. That hospital's multi organ transplant service averages four organ transplantations a week. Here in Ottawa, at the Ottawa Civic Hospital, Dr. Keon's cardiac team is earning an enviable reputation for cardiac transplantation in their surgical program.

To solve this problem, we need more people committed to organ donation and a more effective system to ensure that a person's wish to donate is honoured at the appropriate time. I am pleased to report that my profession is, as it should be, in the vanguard of this move towards increased public awareness and participation. The Canadian Medical Association (CMA) has launched an organ donor campaign aimed at doctors and their families. A joint letter from Dr. Jacob Dyck, President of the CMA, and the Honourable Jake Epp, Minister of National Health and Welfare, urges each of the 56,000 Canadian physicians to act as a key role model by signing a donor card, informing his or her family of the decision and encouraging them also to become organ donors.

I suggest to members of this chamber that we can do no less. Together with my physician colleagues, I invite senators to help set an example for the Canadian public. Background information on the organ donor program together with a donor consent card has been distributed to each and every senator. I ask that they sign this card and that they urge their families and friends to do the same.

I know that those senators who are over 30 years of age—and I think that takes in quite a few in this chamber—may say to themselves, "Well, I'm too old to donate my organs." Wrong. Age is never an absolute barrier to some form of organ donation. The skin and eyes can be used at any age; bone and kidneys can be used up to the age of 70, and the pancreas can be donated up to the age of 60.

In conclusion, I ask honourable senators to consider these facts. For many people transplantation offers the only help for a healthy, productive life—indeed, a life at all, in some cases. Numerous tissues and organs—the kidney, cornea, heart, lung, liver, bone, skin and pancreas—can all be transplanted. One person's decision to be an organ donor could benefit as many as ten people. If only 50 per cent of potential donors gave organs, there would be enough to serve everyone who needed a transplant.

I urge senators to make their commitment today, to sign a card and begin by telling others about it. It is the greatest gift that they will ever give. What a rewarding and gratifying feeling to know that one's last act in life was to pass on life to someone else.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, on behalf of those physicians on this side of the house, let me support wholeheartedly the request of my good friend, Senator Barootes. Let me say that many years past, the greatest gift in life was blood. But now we can make a greater gift—we can give one of our organs to someone else when we have no further use for it ourselves.

I was going to say many of the things that Senator Barootes has said, but there is no sense in my repeating them, except to give him and this program my full support. The other 56,000 physicians of the CMA who have signed donor cards and asked their families and friends to sign, as well, will be placing donor cards in their offices for their patients to sign so that, in the case of a tragic accident or sudden death, these very vital organs might be used to save the life of some other individual.

There are two or three questions many senators might ask. They might first ask about the success rate of transplants. Let me just provide some statistics of what has taken place over the last few years concerning transplants.

The success rate varies with the organ involved. Fifty per cent of heart-transplant patients survive for five or more years. Eighty-five to 90 per cent of corneal-transplant patients survive for more than five years. For some transplants the success rates are determined over shorter periods of time, as in the case of 90 per cent for kidney-transplant patients who survive for more years.

You might ask: Is there a need? Let me assure you that more donors are needed to meet the potential demands for implantation of corneas, kidneys, hearts, lungs, livers, pancreas, bones and skin. For example, last year there were more than 850 kidney transplants in Canada alone and over 1,000 patients were awaiting transplant. If a suitable number of donors were available, it is estimated that some 1,300 Canadians would benefit from a kidney transplant each year.

In 1986 there were almost 125 heart transplants. It is estimated, however, that if suitable donor organs were available, up to 500 Canadians could benefit each year from heart transplants alone.

Finally, as Senator Barootes has said, many of us might think that we are getting old and it is not worth our while. Let me say, however, there is no age restriction at all placed on being a donor for eyes or skin. They can be successfully donated at any age. For some organs criteria have been established which relate to age, such as in the case of kidneys where the donor-age is set as between age one to age 70. After age 70, the kidneys generally are hardly worth saving. For liver the donor may be as young as six months, but, in the case of bone, the donor should be at least 16 years of age.

Honourable senators, this is a very worthwhile cause to help our fellow Canadians. I am proud at this time to associate myself with Senator Barootes in one of the most worthwhile causes for us as Canadians.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators, I am very much pleased to join Senators Barootes and Bonnell in urging you to support the campaign that was organized by the Minister of

[Senator Bonnell.]

National Health and Welfare and the president of the Canadian Medical Association.

I will not repeat what my honourable colleagues have said concerning transplant. But I feel compelled to remind you that if the transplant of various organs has developed to such an extent over these last few years, it is thanks to the discovery of a new drug, cyclosporin, by a Swiss company. Because of that innovative drug, we are now witnessing a dramatic growth in the demand for organs in Canada.

I will simply recall the experience of the Institut de Cardiologie in Montreal, with which I am still closely associated. In 1968-69, we were privileged in performing, my colleagues in the Surgery Department and myself, the first Canadian heart transplant. At that time, we did nine human experiments, which had an average 6-month survival time. Judging the results unsatisfactory, we initiated a moratorium that practically extended to all hospital centres in the world, with a few exceptions in the United States, England and France.

Four years ago, the program resumed. To this day, 24 patients have been operated on, four of whom died and 21 survived. To this day, the first patient who was operated under the new program will soon celebrate his fourth anniversary. We can therefore expect that a minimum of 50 per cent of cardiac transplant patients will survive over five years. The same thing goes for the other potential transplants.

I would urge you to join the move to encourage oneself to eventually become an organ donor and also to encourage our families, our children, and perhaps for some of us here our grandchildren, to take part in that donation movement. I think it is not enough to have a card in one's pocket. It is essential that the card bearer's family be made aware. In view of the current situation in emergency rooms, I think families should call the attention of doctors and professionals in emergency centres, and make them aware of the intention of the person in pain, not to say on his or her deathbed, to give his or her organs that may be of long-time benefit to living persons.

I therefore encourage you to follow the advice of Senators Barootes and Bonnell and members of the medical profession, to become promoters of organ donations, both among doctors and the general public.

Thank you, honourable senators.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT— PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table three petitions, and I ask that these be made part of the record of this house and printed as part of the proceedings of the Senate.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Petitions follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes in Bill C-22 will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health-care programs and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and

WHEREAS the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian government's concession to the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF MURRAY RIVER, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, POST OFFICE—PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have in my hand three petitions which relate to the Canada Post Corporation. Rather than read them now and take the time of this house, which is very busy this afternoon, and because Senator Walker suggested last week that I simply table them, I ask that they be printed in the proceedings of today. If that is agreeable to honourable senators, I so move.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators, that the petitions be tabled and printed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Petitions follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to effect widespread closures of rural post offices, and

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to change the locations of many rural post offices, and

WHEREAS such changes are more likely to take place in areas where the postmaster or postmistress is about to resign, retire or become promoted, and

WHEREAS the Murray River postmaster/postmistress will soon be reaching retirement age.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community and to take strong and immediate action to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with super mailboxes or any other inferior service.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE
 ON SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-44

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, I have the honour to table the Tenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance on the subject matter of Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

[English]

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT-MATTER OF BILL C-22

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject matter of Bill C-22, presented the following report:

Tuesday, April 14, 1987

The Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, recommends, notwithstanding the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Regulations of Senate Committee, that it be authorized to adjourn from place to place within Canada and the United States for the purpose of its examination.

Since the Committee has not finalized its plans, it will present its budget application when the Senate reconvenes after the Easter recess.

The Committee undertakes that it will incur no expenses until its budget application has been approved by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and by the Senate.

Respectfully submitted,

M. LORNE BONNELL

Chairman

● (1420)

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject-Matter of Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Senator Bonnell]

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, if I may take a moment to explain. I realize that the Senate has shown some reluctance recently—and I think quite properly so—to grant permission to Senate committees to sit while the Senate itself is in session. The whips have pointed out that this causes difficulties with quorums, and so on. In the case of this particular committee today, it had made a prior commitment to the minister responsible for this particular piece of legislation to hear his testimony at 4 o'clock this afternoon. It would seem quite improper to cancel that appointment at this late date.

The Committee of the Whole has planned to hear this afternoon witnesses who have travelled from the maritimes to present their evidence. I think it is imperative that there be a reasonable number of senators present during the Committee of the Whole to hear that evidence. With that in mind, I would be very reluctant, indeed, to encourage other committees to meet this afternoon while the Senate is sitting. Indeed, I would suggest that it may be more appropriate for these committees to sit after the Senate rises, this evening or some time tomorrow. As I have pointed out, today is a very difficult one on which to have more than one committee sitting while the Senate is sitting.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

NOTICE OF COMMITTEE MEETING

On Notices of Motions:

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I had intended to make a similar motion relative to the Foreign Affairs Committee for 4 o'clock this afternoon. In view of the fact that we do not have witnesses slated and that we are sitting in Committee of the Whole, I shall not make a motion but simply announce instead that the committee will meet when the Senate rises.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXTEND DATE OF PRESENTATION OF REPORT

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, which was authorized by the Senate on 3rd February, 1987, to examine the draft Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, be empowered to present its report no later than 15th May, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, at this time I usually give notice of the adjournment motion. However, considering the events of this afternoon, I would ask that we stand that particular subject for now and I will ask leave to revert to Notices of Motions later this afternoon so that I can give honourable senators the correct date for our return.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

SENATE REFORM

ALLEGED STATEMENT BY HON. HARVIE ANDRE

Hon. Louis-J. Robichaud: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It has to do with a lot of rumours going around in the country, apparently, which are, to say the least, disturbing. This morning I read an excerpt from an article that was published in the Toronto Star and the headline is as follows:

Senate's future on the line over threat to stall drug legislation, Andre warns

I am asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would agree to a policy that would make it completely impossible for the Senate of Canada to play its role in the current context. I am not suggesting for a moment that there should not be some sort of minor reform of the Senate, but reforms such as are now being suggested are outrageous, and I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he agrees with what is purported to have been said by a cabinet minister, namely, the Honourable Harvie Andre.

I do say that my colleague, Mr. Andre, will be appearing this afternoon before the subcommittee studying his bill, and I invite my honourable friend and other senators who may wish to raise these matters with him to attend and do so.

AGRICULTURE

CLOSING OF SUGAR-BEET PROCESSING PLANT, WINNIPEG, MANITOBA

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I wonder if he is aware that the sugar-beet processing plant in Winnipeg will soon be closing its doors. That closing will affect many farmers and many of those who cultivate sugar-beets. It will leave them with their equipment and everything else on hand with nothing to do. It will also put many people out of jobs. This is because of a certain disagreement between the provincial and federal governments, as I understand it. That is only one question and I have a second question coming, Senator Doody.

I asked if the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate was aware of this problem, because he said that he had not read about the previous matter. I was hoping that he would have read all about what is happening to the beet factory in Winnipeg, in the area of Fort Garry, since its closing will put a lot of people out of work. This is the largest investment that has been made in sugar-beets in greater Winnipeg, and it is only a matter of a small amount for the federal government to help them out to ensure that this is continued.

• (1430)

I raise the question at this time because it is of an urgent nature. The farmers, those who cultivate the beets, need to know now whether or not that plant will be kept open. Is there anything that the government might do, and that you could possibly bring to the attention of the cabinet, so that something will be done soon in this particular regard?

My friend refers to a disagreement between the federal government and the Province of Manitoba. My understanding, perhaps incomplete and imperfect, is that the federal government had made a proposal which the Manitoba government would not accept on this matter.

I shall have to ask for more detailed information and I shall report to the Senate when I have it.

Senator Guay: In view of the fact that we will be adjourning, honourable senators, this week, would it be possible for the Leader of the Government to bring this information to the attention of at least those of us from Manitoba—whether you bring it into the house or send it to our office?

Senator Murray: I will undertake to do that, honourable senators.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions.

I will follow the usual procedure. I will identify the question, the date and the questioner. If honourable senators wish it read, I will read it—otherwise, I will ask that it be printed as part of today's proceedings.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC MARINE AND CN MARINE BOARD OF DIRECTORS— LACK OF FRANCOPHONE MEMBERS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 4 last by the Honourable Senator Thériault regarding Transport—Atlantic Marine and CN Marine Board of Directors—Lack of Francophone Members.

(The answer follows:)

The Board of Directors of Marine Atlantic was chosen for their experience and knowledge of the areas in which Marine Atlantic provides its services.

The concern raised by Senator Thériault has been brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport, and will be taken into consideration when future appointments are made to the Board.

BANKING

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CENTRES—PROPOSED LEGISLATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 11 last by the Honourable Senator Grafstein regarding Banking—International Banking Centres—Proposed Legislation—Government Policy.

(The answer follows:)

There has been no communication from the Government of Ontario indicating it is prepared to introduce tax legislation to counter the federal government's proposed legislation.

GRAIN

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—FINAL PAYMENTS FOR GRADES 1 AND 2 SPRING WHEAT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 17 last by the Honourable Senator Argue regarding Grain—Canadian Wheat Board—Final Payments for Grades 1 and 2 Spring Wheat.

(The answer follows:)

The Canadian Wheat Board press release dated January 30, 1987, announced a $201.4 million deficit in the wheat, oats and barley pool accounts. This sum is guaranteed by the federal government and amounts to a direct transfer from the Government of Canada to the Canadian Wheat Board. As such, there is no surplus in the pool accounts with which to make a final payment on 1 and 2 wheat.

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO FORD MOTOR COMPANY—REQUEST FOR COMPARABLE TREATMENT FOR FARMERS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 18 last by the Honourable Senator Argue regarding Agriculture—Interest-Free Loan to Ford Motor Company—Request for Comparable Treatment for Farmers.

(The answer follows:)

Government participation in the sale of Versatile Farm Equipment Company is in the form of a repayable loan of $45.5 million, fully guaranteed by Ford. The principal balance of the loan is to be paid by Ford New Holland in 10 equal annual installments commencing in 1997. If research and development and capital expenditures each year total 10 per cent of the loan value, (i.e. $4.5 million) then there is no cash interest to be paid. If it is less than $4.5 million, then the company pays cash interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each $400,000 by which the investment falls short. This action by the government provides an incentive to continue to develop products in Winnipeg and to expand and modernize the plant.

The implication of the article referred to by Senator Argue has since been addressed by the president of the Ford Motor Company in the attached letter.

The Honourable Michel Cote

Minister of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion

Ottawa, Canada K1A 0H5

Dear Sir:

The purpose of this letter is to express my concern that remarks attributed to me by the Globe and Mail in its February 18, 1987 Report on Business may be misinterpreted, and therefore, reflect adversely on our view of the valued role of the Government of Canada in Ford's purchase of Versatile's farm equipment assets.

I want to assure you that Ford's offer could not have been made without the amount and form of assistance agreed to by the Government of Canada.

We at Ford were quite aware that we were up against stiff competition from Deere and that the amount of government assistance requested would be a determining factor. Because of this, Ford reduced its request to the bare minimum needed to meet all of the requirements of the federal government, the secured creditors, and Versatile and still make economic sense for Ford.

Without assistance from the Government of Canada it is difficult to say when, if ever, the Winnipeg facility would have been reopened. It is even more difficult to say what kind of an operation would have emerged. One thing is, however, certain. There would have been much greater hardship inflicted on Versatile's employees, its suppliers and customers if the Government of Canada had not facilitated an immediate take-over.

On behalf of Ford Motor Company, I would like to thank you for working with us to enable us to come up with a proposal which will prove of great benefit to the employees, dealers and suppliers of Versatile, the economy of Manitoba and to Canada.

Yours very truly,

Kenneth W. Harrigan

President and Chief Executive Officer

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AVAILABILITY OF WHITE PAPER ON DEFENCE POLICY

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 19 last by the Honourable Senator Hicks regarding National Defence—Availability of White Paper on Defence Policy.

(The answer follows:)

The White Paper on Defence is presently before Cabinet. The Minister of National Defence hopes that the document will be available for distribution before the summer recess.

INDUSTRY

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—REQUEST FOR INTEREST-FREE LOANS TO FARMERS—REMOVAL OF MORATORIUM ON FARM FORECLOSURES

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—EFFECT ON FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—TARGETED SUBSIDIES—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

FREE TRADE AGREEMENTS INCLUDING TARGETED SUBSIDIES

INTEREST-FREE LOAN TO GENERAL MOTORS—TERMS OF CONTRACT RE JOB GUARANTEES—ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 1 and 2 last by the Honourable Senator van Roggen and the Honourable Senator Argue respectively, regarding Industry—Interest-free Loan to General Motors—Request for Interest-free Loans to Farmers—Removal of Moratorium on Farm Foreclosures; Interest-free Loan to General Motors—Effect on Free Trade Negotiations—Targeted Subsidies—Request for Information on Government Policy; Free Trade Agreements Including Targeted Subsidies; Interest-free Loan to General Motors—Terms of Contract re Job Guarantees—Access to Information.

The Renaissance Project represents an investment of $450 million by General Motors to modernize the Ste-Thérèse assembly plant as well as potential additional expenditures estimated to be $200 million after 1990. The modernization consists of the transfer of “A” line production from Oshawa, already underway, an increase in plant capacity, and construction of a new basecoat/clearcoat paint facility.

The project will maintain approximately 3,500 assembly jobs at Ste-Thérèse. In addition to assembly jobs, the plant supports an estimated 2,800 supplier jobs in Ontario, and 1,500 in Quebec. Depending upon market demand, when the modernization is complete, it is estimated that supplier jobs could increase to over 5,000 in Ontario and to over 2,000 in Quebec.

No absolute employment guarantees have been negotiated, recognizing the dynamics of the market place and General Motors’ inability to guarantee future sales. The Renaissance Project and new labour agreement, combined with continuing commitment by the workers, are anticipated to assure ongoing employment at the plant. Had there been no financial assistance to modernize the plant, the plant would have been shut down with the resulting job loss and the consequent social costs of unemployment and welfare.

The level of federal assistance, a $110 million repayable interest-free loan, matched by an identical loan from Quebec, is repayable in 30 years. Should GM not provide an acceptable product mandate by 1990, $75 million would be repayable immediately.

The present value to GM of the $220 million interest-free loan repayable in full in 2017, based on the company’s estimated after-tax cost of borrowing, is estimated to be $180.5 million. GM has declined to reply to the media reports on the precise tax implications. Taxation affairs are a confidential matter between the taxpayer and Revenue Canada. However, it must be recognized that grants are taxable, that is capital cost allowances and investment tax credits apply to costs net of grants. Loans are not taxable.

There is no direct relationship between the assistance package to Ste-Thérèse and the free trade negotiations underway with the U.S. Americans have extended substantial support to automotive assemblers at a level comparable or even superior to the assistance given to Ste-Thérèse. In fact, Clayton Yeutter, U.S. Trade Representative, in commenting on the Ste-Thérèse Renaissance Project, acknowledged the practice of providing significant levels of financial support to automotive assembly plants is widespread among state governments in the U.S.

While the general terms and conditions of the contract have been made publicly available, the specific details are third party confidential matters and it is the normal policy of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to maintain this confidentiality.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TOBIQUE INDIAN BAND LAND CLAIM—DEFINITION OF “TECHNICAL BREACH CLAIM”

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 2 last by the Honourable Senator Corbin regarding Indian Affairs—Tobique Indian Band Land Claim—Definition of “Technical Breach Claim”.

(The answer follows:)

[Translation]

The expression “technical breach claim”, mentioned in the context of the Tobique Indian Band land claim in particular, relates to the facts surrounding the Indian band’s cession of lands located south of Tobique River in the Province of New Brunswick in 1892. We found a copy of the cession and filed it. For this cession to be in accordance with the existing Indian Act, the government would have had to seek and obtain a ratification decree. This document cannot be found. The band cannot prove that the ratification decree was not approved, nor can the government prove that it was. This lack of element of proof concerning the ratification decree constitutes the “technical breach claim”.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development intends to scrutinize the mandate he was given with respect to particular claims. This will include an examination of such claims as those of the Tobique Indian Band where it is impossible to show that, in the absence of this kind of document, the claiming band has incurred significant losses or damages.

William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 2 last by the Honourable Senator Sinclair regarding Canada-United States Relations—Summit Meeting in Ottawa—Elimination of Anomalies in Memorandum of Understanding re Softwood Lumber.

(The answer follows:)

The question of the Canada-United States memorandum of understanding on softwood lumber, in particular, the urgency of resolving the problems facing certain lumber remanufacturers, was discussed with U.S. officials during the visit to Ottawa of U.S. President Reagan, April 5-6, 1987.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur Tremblay moved the second reading of Bill C-44, to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977.

He said: Honourable senators, since this is the second reading of the bill, our main task is to consider the principles on which it is based.

There is some disagreement as to the origins of our present equalization system. Some people claim it goes back to the agreements on the collection of certain taxes in wartime that were concluded in 1942. Others refer to the recommendations of the Sirois Commission. One could even say that as far as the basic principle is concerned, the BNA Act contained provisions that in the context of that time and considering their intent, were a form of equalization. These provisions may be found in Section 118 of the BNA Act, which provided as follows:

The following sums shall be paid yearly by Canada to the several Provinces for the support of their governments and legislatures.

This was followed by a list of specific grants. These provisions became obsolete over the years and have now been repealed.

In any event, however diverse our views on the more or less historical origins of equalization as we know it today, I think everyone will agree that the legislation adopted on July 31, 1956, authorizing the Minister of Finance to pay certain sums to the provincial governments and the federal government to conclude fiscal agreements with those governments, established the foundation of the system for equalizing provincial revenue we have today.

And what are the underlining principles today? Basically, there are two. The first principle defines the purpose of equalization payments. As recommended by the Sirois Commission, equalization payments are aimed at giving the less wealthy provinces the resources they need to provide, within the areas under their jurisdiction, services comparable to those provided by the wealthier provinces.

The second principle, which has remained as consistent as the first one over the years, has an immediate effect on the relationship between the two levels of government. Equalization payments have always been payments with no strings attached, which the beneficiary provinces may spend according to their own priorities.

Those are the principles which after twenty-five years of experimentation and testing, if I may use this simile, were finally enshrined in the Constitution Act, 1982, in the second paragraph of Section 36, which reads as follows, in terms very similar to those used by the Sirois Commission:

(2) Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

The Constitution Act, 1982, did not change substantially the principles of equalization. However, it did give equalization new status. It moved up from being an established practice to the status of a constitutional obligation which is certainly most significant, I would think.

Since 1957, the programs designed to implement the general principles I have just mentioned have been inscribed in the five-year legislative statutes, including a definition of the terms. With the passage of time, from five-year to five-year period, these terms have undergone significant changes, generally speaking but also within the prescribed five-year period, be it with respect to the revenue sources taken into account or to the basic reference level chosen to set the standards for measures to be taken.

For instance, at the beginning only three revenue sources were taken into account: personal income taxes, corporate taxes, and succession duties. Eventually an ever larger number of provincial revenue sources were considered, so much so that practically all revenue sources are now used as a basis to calculate equalization payments.

Things have changed as well with respect to the level at which the equalization payments were established. At first the two richest provinces were the criterion. Then the payments to be made were based on the average of all provinces as a whole, and after they went back to the criterion of the two richest provinces. Again the average was used until finally, in 1982, Alberta where the yield from revenue sources was considered highest, and the four Atlantic provinces where the yield was lowest, were excluded in figuring out the standard.

Thus the standard is based on the average per capita yield of revenues in five provinces: Ontario, Quebec, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

One interesting fact is that, after all these fluctuations with respect to both the number of revenue sources taken into account and the equalization level, beginning in 1957 when the number of revenue sources was low—only three—but the very high equalization level, the two richest provinces, when the base was broadened, that is the number of revenue sources taken into account, we came back to the average, so a balance of a sort was established. Every time the revenue sources were broadened the standard was reduced to the average, the number of sources remaining stable, for a while, we were able to return to the two richest provinces over the years. At present the five provinces I have just listed are used as a base.

Very briefly recounted, this is how our equalization system evolved over some thirty years.

What should we ask ourselves about Bill C-44? The most important question in my view is this: Compared with the system that was put in place in 1982 and that introduced significant changes to the previous system, does the legislation propose changes that would once more affect the system itself in its major components?

To me, the answer to that question is a clear no, because for all practical purposes, the existing system is maintained in its entirety.

What is proposed in the legislation is first of all technical improvements. Those improvements are made to the measurement of potential revenues used in the equalization formula. The financial impact of those adjustments will indeed be phased in over two years, and it includes very clear advantages for provinces receiving equalization payments.

Second, the bill provides for the maintenance of the current system of minimum and maximum payments. Those provisions were put in place in 1982 with the aim, first of protecting provinces from a rapid drop in their equalization payments, and second of protecting the federal treasury from too rapid growth in the total payments.

Another provision that also does not affect the system as such is of special importance to some provinces. I am referring to provisions to correct the negative effects that could result from the adjustments required after the 1986 census. Those population data are an important component in the evaluation of equalization entitlements. Changes in those data resulting from the 1986 census will entail adjustments, either up or down, to the equalization payments already made, and I repeat payments already made, in respect of fiscal 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Under clause 17, monies that might be owed to the Canadian Government in respect of those years will be forgiven, taking into account the adjustments resulting from the computations needed to arrive at a definite evaluation of the monies payable to provinces under equalization. It is expected that Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Saskatchewan could benefit from those provisions.

The other programs and provisions that come under fiscal agreements also are virtually maintained and kept in force under Bill C-44. During the consultation process, provinces have stressed the importance to them of the financial stabilization program. That program, which is included in Part II of the 1977 Act, provides for corrective payment to a province whose year-to-year revenues decrease because of declining economic activities.

Further to the difficulties that were faced during the implementation of the stabilization program, some adjustments and clarifications are being made to that program. For instance, certain miscellaneous revenues, the year-to-year comparison of which led to special difficulties, will be excluded from the computations. On the other hand, the revenues subject to stabilization will be extended through the inclusion of transfers under equalization and established program financing.

Finally, other programs are also continued unchanged, except for the purpose of updating and administrative changes. They refer for instance to tax collection agreements.

Everything considered, what will be the end result of the steps proposed in Bill C-44? The document prepared by the Department of Finance and of which each of us has received a copy provides us with very interesting data. On page 3, we are told in very general terms that in 1986-87, equalization payments will amount to $5.3 billion. They will amount to $5.6 billion and $5.9 billion in 1987-88 and 1988-89 respectively. The increase, therefore, is about $300 million a year.

On page 12, we are provided with something very interesting which helps us put the equalization payments in their proper context. We are provided with the figures for equalization payments, established programs financing and the Canada Public Assistance Plan.

In 1985-86, the equalization payments will amount to $5.24 billion, compared with $15.172 billion for established programs financing. The amount for the Public Assistance Plan will be $4.284 billion, for a total amount of $24.48 billion. In 1986-87, the total will amount to $25,887 million, in 1987-88, to $27,328 million, while equalization payments will reach some $5.6 billion. They will thus represent about one fifth of federal transfers to the provinces.

We also find on page 11 of the same report a table which I will describe to you. In the first place, it shows what would have been the payments made without any other consideration under the system implemented in 1982. We note that a strict enforcement of that system would have decreased equalization payments for 1982-83. We considered the matter in 1982 and the Government at that time included in its bill a clause which would adjust the application of the new system. Thus so-called additional payments were made to provinces during the three years then provided under the bill. We note in the same table that this Government has proceeded in the same way, making additional payments in 1985-86 and 1986-87 over and above the payments provided under the system.

In short, the policies are somewhat similar even if the amounts are quite different. The additional payments of the three first years, that is 82-83, 83-84 and 84-85 are relatively quite high. However, and that is what we were told in committee yesterday, the anticipated amounts were much lower than the actual ones. The explanation is that in 1982-83, the recession which we all noted had begun, so that as a result, the additional payments made by the federal Government were increased because they were based on projections for 1977 to 1982, therefore on a more prosperous period so that the additional payments were increased over such projections.

This is I think a sufficiently explicit summary on the meaning and comprehensive effect of Bill C-44. Briefly, it seems to me that we can say that with regard to the 1982 formula, Bill C-44 essentially maintains it.

The changes are relatively minor. Of course $300 million is not an insignificant amount but, compared with the massive amounts involved, it is relatively minor. Moreover, those changes are meant to improve the formula. In addition to changes affecting the system as such, the bill includes clauses beneficial to the provinces which would have been compelled following the 1986 census to return to the federal Government moneys to which they were not entitled under the formula in effect.

Under such circumstances, I feel justified, honourable senators, to recommend to you to agree to the second reading of Bill C-44.

[English]

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, we are being asked to pass an important bill through all stages at one sitting; my guess is that, once again, we will agree to do so.

This bill passed the House of Commons last Friday. We are dealing with it at the earliest possible moment today.

What I object to is the kind of gamesmanship to which the Senate is being subjected, indeed, to which the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate is being subjected.

The government showed no sense of urgency in the other place. The bill was introduced in the House of Commons on March 11. Second reading was not moved until March 19. The bill was referred to a legislative committee later that day, but the committee did not begin its work on the bill until March 30. The bill was reported to the house on April 2. Then the government did not have the order for the consideration of the bill at the report stage called until last Thursday, April 9. The bill passed the House of Commons on Friday, April 10, one month after it had been introduced in that house.

This leisurely progress is entirely consistent with the testimony of the Minister of State for Finance. When he was asked about the need for urgency, he replied in the legislative committee of the other house as follows:

The first payment would normally be due on April 16 and the second on April 22. April 16 does not have to be a target date. Before then it will be necessary to complete all stages of House and Senate consideration, pass the regulations and issue the cheques. It might be hard to reach that date, but this is when it would normally be expected by the provinces.

Last night, during the meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance, I described that as a pretty laid back description of urgency. Certainly, the other house and the committee of the other house took the minister at his word. As I said, it took them 30 days to deal with the bill. In contrast, the Senate is being urged to complete all stages in one day. The government allowed all the available time to elapse in the other place.

This is an important bill. Senator Tremblay is absolutely correct in saying that these fiscal arrangements now are a fundamental part of our confederation system.

When we were first told that the bill would have to be dealt with in both houses in the space of one month, which turns out to have been 30 days in the other place and one day here, I asked why the bill could not have been introduced in Parliament earlier. The reply was that the relevant census figures from Statistics Canada had not been available until about the end of January. Those figures were required to calculate the amounts of the overpayments in 1985-86 and 1986-87, the overpayments which, as Senator Tremblay has stated, under this bill are to be forgiven.

However, it was only yesterday that Statistics Canada published its final provincial population figures from the June 1986 census. In other words, there was no need to delay preparation of the bill until the exact figures were available. Indeed, they were not available either when the bill was introduced or when it was passed by the House of Commons.

How important, then, were the preliminary estimates of the census which were available in January? Presumably the Minister of Finance would have an interest in the general size of the overpayments which would be forgiven under the bill, but I have heard no evidence to suggest that a reasonable ballpark figure as to the size of this forgiveness could not have been estimated earlier.

In any case, the officials from the Department of Finance have impressed us with how quickly they are able to make these calculations. They have done comparable calculations repeatedly. They have the programs all set up; they can do these calculations overnight. I can see no reason and I have heard no evidence to suggest that the bill could not have been brought into Parliament at least three weeks, perhaps even four weeks, earlier than March 11. Perhaps that would not have helped us in this chamber. Perhaps the House of Commons would have taken two months instead of one month to pass the measure.

● (1500)

So that, honourable senators, is my basic complaint insofar as procedure is concerned. It would appear that the parliamentary process as it relates to this business has been mismanaged. Here we are on April 13 being told—and, I believe, quite accurately—that the normal practice would be for the first cheques to be transmitted to the provincial governments on April 16, and that a certain amount of lead time is required for those cheques to be prepared.

I want to call the attention of honourable senators to some of the effects of having the actual census figures—the effects on the amount of the forgiveness.

I should say first that this is a net forgiveness. If there are amounts which, under later calculations, are not due to the provinces but are payable to the federal treasury, they are to be deducted from the amount of the forgiveness. The evidence shows that the total cost of the full forgiveness—assuming that there are no such deductions—will be somewhat lower. Last night we were told by Mr. James Lynn, a most knowledgeable witness, that the total will be lower. For example, the preliminary census estimates—those are the ones that became available last January—for Newfoundland showed overpayments of $35 million, and the final estimate was $37 million. For Prince Edward Island it was $3 million and $2 million; for Nova Scotia it was $21 million and $14 million; for New Brunswick it was $26 million and $23 million; for Quebec it was $174 million and $149 million; for Manitoba it was $15 million and $14 million; and for Saskatchewan it was $11 million and $5 million. As I add up those figures, based on the preliminary census estimates, the total overpayment which would be forgiven is $285 million. Under the new census figures, the total overpayment which will be forgiven is $244 million. Those are fairly significant figures for some of those provinces.

Senator Tremblay has made the point that the bill now before the Senate makes no great change in the arrangement which prevailed under the 1982 statute—and I think that is correct. There is no deleterious effect upon the provinces and there is no considerable improving effect. It would be incorrect to state that the increases in the total amounts of the transfers are entirely attributable to any improvement in the arrangements, either technical or otherwise, because included in those increases, to which Senator Tremblay referred, are, of course, estimates of increases which would have taken place even if the 1982 arrangements had simply been renewed without any change whatsoever. So that all the $300 million increase—from $5.3 billion to $5.6 billion—is not directly due to changes effected by this bill.

I had thought, honourable senators, that had we had time it would have been advantageous for all concerned to have heard some witnesses from the provinces on this measure. As Senator Tremblay has said, the equalization program, in the terms that we now recognize, is an old program. That program is really a modern version of arrangements which go back to 1867; indeed, the statutory payments which were provided for in 1867 still go on, although they now account for only about $36 million per year. They still go on, with Newfoundland getting the largest sum. Having been the last province to join Confederation, they made the best deal and consequently attract on the statutory payments line about $9 million per year. The other nine provinces get about $27 million all together.

Senator Doody: We should have had a reopener.

Senator Stewart: I mention that simply to make the point that some form of equalization has been with us since 1867; and that when we bring in a new chapter of the equalization story, we ought not do it lightly or rapidly. This is an occasion when perhaps we should have heard from some academic witnesses, an occasion when we ought to have given the provinces an opportunity to be heard. But, of course, time constraints eliminate that possibility.

There were two questions which I would have liked to have explored had we had the time. One of them relates to the standard up to which equalization is made. As Senator Tremblay said, the standard has been changed from time to time—the two highest provinces, the national average, and the like. Since 1982 we have been using a five-province standard: Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia. I was not there at the time of the negotiations which led up to the 1982 act, but it is my understanding that the high revenues of the Alberta provincial government from oil and gas resources was the leading consideration which led to the exclusion of Alberta, on the one hand, and the four Atlantic provinces, on the other, from the calculation of the standard.

Well, times have changed, and the Alberta government is now quick to insist that its revenues are not what they once were. It would at least have been enlightening to have asked if this was not a time to revert to the old standard—the national average standard—for this five-year term. Last night we were told—and we have had a confirming letter—that this change from the five-province standard to a national average standard would have been worth $1.1 billion to the provinces eligible for equalization in 1986-87. That money would have gone to the governments of Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Another question which deserves attention is the question of the relative per capita deficiencies. I raised this last evening rather late in the meeting. I am not satisfied that I understand the answer given, although it seems emphatic enough.

I quoted the figures for the Atlantic provinces as revealed yesterday by Statistics Canada. They show a considerable decline in the population of those provinces as a percentage of the population of the country as a whole, and the same is true for Quebec. The population of Quebec as a percentage of the population of the country as a whole has declined. Nevertheless, the equalization payments to those five provinces are going up. That led me to make the following statement.

This implies that the base payment is higher.

Mr. James Lynn of the Department of Finance then stated:

Yes, the per capita deficiencies.

Then I said:

The population is declining, yet the bottom line is increasing. Therefore the base payment has to be increasing.

Mr. Lynn replied:

Yes, the per capita deficiency.

At that point I accepted his language and said:

Per capita deficiency, yes.

The terminology having been established, I am interested in the fact that the per capita deficiency is declining. That means that those of us who come from the Atlantic provinces and Quebec have to recognize that compared to the country as a whole our fiscal capacity is declining. This is lamentable. I suspect that some of the provincial governments, if this is indeed true, and if they had had an opportunity to examine the data and to make a case, would have argued that the time has come for the equalization formula to be corrected so as to compensate for this situation.

There is another point—a small point—to which I wish to refer, honourable senators. It is a point which will be of interest chiefly to those honourable senators who are concerned with post-secondary education.

As honourable senators may know, there is a requirement in the present act that the Secretary of State prepare for Parliament a report on activities in the area of federal financial support for post-secondary education. Under the present law, that report has to be presented to Parliament within five days of the end of January. If the bill now before the Senate becomes law later today, or shortly thereafter, that report will not be due until the first few days of April of each year. The purpose of this is to give the Secretary of State more time to get the figures from the provincial governments with regard to post-secondary education, and that, it seems to me, is a perfectly reasonable proposal on the part of the government.

In summary, honourable senators, I am unhappy with the fact that the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate, and indeed the Senate as a whole, has been subjected once again to the same old game plan. It has been done so often that I am beginning to bore myself when I complain about it; nevertheless, I think this is mismanagement of parliamentary business and that we have to complain every time it takes place.

A second point which follows from that is this: If we had had more time, we could have looked into the question of the suitability of the standard which is being continued by this bill; we could have looked into what is happening to the capacity of some of our provincial governments, as that capacity is revealed by the figures available to the Department of Finance. It would be beneficial to know what the implications of these equalization calculations and figures are for provinces such as New Brunswick, Quebec, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island.

Unfortunately, due to the time constraints under which we have been placed by the government and the other place, we will not be able to perform what I think would have been a very beneficial exercise.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, since I am a great believer in pre-study of legislation before a bill reaches the Senate, could the committee not have conducted a pre-study of this legislation earlier than it did? Could it not have done so when the bill was introduced in the House of Commons?

Senator Stewart: The honourable senator, I suppose, has heard many discussions on the merits of pre-study. I suppose he might suggest that some of these measures should be introduced in the Senate so that the House of Commons, too, could engage in pre-study from time to time.

Senator Godfrey: I believe in that, too.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I see no merit in the proposition that, in general, bills should be submitted for pre-study here just as soon as they have been introduced in the other place. There may be exceptions to that, but it seems to me that we should not distort the established legislative process. Bills come before the Senate after they have been passed by the other place, and are reviewed by the Senate so that it is in a position to suggest amendments, not to the government, not to ministers down the back corridor, but to the House of Commons, which is our partner in Parliament. That is the process we ought to follow. There may be exceptions, such as when there is a need to have extensive hearings outside of Ottawa, for example, when that pattern should not be followed, but normally there is a due process, and that due process ought to be respected.

[Senator Stewart.]

Senator Godfrey: The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has been operating successfully under the other process for approximately 25 years. It is only recently that other Senate committees have started, in a more general way, to conduct pre-studies of bills.

We have been avoiding to a large measure what used to be called the "Christmas closure" by pre-studying legislation, and I wondered why we did not do that with respect to this legislation, if it is so important.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I am sure there is some value and convenience in going the pre-study route, but there are also great costs in that the due process of legislation is distorted. Besides, it is possible under the pre-study technique for influential senators to have a word with their friend, the minister, and changes may be effected to bills in the other place as a result of those conversations.

The parliamentary process of legislation, I submit, ought to be a due process and, above all, it ought to be an above-the-ground process where amendments that are found to be desirable by the Senate can be proposed in a formal and open way rather than in an informal, covert way.

Senator Godfrey: I point out, honourable senators, that, at a guess, at least 20 amendments have been accepted as a result of what you say is not "due process" to every one that has been proposed when a bill is actually before the Senate and a committee studies it.

Senator Stewart: That should be changed, honourable senators.

Senator Godfrey: It has not changed.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Honourable senators, just a few words to thank Senator Tremblay and Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) for their comments. The three of us, among others have profited by the explanations given in committee, some of us, more directly and privately by Department of Finance officials.

I say this because, last week, following the tabling of the Senate National Finance Committee report on post-secondary financing and with my colleagues' permission, I had made a few comments which were somewhat beside the point. I had moved three amendments which I felt the Department of Finance might consider. I think the minister had considered them even before my comments, but the explanations I have received since then have somewhat alleviated my concerns. I had referred to the new subsidy ceiling in the bill for payments beginning in 1987-88. I mean the ceiling based on the Gross National Product. I am advised that before this provision gets underway, a great many other things must occur. Therefore, it is almost an inoperative clause and thus my fears have almost completely disappeared. I had wished that the technical changes would start to apply fully the very first year and not after two years, as provided for in this legislation. The federal government has probably limited resources, and it is a way to readjust the formula accordingly.

I find solace, however, in the thought that the tax reform is forthcoming and even if this Bill applies for five years, surely there will be a tax reform before that period is over. As a rule, this Government meets its commitments. The Leader of the Government in the Senate seems to agree with me. This is my personal opinion which I think is shared by most Canadians. We can therefore expect a tax reform and the resulting changes in equalization. I, for one, think that the provinces receiving equalization payments are getting poorer, contrary to what the legislators had hoped for and in spite of the federal Government's constitutional commitments to the provinces.

I dare hope, therefore, that when planning the tax reform, the Government will take into account the ever widening gap in the quality of services between the affluent provinces and those which are not. I suggest that if we want to return to the approach which existed when the equalization payment scheme was implemented and then changed in 1966, 1977, 1982 and again today, and if we really want to ensure that Canada meets its constitutional commitments to the provinces, we will have to improve the formula soon. Senator Tremblay, who is a specialist in that area, has reminded us in committee that the equalization program possibly was not for economic development or enhancement in these provinces, but it was meant first of all to ensure these provinces had access to social services of similar quality to the more affluent.

If such is the case, I hope that the next time we consider or review this Bill thoroughly, we might use an improved formula, and that my province and the others will get the money they need to meet their provincial responsibilities.

Generally speaking, therefore, I am rather satisfied with the amendment of the formula and the sums that will accrue to the provinces. I was a little less regretful than Senator Stewart when he mentioned that the Government had once again waited until the last moment, but I will leave that aside for now. I preferred, as you no doubt have noticed, to talk about the substance of the Bill rather than about the procedure and about the time we spent or failed to spend on this Bill.

However, I agree with Senator Godfrey. Had the Leader of the Opposition been more serious and used less tactics, this chamber could have started the pre-study of the Bill some two or three weeks ago and, possibly, the Premiers, the Ministers of Finance and the officials of these provinces could have come before us to state their wishes. It has been said, I recall, that federal and provincial officials have been working in close cooperation for many months. On the whole there does not seem to be any disagreement as to the sources of revenue taken into account for the establishment of these payments, nor as to the technical arrangements or improvements that need to be added.

Thus, honourable senators, I propose to vote for the Bill.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if Senator Tremblay speaks now, he will be closing debate on second reading of this bill.

Senator Tremblay: Honourable senators, several points have been raised by Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough) as well as Senator Simard.

The first one, if I am not mistaken, deals with procedural matters, the delay in introducing the bill and the lengthy debate in the other place.

I readily admit that Senator Stewart is right. It happens often that we have to pass legislation too expeditiously. Who is to blame for that? As I stated earlier, Bill C-44 is strangely similar to the 1982 legislation. In 1982, we were placed in a comparable situation.

When did we start getting those bills on fiscal arrangements during the month of March? I know only of one specific occasion, when the first bill of this kind was passed in July 1956 and came into force on April 1, 1957. Those were happy times! Is it possible to go back to those times, I do not know. We seem to be getting this kind of legislation at the last minute and this has to change.

Senator Stewart also linked the question of the census-related overpayment to the provision whereby overpayments will not necessarily be payable to the Federal Government by some provinces.

More basically, I believe that the census is an element of the very definition of the basic formula of equalization. The reason is simple since the basic formula is based on the per capita revenue from the various sources being considered. The census is an important factor not only for those relatively lesser amounts that affect the overpayments clause, but for all calculations as well.

This is why I can tell Senator Stewart what we were told in committee last night about per capita deficiencies. These deficiencies will be reduced if the population decreases. This too is an element of the basic formula.

The per capita revenue, which is equal to total revenues divided by the number of citizens, assuming that the total revenue remains the same from year to year. Only the population varies. Obviously, the quotient will be larger if the population decreases. As that quotient is compared with the average revenue for any province that is below average, its deficiency will therefore be lessened.

Any way, this is what I understood, unless I completely missed the point. We could have studied the matter further as Senator Stewart said.

• (1530)

[English]

Senator Stewart: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it not true that the formula would remain the same regardless of the figures? In other words, you simply enact the formula and say that the census figures to be used are those that were produced by the last census, because really that is what is happening in any case. The bill was introduced a month before yesterday when the final figures from the June 1986 census became available, so it is not true that the precise figures are necessary before this bill can be brought in.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

[Translation]

Senator Tremblay: As for the census, if I understand the position of Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough), indeed you would wait until the final figures are known. The practice has always been to use the preliminary figures for the calculations. It is convenient, to say the least, for the Finance Minister, who must make the payments, to have estimates as precise as possible, subject to subsequent adjustments.

I do not intend to engage in long discussions. I was only venturing that interpretation of the facts I gave earlier. That is what I was doing indeed on the first important question that Senator Stewart raised, about the five-province standard, as well as on several remarks made by Senator Simard in his speech last week. Those remarks, of which I am not discussing the validity for the moment, essentially, put into question the formula that was set in place in 1982. It is the reconsidering of the 1982 formula that is implicitly proposed in that type of question. We discussed it in 1982. God knows there were reservations then about the new system that introduced major changes. Not only on the opposition side where we sat, but there were objections also on the government side. I read the speeches made in 1982 on that bill. There were serious reservations on both sides of the House.

However, as far as Bill C-44 is concerned, I did not want to question retroactively, five years later, what was passed in 1982. My position has been, about 1982, that Bill C-44 is not bringing major changes. I still think that, under those conditions, even though we had reservations in 1982, we will have other opportunities to discuss the matter again, perhaps at the time of the tax reform. The changes proposed in Bill C-44 are not significant. They improve the system. Under the circumstances, it seems to me we should pass the bill at second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Tremblay, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), bill read the third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

THE SECRETARY OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

14 April 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gérard V. J. LaForest Judge Puisne of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 14th day of April, 1987, at 5:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CLOSING OF MARINE ECOLOGY LABORATORY, BEDFORD
INSTITUTE OF OCEANOGRAPHY—GOVERNMENT POLICY AND ACTIONS—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Hicks calling the attention of the Senate to the policies and actions of this Government with respect to Research and Development, having particular reference to the closing of the Marine Ecology Laboratory (M.E.L.) at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography.—(Honourable Senator Hicks).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I think I can dispose of this inquiry in a very few moments. I listened with interest to the remarks which Senator MacDonald made on April 9, referring as he did to an article in a Halifax newspaper of April 4 wherein it was stated that Deputy Fisheries Minister, Dr. Peter Meyboom, had defused a growing revolt by scientists in the Marine Ecology Lab at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography by granting them direct input into administrative changes being brought about at the institute.

Honourable senators, I am glad that he did, and I believe that the scientists concerned were somewhat reassured by the assurances which Deputy Minister Meyboom gave.

In the same newspaper, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of April 10, 1987, he is further quoted as saying that the staff reductions would be done "very, very careful." I presume it means "carefully," but it says, "very, very careful".

Senator Macquarrie: Perhaps it should say "(sic)".

Senator Hicks: I see. Thank you, Senator Macquarrie.

Dr. Meyboom said he's "taken to heart" concerns from departmental scientists that any further reductions in the scientific department could erode the quality of that service.

"We're hopeful that we can avoid layoffs... In a department with 5,500 employees, 142 positions is not too big a number."

The newspaper article then goes on to point out that already nearly 100 jobs have been cut from the Scotia-Fundy region.

Honourable senators, that is all very well. I am glad that the deputy minister has seen fit to acknowledge that the senior scientists at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography should participate more effectively in decisions affecting their future. But it does not in any way alter the fact that the Marine Ecology Laboratory has been disbanded and the scientists dispersed among other sections of the Bedford Institute of Oceanography and elsewhere, including a dozen—perhaps as many as 20 or more—who are being dispersed to other provinces. It does not alter the fact that scientists who originally spoke out against the move were threatened with a formal reprimand. I am glad if the reprimand threatened has not as yet been followed. So, we shall await further developments with interest.

● (1540)

Everything I said about the desirability of concentrating and coordinating our scientific resources and our scientific efforts still stands. The disbanding of the Marine Ecology Laboratory still remains, in my view, a retrograde step.

Furthermore, I should point out to Senator MacDonald and others that I still stand by the general remarks I made about research and development in Canada, which preceded my specific reference to the MEL. I conclude today by hoping again that the responsible ministers—both Mr. Oberle and Mr. Siddon—will continue to urge the government to try to live up to the optimistic, but perhaps not realistic, predictions which the Prime Minister made before he became Prime Minister of Canada to the effect that a Conservative government would prevent the continued decline in the proportion of our gross national product which is devoted to research and development and, hopefully, even move it back upward on the path which Mr. Mulroney suggested at one time would be a desirable doubling of that effort on Canada's behalf.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered as having been debated.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE CONTINUED

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada-France.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the agreement, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Senator Doody: Mr. Chairman, a witness is waiting. Shall I escort him into the chamber?

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall our witnesses, Mr. Jacques Haché and Mr. Gastien Godin from the Acadian Professional Fishermen's Association, be invited to attend the committee now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Bring them in.

Pursuant to Order adopted on February 11, 1987, Mr. Jacques Haché and Mr. Gastien Godin were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to say to our witnesses that we welcome them in our midst and that we are pleased and honoured that they have accepted our invitation.

Witnesses, you are not in a court of law here and you are not under oath. You are in the Senate of Canada. The Senate has a long-standing tradition of being factual.

Of course, every word—either in English or French—is recorded. You are at liberty to use either one of the two languages of our country.

We want you to feel at ease and relaxed. We will give you all the time that you need to answer the questions properly, and you may consult between yourselves. We would ask you to please keep your preambles brief—in other words, not a speech in answer to any questions.

[Translation]

Honourable senators are known to be very cooperative and, as much as possible, we shall give you all the time you need to answer our questions. Would you like to make a statement?

Mr. Gastien Godin, Secretary General of the Association des pêcheurs professionnels acadiens: Mr. President, Mr. Jacques Haché, the President of the Association des pêcheurs acadiens and myself are obviously very pleased to be here today and to have been invited by this prestigious Canadian institution to come forward and set out our position on such a vital issue as the agreement between France and Canada.

Before tackling the subject which brings us before you today, may we be allowed to express our deep satisfaction with the fact that the Senate has convened its Committee of the Whole to take a very hard look at the fisheries agreement between Canada and France. We are pleased at the privilege granted us by the Upper House in inviting us to state the position of our Association on this vital issue.

This is our first opportunity to do an in-depth analysis of this question which concerns us greatly. The fishing industry in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is in uproar, Newfoundlanders are furious. Political parties and politicians in Canada are panicking, the Prime Minister first and foremost. A victimized Saint Pierre and Miquelon implores Canada and lashes out at metropolitan France. The metropolis roars and agrees with Canada to renegotiate the recent agreement on the condition that it obtain more.

The parties are not only miles apart, by jingo, they are preparing to engage in a cod war.

Why this sudden outburst? To some, it is a tempest in a tea pot, to others it is a full blown hurricane on the Atlantic. What is really going on? What is at stake for Canada and for France in this confused situation? Which interests in Atlantic Canada are most seriously affected? Is there a solution to the dispute and are there alternatives? These are some of the questions that our President and I shall attempt to answer while bearing in mind, of course, our Acadian perspective. However, let us start from the beginning.

I shall present a brief overview of the extended history of cod fishing by the French in North American waters to illustrate the crucial and historic importance of this activity for France.

Due to its colonial policy and to the misfortunes of war, France came to lose all its possessions in North America. Nevertheless, the very powerful lobby of the equally powerful French fishing interests managed to convince successive kings during the 17th century to preserve its cod fishing rights on the Newfoundland coast (section XIII of the Utrecht Treaty of 1713) and to maintain the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon as a safe harbour for French fishermen (section VI of the Paris Treaty of 1763).

Fishing rights were somehow more important for France than territorial rights over those few deserted acres of snow in Acadia and Canada as Voltaire put it in his famous statement.

To make a long story short, in 1904 both our motherlands signed the last treaty of the colonial era, a treaty confirming France's fishing rights in the coastal waters of Newfoundland. That was the convention passed by the United Kingdom and France concerning Newfoundland, South Africa and Central Africa.

It should be remembered that Newfoundland was still a British colony and was to join the Canadian Confederation in 1949 only, and also that territorial waters were still distributed under the same treaty as far as Newfoundland and Africa were concerned. Under clause 2 of that convention, French fishing rights were restricted to the following: France kept, for its nationals, the same fishing rights on territorial waters as British subjects over the part of Newfoundland from Cape St-John to Cap Ray in a northerly direction. Those rights were to be exercised in the course of the normal fishing season ending on October 20 every year for everyone.

An agreement was reached in 1972. For the first time, Canada was recognized as having every and all powers of a sovereign state. It was renegotiating at the time a new agreement with France as one must remember that both our motherlands had dealt with our problems previously. But in 1972, Canada, as a sovereign state, signed an agreement for the first time with France. That agreement between Canada and France on their mutual fishing relations contained the following provisions: First, it superseded the 1904 convention and all previous treaty provisions. Second, it recognized the right of French nationals to fish on the Atlantic coast of Canada. Third, it stipulated the complete withdrawal of Metropolitan France from the Gulf of St-Lawrence after 1986. Fourthly, it specified that boats registered in Saint Pierre and Miquelon would be allowed to go on fishing in the Gulf of St Lawrence after 1986. At the same time, Canada was negotiating agreements with several other countries on the gradual withdrawal or phasing out of their fishing activities in Canadian waters, namely the United Kingdom, Denmark, Italy, Norway, Portugal and Spain.

As far as we know, the agreement on reciprocal fishing privileges with the United States in the St-Lawrence Gulf was not abolished. Now, we would have a serious problem if that country were to take France's approach and claim historical rights dating back to the colonial era.

Although this issue is likely to resurface, these comments will deal exclusively with the French position.

On grounds that we could justifiably question, Canada exchanged Article II of the 1904 Convention for the new Article II of the 1972 Agreement which France considers as a mini-treaty on the basis of which it considers its fishing rights to extend to the whole of the Atlantic Ocean. I quote this article because I feel it is quite relevant.

In return, the Canadian Government undertakes in the event of a modification to the juridical regime relating to the waters situated beyond the present limits of the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada on the Atlantic coast, to recognize the right of French nationals to fish in these waters subject to possible measures for the conservation of resources, including the establishment of quotas. The French Government undertakes for its part to grant reciprocity to Canadian nationals off the coast of Saint-Pierre and Miquelon.

Some people feel that the 1972 Agreement is ambiguous. The very general terms used in the ten articles of this Agreement between France and Canada result today in broad interpretations.

Yet, the 1972 Agreement would have been the ideal opportunity for Canada to put an end to its last colonial obligations to France in the area of fisheries. These negotiations were taking place at a time when all coastal nations in the world were about to establish or had already established exclusive fishing areas—I can think for instance of the famous cod war along the Icelandic coast—and were negotiating an international convention which was to create a 200 mile economic zone, together with resource management rights for coastal nations.

In 1972, Canada failed for the first time to clearly and unequivocally establish the terms of a decolonization agreement with France in the area of fisheries. Today, after 15 years, France argues over every comma in the Agreement to find in it a guarantee for thousands of additional metric tons of cod. But Canada may still have a very last opportunity, Mr. Chairman, the sine qua non condition being to avoid the temptation of veiled threats and the trap of ultimatums.

What does France want in all of this? Since 1972, France has effectively obtained various quotas of fish in Canadian waters under various international conventions and the 1972 Agreement, including 35,855 metric tons of fish in 1986. This Agreement has already had and continues to have positive effects on continental French boats fishing in Canadian waters rather than strictly along the coast of Newfoundland, as provided for under the 1905 Convention and the other colonial treaties.

What does France want? Although it reserved for itself only 2,500 metric tons in the area of the Saint Pierre and Miquelon Islands over the last decade, France wants today that the new agreement with Canada would grant the islanders 12,000 metric tons of cod in the Gulf of Saint-Lawrence, that is five times their historical catch.

On the basis of a five century long tradition, the powerful French overseas offshore fishing lobby had therefore managed to keep the lion's share of the Canadian fish at the expense of the Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon islanders. Today, France's requests imply that Canada should be more generous towards the Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon islanders than France itself has been over the past few centuries and especially since the 1972 Agreement.

And in compensation for the withdrawal of metropolitan boats from the Gulf, withdrawal that was scheduled to happen 15 years ago, France is demanding eighteen thousand metric tons of cod. The 1972 agreement did not provide any such compensation.

Stating more and more aggressively its claims on an economic area of 200 miles off the St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands, for the past two years, France has been granting itself a quota which it is distributing as it likes. While Canada has been offering 6,400 metric tons according to the average historic take, France is cornering up 26,000 metric tons. As a result, Canadian and St. Pierre and Miquelon fishermen complain about overfishing. Surely some of you have heard the reports from the Islands in which the comments made by the individuals involved were quite convincing.

Finally, France wants to keep and even increase its other quotas of various species everywhere in Canadian waters. France wants to take advantage of negotiations undertaken in 1986 and 1987 to renegotiate the advantages provided under the 1713 Utrecht Treaty and the 1763 Paris Treaty to which it constantly refers to justify its claims.

What is then, Mr. Chairman, the impact of such an agreement on the Canadian fishery industry? The consequences of such demands will be very costly for the Canadian fishery industry. The situation would surely be less critical if there was a surplus of fish. Such is not the case. On the contrary, the resource in Atlantic Canada is now experiencing another crisis. It is quite clear that concessions made by Canada to France will be to the expense of the Canadian industry. Moreover, biologists are already expecting a few lean years. As an example, biologists have recommended that the quota in the southern zone of the Gulf of St. Lawrence with which you are more and more familiar, be reduced from 60,000 to 24,000 metric tons. Now, since France was taking 7,000 metric tons in that zone in 1986, its takes will represent almost a third of the quota recommended by scientists if the 1972-86 agreement was extended for another year. In short, if France had maintained its 6,000 tons quota while the suggested level of take is set at 24,000 tons, a foreign country would get fully a third of the quota while the other two thirds would be shared by all other Canadians in five provinces. This will give you an idea of the problem facing Canadians.

Of course, the quantification of the quota Canada will grant France is a matter of utmost concern for the Acadian fishing industry of New Brunswick, which the president and I represent today, as well as that of Cape Breton, Prince Edward Island and Quebec, not to mention the people of Newfoundland who, in my opinion, have made out a very strong case up to now. Those fishermen do all their fishing in the Gulf. With the withdrawal of metropolitan France from the Gulf in 1987, the inshore fishermen of those provinces have already benefited from the transfer of 6,000 metric tonnes of cod. In spite of that, Acadian and Quebec inshore fishermen will have to make do with a reduction of 11,000 metric tonnes in their landings compared to their 1986 landings level. It is therefore obvious that each additional tonne granted to the fleet of St. Pierre and Miquelon will be taken off that transfer and just might be lost forever to France. For us, whether important quotas are given to metropolitan fishermen, to metropolitan France or to the people of St. Pierre who fish in the Gulf, the result is the same. Moreover, some Acadian fishermen of New Brunswick also fish in the economic 200-mile zone. We have a small deep-sea fleet fishing outside the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It will be easier to negotiate additional quotas in those areas if foreign countries withdraw. Overfishing in the area around the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon just outside the Gulf is also a concern, and some witnesses who appeared here recently made much of those concerns. The mobility of the stock from the Gulf to that area has been scientifically proven. Therefore, there is a risk that serious overfishing will affect the level of landings from the Gulf. I have spoken about our immediate interest, that is the Acadian area or coast.

But the evaluation of the Fisheries Council of Canada describes very well the worries of the industry everywhere in the Atlantic. I wish to quote from a study made by the Council.

• (1600)

By any standards the French demands are by no means trivial. To put these demands in perspective, the total quantity of cod France wishes to catch pursuant to its various claims amounts to at least 50,000 tonnes annually. This is over 2.5 times the average annual catch by the metropolitan and the Saint Pierre and Miquelon fleets from Canadian waters since 1960.

Allowing for the cod offered by Canada, the quantity is about 47,000 tonnes in the hands of Canadian fishermen. This has a gross value of $20 million to $26 million at current prices. The final market value would be in the range of $40 million or $50 million, based on 1985 wholesale prices.

[Translation]

Here, we know that since 1985, over the last two years, cod markets have improved considerably. We can make a reevaluation upwards of the estimate you have there. The 6,000 figure you have is rather conservative.

Mr. Chairman, with those figures in mind, it is easy to understand the strong reactions of the Government of Newfoundland and of the industry to the January 24, 1987 agreement on fishing and on the marine boundary between the two countries.

I am going to talk about this January 24, 1987 agreement. First of all, there is the boundary and then the matter of fishing. What did the Canadian government do to cause reactions which were so violent that the attention of everyone in Canada was attracted and that you, honourable senators, decided to go into the Committee of the Whole to examine this matter?

Besides giving Mr. Peckford, as we say back home, a golden opportunity on a silver platter for an imminent election, is this preliminary agreement so dangerous for the future?

One thing is sure, it is not common to see an agreement between two countries so decried and rejected with such bitterness by both parties, even before the ink is dry. Why is that?

As far as the metropolitan fleet is concerned, no one is surprised. Its greed for cod is insatiable. The powerful French lobby of deep sea fishing, which has existed for centuries, will never be satisfied. It hangs on to the Canadian zone as to a last refuge.

When you hear spokesmen from this metropolitan lobby talk about what is due to them, it is obvious we are still considered a colony. Not content with their Canadian window on the Atlantic, they deliberately overfish the disputed zone around St. Pierre and Miquelon, while awaiting a settlement.

As to the St. Pierre fleet, the citizens of St. Pierre and Miquelon are subjected to the same treatment as Canada. They also feel victimized by the powerful metropolitan lobby, which leaves them only the scraps.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, it should not come as a surprise that public opinion in Acadia, Quebec and Newfoundland, which are parts of the Canadian community, is sympathetic to our neighbours with whom we have developed friendly relations while doing together the same hard job.

Naturally, Canadians have analyzed each of the preliminary concessions, detrimental to our fishing industry, given to France by the Canadian government, to understand why this agreement created so much resentment and frustration in many areas of our industry.

During the past few weeks we have repeated many times both in Newfoundland and in the other provinces along the Gulf coast of which we are the major spokesmen in this case, that Canada gave away a lot for very little. What are the actual facts?

As regards the agreement of January 24, 1987, Canada and France agreed that day to sit together during the year to negotiate two separate but closely related treaties. One was to refer the border dispute over St. Pierre and Miquelon to an international court, whereas the other was to determine the French fishing quotas in Canadian waters from 1988 to 1991, that is the period of time required to settle the border dispute.

In return, Canada gave to France a number of "preliminary safeguards" that we are going to assess immediately.

The first one is the St. Lawrence Gulf cod which is of highest concern to them as well as to our association.

Since the 1972 agreement was very clear in this regard, we knew that the ships of metropolitan France were to withdraw from the St. Lawrence Gulf as of 1987. Anxious to recover that valuable quota, Canadians were expecting nevertheless harsh negotiations to determine the fishing rights of St. Pierre and Miquelon ships which were the only ones allowed to keep on fishing in the St. Lawrence Gulf.

From 1980 to 1986, Canada granted to France a quota of 20,500 metric tons of cod per year in the Gulf. During all these years, the average catch of the ships of St. Pierre and Miquelon has been about 2,500 metric tons per year and the balance of 18,000 metric tons was reserved for the metropolitan fleet.

Then it is important to make it clear that during that period, France was the only one to decide upon this allocation. Therefore, only that section dealing with cod allocations in the St. Lawrence Gulf under the agreement of 1972 had to be renegotiated in 1987.

Therefore, Canada gave to France, that is to St. Pierre and Miquelon, 3,500 metric tons of cod, 1,000 tons over their historical catch. Although France considers that is not enough, it will allow us under the agreement to begin the negotiation process of the two above-mentioned treaties.

We have already underlined that the average historical catch of St. Pierre and Miquelon fishing ships is 2,500 metric tons. France claims 12,000 metric tons. Canadian fishermen's quotas have decreased for the past few years and will continue to do so. If necessary, our president will be able to provide more details later on.

Under those circumstances, is it reasonable to secure a larger catch in the Gulf for the people of St. Pierre? We believe this is an already most generous interpretation of the 1972 agreement. Whatever excess allocation we shall give away until 1991 will be difficult to recover later on, notwithstanding the without prejudice clause, of course.

The Government of Canada should have learned a lesson from the 1972 agreement. The 3,500 metric ton quota given prematurely by Canada was considered inadequate and even ludicrous and shocking by the French government. What are we to expect from the next round of negotiations?

Canadian Gulf fishermen have good reason to be worried. There are vital interests at stake. It is only through very strong pressures from the Gulf fishing industry, supported by the Senate and a new approach from the federal government, that we will be able to stop the haemorrhage.

Briefly, as concerns northern cod, in this preliminary agreement, Canada gave the French 3,000 metric tons of cod in the 2GH area, off the coast of Labrador. Of course, that quota was also considered inadequate. But at least, the process was started.

Our negotiating team certainly had room to manoeuvre in that area. Not satisfied with that important quota on Atlantic stocks, the French deep-sea fishing lobby is vehemently demanding a permanent right on the famous cod from the 2J+3KL area which is considered sacred by Newfoundland and on which the whole history of the province is based.

As concerns northern cod, Canada has committed itself to grant the French a certain quantity of cod from the 2J+3KL stocks in the northeast of Newfoundland. The quotas will have to be negotiated for the period from 1988 to 1991.

Let me quote from the press release of the Fisheries and Oceans Department:

Since the French Government considered this concession to be inadequate, it is obvious that the French lobby is aiming at a permanent right on the famous Newfoundland banks.

The fact that they are continuously reminding us of the colonial treaties clearly proves it. Let us not forget that the French are demanding 18,000 metric tons in that area.

Until then, Canada had refused to give away a single inch of that much coveted territory which Newfoundlanders considered sacred. Moreover, Canada had already warned the French that it would not renew the 1,500 metric ton quota they had enjoyed until 1987 under the long term agreements signed with the European Economic Community.

So, the concession of the Canadian Government came as a surprise for everybody. This commitment may weaken our position for a long time.

It is a fact, Mr. Chairman, that cod stocks in this area are the largest in the Atlantic, reaching annually about 250,000 metric tons which are equally shared between inshore fishermen from Newfoundland and the rest of the Canadian deep-sea fishing fleet. But let us not forget that the Canadian fishing industry depends to a large extent on that stock. It is the largest in the Atlantic and, last year, the reduction of the catches by the Newfoundland inshore fleet resulted in a very heated debate which eventually led to a revision of the management of the resource.

It was therefore predictable to expect a violent reaction to an overly generous Canadian attitude. Warily raising the French flag in that zone, subject to ulterior quantification of the quota, is undoubtedly the most hazardous gesture of the Canadian government during the January 27, 1987 negotiations.

On this specific point, Canadian negotiators will have no choice but to limit the damage to a minimum—that is a minimum quota—or withdraw this article from the preliminaries altogether.

I now come to the last two points concerning overfishing in the disputed zone and the border dispute.

With respect to overfishing in the disputed zone, the statements to the effect that Canada should tolerate France's overfishing in the 200-mile disputed zone around the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon (3PS) have certainly given currency to the suggestion that, for one thing, our government was weak in this case and, for another, it provided additional ammunition to the unrelenting opposition which became obvious.

During the years after our country established a 200-mile economic zone in 1977, Canada gave France a quota related to a certain level of historic catches, roughly 15 to 18 per cent of over-all quotas in this zone.

But the situation has changed drastically over the past three years. France sets her own total quota and unilaterally establishes her own share which is closer to 50 to 60 per cent of over-all quotas, with the result that Canadians and French fishermen take their own quotas and we finally end up with a catch which amounts to 150 to 175 per cent of the quota.

By taking a more aggressive approach France wants to strengthen her claims within the disputed zone, with the prospect of international arbitration.

In the meantime both countries have given their scientific experts the responsibility of preparing joint analyses and projections on 3PS cod stocks. This has to be one of the very few positive but little known elements of the agreement of last January 24. However there is no reference to the way they should jointly share the quota which will be set as they wait for the border dispute settlement.

Should there be no agreement, unfettered fishing may very well go on at the expense of Canadian and St. Pierre fishermen. So this is the zone where relations may worsen and possibly lead to violent physical confrontations among the various actors in this crisis.

Indeed, until such time as the dispute is settled by a court which both countries accept, each one can claim and exercise certain rights in the disputed zone. We might recall that we witnessed a similar scenario with respect to Georges Bank until an international court stepped in at the request of Canada and the United States.

As far as the boundary dispute is concerned, both countries are sailing in troubled waters, and to get to their respective home ports, they must cross the high seas. While Canada recognizes France's right to a twelve-mile territorial zone, France has been claiming a 200-mile economic zone off the French islands since 1977. Using the equidistance theory as one of its arguments, France claims it is entitled to a share of the 200-mile economic zone, out to international waters, which would give it a considerable economic and strategic advantage, thanks to its sole possession in North America.

Canada, arguing the equity theory, is convinced that two small islands completely cut off from the mother country and in the middle of Canadian Atlantic waters, cannot lay claim to the rights of a sovereign state. According to Canada, an international tribunal will take into consideration the respective land masses of St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada's

Atlantic coastal area in reaching a decision on how the economic zone is to be shared.

Mr. Chairman, we recommend that a settlement of the boundary dispute establish once and for all the ownership of the fish and sub-ocean resources in the new designated zones. But was it necessary, meanwhile, to give France guarantees for fish quotas in various parts of Canada's Atlantic waters? Was it necessary to link the two treaties? Those are the main issues that will have to be resolved. Spokesmen for the Canadian government consider the preliminary fisheries agreement a small price to pay for trying to settle the boundary dispute. The industry, however, feels that their government has just sold out inalienable interests in Canadian fisheries to a foreign power.

At the beginning of the eighties, France urged Canadian authorities to let the boundaries of each country's respective marine zones be determined by international arbitration. For some obscure reason, Canada ignored France's overtures. But why does Canada feel obliged today to make so many concessions to France in exchange for the consent it already had in principle? To our knowledge, and we feel this is very important, France never really objected to arbitration of the boundary dispute. In fact, it felt it was being rushed by Canada. We can hardly blame France for taking advantage of Canada's confusion with respect to the two "inextricably linked" treaties and coming in with its shopping list of Atlantic fish.

Was it not a major strategic error on the part of the Canadian government to insist on negotiating the two treaties together? By letting the boundary issue drag on until 1987, when the fisheries agreement had to be negotiated, didn't the Canadian government put itself into a vulnerable situation, with predictable results? It is not surprising that so many intervenors are worried about the ultimate price the Canadian fisheries industry will pay for this compromise. And this is before any decision by the International Court and subsequent negotiations.

The claims for fish quotas in Canadian waters arise basically from the 1972 agreement. By giving France more than it would have been entitled to under this agreement, we may never be able to reverse the situation.

By way of a conclusion, after a slight pause, Mr. Chairman, what is most astonishing regarding the negotiations between France and Canada is the total lack of confidence of the Canadian government in its rights as a sovereign coastal state over its territorial waters. We have witnessed it in 1972, in 1980, and again in 1987. If France uses an imperialistic approach in its negotiations, it is partly because Canada is all too prone to submit to French coercion as if we were still a colony. Not only is Canada flickering under veiled intimidation, but we went much too far, we showed too great a generosity in trying to maintain our good relationship with France, while letting our domestic relationships deteriorate on that question, as people have said during these last months. Canada has undoubtedly lost its chance to break the umbilical cord of colonialism in 1972, while perhaps trapping itself during the January 1987 discussions.

During the talks leading to the 1972 agreement, France and Canada alike harboured the then prevailing illusion that Canadian fish resources would soon exceed the country's needs. However, after the depletion of cod reserves in the southern section of the Gulf in 1976-77, following that of Boston blue fish a few years before, whereas ground fish stocks had substantially declined, generally speaking, in 1974 in the Gulf as well as in the Atlantic, Canadian industry finally woke up to reality. How remote and unreal seems to be the period when, following the declaration of an exclusive economic zone, both the Canadian government and the industry displayed with delirious optimism the perspectives of abundant and eternal resources.

Only now do we realize to what extent we were mistaken, how difficult it is to maintain stocks while submitting them to constant fishing efforts, despite a belief that supplies can only increase thanks to management principles and practices of world-wide reputation in the area of marine biology.

Contemporary realities are somehow sad. Our seasoned managerial efforts are not as fruitful as expected, as is shown in the Gulf, where the F01 quota is the same as it was 10 years ago. We are paying the price of that deception. France indulges in the fanciful belief that the virtually limitless fish stocks of the Atlantic will not be affected by the overfishing it already engages in on the one hand and by the important quota allocations it is seeking for the future on the other. This is why it sees no limit to Canada's generosity.

Furthermore the Canadian government as well as Canadian industry wish to maintain a close relationship with Saint Pierre and Miquelon. This explains why Canada has made generous concessions to this French department. Also, in allowing Saint Pierre and Miquelon to use the factory freezer trawler "La Bretagne", Canada is granting an advantage which it has never allowed itself until last year in the Atlantic and which it still does not allow itself in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, that is the use of factory freezer trawlers. Given the current depletion of fish stocks, the French are the ones who should be generous towards their overseas department. So far, it is evident that France has negotiated first and foremost to meet the needs of its deep-sea fishing fleet.

Given the present state of the Atlantic fisheries, Canada must adopt a very firm stance with France, as it has already begun to do in fact by closing the door to the French deep-sea fleet. In the upcoming negotiations, Canada will have to deal accordingly and break the bonds of colonialism once and for all.

Since France has continued to overfish in the disputed zone, it bears responsibility for escalation of the conflict. The ball is therefore in the court of the French and, hopefully, their attitude will change since all stand to pay a very high price if the French fleet continues its present practices.

With regard to this conflict, I would like to raise a point which we consider very important and rather delicate. Newfoundland took the lead in a debate which was necessary before it became too late to make up for the Canadian blunder of January 1987, which was the result of past errors. However, we do not agree with Premier Peckford's claim that fisheries resources should be managed by the provinces. If the honourable Senator LeBlanc (Beauséjour) is here today, I believe that he will recall vividly the historic debate over the right for provinces to manage fisheries resources and the dangers that this entails. He often reminded us that fish has no nationality and that provincial management of that resource would be difficult. We must not think that the sharing of these resources between the Canadian fleets of the different provinces is any easier. Indeed, the future of the Canadian industry might be jeopardized if Newfoundland grabbed this opportunity to take away from the federal government the jurisdiction over fisheries.

But let us go back to this diplomatic imbroglio on fishing agreements, stemming from what we humbly consider three mistakes made by Canada in 1972, in 1981 and in last January. We think it is still possible to straighten things out.

First, one must recognize the three mistakes that we made: first, the hasty signing, in 1972, of an agreement which extended the fishing area in which the French deep-sea fleet was able to obtain fishing rights. Second, our refusal, in 1981, to have this boundary dispute settled by arbitration and third, the assumption of the Canadian government that France absolutely wanted to tie the issue of the fish quotas to the arbitration of the boundary dispute, when it was in fact a unilateral requirement by Canada.

It is vital, in our view, to break all colonial bonds with France. This must be done in considering France as any other foreign country fishing in the Canadian waters, as far as legal status is concerned, even if we allowed them a preferential treatment because of certain historic bonds in the sharing of the surplus of resources offered to foreigners or other resources that could be offered to foreigners.

Pending the settlement of the boundary dispute, and in order to respond to the reasonable needs of St. Pierre and Miquelon, we must ask the French metropolitan fleet to leave the 3PS area because of its over-fishing which is unacceptable, while compromising the economic base of this French department and counting on Canadians only to accommodate St. Pierre. That is why we believe, even if that could be interpreted as interference in French affairs, that since the French want us to respond to the needs of St. Pierre, we can ask them to share in that responsibility.

We are on neighbourly terms with St. Pierre and Miquelon. If the French metropolitan fleet left the 3PS division, Canada could negotiate with France an increase in the percentage of the global quota of 3PS granted to St. Pierre and Miquelon. At present they have 6,400 tons. Why not give a little more in these conditions? Canada could also make up for the needs of the fleet of St. Pierre in granting it quotas in the St. Lawrence Gulf or elsewhere in the Canadian area or else, ask them to leave the Gulf because the overall quotas are smaller and fish elsewhere in the Atlantic.

These measures, we believe, would lead to Canada's exercising its right, as a sovereign state, to an exclusive economic zone, while showing due consideration for the needs of our good neighbours, the people of St. Pierre. Decisive measures would also be a way to affirm our sovereignty vis-à-vis France, which unfortunately will not admit that Canada is no longer New France. In other areas where Canada has a privileged relationship with France, agreements between the two countries reflect reciprocal relations between two sovereign states whose cultural ties are free of any colonial overtones, which is not the case for the fisheries.

Our association, and I am about to conclude my speech, Mr. Chairman, represents Acadian fishermen. They are aware of their ancestral origins and are proud of their French language and culture. However, they feel no kinship with a France that shocked our community with the kind of colonialism that has come to the fore in the fisheries negotiations.

As part of the greater francophone community, we will always have a special affinity to France, with the mutual respect worthy of a new relationship free of any hint of subservience.

My presentation was somewhat detailed. In fact, Mr. Chairman, we prepared our analysis with great care and I want to thank you for having the patience to listen to us.

The Chairman: Would the President of the Association des pêcheurs professionnels acadiens, Mr. Jacques Haché, like to make a short statement? I would only ask you not to repeat everything Mr. Godin just said.

Mr. Jacques Haché, President of the Association des pêcheurs professionnels acadiens: For us in the Gulf, in 1986, the overall quota was 60,000 metric tonnes. For 1987, our quotas are down to 45,000 metric tonnes, which means 15,000 metric tonnes less.

Landings for 1986 totalled 38,000 metric tonnes. This year's quotas are for exactly 26,500 metric tonnes, a drop of 11,000 metric tonnes compared to 1986.

In 1987, with France withdrawing from the Gulf, we will get an extra 6,000 metric tonnes. Otherwise, we would have lost 18,000 metric tonnes this year in the Gulf, the equivalent of 25 million pounds, representing, on average, a loss of $10 million compared with previous years.

This is very important, since further reductions in quotas are expected for the Gulf in the future.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Haché. Before asking honourable senators to put their questions, the Chair will first recognize Senator MacEachen.

[English]

Then the Chair will recognize the honourable Senator Marshall. Those who raise their hands will be recognized by the Chair.

● (1630)

Senator MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, first, I thank Mr. Godin for his very comprehensive presentation. It is not my intention to raise questions about all the points that he has covered. We have covered with other witnesses some of these points and it will be unnecessary to retrace the ground. So, in thanking Mr. Godin, I want to assure him that we will not ask him to go over his whole presentation, which was very thorough. I also want to note that Mr. Godin has expressed some approval that the Senate has highlighted this particular agreement and has given it appropriate importance by a special study in Committee of the Whole.

I would like to ask a question about the matter of de-colonization. Mr. Godin has stated that we should have broken the ties of colonization in 1972 when we signed the fisheries agreement with France, and that now there rests an opportunity to break these ties in the upcoming negotiations. Personally, I do not take the sombre attitude toward the 1972 agreement that some others have taken, for a number of reasons—partly because France, as the witness has pointed out, has had treaty rights in Canadian waters which go back as far as the Treaty of Utrecht and the Treaty of Paris. Those rights were confirmed in 1904 by the United Kingdom acting on behalf of Canada with France. When we negotiated the agreement of 1972, we were working to achieve international acceptance of an extension of jurisdiction for Canada over the 200-mile economic zone, which at that point had not been acknowledged. The treaty with France postulated the possibility that we would have extended jurisdiction, and also that we would acknowledge the right of France to fish in Canadian waters, subject to quotas and the question of conservation.

We have had evidence that in waters that are not disputed, France has respected the quotas established by the Government of Canada. I really do not wish to go into this very much, except to say that it is true that Canada had an option in 1972 to declare null and void the legal treaty fishing rights of France in Canadian waters. That opportunity still exists. The Government of Canada could denounce today the 1972 agreement just as it could have denounced in 1972 the pre-existing rights established by treaty. This has been stated by others than Mr. Godin. I ask him: Does he think that it is a realistic proposal to ask the Government of Canada, either in 1972 or in 1987, to denounce these rights as opposed to establishing by mutual agreement a system of dealing with the fisheries which, I believe, has progressively increased the jurisdiction of Canada? And if you would extinguish the rights of France or the metropolitan fleet, why would you exempt the vessels from Saint Pierre and Miquelon? After all, the residents of these islands are French nationals in precisely the same way as the nationals from Saint-Malo, who were told by the French negotiators that jobs numbering up to 1,000 will be lost if their quotas are affected. My main point is: Is it realistic to suggest that we should break the colonial links with France, which means the extinguishment of all historic rights? Is that your proposal?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I think I can add something to the question of the honourable senator. I have here an International Relations Bureau document dated 1980, a working document which was submitted to a groundfish seminar which we attended at the time, and I see in this document that the objective in 1972 was to break these ties. It states on page 3 of the document that the decision was made in 1972 precisely because there were problems. In that context and given the generally less than satisfactory relations between Canada and France in fishing matters, particularly with respect to the activities of French fishermen around Newfoundland and surrounding waters, it was decided in May 1981 to open preliminary discussions with France with these objectives in mind: Second objective, secure an agreement on France's gradual abandonment of her traditional fishing operations and, third, reach agreement on the cancellation of rights guaranteed to France under the 1904 convention, as well as the relinquishment of privileges granted pursuant to the provisions of several treaties since 1763.

Thus it is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that such was the objective. In my humble opinion, Canada in 1972 was in a better position than it is today but, as the honourable senator has stated, it can still be attained. Any country can decide at any time to renounce a treaty. But in our view it would have been easier in 1972 because the previous treaty on that issue involving Canada and France was concluded by both our motherlands. It was the last colonial treaty of 1904 that settled the question of fishing rights.

So we believe that Canada negotiated as a sovereign country in 1912. The Statute of Westminster in 1931 conferred on it the right to sign international treaties and, for the first time, it could really deal extensively with that issue and say: "Listen. The Treaty of Paris and the treaty signed in 1713 might be a good thing but perhaps the time has come for us to break the colonial bonds." However, that did not necessarily mean that we should have suspended French rights to fish in Canadian waters. France could have been placed in the same position as other countries that have been granted since 1977 extended rights to fish in Canadian waters. I may add that Canada has negotiated and signed agreements with those countries so that they renounce their rights in the 200 mile zone that Canada wanted. That is the only country with which Canada has concluded such an agreement. All other countries have signed without the need of that additional constraint. All those countries that did fishing in the St. Lawrence Gulf, be it Spain, Portugal or Russia, agreed to withdraw without guaranteed rights.

In effect, and I do not want to give too long an answer to that question, as you requested earlier, Mr. Chairman, but we in the industry have to ask ourselves when we consider that today: What have we gained in 1972? Indeed, it is true that metropolitan France is operating a phasing-out of its vessels in the St. Lawrence Gulf. Previously, they had three. In the treaty, we allowed them up to ten and today they are about to reach that number including some freezer trawlers that can fish in the Gulf while we Canadians cannot. So you can imagine the outcome if these ships from metropolitan France are replaced by factory freezer trawlers from Saint Pierre and Miquelon in the Gulf. What will we have gained? As things stand now, the 1972 treaty provides them with a right in perpetuity, unless this is changed by negotiation. Or if they abandon their ancestral rights in exchange for rights which would be limited to the Newfoundland coast. But what rights did they have in fact? They have the right to dry cod along the Newfoundland coast. In 1904, industrial fishing as we know it today did not exist.

So what are they claiming today? What are they getting in exchange? Section 2 which I quoted purposely was in fact a treaty on a smaller scale. Today Canada tends to agree that it affords both metropolitan France and St. Pierre and Miquelon perpetual rights in the Atlantic. Therefore, what have we really gained, apart from the possibility of counting our losses? So you can see from the way they are negotiating that this will be far from easy.

Given what I have said, I honestly believe that we had a better chance in 1972 but that we fumbled it. You will surely wonder whether it is realistic. As a matter of fact, when Canada reconfirmed these rights in 1972, it became a little more difficult, but not impossible. Nothing is impossible. In view of the importance of this question for Canadians, (and we explained today the situation and gave you some statistics) I think that Canada should be concerned about this, but it should also come to terms with St. Pierre and Miquelon. We are not opposed to a settlement because of the peculiarity of those remote islands which happen to be near our coastline.

[English]

Senator MacEachen: I just have one comment, and that is that Mr. Godin made the point—with which I agree—that through negotiation it ought to be our objective to decrease the activities and eliminate the possibilities. However, if I understood him correctly, I think he did say that he had not recommended in 1972, or even now, that we shut out the French fleet unilaterally.

Mr. Chairman, those are all my questions.

The Chairman: Senator Marshall?

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I would like to welcome Mr. Godin here and thank him for his brief. I went to the trouble of having translated the speech he made in Shippegan, and he has given us practically the same one.

Mr. Godin, you are a member of the advisory group that is dealing with France in the on-going negotiations. Were you at the recent meeting on March 24 or 25 here in Ottawa?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: On March 24 and 25, yes, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Senator Marshall: Are you at liberty, Mr. Godin, to tell us if there was any progress made at that meeting? Also, can you tell us what negotiations took place; on what basis were those negotiations, and to achieve what purposes?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I find it difficult of course to talk about these negotiations. I was invited as the spokesperson for the association and not as a Canadian delegate. But without revealing any secrets, I think I can say that following what has happened here on January 24, not many people expected substantial progress in the first negotiation. It was more some sort of a meeting with both sides facing each other for the first time following quite a serious crisis and trying to assess their respective positions.

We must remember that before this meeting, Canada had also closed its ports to the French fleet. Thus there was a new situation confronting us in these negotiations. Therefore, without going into all the details, which I could not do because of my special mandate, I think that it is fair to say that no substantial progress was accomplished; at least people agreed to come to the negotiation table for discussion.

[English]

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to press my luck. I will think about that answer.

Perhaps, Mr. Godin, you would indicate to us if the action taken by the Canadian government to close the ports and to close Burgeo Bank to the French fleet was discussed, and did they express their reaction to the action taken by the Canadian government?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the honourable senator is stretching his luck somewhat. Unfortunately, I cannot follow him that far. I believe the two heads of the Canadian delegation, Mr. Appelbaum and Mr. Clark whom you have already met here, would be in a better position to give a follow-up on the issue, if you invited them again.

But the last question really is rather directed to the heart of the discussion. I am not sure that I have the mandate, and in view of the difficulty of finding an answer, it is often better not to say anything. I will therefore remain silent on that question, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: As I said at the beginning, you are not here under oath. You can answer the questions as you please. If the answer is satisfactory and can help the senator, so much the better.

[English]

Senator Marshall: I can understand Mr. Godin's reluctance, and I will accept it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Godin, I think you stated that we should put pressure on the French with respect to the overfishing in 3Ps. I think you are aware that the French classified 3Ps as their own waters. Are you still insisting that we should pressure them to discontinue fishing in that area when they are claiming that as part of their 200-mile zone?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: To answer the honourable senator's question, I believe I am more at ease to answer here. That may in part answer his previous question, Mr. Chairman.

I think you are aware that the 3Ps area, the so-called supply management area, has been established at 41,000 tonnes for Canadians and 43,000 tonnes for the French. The area claimed by St. Pierre and Miquelon does not necessarily cover all the 3Ps area in discussion. These areas were established by the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization to manage the stocks and they have no connection with the debate between Canada and France.

It so happens that, because of a series of circumstances, 3Ps more or less corresponds to the disputed zone but not entirely, which means that a significant part of the 3Ps area would not lie within the equidistance lines; it is more generous to France, especially with the Burgeo Bank. It is in that context that Canada is shutting its ports to French ships, which quite seriously hampers the metropolitan fleet and the St. Pierre and Miquelon fleet, to avoid that after they catch their awarded 6,400 tonnes, that they be limited to the disputed zone where we cannot act. But outside of that area, Canada should assume sovereign responsibility and say: If you are to fish on the Burgeo Bank, that is of particular interest to us. When we speak of the Bank, we speak of fish. When we forbid them to fish over there, it is an embarrassment to them, and they do not appreciate that. I do not want to speak for the Canadian delegation, but you may be assured that for the industry, that move has been a first welcome one in this issue. I hope I answered the senator's question.

● (1650)

[English]

Senator Marshall: While Mr. Godin has the map before him, can he indicate the interests of New Brunswick? We had representatives from Nova Scotia here and they indicated their interests. Would you point out and designate the area that the fishermen from New Brunswick are concerned with in the Gulf?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I would say to Senator Marshall that people in New Brunswick or in other provinces have different interests. Let us remember first that zones 4T and 4VM in the southern part of the Gulf have the same stocks of fish. Now in that shared area, two thirds of quotas granted to France or St. Pierre and Miquelon came from the northern part and one third from the southern part of the Gulf.

There is no legal requirement there, but it is a practice that has been followed over the years, particularly since 1980. That is to say that for every additional 1,000 tons or 100 tons of fish given to France, to people of St. Pierre and Miquelon, one third of it could be lost for us. So we have a direct interest.

Our fishermen operate also in the northern area of the Gulf. Two thirds of the quotas of St. Pierre and Miquelon are caught in that area. That means also that in that case every additional ton of fish given away could affect proportionally Newfoundland fishermen first, but fishermen from other provinces also.

There is also the problem of overfishing which was scientifically established. If such a phenomenon occurs in 3PS quotas provided in the northern area of the Gulf could very well be affected too because of stock mobility. Therefore, such a situation could have a serious impact on Newfoundlanders and people from my home place.

I must add also that sectors of our fleet have access to the zone outside the Gulf, along the Newfoundland coastline including 2JT, 3PM. There are over there small quotas available for our fleet. As a matter of fact, if France had no such large quotas in that area, more could be made available for those sectors of our fleet. That is to say that we are also affected, but not as much as Newfoundland of course.

The whole question of individual interests of provinces is a matter of degree. But in a different way, we are all directly affected in every area.

[English]

Senator Marshall: Mr. Godin referred to the management of the resource between the provinces and the Canadian government, and he alluded to the fact that he would favour management of the resource by Atlantic Canada and the federal government.

How do you see that in practice—in as short an explanation as you can give? Am I right in assuming that that was what you were getting at when you spoke about it in your brief?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I did not quite get Honourable Senator Marshall's question.

[English]

The Chairman: Senator Marshall, would you repeat the question?

Senator Marshall: Do you see any advantage in a variation in the management of the resource—not as referred to by Premier Peckford, namely, that he wanted to be part of the management process? You referred to Atlantic Canada, all the maritime provinces and Newfoundland managing the resource with the federal government. Is that practical?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Senator, for this clarification.

In view of the fact that resources, as you know, are common property and that it is difficult to put a provincial flag on the fish travelling from one area to the next, it would be difficult to accept the notion that the provinces are a major jurisdiction in fisheries management.

I believe that if the Fathers of Confederation felt the need to give this jurisdiction to the provinces, they must have had their reasons. These reasons might not apply today. However, I believe in realistic terms that today this jurisdiction must be assumed by the federal government. It is the only Government which has the authority to arbitrate the conflicts between the Atlantic provinces in the management of fish resources and the various interest groups within these provinces.

I think that we have witnessed these past few years some very serious problems in the area of fish management. I find it difficult to imagine what the end result of the debate would have been had the provinces had greater jurisdiction in this area.

Finally, on this point, we strongly suggest the status quo should be maintained with respect to the jurisdiction of the federal government, even if it means granting the provinces certain administrative arrangements on some aspects still to be considered.

[English]

Senator Marshall: Mr. Chairman, I will pass now, but perhaps I can have another opportunity to question the witnesses later.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we will hear from Senator Simard, and then Senator Stewart will follow.

[Translation]

Senator Simard: Mr. Chairman, I also want to congratulate the representatives of the Association of Acadian Professional Fishermen. These people don't have the reputation of being disliked by those they meet. They always come well prepared and their brief speaks well for them. I think that it contains interesting details, particularly about the aspiration of the Acadian fishermen from New Brunswick and, indirectly, about the point of view of Quebec fishermen who operate in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This is perhaps one of the most interesting aspects of today's hearings.

This was hardly mentioned by previous witnesses. Therefore, I want to congratulate you, Mr. Godin and Mr. Haché and ask you a question.

Could you dwell a little more on the possible impact on bottom fish of overfishing in the Gulf and could you tell us more precisely what are your expectations in terms of stock and preservation of stock in the Gulf as far as a future agreement is concerned?

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, I think that a few minutes ago, our president clarified some aspects of the impact of fishing by France and the quotas that could be granted to the French government in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, particularly in view of the fact that our quotas have already been reduced this year.

In 1986, they had been reduced by 5,000 tons. This year there was an additional reduction of 15,000 tons. It is expected that the quotas will be lowered again each year over the next few years.

Well, Mr. Chairman, to answer the question asked by the honourable Senator Simard, any transfer of quotas to the French, each 100 tons that is granted to the French, will have serious negative impact on the economic stability of the industry in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Earlier, Senator MacEachen referred to a loss of jobs in France as an impact of lowering their quotas. But I think the major point to consider in the context of a lowering of quotas would be the impact this could have on Canadian fisheries.

On the larger question raised by Senator Simard, namely the contents of a new treaty, certainly it was not easy to agree on these treaties in 1972 and it will not be easy now. All the more so because I think we negotiated, I would not say like amateurs, but maybe we did not protect sufficiently the Canadian interests in that case.

We should go as far as to question certain ancestral rights granted to the French as we wanted to do at the time of the treaty of 1972, which I quoted earlier, and consider invalidating the rights given to France under the 1904 Agreement as well as the privileges granted under several treaties since 1763 (something we were unable to achieve in 1972 because apparently the fishery agreement was wrapped up rather expeditiously). We should try to achieve now what we failed to do in 1972.

The concession we are willing to make, both to metropolitan France and to Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, is that we believe France should have certain specific privileges in the 200-mile zone, compared with other foreign nations. But France should be put on the same legal footing as other foreign nations without a particular treaty.

As for Saint Pierre and Miquelon boats, certainly there is room for accommodations, but they should be put on the same footing as Canadian vessels. For example, if they negotiate and are granted quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, since Canadians are not allowed to use freezer trawlers in the Gulf, we should ask that this restriction apply to them also.

Without going into the details, those are a few items we would like to see in a new agreement with France.

Senator Simard: Thank you, Mr. Godin.

[English]

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Chairman, I have three or four short questions. Am I correct in thinking that your organization represents fishermen primarily in the area from Cape Tormentine up through Tracadie, Richibucto, Shippegan to Campbellton? Are there others in the Bay of Fundy area who are represented by your organization?

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, to answer the question of the Honourable Senator Stewart, we do not represent the fishermen of the Bay of Fundy area. They belong to another organization.

It should be noted that for them this agreement has very little significance because, if you look at the map, they fish mostly in 45Y, 4X, 4VWX, while the disputed area is more in 2GH, 2J+KL, 3PS and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Although I would not want to speak on their behalf, I do not think that this agreement has as much importance for them.

Our association does not represent fishermen in that area, although we maintain an excellent working relationship.

[English]

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): I would like to know what species of fish caught by your fishermen are involved in this agreement. As to the size of the boats, do you represent an inshore fleet, a middle water fleet, or do you have any real high seas vessels in the fleets you represent?

[Mr. Godin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, our association represents about 140 mid-shore boats. They fish different species like herring, cod, blue mouth, crab, sole.

However, the part of our fleet which is affected by this agreement is the groundfish fleet, which is also a mid-shore fleet.

That means it is made up of boats less than 100 feet in length, in general, equipped with mobile gear, as opposed to fixed gear. I could even say less than 65 feet, because we have only a few boats 65 to 100 feet in length that fish mostly shrimp, a species I did not mention in my list a moment ago. The majority of boats are between 45 and 60 feet.

This is the fleet we represent and which is affected by this agreement.

I do not know whether or not I answered all the details of the honourable senator's question.

[English]

The Chairman: I should like to inform Senator Stewart and other senators that I have been advised that we will have Royal Assent at 5.45. I would permit another five or six minutes of questions, although I am in the hands of the Senate.

Senator Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The witness made reference to the fact that these groundfish stocks migrate. He used that as the basis for his resistance to Premier Peckford's claims of jurisdiction. Is it established that the various groundfish stocks do migrate?

One witness, who appeared before us a couple of weeks ago, contended that they do, but, if I recall correctly, conceded that some scientists would argue that the 3Ps stock does not migrate into 4Vn. Is it clear that the fish stocks do migrate? I ask that question because, if the stocks are fairly stationary, Premier Peckford could at least eliminate that argument against his claim to jurisdiction.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it is clear the stocks are not stable. I alluded earlier to the southern part of the Gulf where scientists recommended lowering quotas from 60,000 tonnes to 24,000 tonnes. It is finally the catch level of ten years ago, before we established the 200-mile limit.

In the northern part of the Gulf, the same thing is happening but on a smaller scale. In the Atlantic, southwest of Nova Scotia, we witness a similar phenomenon. For cod in the 2J, 3K and 3L zones, this year, the offshore fishing fleet suffered a 10,000 tonne reduction. Last year, the coastal fleet caught, I think, some 40,000 tonnes less than the estimated quota. On the one hand, I think people in the industry are right when they say the stocks are not stable. Your question about the mobility between stocks is quite relevant. It relates mostly to 3Ps zone. In that regard, we do not intend to exaggerate the importance of the mobility of 3Ps versus the Gulf, be it 4VN or the southern part of the Gulf. This is a matter of proportions. On the one hand, it can be claimed, as scientists did according to the assessments of fish tagging, that there is a certain mobility of 3Ps stocks, particularly towards the northern part of the Gulf and not towards the southern part of the Gulf, which is 4VN.

This mobility is not extremely large except that what the scientists and the industry say is that severe overfishing would hurt 3PS; nobody would be concerned, of course, if the overfishing were insignificant. But if there is a severe overfishing in 3PS, even though the mobility is only 5 or 10 percent, then the 5 or 10 percent becomes considerable. Besides, overfishing in itself is basically a matter of concern. The matter of mobility is incidental to the problem. It adds to the seriousness of the problem. But the most serious problem is the overfishing in 3PS.

Very briefly, you can figure it out fairly easily: France takes a share of 43,000 tons. They keep 26,000 tons and give the balance, 17,000 tons, to Canadian fishermen. The Canadian people do the contrary. They establish a quota of 41,000 tons. They give 64,000 to the French fishermen, and they keep 35,000 tons. If you add the 35,000 tons which Canadian fishermen catch in reality to the 26,000 tons if not more that French fishermen catch in reality, because there are no observers on their boats, you end up with a total of 61,000 tons. The quota established by the French amounts to 43,000 tons and the quota established by the Canadians amounts to 41,000 tons. The catch is therefore 61,000 tons. If you make speculations on this fishing practice, which has been going on for two years already and imagine that it continues over the next five years, then all the debate on 3PS will have been almost academic even if a boundary is delineated; it will be used for the delineation of geocarbons and other things, but not much for fish because there would be no fish left. This is what concerns the industry, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, on your behalf, I would like to express our gratitude to the witnesses for the help they gave us. We thank Messrs. Haché and Godin for helping us with this difficult problem. When the Debates of the Senate are printed, copies will be sent to you.

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, we want to thank you for this opportunity to address this house.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I move that the committee rise, report progress and request leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen that the committee rise, report progress, and request leave to sit gain. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which the Canada-France Agreement on Fishing and Territorial Boundaries was referred, reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the Committee of the Whole be given authority to sit again at the next sitting of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, 5th May, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Gérard V.J. La Forest, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (torture) (Bill C-28, Chapter 13, 1987)

An Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 (Bill C-44, Chapter 14, 1987)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 5, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 5, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I hope this chamber will allow me a few moments to express my feelings of profound joy, probably shared to a large extent, if not completely, by all members of the Senate, upon hearing the news of the agreement in principle concluded on Friday, April 30 of this year at the meeting attended by the Prime Minister of Canada and the ten provincial premiers at Meech Lake.

The official ratification of this accord will have the very important consequence of bringing Quebec into the Canadian Constitution and thus filling the dramatic gap in the Constitution Act 1982.

I do not intend to comment on the conditions and provisions that received the unanimous approval of the participants, since these will be included in a formal resolution to amend the Constitution, at which time there will be ample opportunity to discuss the matter in Parliament and in the respective legislatures, while it will also be analyzed and assessed in other forums.

Today I just want to congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada and the ten provincial premiers on all counts, and more specifically, Mr. Mulroney on his leadership and his negotiating skills, and the provincial premiers on their generosity and open spirit. I think they all deserve this country's congratulations!

Furthermore, I think congratulations are also in order for the discreet but extremely effective individual who is also responsible for the success achieved at Meech Lake. I am referring to our colleague, the Leader of the Government in this chamber and Minister of Federal-Provincial Relations.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: Senator Murray has been working extremely hard on this meeting for months, which included preliminary visits to provincial capitals, in order to do the ground work, and thus provide a favourable environment for an agreement which in many circles was thought to be impossible.

I tremble at the very thought of the agreement falling through, which would have put the patriation of Quebec on the back burner for some time. In fact, that is why I am particularly enthusiastic about the present results.

Senator Murray will, I presume, have no objection to sharing this compliment with Senator Tremblay, whose cooperation was invaluable.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[English]

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, April 30, 1987, was a great day for Canada, for the Prime Minister and for the ten premiers. They deserve the gratitude and the admiration of all Canadians, maybe more so of the people of Quebec.

As I said in French, Senator Murray also deserves our gratitude and admiration for his arduous work and his optimistic approach in the preparation of the Meech Lake meeting.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Flynn: I also salute the help given him by our colleague Senator Tremblay.

Even if one may hear some reservations expressed concerning certain of the provisions of the accord, I suggest that, outside of extreme centralizers and separatists, you will find general acceptance.

I look forward to the day when the constitutional resolution embodying the accord will be proclaimed.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—COMMUNIQUE TABLED

● (1400)

Honourable senators will be aware that the next step in this process is to put the accord into the form of legal or constitutional texts and to hold a First Ministers' meeting to ratify those texts. While a date has not yet been set for the First Ministers' meeting, I expect that it will be held within a month. After that, as Senator Flynn has pointed out, we would proceed with constitutional resolutions here in the Parliament of Canada and in the provincial legislatures.

There will be time to discuss the details of the accord and the constitutional resolutions when they are before us, and it is not my intention today to discuss the Meech Lake accord in detail. However, I want to join with Senator Flynn in paying tribute to the Right Honourable the Prime Minister for the tremendous leadership he has shown—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray:—and to the premiers of the provinces for the statesmanship that they have demonstrated in reaching this unanimous agreement.

[Translation]

Honourable senators and the Canadian people know that we have been seeking to achieve such unanimity for 61 years. They also know what were the consequences of the steps taken in 1981 without first reaching this unanimity.

Honourable senators, I have the conviction that the Meech Lake accord will enable us to see the day when Quebec will regain its place as a full-fledged participant in the constitutional evolution of Canada.

However that is not the full extent of this accord. Because it reasserts the will of each region of the country to work in the interest of the common good, it tightens the bonds of our confederative pact. Because it acknowledges the importance of each province in the determination of our collective options, it reinforces the federal character of Canada. Because it allows the provinces to participate in Supreme Court and Senate appointments, it reflects, within the heart of two of our most important institutions, the spirit of authentic federalism. Finally, because it guarantees the presence of our main cultural and linguistic characteristics in our basic statute, it attests to our collective aspirations, with full respect for both our differences and the links that bind us together.

I am convinced that the effect of the constitutional amendments stemming from this accord will be to enhance the legitimacy of our national institutions, while assuring us that any reform to these institutions will be possible only with the consent of most Canadians. In short, the accord is an eloquent demonstration of the government's commitment to make national reconciliation a basic principle of our political and constitutional existence.

As to the next stages, honourable senators, as I just said in English, a First Ministers' conference will be held within a few weeks to ratify a legal text designed to implement the Meech Lake accord. Should unanimous agreement prevail at this conference, a resolution will be introduced in both the Senate and the House of Commons, as well as in the legislative assembly of each province. Once all resolutions have been adopted, the amendment will be proclaimed by the Governor General.

This will signal the disappearance of the cloud which for too long has obscured our national existence. The constitutional reform process will again be set in motion and we will be able to turn our attention to other major constitutional questions which are of interest to all Canadians throughout this country.

● (1410)

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in response to the comments made in the first instance by Senator Flynn, followed by Senator Murray, one can hardly fail to share at least vicariously in the sense of joy which they have apparently experienced since Friday last at the unanimity which existed and resulted in the Meech Lake communiqué. This is also shared, of course, by those who were eager, as were all members of this chamber, to welcome, as was stated in the communiqué, Quebec resuming its place as a full participant in Canada's constitutional development. Those who sought that experienced an immediate sense of satisfaction at the outcome.

Of course, as Senator Murray has stated, we are in the first phase of the examination of the results of Meech Lake. No one as yet—and here I speak for myself—understands fully the implications for the future of Canada when the principles of the communiqué are ultimately enshrined in the Canadian Constitution. The initial euphoria which surrounds these agreements usually settles itself at a later stage into a greater analysis and greater realism.

Today Senator Flynn used the expression "accord", which brought to mind a number of previous accords which the government has announced, heralded by a similar sense of euphoria. I refer, of course, to the Atlantic Accord, which did not in its fulfilment live up to any of the expectations originally outlined. The Western Accord had the same history; and, of course, the results of the Quebec Accord are all well known.

The point of my argument is simply that it is now our obligation as legislators to examine not only the immediate impact, which is one of satisfaction, but also the long-term impact on the future of our country and its development. It is very clear that the Meech Lake communiqué represents a significant shift of power and authority from the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada to the governments and legislatures of the provinces. That is absolutely clear. It is a factual statement. We will have under the amended Constitution a weaker national government and a weaker national Parliament.

That has been attested to already by the Premier of Quebec who has stated: "If there is one principle which stands out from the Meech Lake meeting, should it be applied, it is that Canada is to be a much more decentralized country than it was last Wednesday." That simply means that the provinces will be stronger and the national government and the national Parliament will be weaker.

One is not surprised that the provincial premiers found it possible to adhere to the Meech Lake agreement, because their status and their authority is enhanced. They received a great deal. One wonders what the quid pro quo is for the federal government and the federal Parliament, whether there was not some added power or authority in various fields that the federal government could have acquired which would have compensated it for the loss of authority.

The nature of our federation, the future strength of our country, is deeply involved in the Meech Lake communiqué. I hope that as we examine and debate this matter and as views are expressed, it will not be the thrust of the government to assert, as Senator Flynn did this afternoon, that those who might take a different view are either separatists or centralists.

I personally will want to examine more carefully the implications of the new regime that will be established for the spending power. It is provided in the communiqué, as I understand it, that in the future, if this constitutional principle is embedded, so far as national programs are concerned, provinces will be permitted to opt out, and, indeed, will be compensated if they adopt initiatives or programs that are compatible with national objectives. One will have to examine that element carefully to know whether in the future it will be possible for the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada to establish a major program such as Medicare.

I was the minister who put that bill through the Parliament of Canada when not only was there provincial opposition but when there were alternative programs being proposed by the provinces to supplant and replace the federal program. I may have to ask myself, as I examine this result, whether it will be possible in the future to establish a national program such as Medicare. Will it still be possible, or will it be a project for a decade or two decades? If it is, it will amount to a great weakening of our country.

I believe that is one of the fundamental questions that we will be asking. If we can be assured that, indeed, the capacity to act that has been characteristic of our national government will be perpetuated, then, of course, our anxiety will be greatly relieved.

Honourable senators, I have one other point to make. It refers to the question of Senate reform. There are those of us—and I believe there are many in the chamber—who understand and appreciate the significance of Senate reform, that is, change to this institution. At least, I hope there are many who believe that it needs change. Now we have a situation where there will be embedded in the Constitution the rule of unanimity. Anyone who takes a look at the history of Canada will see that the rule of unanimity has been a major stumbling block in achieving any form of constitutional change. Quite frankly, I am puzzled that an advocate of an elected Senate, like Premier Getty, would accept the rule of unanimity, which in my mind and in the minds of many others makes it even more difficult to achieve any form of change in this institution or in any other of our federal institutions. Senator Eugene Forsey has been telling us recently that the present Constitution is very rigid. Certainly, this new addition will make it even more rigid. That is disturbing.

I look forward to following up and examining the details of the communiqué in order to determine their potential implications for the future of the country. We will have that opportunity when the legislation comes before the Senate. In this particular case, if the Prime Minister and the ten premiers with their majorities persist, there is nothing to stop the enactment of this constitutional change, because not even the Senate can stand in the way of these constitutional changes under the amendments last made. The Senate can delay but not stop them. All we can hope is that in the time available to us the premiers and the Prime Minister will listen to arguments that are made respecting the measures which affect the future of our country. Certainly, there are elements within this package that cause concern and anxiety, and we will want to debate those in the future.

In the meantime, I hesitate to rain on the parade, and I can only join with all those others who have congratulated the Leader of the Government and Senator Tremblay on their arduous work. I am sure they worked hard, but that does not remove from us the responsibility to determine whether their work, in all its phases, is in the best interests of Canada.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Thank you very much, honourable senators. I have not been away, so it is clearly my excellence you are applauding!

I recall that in the far off days before I hit the House of Commons the late C.D. Howe was supposed to have remarked during the passage of a bill that, "If we do not watch out, Mr. Speaker, this is going to develop into a debate." There was a suggestion that it would not be a debate, but Senator MacEachen has made a contribution to the debate, a most excellent one as he always does. I admire a man who, when he is wrong, is brilliantly and eloquently wrong.

I just want to say that some while ago I found it necessary in my heart and mind to vote against the Constitution of Canada. In the process, I differed from the then national leader of my party—a man whom I admire. I admire him more as I know him better, and that is a very nice development in public life or in life in general. I am also able to report that I have run across in public life some people whom I respected less the more I knew them, but this man is not of that kind.

At that time I took the view that we could not have a nine-province Constitution for a ten-province country. I could not live with that document so long as Quebec was not included. If I felt then that the inclusion of Quebec was the sine qua non of my support, how can I now take the view that the inclusion of Quebec is not the most important thing? I suppose that I would fall into Senator Flynn's category. I hope that I am not an extreme centralist, but I am a centralist. I believe that the whole is more important than the parts or the sum of the parts.

Honourable senators, I do not rejoice in what I call "growing provincialism," but I do not know what our representatives, both provincial and federal, could have done the other day except what they did—that is to complete, to make whole our Constitution—

Senator Frith: They could have said no!

Senator Macquarrie: —from which develops the wholeness and completeness of the country. Therefore, I salute those people.

If we have misgivings, if we have forebodings—and I have some—whoever said that the life of a nation, any more than the life of an individual, was to be devoid of concern and anxiety? Of course there are problems ahead, but I think that the first essential is the viewpoint, the attitude, what Montesquieu used to call "the spirit of laws." And the spirit the other day, whether we worry about the details or not, was noble and strong. I want to join those who congratulate our two senatorial colleagues. I was honoured, as a senator, that Senator Murray was given such very important, onerous responsibilities in the Government of Canada. He has discharged them, after much hard work behind him and much more ahead of him, in such a way that we may all be proud and honoured. I am delighted to speak to this subject today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF MURRAY RIVER, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, POST OFFICE—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a petition in respect of the closing of rural post offices in Prince Edward Island. In view of the remarks made by Senator Walker on the last occasion I presented such a petition, I ask that it be incorporated in the Debates of the Senate and printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Petition follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to effect widespread closures of rural post offices, and

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to change the locations of many rural post offices, and

WHEREAS such changes are more likely to take place in areas where the postmaster or postmistress is about to resign, retire or become promoted, and

WHEREAS the Murray River postmaster/postmistress will soon be reaching retirement age.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community and to take strong and immediate action to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with super mailboxes or any other inferior service.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT—PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a petition from various people in Prince Edward Island objecting to Bill C-22 and signifying their opposition to such legislation which, in their opinion, will cause hardship to large numbers of people in this country and will, in effect, increase the price of drugs available to the people of Canada.

I ask, honourable senators, that this petition be incorporated in the Debates of the Senate and printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Petition follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes in Bill C-22 will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health-care programs and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and

WHEREAS the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian government's concession to the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF
BILL C-22MOTION TO PERMIT COVERAGE OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS BY ELECTRONIC MEDIA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), I move:

That the Senate do empower the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject Matter of Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, to permit coverage by the electronic media of its public proceedings, with the least possible disruption of its hearings.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Are we to be given an explanation by the mover?

[Senator Tremblay,]

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, since this is a very important matter, and your committee will be travelling to all the capital cities in the provinces of Canada, I thought it would be appropriate for the people in the provinces to see the Senate of Canada in action. I therefore thought it would be appropriate if there were coverage by local television stations and that there be interviews by local television and radio personnel.

It is my understanding that without the permission of the Senate the committee cannot authorize television or radio personnel to cover our committee hearings.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Would Senator Bonnell indicate whether the motion includes the televising of committee hearings in Senate committee rooms?

Senator Bonnell: It is possible that some of the hearings I am referring to would be held in committee rooms in the Senate, but the motion was particularly directed to committee rooms which would be situated in the capitals of the ten provinces.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I agree with my friend's interpretation of the powers of the committee. We had a discussion on this matter some months ago when the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was holding hearings into the collapse of the western banks. I think we are agreed that the decision is up to the Senate, and that the committee cannot on its own invite television personnel with cameras into a room to broadcast its hearings.

Honourable senators may also recall that at the time the chairman of the committee was able, after some negotiations with the television networks, to assure the house as to the rules of the game, that is, as to how the television networks were to cover these hearings.

It is necessary to establish certain rules and have them agreed to, preferably in writing, by the television stations or networks. I suggest to the honourable senator, the chairman of the committee, that he come back here with this motion once he has an agreement from the various networks concerned along the lines, I would suggest, of the agreement we made some months ago in the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. In my judgment the Senate should not at this point give an open-ended approval to the suggestion that the honourable senator has made.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: I thought that the idea was to allow local stations across the country to televise the matter locally and, if that is the case, I cannot see how an agreement can be reached well in advance.

Surely we can trust the chairman and the members of the committee, who have a great interest in whether the hearings are conducted properly, to come to a proper type of agreement.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I think that the point the Leader of the Government is making is that we do not, if this chamber approves of it, want to deny the chairman of the committee the experience we have already had in this particular matter. I suggest that the Leader of the Government is quite correct. If the chairman of the committee would like to have some assistance and the benefit of the experience we have had, I think it may be helpful to him. With all due respect, I do not think this matter should be left to his own discretion.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Surely we should benefit from the experiment that the Leader of the Government undertook when he was chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I saw the results of that experiment and I thought they were very good. As the Leader of the Government said, he did a lot of good work in this regard.

The way to benefit from that is to have the chairman of the committee consult with the clerk of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce and with Senator Murray in order to get the benefit of their experience. It seems to me to be a waste of that good experience to wait and then come in and debate the negotiating of rules, a debate which will take place between the two chairmen.

Surely the point Senator Murray has raised is a good one. But it is that Senator Bonnell should have the benefit of Senator Murray's experience.

Senator Murray: That would be fine. Some months ago I and members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—in particular, Senator Finlay MacDonald, who has some professional experience in this line—negotiated the matter with the television networks. We were able to come to the Senate and assure this chamber that the rules of the game had been agreed on.

Senator Frith: But we did not debate them.

Senator Murray: No, we did not, but we were able to assure the chamber that the rules of the game had been agreed to as between the committee and the television networks. Senator Bonnell is not in a position to give the Senate that assurance today.

Honourable senators, without going into too much detail, let me say that the concept is covered by the phrase “electronic Hansard”. In effect, the entire proceedings of the committee were, under certain previously agreed upon rules, put on tape. From there it was possible for television stations or networks to select what they wanted.

Honourable senators, I do not want to make a federal case out of this, but I would tell my friend and all the members of that committee that they will regret it to their dying day if they do not reach an agreement with the television stations and networks as to how this is to be done. As of now it appears to me that it will be open to television stations and networks to come trundling in the middle of meetings, take what they want, and leave.

The concept we agreed on in the Banking Committee was a so-called “electronic Hansard.” We negotiated to the point where the positions of the cameras and the angles that were to be permitted were defined and agreed to by both sides. It was very much along the lines of the rules that govern telecasting in the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: Why doesn't he get that from you?

Senator Murray: All I am asking is that the chairman of the committee, before he asks us to approve this motion, be in a position to assure us that the rules of the game have been agreed to by the television networks and the committee.

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I wonder if the chairman could tell us if there is any possibility that, in the course of negotiating with the television systems, there will be any substantial financial implications so far as the Senate is concerned. Are we going into this knowing where we are going, and whether it will cost anything or nothing, or are we just going in and taking our chances as we go along? I think these are some of the things that we should know in advance.

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, if I understand the Leader of the Government correctly, under the “electronic Hansard” procedure, everything was taped and then the news media decided what to take from those tapes, with no guidance from the Leader of the Government to the media on how to take what was on the tapes, edited, superimposed or transposed, am I correct?

Senator Murray: We agreed on the camera angles that could be used and the positioning of the cameras in the room, as is done in the other place. We had a very detailed understanding with the television networks as to how this would be done. Obviously, I did not tell them which excerpts to use on newscasts. That is not my concern.

Senator Gigantès: The point I want to make is that the choice of what the media would use was left by the “electronic Hansard” to the media, and quite properly so. The only thing that was changed was the aesthetics of the camera angle—whether some of us would look prettier or less pretty when shot. The substance of what would be put on the screen was left entirely to the media. As far as I am concerned, that arrangement gives no protection against wrong interpretations and poor editing. It did not give any more protection than any arrangements that Senator Bonnell might propose.

● (1450)

Hon. Peter Stollery: Honourable senators, I would point out that this business of how parliamentary committees and, in particular, the House of Commons are televised has a long history. The arguments over what is “electronic Hansard” and what is not “electronic Hansard,” what is editorializing on the part of the television station, and so on, have a long history around here. I would think that Senator Bonnell, as a senior member of the Senate, would be aware of that. It goes without saying that he would be interested in the experience of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce as well as the long history down the hall with their problems of editorializing and accusations one way and another.

I certainly put my faith in Senator Bonnell to follow what is the long experience of Parliament in this matter, and we should approve his request to make the public aware, in the parts of Canada that the committee will be travelling to, of what is going on. We should approve it without too much more talk about it.

Hon. Michel Cogger: Honourable senators, speaking as a member of Senator Bonnell's committee, since this matter has not been the object of discussions—it has never been brought up before the committee—and since the committee is meeting at six o'clock this afternoon to discuss internal matters, would Senator Bonnell, as the mover, postpone his motion until such time as it has been considered within the committee?

An Hon. Senator: Good point.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, if I could answer some of the questions that my honourable colleagues have brought up, I think it would be helpful.

First, I would like to say to Senator Molson that the question that he asked about the expense is important, because if they want to charge us to come and take our pictures, then we certainly do not want them there. If it is not a news item, then they will not want to get in. They will have to ask permission to get into the hearing, and we certainly will not pay them.

Perhaps the next important item I should deal with is the fact that my deputy chairman brought up a point to the effect that I had no permission from my committee to bring this forward and that I should bring it forth in committee at six o'clock. He must have missed that part of the meeting, because there is a signed written minute showing that the subject was brought up before the committee and requesting me to bring it up today and to get permission from the Senate for the electronic media to attend. That is a recorded minute, not one of those that merely ask, "Do you agree?" It is a motion which was made, and it is not like the minutes of some other committees. So we have a motion which was made and carried with no objection. In fact, I asked my clerk specifically if it was recorded and he stated that it was.

I would suggest—concerning the motion that I made this afternoon—to honourable senators that the committee has the power to tell the media to leave at any time if they are causing any disturbance, disrupting the meeting, or not doing as we think they should.

As a fourth point, I suggest to honourable senators that it is important, if we are going to the various regions of the country—after all, we are representing the regions of Canada—that honourable senators attend our meetings. We are not getting the highest praise from our regions; they do not realize what a great job many of you are doing on their behalf. Since we are going to the great City of Quebec where Senator Flynn, perhaps, would not even be known, I thought that he might come to our meeting there. In fact, I would ask that all honourable senators, when we go to the capital of their local provinces, come to our meetings—because you can all come even though you are not members—and participate in the hearings. We will not be taking votes, we will just be hearing witnesses. We would ask the local members or the local senators to participate in their local communities, local provinces and local regions so that, at least, people in those regions will know who their senators are.

I leave this point to the discretion of our committee. It is a solid, sound committee which recognizes the regions and provinces represented in the Senate. We will certainly use our discretion to try to have the media cover only the senator who is speaking. We will then try to have the witnesses in such a position that the television or radio can cover the witnesses as they are speaking. As a senator asks a question, the camera can then revert back to the questioner. We will try to tell them that if they are to come in and cover the proceedings, this will be the method that we will use rather than having the camera sweeping around through the senators to see who is combing their hair, cleaning their nose, or something of that nature.

Honourable senators, if I have to write to every radio and television station in all the local communities across the country as well as the cable television stations—which cover 60 per cent of the people of Canada today, and they probably want to cover it for their local communities—to ask them for permission and to make sure that they do it right, without leaving it to the discretion of the chairman or the steering committee, it will take considerable time. My motion states that if they are causing any disruption, we have the right to ask them to leave. That, honourable senators, might be worth a good try in order to get the public's interest. Something could be broadcast in each of the capitals of our provinces, where all of the senators representing the different regions can participate in the hearing. Even those who are not members will certainly be welcome to participate. I hope that you will give this your best shot so that we can bring good results back here.

We have a big job to do. We would like to be back here quickly. Our plans at the present time, if all goes well, are to try to report back to the Senate by June 16, if possible. We might not be able to do it, but at this time we are hoping to be able to report back by June 16. That will give us at least two weeks in which we can have third reading and Royal Assent before the end of June. If we get your cooperation and if we can go forward with full speed ahead, our committee is prepared to work hard and do a good job for you and report back, because this is an important matter. The minister is anxious to have it reported, you are anxious to get it done, and I am so anxious to get at it that I do not even want to wait for its passage in the other place; we want to do a pre-study so that we can get at it before they ever pass the bill. If they want to drag it for another week or two, that is up to them; we can be doing the study here while they are doing one over there. So, honourable senators, with your support, we can do our work. Let us go forward together.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am going to move the adjournment of this debate until tomorrow. Meanwhile, I will try to obtain a copy of the conditions that the Senate set out on the last occasion that committee hearings were televised. Tomorrow I shall try to persuade my honourable friend and other honourable senators that if we pass this motion, we should find a way of making it clear that the televising will be done according to certain terms and conditions; because I do not think that we can simply leave it to the good offices of the chairman to try to persuade television networks or stations how to conduct themselves once they are in the room. I believe that we have to set up the terms and conditions—

Senator Frith: We left it to you to do it. Is he not capable of doing it?

Senator Murray: I beg my honourable friend's pardon. They did not leave it to me. I informed the Senate that there had been agreement in writing as to how the coverage was to proceed; and I am suggesting that that be done again.

Senator Frith: We did not discuss it. We did not debate it.

Senator Murray: I am proposing to adjourn the debate for one day. I will obtain a copy of the terms that we set out on the last occasion, and I will see if I can persuade honourable senators to approve the motion subject to those terms. That is what I intend to do.

Senator Bonnell: May I ask the Leader of the Government a question? I would like to ask my colleagues in the Senate to agree with your suggestion to postpone the debate until tomorrow and give you that opportunity, if you can give me your assurance that you will bring it forward tomorrow and that we will not hold it up for further days. The Leader of the Government has my blessing.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: I would not want him to have your blessing. I want to protect him from that!

Senator Bonnell: You do not want my blessing?

An Hon. Senator: Withdraw it.

Senator Flynn: I have my own religious minister. I would ask the chairman whether we have had occasion to approve the budget of the committee. He speaks of urgency and of a major travelling program. I was wondering if we had had occasion to approve the budget and to discuss the program of the committee.

Senator Bonnell: The budget was before the subcommittee this morning and it will be before the full committee on Thursday.

On motion of Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—DEFINITION AND INTERNATIONAL RAMIFICATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I will not take much time today as we begin the process of seeking clarification of the meaning of the Meech Lake communiqué; but I am interested in a number of developments which have occurred with respect to the interpretation of that communiqué. The Leader of the Government stated, as I recall, on the CTV program "Question Period" on Sunday that the use of the expression "distinct society" does not change the distribution of powers nor does it give the Government of Quebec any power which it does not presently have. But I noted that a Quebec minister, Mr. Rémillard, has cited the use of the expression "distinct society" as an additional strength with legal significance which the Province of Quebec can use before the courts in asserting its language law. I noted that the Premier of Quebec has gone a considerable distance in asserting that the use of that expression now gives the Province of Quebec an additional international presence.

I ask the Leader of the Government: Can he clarify the differences in interpretation? One cannot say, on the one hand, as he says, that it has no legal significance, and yet have the Premier of Quebec and a minister say, "Yes, it is going to strengthen our hands before the courts, and it is also going to permit us to have a stronger position in international summits." I ask the Leader of the Government whether he can try to reconcile what appear to me to be different conclusions from the same expression.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I did not say that it has no legal significance. Of course it has legal significance. We propose to put in the Constitution that the Constitution shall be interpreted in a manner that is consistent with the fact that Quebec forms a distinct society within Canada. Of course that has legal significance.

What I said in the course of the interview on the CTV program "Question Period" was that that provision does not alter the distribution of powers; nor does it purport to; nor has anyone suggested that it does.

Senator MacEachen: So the Leader of the Government is saying that Premier Bourassa is correct in saying that the use of the expression "distinct society" has a legal significance, which permits Quebec to assert itself internationally, a course which will not be open to any other Canadian province.

Senator Murray: I must say that I did not see that particular comment of Premier Bourassa. I did, however, read very carefully the comments attributed to Mr. Rémillard in Le Devoir this morning, and I must say that I quite agree that the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society is being put in the Constitution for a purpose, which is that the courts are to interpret the Constitution in a manner that is consistent with the fact that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

We did not go on from there to enumerate the various ways in which Quebec is a distinct society. I think it is hardly necessary to do so.

An Hon. Senator: Oh, oh!

Senator Murray: My friend knows some of the ways in which Quebec forms a distinct society. It is the only province which has as a majority a French-speaking population. It has its own Civil Code. There are various obligations upon Quebec, under the existing Constitution, as to its education system, and so on and so forth.

Senator Austin: What is the change?

Senator Murray: The change is that the Constitution will be interpreted by the courts in a way that is consistent with the existence of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada. Will that give Quebec greater room to manoeuvre, more authority in order to protect, promote and preserve the distinctiveness of its society? Of course it will. Will it be used as an argument before the courts with regard to language legislation? Of course it will.

Senator MacEachen: We now have a clarification which clearly states that the use of the expression "distinct society" will have legal significance; that it will empower Quebec before the courts to assert a protection for language laws because of being that "distinct society." I would say that that is what the Leader of the Government has said, and that is considerable clarification, that that is available to the Province of Quebec in the courts and not available to any other province—because no other province can utilize the expression "distinct society".

● (1510)

I come now to the international aspect. I refer to an article in the Toronto Star written by one Robert McKenzie. That article states, in part:

Describing his meeting earlier in the day with the pretender to the French throne, the premier said:

"This morning, I met the Comte de Paris, the descendant of Louis XV, and we discussed the Constitution and the fact that Quebec will be recognized as a distinct society.

The article goes on to state, and this is a quote from the Premier:

This means that our position in international summits, at the Francophone summit, is consolidated.

Obviously, the Premier of Quebec is now asserting, based on the words "distinct society", an international presence for the Province of Quebec. I find that quite unusual.

Senator Flynn: Tell him you disagree with him!

Senator MacEachen: I find it unusual that there is involved in this phrase an opportunity for Quebec to assert an international presence, according to the Premier of Quebec, which is not available to any other province of Canada. That is what the implication is.

Senator Flynn: Tell him that!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Bring him here as a witness.

Senator MacEachen: Senator Flynn has said, "Tell him." I am not telling him; I am seeking clarification.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Flynn: You are offended!

Senator MacEachen: If Premier Bourassa is correct, we ought to know that the phrase "distinct society" will give Quebec an international standing not available to any other province, and, if he is wrong, he ought to know that before we get too confused.

Senator Frith: And the minister should tell him that.

Senator Roblin: He already has that. You should know that!

Senator Frith: Roblin for Premier of Quebec!

Senator MacEachen: If he has that, he got it from this government.

Senator Roblin: No, from your government.

Senator Murray: There is certainly some difference between the statement of Premier Bourassa—that is, that the position of Quebec at Francophone summits will be consolidated—and the rather wider interpretation that the Leader of the Opposition wishes to place on that statement.

As I have said, I have not seen the statement. I take note that he has been reading from the Toronto Star, but the fact of the matter is that it is not just the phrase "distinct society" that is important, it is the fact that we propose to place in the Constitution the obligation on the courts to interpret that Constitution in a manner that is consistent with the fact that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society. I am sorry the honourable senator finds that offensive.

He should note that we also propose to place in the Constitution an obligation on the courts to interpret the Constitution in a manner consistent with the fact that there is a French-speaking dimension to Canada, which is concentrated in Quebec and present in the rest of the country, and an English-speaking dimension to Canada, which is present in Quebec and concentrated in the rest of the country.

So, what we are doing here is placing upon the courts the obligation to interpret the Constitution in a manner that is consistent with (a) the existence of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada and, (b), with what, in two words, I would describe as linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic of our federation.

I think we have done something very important in describing and defining the nature of our country. I remind my honourable friends that in the Charter of Rights there is the recognition of multiculturalism. What we are doing here, in the body of the Constitution, is placing an interpretative clause which, I think, recognizes the reality of our country.

Senator MacEachen: I appreciate the commentary, but I really want to know whether in the mind of the Government of Canada the expression "distinct society" in itself and by its conclusion confers any additional international status on Quebec that is not possessed by the Province of Ontario. That is what I want to know. Does it give a leg up to Quebec in the mind of the Government of Canada to assert an international presence not available to the Province of Ontario?

Senator Flynn: You can draw your own conclusions!

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, there is another aspect to this matter that concerns me.

Senator Frith: What about the answer?

Senator Murray: I have answered the question as best I can. We are proposing to put an interpretative clause in the Constitution. Whether their lordships will ever be in a position to make findings as to the role of Quebec at the Francophone summit is something that is, to put it mildly, hypothetical.

Senator Frith: There is nothing in this proposal that limits this to just the courts. It says: "The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with"—et cetera.

Would the federal government not have to interpret the Constitution that way if one province, Quebec, wanted to have the increased international status that the Premier of Quebec has talked about? He does not have to go to the courts for that; he goes to the federal government and says: "We have this status because you agreed the Constitution would be so interpreted." You cannot just lay it off on the courts.

Senator Murray: I am glad the honourable senator has asked that question because it gives me an opportunity to say that the present government arrived at a very good agreement with the Government of Quebec, the Government of Ontario and the Government of New Brunswick in connection with the Francophone summit, an agreement which preserves the role of the Government of Canada in international affairs and gives those provinces the right to participate in the deliberations of those conferences, as they sought.

I would have thought that honourable senators opposite would rejoice in the agreement we were able to arrive at with those provinces in connection with the Francophone summit. I think the arrangement that we were able to agree to, in a spirit of cooperative federalism, is the best indication of our attitude on these matters.

Senator Frith: The Premier of Quebec is not just talking about the Francophone summit. The Leader of the Government keeps talking about the Francophone summit. The Premier of Quebec has said that Quebec will have increased international status as a result of this accord and as a result of the fact that the Constitution will state, "The Constitution shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with," et cetera.

So we are not just talking about the Francophone summit. The question that has been asked by the Leader of the Opposition is: Does the federal government interpret this in such a way that the Province of Quebec will have an international status that other provinces will not have because they have not been deemed to have a distinct status?

So, we do rejoice, but we would really rejoice if the leader answered the question.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the word "interpretation" does refer to the interpretation the courts will place on the Constitution.

Senator Frith: It doesn't say that!

Senator Murray: That is what it means.

Senator Frith: We will see.

Senator Murray: The ultimate clarification the Leader of the Opposition seeks will come when we have the Constitutional text agreed to.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, as a result of this discussion a question has occurred to me which troubles me considerably. The Leader of the Government in the Senate has declined to try to explain what is meant by the words a "distinct society". He says that the term "distinct society" will go into the Constitution and we will leave it to the courts to decide what it means in relation to the Province of Quebec. Would my honourable friend not agree with me that this is a most unusual way to write a constitution, that surely the legislature should try to write a constitution which is explainable and subject to interpretation within the words contained in the Constitution, and that we should only expect the courts to enter the picture when there is some lack of clarity or some difference of opinion as to how the meaning of the words embodied in the Constitution should be applied? Surely we are not going to be asked at some future time to incorporate in the Constitution this idea that there is a distinct society in the province of Quebec. I think one could make a very good case for saying that there is a distinct society in the Island of Cape Breton, where both the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition come from. That we are going to put these terms in our Constitution without having any idea what they mean or, at least, without the Leader of the Government in this chamber being able or willing to try to explain to us what they mean, and that we are going to say, "We will write the Constitution even though we do not know what this 'distinct society' means, and we will leave it to the courts to tell us at some future time," I think is highly unusual and most inappropriate.

● (1520)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is not very unusual at all. As a matter of fact, I think my honourable friend will find that the Canada Act passed by the previous Parliament a few years ago asserts such rights as Aboriginal rights without further defining what they mean—

Senator Argue: Look where that got them!

Senator Murray:—and that the Charter contains an interpretative section to the effect that the Charter—and I do not have it in front of me—was to be interpreted in a way consistent with the multicultural heritage, and so on and so forth. So it is not unusual to leave these matters stand in fairly broad phrases and have the interpretations come later.

I have already indicated off the top of my head some of the ways in which I believe Quebec is a distinct society. It is the only province that has a majority Francophone population. Quebec has its own Civil Code. There are special obligations in the existing Constitution with regard to Quebec in matters of education and so forth. One could make a list of ways in which Quebec is a distinct society, but I do not know that it would add very much. I would remind my friends opposite that a "distinct society" is the very phrase their party used at its convention last fall. Surely they did not use it without some idea of what they meant.

Senator Flynn: They probably did not know what they were talking about.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—EFFECT ON PROPERTY AND CIVIL RIGHTS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, a moment ago the minister said that it is questionable that a question ever would go to the courts concerning the effect of the proposed amendment on Quebec's status in international law.

I want to raise a question concerning the effect of the proposed amendment on Quebec's status as it relates to a highly controversial matter which, in the past, has gone to the courts. As the Leader of the Government knows, subsection 13 of section 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867 was included principally to provide protection for the special institutions of Quebec. That is the property and civil rights clause. Now, from time to time the Parliament of Canada has purported to enact legislation relating to matters ordinarily exclusively under the legislative authority of the provincial legislatures, specifically to matters included under property and civil rights within the provinces.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, to the minister is: Will the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society give Quebec additional protection against the kind of emergency legislation intruding upon provincial jurisdiction with regard to property and civil rights within the province, the kinds of jurisdiction on which acts such as the War Measures Act and the Anti-Inflation Act encroached back in 1914 and again in the 1970s, or will Quebec's position with regard to jurisdiction over property and civil rights remain exactly as it is now if this proposed Constitutional amendment is made? I ask that question because it is precisely the kind of question which will come up in the courts. I am sure that it is the kind of question which the minister and his advisers have discussed. It is a question which has to be to the fore in the mind of everyone concerned with constitutional matters.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the honourable senator is asking me to speculate on what defence or what argument the Government of Quebec might use in a given case before the courts. His question would be perhaps better put to the law officers or to the Minister of Justice of the Province of Quebec.

Senator Frith: What is your legislative intent?

Senator Murray: I shall examine the question the honourable senator has asked more carefully to see if there is a response that I can properly make to it in the Oral Question Period of the Senate.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, am I to understand that the government did not anticipate this question, with the result that the minister responsible for these discussions is not prepared to answer what every constitutional lawyer in the country would regard as a basic question? Surely, in going into these discussions, the government had in mind what the expression "a distinct society" would imply with regard to the interpretation of subsection 13 of section 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will see if there is a reply. The question that has been asked is one that would have to be answered, if at all, by our legal experts, because the honourable senator has also asked me to speculate on what claim or defence Quebec might enter as a result of this recognition of the province's status as a distinct society. I cannot speculate on that matter any more than I can speculate on what the findings of the court might be. There are considerable powers under which the Government of Canada invoked the War Measures Act some years ago and brought in the anti-inflation program. Those powers are there in the Constitution. I think the honourable senator is asking me to speculate whether the new recognition of Quebec as a distinct society can be used in some manner to frustrate those powers.

Senator Frith: That is not what he is asking at all.

Senator Flynn: Sure, it is.

Senator Murray: That is a very involved question and one that I will certainly not try to answer off the top of my head.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I am looking for information. I am not trying to enter into debate. I am having difficulty getting that information. I am not interested in what kind of argument might be put forward by counsel on behalf of the Government of Quebec. The situation is that the Government of Canada is bringing forward a Constitutional proposal which contains language which will have the effect of making it necessary to interpret the Constitution of Canada so as to give recognition to the fact that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society. I am trying to ascertain what was in the mind of the minister, what was in the mind of the government, when they used those words. It is a specific Constitutional question, one which relates to a topic which over the years has been of paramount importance. I am sure that the government and even the minister, who poses as an innocent in these matters, has thought about this question and that he does not have to rely on some functionary in the Department of Justice to answer it. It is an unavoidable question. My question is this: Since subsection 92.13 was included in 1867 because of the distinctive institutions of Quebec, is it the intention of the Government of Canada that the requirement that the Constitution be interpreted so as to treat Quebec as "a distinct society" shall strengthen, weaken or leave unchanged the legislative jurisdiction of the legislature of Quebec with regard to property and civil rights in the province? I am not asking the minister to speculate about what some ingenious lawyer acting for Quebec might argue before a court. I am asking what is the understanding and intention of the Government of Canada?

• (1530)

Senator Murray: I am afraid that I cannot add very much to what I have already told the Senate. I will read the senator's question more carefully to see whether there is a reply that I can properly bring to that question, which, with respect, still seems to me to be quite speculative.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while the government leader is doing that, could he consider the question in this light? This is how I understand it. The federal government sits down with the provincial governments to deal with amendments to the Constitution. At some point it seems reasonable to assume that representatives of the federal government would have a draft and would say, "We propose that the Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with"—and so on. Would they not then turn to their law officers to ask what would be the effect on the interpretation of the Constitution, including the Constitution Act of 1867, if they were to do a certain thing? It seems to me that any lawyer would say whether it would have an effect, and, if so, what that effect would be.

Senator Flynn: It will have—

Senator Frith: Perhaps you should have consulted Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: Maybe he should have consulted you.

Senator Frith: He might very well have, but I am suggesting that he would have consulted neither me nor you, Senator Flynn, but some people from the Justice Department or some constitutional lawyers to ask: "If we were to provide in the Constitution that it shall be interpreted in that way, what would some of the effects be?" What effect, for example, would it have on the property and civil rights subsection of section 92? Would it give the Province of Quebec, because we are saying that the society is distinct, any more rights under subsection 13 than those given to other provinces? If you were then told yes, what we are now asking is: Did you say that that is fine, that you don't mind if it has that effect? That is what the question is. And perhaps when you try to get the answer, you could let us know that.

Senator Murray: I am glad to have that clarification because the question is, as I suspected, highly speculative. The honourable senator is asking me to state what I think the courts might, in certain circumstances, find.

Senator MacEachen: You don't know!

Senator Murray: I am not ready to go down that path.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, what we are hearing is that what the government intended is highly speculative. That is the answer.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask a question for clarification, but it has to do with another part of the communiqué, so perhaps I can defer to those who are on this particular subject.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate made reference to the fact that at the Liberal convention last fall there was a resolution which included the words "distinct society". He has overlooked the fact that well before the convention began that proposed resolution had been amended to delete the words "distinct society". Obviously, he was not aware of that.

Senator Murray: I would have to check the record on that, and I shall. If I was incorrect, I apologize in advance, but I had copies of a number of resolutions. Three resolutions on Senate reform were passed by that convention, some of which contradicted each other.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—PROTECTION OF ANGLOPHONE MINORITY

Hon. Hartland de M. Molson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if in this memorandum the definition of "distinct society" envisages any better protection for the people whom I might be thought to represent, the anglophone minority in Quebec. As senators are well aware—the government is certainly well aware—over the last few years the language situation in Quebec has been extremely muddled. The situation has been a very unhappy one and a large number of people have left the province. Finally, in recent years matters have settled down to a point at which I think there is a better understanding than ever before between the people of the two languages in Quebec. Now, all of a sudden, thrown into the pot is a new definition which I believe could have a poor effect upon the good relations within the province of Quebec. I think the use of the term "distinct society", without further clarification, is a very dangerous one. I am quite sure that the anglophone minority of Quebec, which numbers about 800,000 people, will be very disturbed unless some further clarification is forthcoming. May I ask whether the government has taken that into account?

In my judgment, therefore, as I said in an interview on the weekend, the anglophones of Quebec and the francophones outside Quebec are very definitely covered in that recognition.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—JUDICIAL INTERPRETATION OF TERMS

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I have a question on the same point.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators—

Senator Gigantès: I am prepared to yield to Senator Olson, but I am afraid that it will break the flow. I am most thankful to him for letting me proceed.

The Honourable the Leader of the Government said that to try to pin down what particular use might be made of the phrasing in the Constitution by Quebec in the courts is highly speculative. Am I wrong in saying that he said that?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I don't think so.

Senator Gigantès: I beg your pardon?

Senator Murray: I don't think you are wrong; it sounds all right so far.

Senator Gigantès: What he is saying, therefore—and forgive me for descending, if you like, from the sublime to the ridiculous—is that it is not possible to pin down every possible eventuality, to make rules in advance that will ensure that nothing is likely to go wrong. Yet, he was asking Senator Bonnell to do that very thing regarding media coverage of hearings. The principle is the same. Therefore, it is all right to want to pin everything down on something as trivial as media coverage of proceedings, but it does not seem to be all right to want to pin everything down about something as fundamental as the Constitution of this country.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SENATE REFORM

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I want to ask for some clarification on the correct interpretation of what Premier Getty obtained from the conference. It is well known that he went there seeking an assurance from the federal government that it would soon discuss, and continue to discuss at all subsequent meetings, Senate reform until the problem is resolved, as I understand it. That undertaking by the federal government will be contained in the proposal that will be brought to the Parliament of Canada within the next several weeks, I believe. There have been several interpretations of what Senator Getty obtained—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Frith: He might make the next Alberta list!

Senator Olson: —of what Premier Getty obtained. I ask this question because, at least in his public announcements, Premier Getty has been far more specific in terms of what he is seeking than simply outlining Senate reform. He had something that was articulated far beyond what is called the Triple-E Senate, and I will not go into that unless there is some misunderstanding about what that means.

● (1540)

What I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate is whether or not the federal government had agreed to put Senate reform on the agenda of future meetings until something similar to a Triple-E Senate was achieved. Alternatively, will that item continue to appear on the agenda until they achieve what they call Senate reform, because obviously there are degrees of Senate reform?

The other part of my question is: Has the federal government agreed that they will make amendments or changes, either formal or by informal agreement, so that any future Senate appointments will be made only from nominations submitted by provincial premiers?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I can confirm what I understand to be my friend's understanding with respect to the last part of his question. With respect to Senate appointments, the communiqué states as follows:

—until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished the federal government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal government.

My honourable friend is asking how long Senate reform will appear as an item on the agenda. He is also asking what constitutes Senate reform, because he says there might be different stages of Senate reform, and so forth.

Senator Frith: Since the answer to the first question is a century or so, that surely determines the answer to the second question.

Senator Murray: Senate reform will remain on the agenda unless and until there is agreement to take it off.

Senator Olson: Perhaps the Leader of the Government could also answer the other part of my question. Was there an endorsement by the Prime Minister or by the federal government at Meech Lake of a Triple-E Senate and/or the implications that are involved therein?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer is no. We have undertaken to develop a proposal for Senate reform and to place it before the premiers at the First Ministers' meeting that is held on that subject. We are aware that while Premier Getty and perhaps some others favour the so-called Triple-E model, there are other views in other provinces and, of course, we shall have to canvass all of those views at a First Ministers' Conference.

Senator Olson: I have a final question. There were some comments made by the Deputy Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at a meeting in Camrose, Alberta, a few days before the meeting at Meech Lake. Those comments differ somewhat from the interpretation that Premier Getty is putting on the undertaking or assurance that he obtained at Meech Lake. I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could tell us which one of those two different interpretations of what is involved in "reform of the Senate" is, in fact, the government's position.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator would have to show me the quotations that he is referring to before I could make any comment on that question.

Senator Olson: Perhaps that could await another day, honourable senators.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary on this same clause, and this is a question for clarification only.

With respect to the clause just referred to by the Leader of the Government in the Senate and by Senator Olson, I take it that the word "only" can be read between the words "appoint" and "persons" on the second line. If you read it the way it is, it says:

—until constitutional amendments regarding the Senate are accomplished the federal government shall appoint persons from lists of candidates provided by provinces where vacancies occur and who are acceptable to the federal government.

I suppose you could interpret that as saying that they will do that, but not that exclusively. Do I take it that it is the intent to appoint only from lists provided by provincial governments and to appoint persons from those lists who are acceptable to the federal government? In other words, the word "only" is intended there.

Senator Murray: Certainly this will be the process for Senate appointments.

Senator Frith: I understand that, but as it presently stands you could read this as saying that the federal government will appoint persons from such lists, but not only persons from such lists. I take it that the intention was that in the meantime only persons from such lists would be appointed.

Senator Murray: That is a fair interpretation, yes.

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate who will be responsible for presenting the lists of candidates to fill possible vacancies in the Senate from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have not really examined that question nor have I discussed it, but I will reflect on that matter and bring back a reply another day.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS— AGENDA ITEM

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question which I would like to address to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday in reply to a question with respect to whether or not the Prime Minister would entertain some changes to that agreement, the Prime Minister said that he had an open mind. Of course, it cannot be changed fundamentally, but he said that he was open to suggestion.

I would like to put to you that the following should be included among the topics to be discussed at the next First Ministers' Conference: Specifically, the question put by the first inhabitants of this country. When I see that, for instance, the Conference of First Ministers has agreed to discuss fish, personally, I think it would be most unwise to transfer that jurisdiction to the provinces. Even if it were to be transferred, after all, it is merely a question of who should have jurisdiction over that resource, and I am sure you agree with me that that is a lot less important than giving due recognition to the rights of the first inhabitants of this country.

I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he would entertain a request to add that question of aboriginal rights to the specific issues that are to be dealt with in that annual First Ministers' Conference.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the situation with regard to constitutional recognition of aboriginal rights is as follows: We came to the end of a particular process some weeks ago under circumstances that the honourable senators will be aware of. At that time there was a federal proposal on the table supported by a good number of provinces, but not by the required number of provinces and not, as it turned out, by the representatives of the aboriginal peoples.

That proposal is still on the table and the Prime Minister has made it very clear that if at any time there appears to be a possibility of agreement around that proposal, he would not be long in convening a constitutional conference to reach that agreement.

Meanwhile, however, there does not seem to be any point in convening further conferences on that subject. There will have to be some movement somewhere before we would be justified in calling such a conference.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—DEFINITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—EFFECT ON USE OF FRENCH OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my questions are all supplementary to previous subjects. I will deal with the first one in sequence, and it refers to the distinct society and the position of the francophone communities outside of Quebec. Quite obviously, the distinct society is based on the fact that the largest proportion of francophones are in Quebec.

● (1550)

Does the use of that term in any way imply a responsibility for the Province of Quebec insofar as the use of the French language outside of Quebec is concerned, and, more importantly, does it in any way reduce the responsibility of the federal government with regard to the use of the French language outside of Quebec?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The answer to the second part of the question is: Definitely not.

Insofar as the first part of the question is concerned, the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society obviously does not confer on Quebec extraterritorial obligations with regard to the use of the French language in other provinces of Canada. I would draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that the recognition of what I have referred to as "linguistic duality" is linked to the commitment of Parliament and all the provincial legislatures in the exercise of their respective powers to preserve that fundamental characteristic which I have described as "linguistic duality."

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SENATE REFORM—
RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Thank you. My other supplementary is with regard to the Senate. I agree with some of the comments that were made, and I suspect that what has been done will substantially retard Senate reform and I regret that that should be so.

However, in terms of the lists of names that the provinces will now provide, will it be in order for a province to provide a list with only one name on it?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that is the kind of detail that remains to be worked out.

I disagree with my friend that this will necessarily retard the work of Senate reform. I think it may expedite it.

Senator Frith: That is some detail we would like to hear.

Senator Molgat: On the same subject, is it correct, from what the minister has said, that the federal government will come forward at the next meeting with its proposal for Senate reform? Will the initiative be up to the federal government in that it will not wait for the provinces to come forward with proposals? Will the federal government make such a proposal?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I suspect there will be a great many proposals for Senate reform on the table when the First Ministers meet to discuss that subject within a year of proclamation, or before the end of 1988, in any case.

Goodness knows, we do not lack for suggestions. We have even constituted parliamentary committees which have made recommendations on this matter. There has been the MacDonald Royal Commission, the Pepin-Robarts Task Force, and so forth.

The federal government will come to the table with perhaps various options to propose, but we will have a proposal to put on the table for the benefit of the First Ministers. We fully expect that many provinces will come forward with proposals of their own.

Senator Molgat: Will the proposal of the federal government be discussed beforehand by Parliament, and by the Senate in particular?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my friend is getting quite a distance ahead of himself. I really have not had an opportunity to think about that or to discuss it with my colleagues, but I shall do so.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—EFFECT ON TERRITORIES' ASPIRATIONS FOR PROVINCIAL STATUS

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

[Senator Murray.]

At the meeting at Meech Lake on the weekend, as usual, people from the Yukon and Northwest Territories became pawns in a game of give-away between the Prime Minister and the ten premiers without even the courtesy of being invited to the meetings which dealt with their future.

Before 1982 all that was required for the Yukon or the Northwest Territories to become provinces was an agreement between the Yukon or the Northwest Territories and the Government of Canada. In 1982 seven provinces, representing 51 per cent of the population, had to reach an agreement. On the weekend it was agreed that there could be an absolute veto from any province. This seems to me to have effectively killed the opportunity for the Yukon ever to become a province.

Could the Leader of the Government advise me whether or not the Prime Minister has effectively bargained away the option for the two Territories to ever become provinces?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not agree with my honourable friend that unanimity causes such a straitjacket for the federation. To do that one would have to believe that there is bad faith rather than good faith in these discussions.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Look up the history of the country. History proves that unanimity has been the stumbling block.

Senator Murray: I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that unanimity was achieved on the Unemployment Insurance amendment of 1940, the Old Age Pension amendment of 1951 and the Supplementary Benefits of 1965. The straitjacket thesis is hard to sustain.

Senator MacEachen: Those are rather selective instances.

Senator Murray: The unhappy experience of 1981 demonstrates the perils of proceeding without unanimity.

Senator MacEachen: You can employ it, but, for God's sake, don't defend it.

Senator Murray: I do defend it. My honourable friend defended it when he was a member of the Pearson government which brought forward the Fulton-Favreau formula which provided for unanimity on most constitutional amendments. My honourable friend defended a veto when they brought forward the Victoria formula, which they proposed again in 1981, which provided for vetoes for Quebec, Ontario and certain regional combinations of provinces. The problem is that my friend is against the equality of provinces.

Senator MacEachen: I do not find that to be a problem at all. The provinces are not equal.

Senator Murray: The premiers who were able to agree, as they did, on the important issues on the table at Meech Lake will, when the time comes, be able to achieve agreement on such matters as provincial status.

Frankly, the creation of new provinces and the extension of provinces into territories are matters on which every province should be able to say yes or no, because matters such as these do have a major impact on fiscal relations, including equalization. These are not matters to be taken lightly. They would affect the numerical operation of the amending formula.

I frankly believe that it would have been extremely difficult, if not impossible, to have proceeded to create new provinces with the agreement of only seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population, just as I believe that political reality would have dictated that no federal government would have proceeded with a major reform of federal institutions such as the Senate and the Supreme Court on the basis of the minimum requirement of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population. Political reality is that that would have been highly unlikely to happen.

● (1600)

Senator MacEachen: Parsimonious government, yes!

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, it seems to me that we are changing the rules in the middle of the game. This was never the case before. When anyone else wanted to become a province, they did not have to have unanimous consent from everybody else. When Alberta was made a province, Nova Scotia did not have to agree to it. The Government of Canada had to agree to it—and that was good enough. People trusted the Government of Canada. When we had Mr. Diefenbaker as Prime Minister, at least he had some northern vision and he cared for the people of the north. We in the north want to know that when decisions affecting us are taken, decisions as serious as those that were made on the weekend, that our elected people are at the meetings, that they are consulted and that they have full participation in the discussions. Instead of moving away from colonialism, we are moving deeper into it.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the governments of which my friend speaks are not now provincial governments and they are not involved in the process of amending the Constitution. That is the fact. There were, as there should have been, eleven First Ministers around the table making those decisions last week at Meech Lake. That will also be the case when the First Ministers meet in a few weeks' time. There is no provision for participation by other than the federal government and provinces in this amending process. The amending process is set out in the Constitution that we passed here in 1982.

The Hon. the Speaker: Senator Buckwold.

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: All of my questions have been asked, thank you.

Senator Flynn: More than once!

YUKON

CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL SERVICE—EFFECT ON LOCAL BUSINESS PEOPLE

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question on another subject. Marlin Travel has applied to have the Yukon and Northwest Territories included in its contract to handle former Central Travel Agency work, which they will now be doing. Both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories were exempted from the Central Travel Agency department by the Treasury Board in 1969; that was reaffirmed in 1977. Marlin Travel is now trying to get the two territories back in, which appears to me to be a reversal of the decentralization, which is really the way that we should be going.

We have some competent, capable local people in both territories who have done an excellent job of handling our travel arrangements. We do not need anyone from Toronto, Montreal, or anywhere else to come in and try to make our travel arrangements for us in the north.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Lucier: Could I ask the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations to take our concerns to his cabinet colleagues—especially the President of the Treasury Board—and ensure that Yukoners will continue to handle Yukon affairs.

I do not want to make any derogatory comments about Marlin Travel or the work that they will do, all I want to know is that—concerning travel in the Yukon—competent people in the Yukon who are presently doing that work will continue to do it and that no agencies subsidized by the federal government will be allowed to compete with the local business people and effectively run them out of business, which is exactly what will happen if this takes place.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have seen a memorandum prepared by Senator Lucier on this subject and I have already asked for a report on the matter. When I have received it, I will advise the honourable senator.

Senator Lucier: Thank you.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—ADVICE GIVEN ON DEFINITION AND EFFECT

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Many Canadians have said that we live in a country that is ungovernable. There have been occasions when it would appear so, and I am sure that in the negotiations of recent weeks the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate may have thought so as well. But I wish to compliment him on the role that he has played and to say that, along with other senators, I feel honoured that this role has been given to a member of the Senate to carry out.

I do not ask him for a reply to this question today, but in the lead-up negotiating period, which he has conducted and has carried the primary responsibility for, he must have been required to give advice to the negotiator for the Province of Quebec as to what the effect and meaning of "distinct society" would be. That advice he would have given in legal and other terms. I suggest that probably in addition to the legal aspects it is very much a political question as well—and I use “political” in its finest sense.

The Leader of the Government would also have had to negotiate with the Premier and his associate ministers for the Province of Alberta. Some rather extreme statements were made by that Premier as to what he would and would not agree to. In the course of it, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, the Leader of the Government in the Senate, would have had to have interpreted what the intent, meaning and effect of these words would be to Premier Getty as well.

My question is: Could he please, for the benefit of the Senate, come to the Senate with a statement as to the advice that was given in those negotiations as to what the true meaning of these words would be and what the effect of these words would be in order to achieve that element of agreement that was eventually reached? If there was advice given to bring about this desirable conclusion, then perhaps the Senate could be advised of what that advice was. It would be useful to the Senate, and, perhaps, useful to the country.

Let me tell the honourable senator that as I have made my way around the country discussing these matters with provincial premiers and ministers, on the question of the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society there was, I gathered, a readiness and a willingness on the part of provincial governments to recognize that political reality for what it is. There was also a readiness to recognize the English- and French-speaking dimensions of our country and to accept the commitment that we propose to enshrine in the Constitution of the Parliament of Canada and of all of the provincial legislatures to preserve that fundamental characteristic of the federation. The honourable senator can be assured that for each and every province—and in some cases I discussed the matter with their Attorneys General and officials of Departments of Justice—there was considerable work done as to the meaning of that recognition for that province and for the country as a whole. So, in the event, as the honourable senators knows, the First Ministers came to the conclusion that this recognition added something important and valuable to our Constitution, and agreed that our Constitution should accord that recognition and that it would be enriching to our country rather than detract in any way from anyone's present constitutional prerogatives or jurisdictions.

● (1610)

Senator McElman: Honourable senators, I appreciate the answer given. I am not pressing for an answer today. I simply hope that the Leader of the Government will reflect on this and not bring a document but bring his advice as to what occurred. I can well understand and I appreciate greatly that there was that element of goodwill among the First Ministers to agree that there is within Canada a distinct society as embodied in the province of Quebec. But, at the same time, with that goodwill and with that purpose, they must have asked, as in the case of Premier Getty, “Well, what does this mean? What will its constitutional effect be? What do you believe the Supreme Court of Canada will draw from these words?” Those questions had to have been asked. Any of us could agree without any problem whatsoever, I am sure, that the Province of Quebec constitutes a distinct society within the nation. It is simply a fact. But, then, each premier, in his responsibility to his people, has to ask, “But, having accepted the principle, what is the effect of including those words in the Constitution?” They have to ask that before they say, “Yes.” Would the Leader of the Government reflect on that and perhaps give us some guidance?

Senator Flynn: Have a debate on it.

Senator McElman: We have had quite a debate today. I am simply seeking information.

Senator Flynn: I am not sure.

Senator McElman: That is the sort of distrust that has got us into trouble for so many years.

THE SENATE

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—MOTION FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE WITHDRAWN

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Olson, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Corbin:

That the question of privilege raised by Senator Olson, on April 9, (claiming he was improperly prevented from asking a question) be referred to the Committee on Standing Rules and Orders to examine the circumstances related to the question of privilege, and to report its findings and recommendations.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.).

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I know that Senator Murray adjourned the debate. However, I would ask that I may be allowed to explain and, indeed, make an apology. When I raised this question of privilege on April 9, I used certain words that I regret. In the right-hand column of page 891 of the Debates of the Senate, I complained that something said by the chairman in committee was not true. On page 892, I also said that something the chairman said was not true.

This is not the time to make the argument; and I will not try to give an explanation of the point I was trying to make. I merely wish to tender an unqualified apology to Senator Sinclair, chairman of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, for creating and leaving with the Senate a mistaken impression. Therefore, I would like to withdraw those words, which could lead to a wrong impression.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I had left the chamber for much of the discussion which followed the question of privilege. However, I have read the debate, and I am wondering whether Senator Olson would consider it presumptuous of me to ask whether in withdrawing his comments he would consider asking leave to withdraw the motion itself. I say that after having read the debate and having understood what was and still is the essence of his complaint. That has now been clarified, and, in view of what he has just said, perhaps the motion could be withdrawn and the subject considered to have been sufficiently covered. He would, of course, require leave to do so, and he will have to ask for that leave.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, with leave of the seconder of the motion, Senator Corbin, I would ask leave to withdraw the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Perhaps I should place on the record the fact that I had a discussion with Senator Olson about this matter and I also knew that Senator Sinclair, for good reasons, would not be present today. However, I contacted him in Toronto and explained what I understood Senator Olson was going to say, and what I proposed to suggest; and he instructed me to say on his behalf that he would certainly not oppose, and would support, leave being granted to withdraw this motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion withdrawn.

CHILD CARE

SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE
AUTHORIZED TO STUDY FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMITTEE ON CHILD CARE ENTITLED: "SHARING THE RESPONSIBILITY"

Hon. Mira Spivak, pursuant to notice of Thursday, April 9, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology be authorized to examine and report upon the Final Report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Child Care, entitled: "Sharing the Responsibility"; and

That the Committee present its report no later than September 30, 1987.

She said: Honourable senators, the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Child Care has recently tabled its report entitled "Sharing the Responsibility". At the same time, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the relevant ministers of the provinces are in a process of negotiation with the hope of coming forth with a national policy on child care. The Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology considers it important that the Senate also participate in this debate, through the proper channel, by having the committee study this report, particularly since the committee is at present examining child benefits. That is the reason for this motion.

● (1620)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Is the chairman of the committee aware of this motion?

Hon. Arthur Tremblay: Yes.

Senator Frith: Is the mover of the motion aware of any opposition to the motion? I ask that because, if there is no opposition, there is no reason to debate the motion.

Senator Spivak: This motion was passed by the committee. I omitted to mention that.

Senator Frith: Has there been any indication that other honourable senators wish to debate the motion at this time?

Senator Spivak: The committee has not yet looked at the report.

Senator Frith: I meant in the Senate.

Senator Spivak: I have no idea.

Senator Frith: I have not been told that anyone else wishes to debate this motion. I think we should support the motion.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 6, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there is a rumour that the government will propose that the Senate adjourn at the end of today's sitting until Tuesday next. Can the acting Deputy Leader of the Government tell us whether the government proposes to adjourn today until Tuesday next, or whether the Senate will be sitting tomorrow?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, there was consideration given to adjourning today until Tuesday next. It is true that we do not have a heavy legislative agenda; however, we do have a very heavy committee schedule for tomorrow. I believe there are eight committees scheduled to meet tomorrow, including a meeting of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration at 9.30 a.m. That committee will be considering various committee budgets at that meeting and hopes to present those budgets to the Senate when it sits tomorrow. It is hoped that we will debate those budgets when they are presented tomorrow.

Senator Frith: So we will be sitting tomorrow?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FEDERAL SPENDING POWER—POSITION OF PREMIER OF MANITOBA

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations.

There are stories coming out of Winnipeg now indicating that the premier of that province is having second thoughts about the discussions held last week and, in particular, indicating that he has some serious reservations on at least one of the items, the one regarding the federal spending power.

This is not a surprise to me or, I suspect, to any person who comes from one of the less wealthy provinces, because in the final analysis the federal spending power is a protection for the less wealthy provinces. An erosion of the federal spending power ends up being a gain for the two large central provinces, so Premier Pawley is outlining a very serious concern for the province of Manitoba.

I wonder if the minister could indicate if he has had any discussions with Premier Pawley since last week. If not, could the minister indicate whether there have been any discussions with the Prime Minister's Office in this regard, and whether the minister will be following this matter up? Secondly, are any of the other provinces raising the same points?

With regard to the second part of the question, I had the pleasure of appearing with Premier Pawley on a CBC radio program on the weekend, in the course of which we discussed this and other elements of the Meech Lake accord. I should also note that Prime Minister Mulroney left a few minutes ago for western Canada. In the course of his tour, I know that he will be meeting Premier Pawley, and I am sure that they will be discussing the follow-up to and implementation of the Meech Lake agreement.

Senator Argue: Is that serious?

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SENATE REFORM—
RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I have a question which is supplementary because it deals with Premier Pawley, the province of Manitoba and the constitutional accord. Yesterday, in the process of questioning and in an answer to Senator Frith, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations indicated the procedure. I quote from Hansard, where Senator Frith states as follows:

... In other words, the word "only" is intended there.

That meant that the federal government would select only from the lists submitted by provinces for senators. Senator Murray replied:

Certainly this will be the process for Senate appointments.

In other words, the federal government has agreed that henceforth it will appoint senators only from lists submitted by provincial governments.

My question yesterday was: If a provincial government submits only one name, what would the federal government do? I have a further question today. Because of the position taken by the Province of Manitoba that they are in favour of abolishing the Senate, what would happen—and, God forbid, at the moment all senators from Manitoba are healthy in here, and I do not expect any vacancies—should there be a vacancy and the Province of Manitoba were to refuse to submit a name; in other words, if Manitoba simply said, “We will not submit a name.”? What, then, would be the position of the federal government?

Senator Denis: If and when.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not know what alternative interpretation could be put on the Meech Lake accord except that the Prime Minister has committed himself, and we will commit the Government of Canada to recommend to Her Excellency the appointment of senators whose names are on a list, as submitted by provinces. There has to be good faith on both sides here. Premier Pawley signed—

Senator Frith: Do not count on it!

Senator Murray:—that accord, or agreed to it. I assume, therefore, that he, if he is in office at the time, will, indeed, submit a list of nominees to the Prime Minister of Canada.

As a matter of fact, in the course of the radio interview to which I referred, I told him that I thought it would take heroic virtue on his part to submit a list of Tory names, but that I was looking forward with great interest to seeing the list of New Democratic Party senators that he would submit.

Senator Argue: There won't be any, surely?

Senator Murray: What would happen if only one name were submitted? I expect that between now and the time that the First Ministers meet some agreement will be arrived at as to a minimum number of names that would be on a provincial list.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY OR AS HAVING DISTINCT IDENTITY—DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, dealing again with the Meech Lake accord, I should like to address my question to the Leader of the Government. My concern arises out of an article published in the Globe and Mail of yesterday which quotes freely from an interview with Mr. Rémillard, the Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. In that article he is quoted as having stated that the accord means the recognition that Quebec is entitled to special powers not available to other provinces.

Respecting the accord—and I anticipate a reply from the Leader of the Government regarding this—he went on to say:

These are words that have been weighed, analyzed and studied,—

I presume that the words contained in the accord, having been weighed, analyzed and studied, are now about as firm as they will ever be when the resolution is signed or the accord is re-signed formally at the end of this month.

My question is confined to Quebec's “distinct society.” Honourable senators will note that in paragraph (1)(a) there is the recognition of the existence of French-speaking Canada, “centred in but not limited to” Quebec. There is also the recognition of the existence of an English-speaking Canada, “concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec.” I should like to know what significance the Leader of the Government attaches to that differentiation between the French-speaking populace and the English-speaking populace. Does it imply that, in fact, English-speaking Canadians are to be “concentrated” outside Quebec, whereas English-speaking Canadians in Quebec are going to be confined to the status quo, that is, they are only “present” and they are not unlimited as are French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec?

Honourable senators, that is a fairly convoluted question. I am bringing to your attention my reading of this complicated but most important provision.

My next question refers to paragraph (1)(b) in which Quebec is recognized as a “distinct society.” I underline the word “society”. However, paragraph (3) states that the Quebec legislature and government is to promote a distinct “identity,” referred to in paragraph (1)(b). Well, there is no “identity” referred to in (1)(b); it reads “society”. Can that possibly be an error of draftsmanship, or is there some sort of Cartesian meaning hidden behind those words?

● (1410)

Senator Murray: He retired a couple of years ago!

Senator Lang: I don't think so.

My third question deals with the same section. Note that in subsection (2) Parliament and the provincial legislatures are committed to preserving characteristics in paragraph (1)(a)—that is, English-speaking people outside Quebec and French-speaking inside—but the legislature and—and I emphasize this—the Government of Quebec are dedicated to preserving the distinct identity. Does that mean that Parliament and the provincial legislatures are the only forums in which these matters are to be dealt with? Would not the federal executive or the provincial executives have the same powers as the Quebec parliament and its legislature? Why is the government included in this section dealing with Quebec but not included in the section that deals with Parliament and the provincial legislatures? To amplify that question, does that preclude the executive of the Government of Canada from passing orders in council that would be interpreted to detract from the distinct identity of Quebec?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, first, with regard to the comment attributed to Mr. Rémillard to the effect that the words had been carefully weighed, studied, and so forth, that is a fact. As I indicated yesterday, very considerable discussions were held over a period of almost ten months between representatives of the Government of Quebec, representatives of the other provincial governments and the federal government, on a bilateral basis with provincial governments, including Quebec. Those discussions centred on the five conditions that have been put forward by Quebec. Of course, the attorneys general, the ministers of intergovernmental affairs and the premiers and their legal advisers discussed in some detail various formulations and the significance of various formulations for their governments, legislatures and provinces, for the federal government and for the country as a whole. Mr. Rémillard, then, is perfectly correct in saying that those words were carefully weighed and studied.

As I also said yesterday, Mr. Rémillard is also perfectly right in saying that the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society will, of course, enable Quebec to exercise more rule, more power, more authority to preserve and protect its distinctiveness. It does not, however, alter the distribution of powers between the federal government and the provinces, and does not purport to do so.

With regard to the three questions that Senator Lang asked, he was good enough to let me know earlier today that he intended to raise them. Let me try in a general way to address them.

First, the fundamental characteristic that we propose to recognize in the Constitution—the fundamental characteristic of what I refer to in two words as “linguistic duality”—in no way implies that anglophone Canada cannot develop and flourish within Quebec or that francophone Canada cannot develop and flourish in the rest of the country. There are no constitutional impediments to such a possibility.

Indeed, I draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that this commitment works in both directions. All legislatures and parliaments are committed to preserving both linguistic manifestations of Canada, and I referred to this fact yesterday. All First Ministers examined these precise provisions carefully and agreed that they were consonant with a generous vision of Canada.

Furthermore, while the recognition clause describes Canadian reality, it does not obviate the mobility rights of section 6 of the Charter, if that is behind the concern expressed by the honourable senator.

With regard to the question of “distinct society” and “distinct identity,” there is no discrepancy between those two phrases. It is a recognition of Quebec’s distinct society that gives that province its distinct identity; and I might say here that the literary problem—if I may refer to it in that way—raised by the honourable senator does not occur in the French version of the Meech Lake accord, and he might like to consult that for added reassurance.

[Senator Murray.]

Third, the reply which I will offer to him on his assertion that there is a serious discrepancy between the commitment of legislatures on the one hand and the government and the Legislature of Quebec on the other is that, first, the executive branch is part of the legislative branch in our system; but, in any case, we state that there is no need for symmetry in all of our constitutional arrangements. If there were, various sections of the Constitution Act of 1867 that applied to only one province would apply to all provinces. Forced uniformity is not the Canadian way, and we see no serious discrepancy in the clauses alluded to by the honourable senator; nor do we see a need for symmetry in all of our constitutional arrangements.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government a supplementary question arising out of his statement that this clause does not affect the distribution of powers as between the federal and provincial authorities? If that is the case, why, under section (2), are Parliament and the provincial legislatures limited to exercising their “respective powers”? That obviously would be under section 91 or 92. But the Quebec legislature and its government is not so delimited to its powers. Why would not that delimitation applying to the federal and provincial legislatures not apply also to the Government of Quebec and its legislature?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the ultimate answer to that question will come when we see the constitutional text; but I believe that it is implicit in that section that there is no attempt to alter or affect the distribution of powers by any of those clauses.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—WORDING OF EARLIER LIBERAL PARTY RESOLUTION

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I would like to make one comment on Senator Lang’s question, which, in my opinion, is really directed towards drafting and should be considered between now and the final drafting of the instrument.

Yesterday Senator Murray said:

I would remind my friends opposite that a “distinct society” is the very phrase their party used at its convention last fall. Surely they did not use it without some idea of what they meant.

Later I said:

Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate made reference to the fact that at the Liberal convention last fall there was a resolution which included the words “distinct society”. He has overlooked the fact that well before the convention began that proposed resolution had been amended to delete the words “distinct society”. Obviously, he was not aware of that.

I have since obtained the text of the resolution that was actually passed at the Liberal convention. I might add that a resolution was submitted a couple of weeks to a month before the convention containing the words “distinct society”. But several weeks before, at an enlarged executive meeting of the Liberal Party of Canada, the proposed resolution was amended and the actual resolution submitted and passed by the convention, which was to appear in the preamble of the Constitution, reads as follows:

The recognition of:

- i) the commitment of Canadians to maintain and reinforce across Canada the linguistic duality of the Canadian federation,
- ii) the distinctive character of Quebec as the principal but not the exclusive source of the French language and culture in Canada,—

● (1420)

Senator Flynn: It is the same thing.

Senator Godfrey: It was not intended to be the same thing. The drafting was deliberately changed so that the two would not be the same. Anyway, the words "distinct society" were not used.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thank my honourable friend for that statement. I agree with Senator Flynn that it is the same thing, but, for added certainty, I would like to place on record the statement of the Right Honourable the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. John Turner, from an interview he gave to the Le Devoir on June 13, 1986. Here is the relevant quotation from Mr. Turner:

[Translation]

I have no problem with adding to the preamble to the Constitution the recognition of Quebec's unique and distinct society within our Confederation and of Quebec's position as the main but not exclusive concentration of francophones.

[English]

And I should add, as I think that Mr. Turner would want to have it added, the next paragraph because they go together.

[Translation]

We must recognize our country's linguistic duality and its multicultural aspect, even if multiculturalism is already recognized in Section 27 of our Constitution.

[English]

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was merely referring to the statement by the Leader of the Government with regard to the resolution passed by the Liberal convention, not what Mr. Turner said last year.

Senator Flynn: They are the words.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SUGGESTED PRE-STUDY

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations would give favourable consideration to initiating something in the nature of a pre-study of the Meech Lake accord—perhaps it could be done in Committee of the Whole—so that we may clear up some of these problems on which we spent nearly two hours yesterday trying to get some definition of the government's intentions with respect to what was in the communiqué and, indeed, in the accord itself. It seems to me that such a forum would provide a great opportunity to the minister who is the lead minister of the government dealing with these proposed constitutional amendments.

I understand that what is happening now is that the drafting section of the Department of Justice and others are trying to put in the form of a bill or, at least, in legal language what is intended to be in the Meech Lake accord so that it can be presented to Parliament. There are some problems: one is the definition of the words "distinct society"; another is determining the meaning of "Senate reform" in the context of the communiqué; and there are a number of other matters. It seems to me that it would be highly useful, while this process is going on, for us to have such an exercise led by the minister, who is a member of this house, and his officials.

Senator Olson: The 2 i/c, then.

Senator Murray: In any case, I think the appropriate time for the kind of committee study proposed by the honourable senator would be when we have constitutional resolutions to bring forward. As the honourable senator will recall, this process was followed in 1982 when there was a joint parliamentary committee. We may have something of that kind or perhaps separate committees in each chamber at the time the constitutional resolutions are before us. The Meech Lake accord is a statement of principle. If honourable senators are looking for an opportunity to debate, vote upon and express their views on that statement of principle, I suppose we might arrange a day or days to do so through the usual channels.

Senator Olson: Do I take it, then, that the Leader of the Government intends to initiate some action that will lead to a day or days, as he put it, being set aside so that we can ask these questions? What we really need to know at this stage is what the federal government intended those things that are contained in the accord to mean. It seems to me that the government's intention is as important as how the courts might interpret what comes later.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, Senator Olson was asking for a committee study, either in Committee of the Whole or elsewhere, and I have replied that the appropriate time to do that will be—

Senator MacEachen: Committee of the Whole sounds ideal.

Senator Murray: —when we have constitutional resolutions before us.

Senator Frith: The table's all set up. Right this way, your table's waiting!

Senator Murray: What we have here is a statement of principles agreed to by the First Ministers at Meech Lake, and what I have undertaken to do is take up—or see that it is taken up through the usual channels—the suggestion that there might be a debate or an opportunity for honourable senators to express themselves as to these principles.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—REPORTED REACTION OF PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the Premier of Quebec has been reported as saying that the Meech Lake accord is something that Quebec should sign very quickly because it is a wonderful deal for Quebec.

Senator Flynn: Did Parizeau say that?

Senator Frith: Was Parizeau at this meeting?

Senator Flynn: I thought he said the people of Quebec would lose by it.

Senator Frith: I didn't realize Parizeau was at the meeting. In any event, to get back to the Premier of Quebec—and my question is not about Mr. Parizeau—the Premier of Quebec is reported to be delighted with the deal.

An Hon. Senator: Why not?

Senator Frith: Yes, why not, indeed? Prime Minister Mulroney and Senator Murray, however, are reported as having said:

[Translation]

Quebec has gained no powers it did not already have.

[English]

In other words, Quebec did not get a single thing they did not already have.

Speaking of the partnership between the Prime Minister and Senator Murray, I want to know which one of them is prepared to accept the blame and the shame for having pulled a fast one and put something over on that poor, innocent Premier of Quebec who actually went away thinking that he had got something out of the deal.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I think I answered the question yesterday and again today. In the course of the CTV "Question Period" interview on the weekend, I had said—and I repeated it yesterday and I repeat it today—that the Meech Lake accord and the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society had not altered, and does not purport to alter, the distribution of powers in any way.

Premier Bourassa is said to be delighted with the accord. I sincerely hope that the honourable senator does not see any inconsistency between that fact and the fact that the federal government is also delighted with the accord and, according to their declarations, so, too, are the premiers of the other nine provinces.

Senator Frith: Of course, as has happened before in our questioning on this subject, I think the Leader of the Government has missed the point. It is not simply a matter of his being happy with the accord, as is the federal government, but from the reports it is obvious that he believes that he got a great deal more out of the deal than he had when he went in.

Senator Flynn: You were against it yesterday.

Senator Frith: Now that is very relevant.

Senator Murray: Let me make it quite clear: I believe that Premier Bourassa is right.

Senator Frith: In other words, that he did get a great deal out of it; that he got a lot more powers out of it?

Senator Murray: That Quebec got a great deal out of it, yes.

Senator Frith: That Quebec got a lot more powers than it had when it went in, because that is what Premier Bourassa says.

• (1430)

Senator Murray: The honourable senator perhaps quoted him, and perhaps misquoted him. I can enumerate—but I do not think there is any need to—the ways in which Quebec has gained a great deal more power than it had before the Meech Lake meeting. I am thinking of such areas as immigration, appointments to the Senate, appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada, and in recouping the veto that it lost in 1981.

Senator Frith: Why, then, are the leader and the Prime Minister saying that Quebec did not get any more powers than it already had?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is not so obtuse; this must be about the fourth or fifth time that I have said that I was talking about "le partage des pouvoirs," the distribution of powers alluded to in an earlier question by Senator Lang.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—EFFECT ON TERRITORIES' ASPIRATIONS FOR PROVINCIAL STATUS

Hon. Paul Lucier: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. In replying to a question I asked yesterday, the leader stated:

Frankly, the creation of new provinces and the extension of provinces into territories are matters on which every province should be able to say yes or no, because matters such as these do have a major impact on fiscal relations, including equalization. These are not matters to be taken lightly. They would affect the numerical operation of the amending formula.

I frankly believe that it would have been extremely difficult, if not impossible, to have proceeded to create new provinces with the agreement of only seven provinces having 50 per cent of the population—

My question to the leader is: If it was difficult, if not impossible, as you stated yesterday, to have proceeded, with the agreement of only seven provinces, to according provincial status to the Yukon Territory, are you not conceding that you have now removed any hope of the Yukon Territory's becoming a province by now requiring the agreement of ten provinces? I fail to see how getting ten people to agree to something would be easier than getting seven people to agree to something. I should like an explanation.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I apologize if I was not as clear as I should have been. I was talking about the political reality that a federal government—which has a veto on these matters—would have had to face. I put it to my honourable friend that if we were seeking agreement to create a new province, and in the event it turned out that three of the western provinces were opposed to the creation of that new province, I think it would have been, political realities being what they are, difficult, if not impossible, for the federal government to have proceeded in those circumstances.

For the creation of a new province, with all that that implies, I think that unanimity, or something close to unanimity, would have been needed, and I believe the proposed constitutional amendment in that respect reflects the political reality of Canada.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I can understand it when the minister says “difficult,” but when he says “impossible” it becomes clear that the power of the federal government in this regard has been given away. The federal government speaks for the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories in this regard. It seems to me that we have now put ourselves in the situation where the federal government has given away every opportunity to defend the two territories. We are sort of under colonial government up there, and we feel that we have been abandoned by the federal government, the government that speaks for us.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the federal government could not have created a new province in the Yukon Territory or in the Northwest Territories on its own. At the very least, the amending formula, which I presume my friend supported in 1982, would have made that impossible. The point I was trying to make is that the political reality is such that it would be quite inadvisable to proceed with minimum support.

In 1949 the federal government brought Newfoundland into Confederation, but Newfoundland was not a part of Canada. The Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories are part of Canada. Even in 1949, as my honourable friend may recall, there were various provincial premiers who, to put it crudely, kicked up quite a fuss about the action taken then.

Senator Frith: They were not even asked.

Senator Murray: Yes, and they kicked up quite a fuss because they were not even asked.

Senator Lucier: I should like to remind the minister that Alberta, Saskatchewan and other areas of Canada were made provinces of Canada without the agreement of the existing provinces. So, as I said yesterday, we have changed the rules in the middle of the game.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCES—PARTICIPATION BY TERRITORIES

Hon. Paul Lucier: Again quoting the leader's reply to a question I asked yesterday, he said:

Honourable senators, the governments of which my friend speaks are not now provincial governments and they are not involved in the process of amending the Constitution. That is the fact. There were, as there should have been, eleven First Ministers around the table making those decisions last week at Meech Lake. That will also be the case when the First Ministers meet in a few weeks' time. There is no provision for participation by other than the federal government and provinces in this amending process.

My question is: Is the leader, who is also the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, prepared to petition the ten premiers regarding territorial participation in future talks?

I know that there is currently no provision for that, but I also know that if all the good faith we are asked to believe in right now is there, then there is no reason for any premier to refuse to have the territories, represented by their elected representatives, participate in those meetings.

We have been told in the north that we have to believe in the good faith of the premiers. If that is the case, let us start. We will accept the good faith of the premiers if the leader petitions them and tells us who refuses to allow us to participate in those future talks.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators. The federal government and the provinces, the Prime Minister and the premiers agreed as long ago as last summer, following a letter which the Prime Minister wrote to the premiers in July, that this first round of constitutional reform would be a so-called “Quebec round,” that it would be limited to the objective of getting Quebec patriated, so to speak, that the discussions would be limited to the five conditions posed by Quebec, and that other constitutional matters would be put off to a second round.

In those circumstances, we will not be inviting the territorial governments or others to participate in the First Ministers' Conference to be held in the coming weeks.

Senator Lucier: Honourable senators, I would like to end this by saying: If you are not going to invite us to the meetings, please do not discuss subjects that affect us.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—USE OF TERM “PATRIATION” BY GOVERNMENT LEADER—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MEANING OF ACCORD

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government would care to revise the use of the word “patriation” which he just used with respect to Quebec? Quebec is a part of Canada and a part of the Constitution of Canada. I think it is totally inappropriate to use the word “patriate” with respect to Quebec.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry if the honourable senator finds that description offensive, as he seems to find so much else in the accord. The fact of the matter is, yes, Quebec is bound by the Constitution in the strict legal sense, but I think that it is myopic in the extreme to be content with that situation and to suggest that an enormous effort was not needed to end the isolation of Quebec, with all the risks that that posed at the emotional, psychological and political level, for the future of our country.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I applaud the honourable senator for his dedication to ensuring that Quebec adhere to the Constitution, if that is all that is involved. To import into the conversation the intense emotion which he has shown is to contrast himself with the serenity which the Premier of Quebec has shown and expressed by saying that he was prepared to wait for a year or several years. He was quite serene. He exhibited none of the emotional tensions which the Leader of the Government seems to have developed. I am not commenting on the effort to have Quebec adhere to the Constitution, which we all accept and applaud, but I highlight the use of the deplorable expression "patriate" with respect to the province of Quebec used by the Leader of the Government. I hope that he does not use it any more.

● (1440)

Senator Flynn: I used it, and I will use it again!

Senator Frith: Well, that is different.

Senator MacEachen: Well, go ahead.

Senator Murray: I have used it—

Senator Frith: That is more expected.

Senator Murray: —on numerous occasions, and I shall.

The honourable senator says that adherence of Quebec to the Constitution is all that was accomplished, as if it was a trivial matter. It is not a trivial matter. If we had failed at Meech Lake—

Senator MacEachen: You are building straw men because you cannot defend the substance of what you are doing.

Senator Murray: I am sorry that the honourable senator attacks and opposes the substance of what we have done, because what we have done is get Quebec on board the Constitution once again and we have made our country whole again.

Senator Frith: That is good, and we applaud that. Now let's talk—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: —about the price you paid for it, which is what we are talking about.

Senator Flynn: We have not paid the price.

Senator Murray: We have succeeded in making a much more balanced federation—

[Senator MacEachen.]

Senator Frith: A bad deal; a good deal for Quebec, but you paid too much to attain a good objective.

Senator Murray: That is fine. Now the Deputy Leader of the Opposition is on the record as saying a good deal for Quebec, but a bad deal for Canada.

Senator Frith: Too high a price for Canada.

Senator Murray: He says "too high a price for Canada," now. Well, we will leave these matters on the record.

Senator Frith: That is my idea. Of course they are on the record!

Senator Murray: This points out the necessity for an early debate on these principles.

Senator Frith: If you had negotiated better, you could have got just as good a deal and not paid such a price.

Senator Flynn: Okay; it is on record.

Senator MacEachen: I want to draw again—

Senator Frith: Bad negotiation. Of course I am saying it for the record.

Senator Muir: Get up and say it.

Senator Frith: I got it! I am saying it for the record. It will be on the record.

Senator MacEachen: I want to draw to the attention of the honourable members of the Senate another misleading statement made by the Leader of the Government in his last utterance, namely, that I have expressed opposition to this agreement.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator MacEachen: I dare the Leader of the Government to find a scintilla of a word that would support that contention. What I asked yesterday, and will continue to ask, is for clarification as to the meaning of this agreement—a pursuit which was engaged in by several senators today. To suggest that a request for information and clarification is opposition is dishonest and misleading. We will have an opportunity to declare ourselves when the text comes before the Senate. That is the moment to say whether we are for or against—

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: —because even the Leader of the Government cannot tell us today what the text will be like. How in the name of heavens can we decide whether we are for or against it?

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: I repeat what I said yesterday—

Senator Murray: Before the principle.

Senator MacEachen: —we are pleased that progress has been made, but we certainly cannot decide any more than the Leader of the Government can. Nor can Premier Pawley decide his position until he sees a final text, which the Leader of the Government cannot produce today.

Senator Flynn: Your deputy leader said something else.

Senator MacEachen: Well, I am talking—

Senator Frith: You bet, yes—and I will get on my feet! On the basis of the information we have been able to get, I do not back down on it. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition—

Senator Murray: No, you do not.

Senator Frith: —that the explanations—

Senator Flynn: No, you do not!

Senator Frith: —that we have been given so far—

An Hon. Senator: It is a bad day for Canada.

Senator Frith: —minimal though they have been, in my opinion indicate what I said, that the price was high. We will see—

Senator Flynn: You said too high.

Senator Frith: Yes, I did, and I will say it now again.

Senator Flynn: Yes.

Senator Frith: On the basis of what we have heard, let us hope—as the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday—that these concerns that the price was too high will be allayed when we see the text.

Senator Flynn: Well, that is not what the Leader of the Opposition said.

Senator Frith: We hope that our concerns will be allayed when we see the text.

Senator Flynn: You are in contradiction to your leader.

Senator Frith: No, I am not.

Senator Flynn: You certainly are.

Senator Frith: Only in your opinion. But there is nothing new—

Senator Flynn: Ask your leader if he endorses you.

Senator Frith: —in the fact that I am in contradiction to what you are saying, Senator Flynn.

Senator Flynn: Ask him to endorse it.

Senator Frith: Anyway, it is quite clear on the basis of the explanations that we have been able to get that in my opinion we should be worried about the price that was paid.

Senator Flynn: I agree that you said that.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT

Hon. Jack Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate that should not evoke such a strong emotional response from either side. I want to ask the Leader of the Government, with respect to the list that will exist containing names of candidates proposed by the provinces for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada, will that list be a public list? Will we know from time to time what names will be placed on that list, and will that list be subject to review by an officer or officers of the Canadian Bar Association? And will it be available even when one is not present in the Senate?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I rather doubt that those lists will be made public. Whether the Canadian Bar Association or the Canadian bar could be involved in some formal way—as I have reason to believe that they are now involved in an informal way in these considerations—is something that would have to be determined later. We have not yet worked out all of the modalities.

Senator Austin: I appreciate the government leader's answer. One can see some difficulties both with a confidential list and with a list that is public. Will names be placed on the list—whether public or private—with the consent of the candidates, or will it be a list of possible appointments? Should persons practising law prepare themselves for the eventuality that they might be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada?

These are small issues to raise when we have such large questions of the day, but the integrity of the bar and the integrity of the bench require a careful and even minute examination of these questions.

Senator Murray: I quite appreciate that fact. It would be up to the provincial governments submitting the lists to ask for the consent of those people whom it might nominate. There would be no point in a province submitting a list of names to the federal government, all of whom or some of whom were unwilling to serve.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, if there are no other questions on the Constitution, important as that is—

Senator Molgat: I have a further one on the Constitution.

Senator Argue: Very well.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—PRIME MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH WESTERN PREMIERS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, earlier this afternoon the Honourable Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, in reply to my questions regarding the reservations expressed by Premier Pawley, indicated that the Prime Minister would be in the west and would have further discussions with Premier Pawley. Since then I have seen some indications of the Prime Minister's travels in the west. I find that he is going to Alberta and Saskatchewan. Will he also be meeting with Premiers Getty and Devine for further discussions?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, when I said that the Prime Minister will be meeting Premier Pawley, I wanted to inform the Senate that that meeting had been scheduled for some time. This is not a special meeting that has been called to have further discussions about the Meech Lake accord—let me make that clear. Naturally, I would expect that the meeting would not end without some reference to or discussion of the follow-up to and implementation of the Meech Lake accord.

I am sorry; I do not have the Prime Minister's itinerary in front of me. The question is: Will he be meeting with Premier Devine and Premier Getty? In Saskatchewan, the Prime Minister is going to North Battleford and—

Senator Argue: Moose Jaw.

Senator Murray:—Moose Jaw. I do not know if he is going to Regina, and I do not know whether he will be meeting Premier Devine, and likewise in Alberta. I simply cannot say at the moment.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF SECOND INSTALMENT

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a very important question which is not about the Constitution.

For a period of six weeks, my good wife Jean, President of Farm Women's Action, and I travelled around the three prairie provinces meeting farmers, business people and others in coffee shops, at their places of business, on main streets, and so on. The economic conditions in those regions are far worse than almost anybody can possibly imagine. There is desperation and despondency. There is a severe exodus of farmers from the land. It has been reported to me that some farmers, especially in the northern areas, will be unable to buy fuel to do their seeding until they receive the second deficiency payment.

My question is: When, definitively, is the second instalment of the deficiency payment that was announced many months ago going to be in the post offices so that farmers can have the use of this money, inadequate as it is, to meet the general but very important problem of meeting current expenses with regard to seeding? Surely it should have been speeded up. Why is it not in the mail?

Senator Argue: I am saddened by that statement. I cannot, for the life of me, understand why the machinery of government is so slow and so inept. I cannot help but feel that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture have decided that the payments should be late so that, in the farmers' minds, it will be related to another crop year instead of to the year in which it was promised. How can this government fail to bring about an early payment before seeding? It is a mechanical matter. We gave authority for these payments at the end of March because we were told that it was important that cheques be made out in April.

My question is: Why is this payment not being made when the act introduced by the Right Honourable Otto Lang regarding the Western Grain Stabilization payment—which was improved by amendments I recommended and which became the very basis for the payments being made—paid out over $700 million two weeks after the announcement was made? The announcement was made on a Monday and two weeks later the cheques were in the mail. That was something the government could not avoid doing, because it is the law of the country and the government had to pay it. The Western Grain Stabilization people had to pay it.

In that instance the figure was $700 million, and in this instance it is $580 million.

Would the minister take another run at his colleagues and ask what is causing the delay? Are there no public servants around to do the work? Are the computers all down?

Honourable senators, some people would not dare to say it, but I will, and that is, if this situation were concentrated in central Canada, payments would have been out long ago. That is not just my opinion. That is another regional beef we have. We think that we have been overlooked. The money is there; it has been committed; so why don't the farmers receive it?

Senator Murray: Of course, as the honourable senator knows, the payments apply to farmers all over the country.

The answer to his question is that I will try to obtain more precise information from my colleagues as to when farmers can expect the balance of this payment.

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BANKS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have great respect for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. He is an able person and, along with the Prime Minister, has great influence in the constitutional debate. As a matter of fact, I sometimes suspect that the Prime Minister went along with the Leader of the Government in the Senate to look after the situation after it was presented by our colleague in this chamber. However, that is no excuse for the Prime Minister doing something that raises many questions. For the life of me, I cannot understand why the press paid about zero attention to what went on in the Senate yesterday during Question Period. I thought, from any standpoint, that it was a good Question Period. Surely, comments in this chamber by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations should carry some weight with the media, since I am sure they carry weight in the Senate and with the government.

However, honourable senators, I have another question to put to the minister to which I do not suppose he can give us a more precise answer than he did to my previous question. Nevertheless, I will take a run at this question.

The pressure for foreclosures in western Canada is coming principally, not exclusively, from the banks. That pressure is enormous. It is in place whether there is a weak moratorium, as there has been in Saskatchewan or Manitoba where the provincial government, I judge, is trying to strengthen its moratorium; or whether there is no moratorium at all, as is the case in Alberta where it is open season on the farmers.

Generally, in the prairies, the banks are accumulating a very large inventory of land in their own names. The land is being advertised on the market. It is either not being sold or it is being sold at very low prices. This whole situation is resulting in the destruction of the equity that everybody has in farm land, including the banks. They have been so "smart" in what they have been doing that they are destroying their own security, that is, the value of farm land. They have pressured the farmers. They have foreclosed on the land. They have accumulated inventory which they have dumped on the market. They are putting themselves in a bind, because, if the equity goes down, they calculate that they will have to foreclose on more farmers. That is the situation which exists in western Canada.

Honourable senators, I could ask the Leader of the Government if the government is going to put a moratorium on bank foreclosures, but the answer is no so I will not pose that question. The reduction or the lifting of the moratorium on farm credit foreclosures wasted 18 months, without getting at the crux of the problem.

My question is this: Is any discussion going on today between the Government of Canada and the chartered banks of Canada in relation to this situation so that some change in policy may be brought about which would mean banks reducing their pressure for foreclosures and bringing about perhaps some "solution"—I hate to use that word—to the current situation, where the banks own the land and more farmers are being pressured to sign off and to leave their farms?

The rural way of life and the economic viability of three prairie provinces is in jeopardy today. I ask the Leader of the Government if there is any ongoing discussion between ministers and the banks to try to bring about a resolution of this very serious question.

● (1500)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there was a great deal of information given and a great deal of information sought in that question. I think it deserves a considered, prepared reply, which I shall obtain.

Senator Argue: I appreciate that answer. I would ask the minister to examine the substance of the question I have asked. I would ask him to do what he can, in his own good judgment, with his colleagues to see that new initiatives are taken with regard to this matter. The situation is very serious, indeed.

I read the House of Commons Debates, the record of that two-day marathon debate, and I know that a lot of good attention and good thought was put into those speeches. Still, I do not think the gravity of the situation is fully realized, and I tell the minister and, through him, the government that coming forward with at least as much financial support as last year won't do the job. The pressure from the prairies is going to increase. We from the prairies are going to demand the same kind of attention and recognition that some of the industrial barons have been receiving from this government in recent months.

SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question on another subject for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. This question has previously been asked by Senator Guay on behalf of Manitoba, by Senator Fairbairn on behalf of Alberta, and by myself, in the past, on behalf of Manitoba. It concerns the sugar-beet industry in my province.

Honourable senators, today is the 6th of May. There is, at the very most, only a week left in which farmers can make a decision to plant beets. We have asked the minister many times for a decision and as of yesterday none was made. Can he give us any information today?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I thank the minister for his statement, but "imminent" is really not much help to those farmers who have to make a decision. Either they proceed to plant beets or they will be too late this year, and it may then be difficult to plant other crops. The discussion has been going on between the federal and provincial governments for some months now. Can there not be a resolution to this question? Can the federal government not decide to stay with the policy that it had developed in the past and proceed?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I could probably not go so far as to say that by "imminent" I mean that the decision will be made within hours rather than days, but I would certainly say that it would be made within days rather than weeks.

Senator Molgat: Does the minister realize that by this kind of delay the government is, in effect, closing down that industry? The failure to make a decision will mean that that industry will not proceed in Manitoba. It will mean not only that the farmers who have been involved in this industry for a number of years will not plant, it will also mean that the plant in the city of Winnipeg, which employs some 100 workers, will close because it has no other work. If there are no beets, there is no plant.

Senator Murray: I hope that we are on the same wavelength and talking about the same subject. My recollection is that there was a serious problem on this matter as between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba. I have every hope, expectation and assurance that the matter will be satisfactorily resolved very shortly. I believe I have said that a decision on the matter is imminent.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have some delayed answers to questions. I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.N. COMMISSION MEETING, GENEVA—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 11 last by the Honourable Senator Grafstein regarding Human Rights—U.N. Commission Meeting in Geneva—Canadian Representation—Request for Report on Proceedings.

(The answer follows:)

The genesis of the proposal to include parliamentary observers in the delegation to the 43rd Session of the U.N. Commission on Human Rights (CHR) lay in the government's desire for closer dialogue on human rights issues with Canadians and particularly with the new House of Commons Standing Committee on Human Rights. This was enunciated in the government's response to the report of the Special Joint Committee on Foreign Relations.

Notwithstanding serious budgetary constraints within the department, the Secretary of State for External Affairs decided that an invitation should be extended to the senior representative of each party in the new House of Commons Standing Committee on Human rights. Members were invited to observe the CHR for a one-week period. The objective was to sensitize the MPs to international human rights machinery of which the CHR is an integral part. In light of Canada's current status as an observer at the 43 member commission the government also felt it best to limit the number of observers to three. To do otherwise would have stretched resources unduly, thereby impinging on the quality of service extended to the MPs, as well as reducing the government's effectiveness at the session itself.

The 43rd Session of the CHR met from February 2, to March 13, 1987. A report on the deliberations is now being prepared and will be forwarded shortly.

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

ACID RAIN—DECLARATION BY U.S. ADMINISTRATION

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer to a question asked by Senator Frith on March 19 dealing with a declaration by the U. S. administration on acid rain.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Would you please read it?

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

[Senator Murray.]

The 2.5 billion dollars announced by President Reagan, to be matched by industry in the U.S., will be used to stimulate development and deployment of innovative technologies for the reduction of emissions.

The extent to which emissions will be reduced will depend on the projects funded.

Canada will be represented on the panel established to advise the U.S. Secretary of Energy on funding and selection of innovative control technology projects.

Projects will be selected, as fully as practicable, using the criteria recommended by the special envoys. Criteria outlined in the envoys' report require a near-term reduction of emissions.

Senator Frith: Could you read that sentence again, please?

Senator Phillips: Certainly.

Criteria outlined in the envoys' report require a near-term reduction of emissions. This 2.5 billion dollars commitment has been made to Canada by the President of the United States.

In both Houses of Congress, the growing bi-partisan and pan-partisan support for action on acid rain indicates that such funds will be approved.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON LYEIL ISLAND LOGGING ACTIVITY

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 19 last by the Honourable Senator Spivak regarding British Columbia—Queen Charlotte Islands—Suggested Moratorium on Lyell Island Logging Activity.

(The answer follows:)

On March 19, 1987, the Government of British Columbia declared a six-week moratorium on the issuance of new logging permits for Lyell Island. The decision was taken as a result of a detailed proposal forwarded to the province by the federal Minister of the Environment. This six-week period is being used by B.C. and the federal government to advance agreement on elements of the negotiations for a national park.

On March 30th, progress was made in negotiations between officials of the two governments concerning the establishment of a national park in the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlottes. These preliminary negotiations laid important groundwork for a meeting of the federal Minister of the Environment with his provincial counterpart on April 8, 1987.

Negotiations are continuing.

TRANSPORT

CANADIAN AIRPORTS—FIREFIGHTING FACILITIES— GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 26 last by the Honourable Senator Lucier regarding Transport—Canadian Airports—Firefighting Facilities—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

Safety is Transport Canada's highest priority. Fire protection standards at Canadian international airports are based on the recommended practices of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), which have been accepted by international airports throughout the world. In addition, Canada is one of the few countries in the world that applies these same high standards at domestic airports across the country. The average number of firefighters at Canadian airports is 25 per cent higher than the United States average. Twice as much per passenger is spent on firefighting and rescue services at Canadian airports as in the U.S. If the criteria for provision of fire protection services currently used in Australia were applied in Canada, then only forty-one airports would qualify for firefighter service as compared to the more than 100 airports currently receiving this service.

The primary role of Crash Fire Rescue (CFR) is basically to prevent, control or extinguish fire involving or adjacent to an aircraft for the purpose of protecting the aircraft fuselage and providing an escape area for its occupants. Once the primary task is done, the CFR crew can assist in the evacuation of occupants from the aircraft, although this is a responsibility of the air crew.

CFR services are only part of the overall response to an aircraft accident. Although the CFR response is critical to saving lives after an accident has occurred, support personnel are necessary to mount an effective response to a major accident in order to provide the evacuation of passengers and medical treatment to the injured.

Each support team has specific assigned roles and is comprised of airport-based personnel and externally based emergency services. During the evacuation, the prime function of CFR services continues to be preventing, controlling and extinguishing fire situations.

The important role played by, for example, airline flight crews, ground crews, airport firefighters, other airport workers, fire and police services in adjacent communities, ambulance services and medical staff in responding to an airport emergency, cannot be overstated. Mobilization of this extensive support network is necessary to mount an effective response to a major accident. Canadian airport personnel devote a great deal of time and effort to the development and testing of emergency plans at airports in order to ensure a full and effective response should an accident occur.

In recent years, the older equipment has been replaced with far more reliable and modern equipment and fire trucks that can be operated to capacity by one person. This gives more flexibility in deploying the full firefighting team. There are now 74 new crash vehicles on order to meet replacement needs and additional new requirements at airports. There will be increases and decreases in staff and equipment at airports from time to time as changes occur in airline services and as new technology and equipment become available.

The government's current initiative is an effort to reduce overtime costs at airports while maintaining adequate levels of safety. The department is attempting to become more efficient in personnel resource management by reducing overtime costs caused by unanticipated absences of firefighters.

In response to the concern raised regarding public safety as it relates to Crash Firefighting and Rescue Services (CFR) at the Regina Airport, please note the following departmental policy on the provision of CFR protection at airports:

- The existing CFR hours of operation are essentially based on regularly-scheduled airline movements, Canadian Transport Commission (CTC) class 1, 2, 8 and 9-2 service, and are published accordingly in the Aeronautical Information Publications—Canada Flight Supplement. All airline movements operating within published hours of operation are provided with CFR protection. Air carriers operating outside the published hours of operation, schedule or charter traffic may be provided CFR protection upon request on a cost-recovery basis.

- The Regina airport presently provides CFR coverage 18 hours daily (0600 to 2400 local hours) based on scheduled airline movements. Subsequently, airline operators choosing to operate outside the published hours of operation are doing so at their own discretion, with the option of requesting the service.

With reference to the comment that Vancouver International Airport was equipped with "one firefighter and one truck", this airport is resourced with four crash rescue vehicles and a total complement of thirty-three personnel, consisting of four crews of eight firefighters each plus the Fire Chief.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—COURSES ON RESERVES— LEVEL OF FUNDING—GOVERNMENT SUPPORT OF OUTREACH PROGRAMS

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 31 last by the Honourable Senator Fairbairn regarding Aboriginal Peoples—Post-Secondary Education—Courses on Reserves—Level of Funding—Government Support of Outreach Programs.

(The answer follows:)

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development supports special post-secondary programs for Indians. These special programs are set up by bands and delivered off-campus by provincial or Indian post-secondary institutions. The department has been paying the tuition fees for the Indian students enrolled in these programs. However, because the programs are delivered off-campus, the tuition fees are several times higher than regular provincial tuition.

The department is now in the process of reviewing matters relating to Indian post-secondary institutions and special programs. This review is aimed at better defining the policy and funding parameters of these programs.

INDUSTRY

FREE-TRADE AGREEMENTS INCLUDING TARGETED SUBSIDIES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 1 last by the Honourable Senator van Roggen regarding Industry—Free-Trade Agreements Including Targeted Subsidies.

(The answer follows:)

The government has made it clear that subsidies and related matters are under discussion in the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations. As the Minister for International Trade stated in the House of Commons on March 16, 1987, this question is important because under existing trade laws, we do not know what kind of subsidies we can use in regional development plans without bringing on U.S. trade actions. The object will be to establish clear rules so that we will know what programs can be used in regional development without triggering countervail action. Until the negotiations have been completed it would be premature to speculate on the form such rules may take.

With regard to the treatment of subsidies under other existing free trade agreements, there is no uniformity of approach. Export subsidies are prohibited under EFTA (European Free Trade Association established by the 1960 Treaty of Stockholm) and are subject to phased elimination under the Australia-New Zealand Closer Economic Relations agreement. Export subsidies are not treated separately in other free trade area agreements. The U.S.-Israel agreement requires that Israel phase out export subsidies. Other subsidies are disallowed under EFTA if their main purpose is to frustrate benefits expected on the removal of trade barriers. The U.K.-Ireland, Australia-New Zealand and U.S.-Israel agreements provide for countervail in the event of subsidies that distort trade. Although there may be recognition of the trade distorting impact of subsidies, these agreements do not appear to impose significant constraints on domestic policy formulation and implementation.

EMPLOYMENT

ST. BONIFACE, MANITOBA—CLOSING OF HOG DIVISION OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT—SUGGESTED INTEREST-FREE LOAN FROM GOVERNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on February 4 last by the Honourable Senator Guay regarding Employment—St. Boniface, Manitoba—Closing of Hog Division of Canada Packers Plant—Suggested Interest-Free Loan From Government.

(The answer follows:)

On February 5, 1987, a delayed answer provided information on an agreement between the company, the union, the Government of Manitoba and the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to form adjustment committees to address the needs of the workers. These committees are already meeting with success.

About 100 of the laid-off workers have found other jobs or have accepted retirement. All remaining employees have had counselling interviews to determine their work or training needs. A course in job finding techniques assisted 165 workers and another 55 workers have chosen to take skill training. In addition, about 300 Winnipeg employers have been invited to meet the Canada Packers workers to discuss employment possibilities. Finally, a $300,000 training trust fund has been set up, funded by the company and the federal government, to further assist the workers.

With regard to the laid-off workers' rights to Unemployment Insurance Benefits as a result of the exemption provisions of the UI regulations, the payment of severance pay by Canada Packers will have little or no effect in delaying the payment of UI benefits to those workers affected by the plant closure in Winnipeg.

The vacation pay received by the unionized workers will, however, have to be taken into account as the present UI legislation does not permit any exemptions of these amounts. However, the amounts of vacation pay are generally smaller than severance payments and would, therefore, not have a major impact.

The government is committed to ensuring that all available resources are mobilized to help the workers and assist them in finding new employment opportunities.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OFFICIAL VISIT TO EAST BLOC COUNTRIES—SENATE REPRESENTATION

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on April 9 last by the Honourable Senator Corbin regarding External Affairs—Official Visit to East Bloc Countries—Senate Representation.

(The answer follows:)

The office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs contacted the whips of the three parties to receive their nominations of Parliamentarians to accompany the Right Honourable Joe Clark on the visit. If Honourable Senators are interested in participating in future delegations of this sort, it is suggested that they contact their respective party whips.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips moved the third reading of Bill S-6, to amend the Food and Drugs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-22

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO PERMIT COVERAGE OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS BY ELECTRONIC MEDIA

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bonnell, seconded by the Honourable Senator Côtteau:

That the Senate do empower the Special Committee of the Senate on the subject-matter of Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, to permit coverage by the electronic media of its public proceedings, with the least possible disruption of its hearings.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I will take only a few minutes of your time on this matter. With regard to the televising of the deliberations of one of our committees, this is an unusual step. My concern is for the dignity of the Senate, for its reputation and that of the committee and of those honourable senators who serve on that committee. It is my contention that whether the televising or the broadcasting of committee deliberations takes place in this building or in a building in some other city of Canada where the committee is holding its meeting, it is the committee chairman and the members of that committee who are in control. I suggest that they have the right—indeed, I suggest they have the duty—to lay down the ground rules for the journalists and broadcasters who may seek to televise the deliberations of the committee.

● (1510)

Yesterday I referred to our experience in 1985 when I was chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. Following yesterday's discussion, I took the opportunity to refresh my memory of the matter. What happened was that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation wrote to me on November 5, 1985, seeking permission to televise the proceedings of the committee, and, following a telephone conversation with me, they wrote again on November 6, 1985. I reported to the committee, and, with the approval of the committee, reported to the Senate on November 6 and again on November 7.

I was in a position to assure the Senate—whose permission I sought to permit the televising of the proceedings of the committee—that we had assurances from the broadcasters as to the conditions they would respect. Those conditions were negotiated, on behalf of the committee, by our colleague, Senator Finlay MacDonald, and, for the broadcasters, by the then President of the Parliamentary Press Gallery, Mr. John Burke. Some days later I received a memorandum signed by both Senator MacDonald and Mr. Burke outlining the conditions that were to be respected.

I am not at all suggesting or insisting that the detailed conditions set out and respected at that time should apply in every particular to the present case. I do suggest most strongly to the chairman of the committee that he take care on this matter that he and his committee are in charge and that it is up to them to set the conditions under which the committee's proceedings may be broadcast or televised. I will send him my file—

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray:—and I will trust in his good judgment to exact from those who wish to broadcast or televise the proceedings of the committee a commitment that they will abide by appropriate conditions. We will leave it at that. With that understanding, I may say that I have no objection to this motion passing.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government for his thoughtfulness. I, too, did some research yesterday. I have a copy of those files and letters. The dates of the letters and the files are exactly as he has stated, and he has made no errors in his statement. I support him 100 per cent. He need not bother to send me copies as I have my own. I have also a copy of the text of his statement made in the Senate and of the statements made by other honourable senators. In addition, Mr. Newman from the CBC Press Gallery came to see me this morning, and I believe he also spoke to the Leader of the Government about it.

As has been stated, there will be no problem in following a procedure in Ottawa similar to that which was followed in 1985. But there may be more difficulty when the committee visits the provinces. However, the committee will have control. We will tell those operating the cameras where they may or may not be located. It will be up to the chairman and the committee to control the situation, and, if necessary, we have the power to ask to have the cameras removed. The same will apply to anyone who may cause a disturbance in committee. We will certainly use that discretion and will try to uphold both the dignity and the respect due to this and all committees of this house. I thank the Leader of the Government.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.
Motion agreed to.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

The Senate again in Committee of the Whole on the order of reference dated 10th February, 1987, respecting the agreement on fisheries and boundaries between Canada and France.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Stand!

Hon. Duff Roblin: What's the matter? Can't you find any more fish?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Are you making an offer? We will accept it.

Senator Roblin: If you are looking for flounders, we don't have any on this side!

Senator Frith: Where does it say that?
Order stands.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

FIFTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Fifth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments (Indian Act) which was presented in the Senate on Thursday, March 19, 1987.

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I felt that I should deal with this matter today, since it has been on the order paper since March 19. It is not a very complicated matter and is one with which I am sure honourable senators will agree. I regret that I am unable to report the status of this matter in the other place, but perhaps I should explain the situation.

This is the committee's fifth report. It deals with by-laws made under Indian band councils pursuant to the powers delegated to them under the Indian Act. Those by-laws cover a wide range of local government matters on reserves, from zoning restrictions to the sale of intoxicants, and many local, what lawyers might consider to be municipal type, by-laws, but passed under the authority of the federal government pursuant to the Indian Act, which is a federal statute. These by-laws are all considered to be statutory instruments under the Statutory Instruments Act, and, therefore, they come within the joint committee's mandate.

The committee examined these by-laws on a regular basis from 1982 to 1985. They found that many of the by-laws that were reviewed could not come within the criteria which our committee applies to other statutory instruments or regulations passed by the federal government. In many instances they do not conform with proper notice provisions—and there are many other shortfalls—that we would ordinarily require. The joint committee has 12 or 13 criteria which must be adhered to.

Having said that, they are by-laws that are respected. They are passed by band councils democratically elected; they are respected by those communities which the councils attempt to govern and, in large measure, they conform to proper notice provisions. So here we are, in this great big establishment, reviewing those band council by-laws and saying that they do not conform. As honourable senators can well imagine, criticism of the joint committee has not a great deal of effect on some northern Manitoba or Saskatchewan band councils which are "doing very well, thank you" without our interference.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): "The joint committee of what?", I can hear them saying.

Senator Nurgitz: Exactly. From time to time I forget the name of the committee. Consequently, the committee decided that it would not henceforth review Indian band council by-laws on an individual basis. I believe it is important to draw this fact to the special attention of both houses and to ask that both houses concur in the committee's decision to limit in this way the manner in which it will discharge its responsibilities pursuant to section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act. The committee believes that its approach respects the fact that the legislative decisions—the band council decisions—are by democratically elected representatives, and it recommends that the Statutory Instruments Act be amended so as to exclude these by-laws from the application of the act.

● (1520)

The committee does not wish this recommendation to be construed as an endorsement of the manner in which some band councils have exercised their delegated legislative powers. To ensure that these by-laws, which regulate to a significant degree the lives of those who live on reserves, are fair, reasonable and authorized by law, the committee has recommended a number of improvements in the control mechanisms which are now in place under the Indian Act, and these are set out in the report. The by-laws remain an exercise of delegated power and must be subject to an adequate regulatory control process, which the committee does not believe to be presently the case.

Finally, in the course of its examination of this matter, the committee discovered that some 100 by-laws made under section 85.1 of the Indian Act have not been published in the Canada Gazette, as required by the Statutory Instruments Act, nor have they been legally exempted from this requirement. Section 85.1 authorizes band councils to enact by-laws dealing with intoxicants and, in particular, prohibiting their possession or sale. Section 11(2) of the Statutory Instruments Act enacts a public interest rule requiring publication as a prerequisite to any prosecution. The result is that anyone convicted of a breach of any of these by-laws has been unlawfully charged and convicted. The committee has been advised that a significant number of persons have been convicted and fined pursuant to these by-laws. The committee has recommended that appropriate remedial measures be taken to relieve those affected by these illegal convictions.

While our committee will not be scrutinizing band council by-laws on an individual basis, the report gives the assurance to this house and the other place that the committee will continue to monitor the exercise of powers delegated to band councils by the Parliament of Canada, as well as the implementation of the report's recommendations. Prior to proceeding on this basis, the Department of Indian Affairs and, indeed, the minister have agreed to drop this measure. That covers the fifth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

I move that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Douglas D. Everett rose, pursuant to notice of Thursday, November 27, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the free trade negotiations with the United States.

He said: Honourable senators, my inquiry has been placed on the order paper with the idea of perhaps having a debate in this house on the question of the free trade initiative of the present government. Under the present situation, Canada has some very serious trade problems. I am sure that senators are aware that 30 per cent of our gross domestic product is in exports totalling some $130 billion per year. Three million Canadian jobs are related to exports. That is one-quarter of the total work force. In the 1970s and 1980s, for the most part, we had and have the smallest improvement in productivity of any major nation. We had one of the greatest increases in costs. We came to rely to a large extent on the export of natural resources, if you exclude the Auto Pact, and now we find ourselves in a situation where the demand for natural resources has weakened and competition has increased exponentially due to the fact that many Third World nations want to earn foreign exchange and are thus uneconomically subsidizing the export of their resources.

The present technological revolution demands a much larger market than the one we serve today of 25 million people. At the same time, running with all these threads has been a very large increase worldwide in protectionism. In a study by the C.D. Howe Institute, that body stated that the status quo on trade was no goal for Canada if we wished to improve living standards. Certainly closing the Canadian market further is not an option. That is a brief overview of the Canadian position.

What then is the position of the United States? They, too, are subject to increased global protectionism and competition. They say they want a level playing field, especially with Japan, the EEC and the Third World. In 1986 the United States suffered an imbalance in its merchandise account of $170 billion. It has not improved in the first three months of this year. The major cause, of course, was the U.S. exchange rate. That is, the very expensive U.S. dollar in relation to other currencies. That situation has now corrected itself, and I have no doubt at all in my mind that over a period of time the imbalance will tend to correct itself. But as yet there is no sign of that, and policy makers in the United States are looking at the present situation, not to the future.

The United States has employed a series of policies which are called "contingency protection". We know them better as non-tariff barriers. They include anti-dumping tariffs, countervailing duties against subsidies, emergency relief from seriously injurious imports, relief on imports deemed prejudicial to national security, and the famous buy-American policy, which, incidentally, is estimated to total $700 billion per year by the time you take into account the controlled buying of the federal government, state governments and municipal governments. There is also in Congress an omnibus trade bill, and even an amendment to that bill by Senator, I believe his name is Gephardt—

Senator Roblin: He is a Representative.

Senator Everett: You are right, he is in the House of Representatives. I believe that that amendment says that if any country is running a chronic surplus with the United States, they, the United States, can virtually take countervail action against them. The target, though, for the United States is really the rest of the world. The problem is that Canada has been caught in the American initiative.

Why should we not then just rely on GATT and on multilateral trade agreements in order to solve this problem? Certainly the Kennedy Round and the Tokyo Round reduced tariff barriers. Take, for example, Canada-United States trade in 1987. Eighty per cent of Canadian goods go to the United States duty free. Another 10 per cent have duties of 5 per cent or less. That still leaves some very high trade barriers, and it does not address the problem of contingency protection. I might say parenthetically that Canada relies more on tariff barriers while the United States, Japan and the EEC rely on non-tariff barriers. So that while Canada enjoys 80 per cent zero tariffs exporting into the United States, it is duty free in respect of 65 per cent of imports from the U.S.

• (1530)

Trading blocs are really isolating us. For example, in 1970, 9 per cent of our merchandise exports went to the United Kingdom. In 1985, as a result of the United Kingdom's being part of the Common Market, they dropped to 2 per cent. We are the only industrial nation outside of Australia that does not have an assured market of more than 100 million people. We could rely on the GATT process, but it is slow, it takes a lot of time and it does not cover many non-tariff barriers. It seems to me that it points to the fact that the bilateral approach is the best approach. It does not prevent us from continuing our work with GATT on multilateral arrangements, but we can, through it, avoid U.S. contingency protections and non-tariff barriers. Under Article XXIV of the GATT rules, we are permitted to form a free trade zone provided 80 per cent of the goods are traded free of tariffs and restrictions, and, in fact, we do not even have to include services under the agreement.

Perhaps we should pause for a moment and look at a definition of terms. There are sectoral agreements, that is, a free trade agreement relating to a particular industry. An example of that, of course, is the Auto Pact. There are customs unions which require a common external tariff and free movement of labour, capital and goods between the members. An example of that is the European Economic Community or the Common Market. Then there is a free trade zone, and that requires free movement of goods between the partners. However, each partner can have its own separate external tariffs in respect of other countries. It is interesting to note that while a free trade zone does not require a free capital market, nonetheless, such a market now exists between Canada and the U.S. to a very large extent.

What is proposed, then, is a free trade zone. I believe that if it is implemented it will be of benefit to Canada. First of all, it will give us more secure access to the U.S. market; a reduction in vulnerability to U.S. trade policies and a lower hurdle for our exports. Almost every study shows that our GNP would increase by 3 to 8 per cent in a free trade agreement with the United States. This would mean a major increase in our output. There would be productivity increases and, therefore, increased incomes. There is no study of repute that shows there would be a decrease in employment. Consumer prices, however, would decrease due to lower tariffs and every region of the country would benefit. It would cause a complete restructuring of Canadian industry, especially in the manufacturing field.

Canadian tariffs at present increase the cost of inputs used in manufacturing. A free trade zone will reduce our inefficiencies and, of course, will create economies of scale. It will improve our ability to compete with the rest of the world. If we can compete successfully with the U.S. then we have a chance with the rest of the world. By virtue of having a free trade zone, we still would have an external tariff that would protect us from unusually low-cost imports from the Third World.

There is a greater benefit in a free trade zone, in my judgment, to Canada than there is to the United States, and that is because the size of the American market tends to set market prices. The result of that is that their tariffs flow to their treasury and are paid for by our exporters, whereas our tariffs become increased costs to Canadian consumers.

It also seems to me that a free trade zone would improve the economic balance in Canada. The Canada West Foundation in 1983 looked at the difference between economic rents among the various regions of Canada and they found that tariffs had the following effect: The west had a net loss of $417 million and the Atlantic provinces had a net loss of $138 million caused by higher prices due to tariffs. On the other hand, Quebec benefited to the tune of $60 million and Ontario to the tune of $494 million by virtue of higher incomes due to the protections afforded their manufacturers. A free trade zone will act to increase manufacturing outside of the central provinces. Thereby, subsidies to the maritimes could be reduced and we could reduce the west's reliance on resource income.

It is interesting to note as well that if there were provincial and state agreements arising out of this free trade zone, which is very likely, this could have the effect of reducing internal trade barriers in both Canada and the United States. A survey of business executives by Coopers & Lybrand has found that 55 per cent expect little disturbance to their business while 85 per cent say that their sales to the U.S. would increase.

Why would the U.S. support a free trade arrangement with Canada? Actually, the Canadian market is a growing one for the U.S. Between 1982 and 1985 U.S. exports to Canada increased by 40 per cent. On the other hand, U.S. exports to Japan were 8 per cent and to the EEC they reduced by 4.5 per cent. It is estimated that in a free trade zone there would be a 10 per cent increase in the Canadian market available to Americans. In addition, a free trade agreement would tend to protect American trade and investment in Canada. The arrangement could be open-ended so that others could join, and, as far as the U.S. is concerned, it would send a signal that they have an open attitude to trade arrangements, trade agreements and the reduction of protectionism.

I believe that there is support for a trade agreement in the United States. Certainly it is there in the major business community; it is there in the administration. Now important members of Congress are coming forward to support the idea. I believe that if an agreement is reached the public will support the idea, because they have a goodwill towards Canada and they would like to see a trading agreement with this country.

It is very instructive to look at the Auto Pact agreement. As honourable senators know, it is a sectoral free trade agreement. It accounts for 50 per cent of our manufacturing exports and has been in operation successfully for 25 years. Let us have a look at the situation that obtained 25 years ago. Canada at that time was vulnerable to the high technology that was coming forth and required increased volume for efficiency. At that time we were producing over 200 vehicle models for the domestic sales industry. The high cost meant that our Canadian prices were 15 to 20 per cent above the United States prices, and that the gap was likely to widen further. That industry existed by virtue of protection, and protection only.

Now let us look at the contrast 25 years later. There has been a complete restructuring based on a limited range of products; there is considerably improved productivity; actually, the adjusted Canadian prices are now lower than those in the United States. The auto industry provided 33,000 jobs in Canada 25 years ago; today, that industry provides 125,000 jobs. It accounts for 50 per cent of Ontario's total exports. At the time of the Auto Pact, there was strong opposition from all sides, the automobile companies, the workers and the politicians. Today the first thing they say is, "Don't touch it."

The critics now argue that this is not a good example of what would happen under free trade despite the fact that it is a free trade agreement. They say that it is "managed" free trade because it has safeguards for investment and for Canadian content, but those safeguards have largely been exceeded. If it is "managed trade," the free trade agreement we are talking about, and that we are negotiating, is also a form of managed trade. We have seen the success that the Auto Pact has accomplished. I believe we can see the same success in respect of the free trade agreement.

The United States is approaching the free trade agreement under what they call the "fast track" procedure. All it requires is a simple majority of both Houses of Congress as opposed to a formal treaty, which would require a vote of two-thirds of each house. The fast track approach has been approved by Congress through its committees. By October, 1987, the President must notify Congress of an intent to enter into a free trade agreement. If he does, the signing takes place 90 days later, on January 2, 1988. Then, the agreement that is signed is immediately introduced into Congress in the form of a draft bill, at which time it is referred to the appropriate committees, I believe the Ways and Means Committee of the house and the Finance Committee of the Senate. Those committees have 45 legislative days to report the bill back to their respective houses.

There is a considerable difference of opinion amongst people as to whether or not they have the right at that time to amend the bill. I suppose it is possible that they will have that right, but it is unclear as to whether they will or will not do so. I think that is probably unlikely. Each house must vote on the bill 15 days after the reporting date, and there will be no amendment allowed at that time. If the bill is passed by a simple majority of both houses, it immediately overrides all previous federal and state legislation. The only drawback that I can see is that it can be undone by a simple majority. However, once the free trade arrangement is in operation, I think that is highly unlikely.

Our objectives in the free trade agreement were outlined by the Prime Minister. He said that he wanted a gradual elimination of tariffs, a new regime for trade remedy laws, and an ending of U.S. agricultural subsidies. He also said that the agreement should safeguard political sovereignty, social programs, regional disparity initiatives, cultural identity, agricultural marketing systems, and the Canadian auto industry.

Nobody can tell if we enter into such an agreement whether there will be a disruption. Certainly there will be a shift in employment, although that is, perhaps, not as serious as we like to think it is, because it is a fact that 50 per cent of all Canadians change their jobs during the course of a year. However, there must be and will be considerable adjustment assistance programs, both to industries that are displaced and to workers to aid in their relocation.

The Prime Minister made a brilliant move in one regard when he chose Simon Reisman as the chief negotiator. I know of nobody who is better able to handle this job, and handle it in the best interests of Canada. I had a great deal to do with Simon Reisman when I was chairman of the Senate Committee on National Finance. He is tough, he is smart, he is one hell of a negotiator! I congratulate the present government on having the brains to retain a man of his considerable ability.

As honourable senators expect, there are concerns expressed about entering into a free trade agreement. I suppose the main concern is that we are going to put our sovereignty in jeopardy, that somehow a free trade zone will lead to economic integration with the inevitable result of that being political integration. There is no evidence for this in other free trade zones. The European Free Trade Agreement, the agreement between Ireland and Great Britain and the one between Australia and New Zealand show no loss of political sovereignty by the weaker members. Their own policies regarding investment, labour, natural resources and external trade have stayed intact. It seems to me that economic progress is the greater assurance of independence.

Senator Roblin: Hear, hear!

Senator Everett: I think there may be a certain loss of independence as a result of entering into such an agreement, but when we trade in an interdependent world we have to give up some part of our independence. But it begs the question to say that that loss of independence goes to political integration or loss of sovereignty. In my judgment, it does not.

We should be nationalistic; that is good. But let us not confuse nationalism with anti-Americanism. That is what many people are doing in respect of this agreement.

There is the argument that U.S. subsidiaries will move home and there will be no further investment from the U.S. because "there will be no tariffs, so why have a subsidiary here?". As one member of the old Waffle Movement group said when he was talking about this, "All the subsidiaries will go home." What a dichotomy he found himself in! He spent his life complaining about foreign ownership and now is scared that they will go home. You cannot come down on both sides of that question.

● (1550)

This idea that the subsidiaries of the Americans will pull out is based on the assumption that they are here solely to surmount the barriers that exist. Take away those barriers, they will not have to be here. I then say to you: Why did they stay after the GATT reductions? If the greatest percentage of their exports to us come in duty free, why have they not been pulling out? The fact of the matter is that they probably, if anything, have been increasing their investment, certainly not reducing it. Oddly enough, this could create a situation in which non-U.S. investment will increase in Canada, because Canada, by virtue of its lower labour costs, will give foreign producers who locate in Canada a greater opportunity to export to the U.S. market. In fact, there will be rules of origin that will require goods that are produced elsewhere to have value added in Canada before they can go into the United States under the duty-free rules. I expect that what will happen is an increase in investment by foreigners who are not Americans.

People suggest social programs will be hurt by a free trade agreement. Really, many are likely not up for negotiation. The U.S. has similar programs. They have health care and unemployment insurance. Those who are critical say, "Well, that does not matter. What really will happen is that because our health care, for example, is supported by public expenditures, those expenditures will have to be reduced so that we can lower our taxes in order that our companies, firms and industries can be more competitive with the United States." I am informed that health care cost, although private in the United States, amounts to 10 per cent of gross domestic product, whereas in Canada it amounts to 8.5 per cent of gross domestic product, even though it is public. In any event, that is not something to worry about because after-tax incomes adjust accordingly. Whether the expenditure is made through the government or made out of private funds, there is an adjustment of the final net income coming back.

Finally, Sweden, which probably has a more comprehensive social welfare system than Canada, has been a member of the European Free Trade Association and it has not seen any diminution in its social policies.

We then come to the idea that our cultural identity will be lost. I do not know of any situation in which a meaningful culture has been developed in a bankrupt country. Most culture arises out of wealth—at least that has been the historical situation. If a free trade agreement were to bring us greater wealth, it would also be a greater protection to our culture. It is true that we are influenced by U.S. culture to a great extent. What amazes me is that there is not the realization that every other nation in the world is influenced by U.S. culture. I was in Singapore and Malaysia not long ago. When you turn on the television you see U.S. programs. From there I went to London, and it looked to me as though half of the programs on television were U.S.; half of the plays in the West End were American musicals. What we are looking at is the culture of the dominant nation in the world. Roman culture permeated the world; British culture, at the height of the empire, permeated the world. Let us not get overly worried about this fact.

The common market goal has been political integration, yet they still have maintained throughout the common market their distinctive cultural differences.

We have to have some confidence in our culture. I listened to Mr. Parizeau of Quebec the other day. He said, "We are not worried about our culture. We have been protecting it against the Anglos for years." He was not the least bit concerned about their ability to retain their culture. I get the feeling, as I do in the sovereignty issue, that a lot of it comes down not to the question of protecting Canadian culture but to an anti-American attitude. It is not attractive, and it does not do this nation much good.

Beyond that, a lot of what we call "cultural protection" in this country is economic. I think that the Americans have a case here. For example, the CRTC—or its predecessors in any event—was created to see that the ownership of television stations was distributed widely across the country. Somebody could correct me if I am wrong, but that was my impression of why we had these bodies. What have they done? They have made multi-millionaires of a small group of people who have concentrated their ownership by virtue of a government licence. We should not protect those people.

Senator Steuart: Hear, hear!

Senator Everett: The Americans allow Mr. Thomson to go down and invest in their newspapers. The last time I heard about it he had bought another six or eight, or something. He buys them in bunches, like bananas! He does not buy them one at a time; he buys them in bunches. Yet, we say that we cannot have an American owning a Canadian newspaper. The Americans have a case here when they talk about not confusing economics with culture. Yes, Canadian culture should be protected and there should be rules, but let us be careful that they are not rules whose only effect is the making particular Canadians wealthy.

People say, "We will not be able to deal with regional disparities." Well, to start off with, a free trade agreement would lessen regional disparities. There will certainly be considerably more manufacturing in the west and in the Atlantic region and less concentration of it in the central provinces. The U.S. is concerned that our regional disparity grants are, in fact, subsidies, but they also have a regional development problem that they approach from a different direction, but, nonetheless, they pour a lot of money into it, as we do. I believe that there can be a satisfactory negotiation of that issue because they are really on the same side as we are.

• (1600)

Other people will say that we will give the United States unlimited access to our resources. In a sense, they already have a fair amount of access. They are our main market. We sell a lot of resources to them because we want to sell it to them. However, I point out that under a free trade agreement there would be no obligation—and I cannot see an obligation under this agreement—that would require us to sell our resources to the United States if we chose not to do so or to give them the right to demand that we let them buy our resources.

Then there is the national treatment argument. In this respect, unfortunately, the Prime Minister, without perhaps knowing what he was saying, said that he would seek "national treatment" with the United States. As honourable senators know, what we mean by national treatment is that we will treat the other country in our country the way we treat our domestic industry. It is not very difficult to create a real horror story when you talk about that if every initiative we use in this country has to be given to someone coming in with an investment from the United States. You can create a situation which would make any rational person vote against a free trade agreement.

The fact of the matter is that in every free trade agreement, every common market agreement and every customs union that you examine, there is a degree of national treatment that is carefully controlled, because, of course, if it were global, as the Prime Minister mistakenly indicated—and I think he has since withdrawn from that—it would create a disastrous situation. Our negotiations are in order to determine those avenues in which we would accord national treatment to each other.

It is true that the provinces will have to agree to this, but there is no doubt in my mind that, under the Constitution, the federal government has the full right to enter into this treaty. It does not need the consent of the provinces to do so. However, in practical terms, there are certain areas that are going to be affected and the provinces would have to go along in those particular areas of their jurisdiction. In that regard, I have been very pleased to see the way that they have been consulted. There is now every indication that in a reasonable free trade agreement they would cooperate.

I should like to conclude by telling you what I think will happen with the agreement. I think there will be a removal of tariffs. It will be gradual, especially on the Canadian side, but all will be removed within ten to twelve years.

On the cultural side of things, I think we will give in in those areas that provide nothing but economic protection. By way of example, I think of printing, business magazines and satellite broadcasts to cable companies. Other areas will be resisted firmly. I think the Americans, if they are given something reasonable in economic terms, will go along with the idea that we do have a cultural identity to preserve, that we are concerned about it and that its preservation goes to the very heart of an agreement.

I think there will be a common set of rules to deal with non-tariff barriers, that is, things like countervail and anti-dumping. I do not think they will be removed; I think there will still be a countervail, but I think there will be a clear set of rules, and when they are breached it will be easy for people to say, "Yes, the countervail or the anti-dumping should apply." I think there will be an impartial dispute mechanism, and Canada, I understand, is trying very hard to see that its decisions will be binding. I think the result of any decisions of that organization will be taken in redress, not retaliation.

I think, also, we will negotiate access to the buy-American market by giving access to our government market.

Agriculture always creates a difficult situation in these agreements. In fact, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs in its brilliant report recommended that we exclude agriculture from the agreement. I do not think we will, but I think there will be a standoff on subsidy and marketing practices. Both sides are deeply involved in the movement of agricultural products. They have a lot to lose and they have a lot to gain.

I think we will maintain our marketing agencies, but I understand that what they are doing, which may be an answer to a very intractable problem, is working on an agreement which would really become a model for global trade talks in the handling of the agricultural problem.

Under the Auto Pact, there is a lot of rhetoric to the effect that we must not give up the Auto Pact and that we must not allow anything to happen to it. I think we should face one fact: The Auto Pact has a one-year termination clause. On one year's notice it can be ended. We are not talking about giving up something that has 20 years to run. We cannot avoid negotiating on that. The safeguards under the Auto Pact are really considerably exceeded in most cases due to the fact that our exchange rate with the United States is advantageous and our relative wages are lower. As the agreement phases out tariffs, of course, the Auto Pact will, in effect, become unnecessary. It is my belief that the agreement in respect of the Auto Pact will be that it shall continue while the tariffs are being limited over a period of ten to twelve years. There will be, perhaps, an agreement on the duty remission scheme which Canada is employing to attract non-U.S. and non-Canadian investment in the auto industry.

I understand that the United States wants national treatment in respect of investment. I also understand that they are willing to see Investment Canada continue, provided that it does not interfere with sales of Canadian companies between two U.S. owners.

In the area of services, apparently they are working on a framework and a statement of principles which will be agreed upon. After the agreement, negotiations will continue in respect of those very difficult areas, but within the ambit of the framework. I also understand the same applies to intellectual property.

What this indicates is that an agreement is being hammered out; that the Americans want it; that we are negotiating, without giving the shop away; and that we can have the advantages of a free trade agreement as against the disadvantages of continuing to isolate ourselves in a small domestic market and a multinational trade operation that is shrinking year by year.

What we can do is reorganize our industry to take advantage of a market of 250 million plus. I think that would give us the opportunity to trade and compete with nations other than America on a much better basis. It seems to me that a free trade agreement with the United States is just plain, good business. We can make a deal. We should do it, and we should have it wrapped up within the fast track time frame.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I thank Senator Everett for his exhaustive review of the case for a free trade agreement with the United States. I would like to adjourn this debate.

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

FARM FINANCE

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO CONDUCT STUDY

Hon. Daniel Hays, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 5, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized to examine and report upon farm finance to assess the gravity of the current problems facing the Canadian agricultural industry, to consider the degree to which existing government policy and programs have been successful in meeting their objectives, and to make recommendations on how to better meet the needs of the Canadian agricultural industry; and

That the Committee present its report no later than 31st January, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, in support of the motion I would like to say that in recent years the farm financial situation has become increasingly gloomy as commodity prices have dropped, equity has eroded and a growing number of Canada's young and most productive farmers face serious financial difficulty.

Agriculture in Canada has come to be characterized by heavy capital investment and low and unstable returns. The industry is subject to the vagaries of weather, diseases and pests, and to the uncertainties of domestic and international forces. This results in wide fluctuations in agricultural commodity prices impacting directly on the financial position of farmers from year to year. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has determined that over the past decade receipts from farm operations on a year-by-year basis increased by as much as $2.7 billion and fell by as much as $.5 billion. From 1976 to 1985 the year-over-year change in realized net income fell by as much as 18.8 per cent and rose by as much as 29.8 per cent. In such an environment, financial management is a difficult proposition at best.

Because of the major economic importance of agriculture to certain provinces and to the country as a whole, Canadian farmers have been encouraged by government to increase production and have been assisted to this end by government, in part through credit programs required to finance expansion and increase productivity. Government has also attempted to influence the financial situation of farmers through moratoriums on foreclosure, farm debt review boards, and legislation like Saskatchewan's Farmland Security Act and Manitoba's Family Farm Protection Act.

It is generally accepted that farmers require assistance. While they are often compared to small businessmen, unlike a small business there is no direct link between credit availability for a farming operation and the markets. It is the case with most commodities that farmers have very little control over volumes sold or price. The question is: What kind of assistance is most appropriate?

The committee is aware that the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture is presently conducting a study of farm input costs, including credit. The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would like to take a close look at this particular input cost. There is a need to determine how well the various government sponsored credit granting institutions and government assistance programs available to farmers actually serve the agricultural industry. The committee would also like to determine how government credit programs could be made to better serve the farmer in a fashion that is economically and fiscally responsible and that will not influence or bias in an undesirable way regions or commodities.

To accomplish this, the financial situation of agriculture in Canada must be defined. Who is in difficulty now? What is the difficulty and what are the causes of the difficulty? To this end, the committee hopes to hear representations from federal and provincial governments, public and private financial institutions, farmers and farm organizations. An examination of credit systems used by other countries would also be important to such a study.

Honourable senators, such a study is timely. Doug McRorie, the vice-president of agriculture for the Royal Bank of Canada, said recently that private financial institutions are being adversely affected by the moratoriums and debt reviews. Should the federal government force the reduction of the value of debt by the banks, Mr. McRorie sees the possibility of banks simply getting out of farm lending altogether. Although it is unlikely that this should ever come to pass, the existence of such an adversarial atmosphere is not healthy for the agricultural industry. It is time we tried to get to the root of the problem. The Economic Council of Canada has an agricultural study under way that may go some way towards accomplishing this, but, again, their intention is to cover a much broader area of agricultural concerns.

The Senate committee believes that it can make its own contribution to reaching this goal by providing a public forum for open discussion on farm credit. Honourable senators, this is a very difficult problem that I feel needs attention. It is exacting a high economic and social cost from rural Canadians at this time, and I seek senators' support for this motion. As chairman of the committee, I would be happy to answer any questions. If it were at all possible to pass this motion today, it would certainly expedite our work in terms of getting budgets passed and in bringing the matter back to the Senate for a determination of exactly what powers the committee should have.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 7, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-22, to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT—
PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have received a petition from the Murray River Senior Citizens' Club relating to Bill C-22. I ask that it be received and printed in the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of Petition follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes in Bill C-22 will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high, of the provincial health-care programs, and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and

WHEREAS the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian government's concession to the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

Date: April 14, 1987

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON DRAFT PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS AN APPENDIX

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the sixth report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs^{*} respecting the draft Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see Appendix "A", p. 985.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Neiman, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

THIRTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND ADOPTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report.

Thursday, May 7, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

On March 26, 1987, the Senate adopted the Twelfth Report of this Committee stating that notwithstanding the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, for any committee budget for the financial year 1987-88 submitted to and approved by the Internal Economy Committee, the Main Committee be authorized to release no more than 3/12 of those approved funds until the end of June 1987.

Because the total amount of the funds of the Special Committee of the Senate on Terrorism and Public Safety are required before the end of June 1987, your Committee recommends the approval of the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the said Special Committee for its proposed expenditures with respect to its examination of matters relating to terrorism as a real or potential threat for Canada and to Canadians, as authorized by the Senate on October 8, 1986 and November 27, 1986. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$55,000.00
Transportation and Communications	15,830.00
All Other Expenditures	6,000.00
	$77,430.00

[Senator Neiman.]

Respectfully submitted,

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(e), I move that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, the thirteenth report deals with the funds for the Special Committee of the Senate on Terrorism and Public Safety, required before the end of June, 1987. By the terms of the report, the committee recommends the approval of the budget presented to it by the chairman of the said special committee for its proposed expenditures with respect to its examination of matters relating to terrorism as a real or potential threat for Canada and to Canadians, as authorized by the Senate on October 8, 1986, and November 27, 1986. The said budget total is $77,430, made up of $55,000 for professional and other services; $15,830 for transportation and communication; and all other expenditures $6,600.

We have had a provision for yearly budgets whereby only three twelfths of the budget is advanced to the end of June. This, however, being a special committee that has undertaken to report by June, obviously the full twelve twelfths or 100 per cent will be available.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

FOURTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Guy Charbonneau, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented the following report:

Thursday, May 7, 1987

The Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has the honour to present its

FOURTEENTH REPORT

On March 26, 1987, the Senate adopted the Twelfth Report of this Committee stating that notwithstanding the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, for any committee budget for the financial year 1987-88 submitted to and approved by the Internal Economy Committee, the Main Committee be authorized to release no more than 3/12 of those approved funds until the end of June 1987.

Because the total amount of the funds of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Subject-Matter of Bill C-22, An Act to Amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, are required before the end of June 1987, your Committee recommends the approval of the budget presented to it by the Chairman of the said Special Committee for its proposed expenditures with respect to its examination of the subject-matter of the said bill, as authorized by the Senate on April 2, 1987 and April 14, 1987. The said budget is as follows:

Professional and Other Services	$ 58,336.00
Transportation and Communications	252,001.00
All Other Expenditures	5,000.00
	$315,337.00

Respectfully submitted,

GUY CHARBONNEAU
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(e), that the report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, we are prepared to give the honourable senator leave on the understanding that there will be further discussion on this matter on Tuesday. I believe some senators wish to speak to this matter and would like to hear the explanation given by the deputy chairman of the committee. After having the benefit of his explanation, they will prepare their remarks.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, on the question of leave, I point out that the difficulty in adjourning consideration and adoption of the report until next week is that the chairman of the committee, Senator Bonnell, advises that in order to meet the deadline that he has accepted, namely, June 16, 1987, for the report on Bill C-22, commonly known as the "Pharmaceutical Bill," he has set up a schedule that requires approval of the funds today.

To that end, the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration considered the matter quite fully today. As a matter of fact, the chairman of this special committee took a place at the front of the committee room and answered questions. We spent most of our time on this particular budget, including asking questions that were raised by Senator Phillips.

Senator Phillips: I have not raised a question yet.

Senator Frith: I have outlined the position we are in. On the question of leave which is before us, I am sure that if honourable senators want to hear the explanation of the chairman of the committee, he would be prepared to give it. In order for the committee to do its work and to meet the deadline which, I believe, the government wants it to meet, the committee requires approval of this budget today.

However, if leave is not granted, I would suggest that the matter be adjourned until tomorrow. I would simply turn my application for leave into a notice of motion for tomorrow.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, perhaps I could have a few moments of honourable senators' time to explain the urgency of this matter.

We have, in the other place, a government led by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, who is trying, along with his government, to get legislation through the House of Commons and to have these amendments to the Patent Act passed. They thought it was so urgent that they imposed closure on the parliamentarians in the other place to rush that bill through.

I thought that we, as senators, being more liberal than those in the other place, would try to do justice to this legislation, that we would not wait for its passage in the House of Commons but would conduct a pre-study, with the full support of the Leader of the Government in the Senate as a member of the cabinet. A motion was passed with the consent of all honourable senators to begin a pre-study, to activate that work, and to get the work done quickly so that we could try to support the actions of the government of this country. A committee was struck and some very hard working senators from both sides of the house have been working diligently, sometimes until 11.30 at night, listening to ministers and other witnesses concerning this bill, realizing that over 200 organizations or individuals across the country want to be heard and realizing that many of them have said that they did not have a proper opportunity to be heard in the other place—

Senator Perrault: Shame!

Senator Bonnell:—realizing that several provincial governments wished to be heard—

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. This discussion is on leave. Senator Frith said that Senator Bonnell wanted this budget passed today and that it could not wait for another day. The only question is whether that is proper.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, my point of order is apparently on leave. The reason why I want leave is to show that we in this house are trying to support the government of the country in getting this legislation passed before the end of June.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: It has gone so far that I, as a member of that committee—as its chairman, a non-biased chairman—

Senator Flynn: That's obvious!

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell:—have told my clerk to put notices in the paper, and this without sending any bills to the Senate, at my expense, if necessary—

Senator Steuart: That's dedication!

Senator Bonnell:—to support the government, and so that the people of Canada will know that they will be heard.

Senator Flynn: You are speaking on leave now.

Senator Bonnell: I know; I am trying to support the request for leave. I am trying to say why we want to go forward. I need leave to tell honourable senators.

If the budget is not approved today it means this, that I cannot have my committee clerk put notices in the paper to tell the people of St. John's, Newfoundland, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, of Fredericton, New Brunswick, of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the cradle of Confederation, that we are going to meet in those places. While all other honourable senators will take off that great week in celebration of Queen Victoria's birthday, we will be working.

The newspapers need at least four days' notice to place an ad. If we wait until next week for the approval of these funds, I will have to wait four more days to give notice to the newspapers, and, as a result, we will come back in September or October with a report, and the government will not be able to pass this bill before June 30.

Therefore, I ask the senators opposite to give their full cooperation to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to try to get this legislation before the people, before the Parliament of this country, and to try to give it Royal Assent with all speed. In order to do that we need their support today—not tomorrow, not yesterday, but now.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, speaking on the point concerning leave, I was impressed by the concern shown by Senator Bonnell that every individual and every group who wants to appear before Parliament should have that right.

• (1410)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I recall that in connection with something as basic as the Constitution the honourable senator was one of those who voted that only a few selected groups would be heard. I notice that he has had something of a change of attitude—

Senator Steuart: He has matured.

Senator Phillips: Yes, perhaps he has matured. A couple of items should be mentioned. First, the Senate has a budget which contains a specific amount for committees. We have now gone one month into the fiscal year, and if we allow this very large budget—a budget that will total about $500,000 by the time all of the bills are in—we will have exceeded the total budget for committees by almost $500,000. That does not allow anything for Senator Argue's Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to conduct its special study.

Senator Argue: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: I am concerned that this group is taking the whole budget. I do not think it is desirable or even reasonable for him to ask that.

The honourable senator says that he cannot place an ad in the Charlottetown Guardian without giving them four days' notice. I will place the ad in far less than four days. I would point out to the honourable senator that a good many times he telephones the Charlottetown Guardian and advises them that one of his patients has died; and he does not give them four days' notice about that. That goes in right away. I do not believe that excuse at all. Don't give me it; I am not accepting it.

Senator Bonnell: On a point of order, I would like honourable senators to know that I do not advertise when my patients die; and if any of my patients have died, they have died from natural causes.

Senator Frith: Or toothache.

Senator Bonnell: The undertaker advises them as a news item.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, on this question of leave, I have some objections to bring to the Senate with regard to the substance of the motion. In my opinion there should be some kind of accommodation. The Leader of the Government suggested that the chairman be allowed to explain the reason why he is asking for this budget of $315,000 for this committee. But we could then adjourn until Tuesday with an agreement that the vote shall be taken at the latest on Tuesday afternoon. It would be an order of the Senate. That would give those who are not in accord with the motion an opportunity to express their concerns.

Senator Guay: You are delaying the bill.

Senator Flynn: We are not delaying the bill by having a vote on Monday. If I know the honourable senator from Winnipeg—

Senator Guay: From St. Boniface.

Senator Flynn: I am sorry. I will swim across the river and meet you there. The honourable senator will vote the way his leader tells him on Monday; so there is no problem with that. I am saying that, in any event, the Senate will be able to take a decision on this report on Tuesday; and if the chairman has confidence in his leader, and in particular in the deputy leader, according to the way he expressed himself today, he should have no problem as to what will happen on Tuesday. But at least those who are not entirely in agreement with what is proposed in this report regarding the program of the committee will have an opportunity to express themselves.

On the question of leave, we now have the bill before us, so I would suggest to the chairman that the situation is a little different. I would like to speak on that, and if we are precluded from doing so, I do not believe it would be fair to those of us who are not in agreement, or to the Senate itself. With the proposal that Senator Bonnell may be able to explain his motion, and with the understanding that the question will be put on Tuesday at 6 p.m. at the latest, I believe we will reach a reasonable compromise and there should be no problem with that. And there should be no problem with the advertising, as he has said.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I agree with Senator Flynn that the question of leave does not have to be explained, but I think that it is wise that we are taking the time to at least exchange views as to why leave should or should not be given. I, of course, have no problem with next Tuesday if the chairman has no problem, nor do I have a problem with tomorrow if the chairman says that he must have the budget by the weekend. I would have no problem with changing my motion to a motion of one day's notice in order to deal with the matter tomorrow. If the chairman is happy with tomorrow or Tuesday, then what I am about to say may be unnecessary. However, it will not take me long to say it. I do not understand exactly why, if we proceed later today, all honourable senators who wish to speak to the matter will not have a chance to speak to it.

Senator Flynn: We have just received the report.

Senator Frith: I know, but it is not a long report.

Senator Flynn: It is a weighty one.

Senator Frith: The chairman is present to give explanations. It is not a matter of having to carry out research or to hear witnesses. I understand Senator Phillips' view, and Senator Simard has expressed some very serious reservations, both expressed in the committee. I am not in any way quarreling with their right to express their concerns, but what I do not understand is why we cannot deal with them today. I have not heard any good reason why we should wait until next Tuesday in order to deal with the matter.

Senator Guay: They are delaying!

Senator Flynn: The problem is that we always adjourn on Thursday and come back on Tuesday. We have always had this arrangement and that is the reason.

Senator Frith: But why can't you give leave for today?

Senator Flynn: I have just received the report. I would rather have time to consider its implications before speaking. I was not at the committee meeting.

Senator Frith: But, honourable senators, it is only two paragraphs long. We have the chairman here to explain it. He will not be able to explain it any better Tuesday than he can today, and I do not know what kind of research is going to be necessary in the meantime.

Senator Olson: You know that you are trying to frustrate the arrangement that has already been made.

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, why would we not ask for more information, considering that the reasons given for the urgency are totally fraudulent?

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator MacDonald: I do not know how Senator Bonnell—

Senator Bonnell: Point of order.

Senator MacDonald: —can make a case that he is assisting the Government of Canada—

Senator Bonnell: Point of order.

Senator MacDonald: When I am finished.

An Hon. Senator: It is a point of order!

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order. I do not think that I should be charged by an honourable senator with being fraudulent. I do not think that statement is very proper, and I do not think that my friend meant it. I ask that he retract it.

Senator MacDonald: I have no problem in composing myself and withdrawing that word until I can think of another one.

Senator Bonnell: Thank you.

Senator MacDonald: This house knows that Bill C-22 was the clear responsibility of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. We tried to get this bill into pre-study weeks ago. For some inexplicable reasons, we were denied the traditional permission to pre-study it weeks ago.

Senator Frith: And you now want to delay it further!

Senator MacDonald: So, the opposition decided that it would set up a new committee, travel the length and breadth of the country, drain the entire budget—profligate money—

Senator Steuart: Give people the facts.

Senator MacDonald: —when we had discussed this matter in the Banking Committee. We had ways in which witnesses who had been denied an opportunity to be heard could present their views. All these witnesses would have been heard at a fraction of the cost of this special committee. But, please, Senator Bonnell, do not tell this house without at least breaking up that you are serving the government of the country when you stress the urgency of the meetings of this committee. The Banking Committee would have finished with this matter by now if you had allowed us to.

• (1420)

Senator Frith: That is because you would not have done what he is going to do.

Senator Argue: How do you know what he would have done?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Maurice Simard: Since Senator Frith mentioned my name in debate, and since I was present at the meeting of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration this morning, and considering the explanations given a moment ago by Senator Bonnell which were very similar to those given this morning, I think we could wait until Tuesday.

Senator Bonnell told us he had committed his personal credit for up to $40,000. I think his potential creditors could probably wait until Tuesday. If they have taken his word so far, I fail to see why they would not continue to do so and give the newspapers the go-ahead. The Senate will probably not be abolished before Tuesday. The Liberal majority in the Senate will still be there, and we know it will win in case of a vote.

Considering the foregoing, I think we can definitely wait until Tuesday. I made that request this morning. And meanwhile, I hope our staff will provide the documents containing the complete budget for each committee so they can be compared with the Supplementary Estimates that have yet to be approved. As mentioned by Senator Phillips, the new figure will be nearly 50 per cent more than what we approved a month or so ago, although it is only May. I don't want to belabour the point, but I know that Senator Bonnell is serious and that he wants to help Prime Minister Mulroney, like all decent Canadians, and would prefer to wait until Tuesday so we will have the information requested. Personally, I think $100,000 would have been enough. Others may have differing views, but I will certainly not agree to an immediate debate. Tuesday, once we have the information, we can show Canadians what I see as a partisan strategy. The same results can be obtained if the committee sits in Ottawa. We were told we could invite about 40 experts for the sum of $20,000. However, in this budget, $250,000 out of $315,000 has been earmarked for travel expenses for 200 individuals or group representatives. What they want to organize is a Liberal demonstration, a Liberal show. If the Liberal Party wants to do what the Conservative Party does when it thinks it is right, if it wants to order a poll or criticize the situation, it could do what the Conservative Party did before the 1984 election and pay for the inquiries and the road shows they want out of their own pockets.

First of all, I think the cost is far too high and second, we don't have the information at this time.

[English]

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I really cannot see that there is anything that can be said on Tuesday that cannot be said today. There is no explanation that can be given Tuesday that cannot be given today. However, this is a government bill, and if the government wants to delay consideration of it further, I think we should let the government delay it further. We have tried our best.

The chairman of the committee has said that he may not be able to meet the deadline that he has accepted if the matter is delayed further, and that is up to the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee to decide. If the government does not want to deal with this now, then we can leave it for Tuesday, or perhaps even Thursday, of next week.

Leave has not been granted. My motion, therefore, is that this report be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words about the motion that the report be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Honourable senators, the money that I have spent on behalf of the Government of Canada I can recover through hard work and labour.

I am not worried about the motion not being passed today, next week or next month; what I am worried about, honourable senators, is the fact that funds are necessary to place advertisements in newspapers notifying the people of Prince Edward Island, Senator Phillips' home province, that the committee will not meet in Charlottetown on May 19. We have told 125,000 islanders that the committee would meet at a certain place, on a certain date and at a certain time. Rather than telephone all islanders to inform them that that meeting will not take place, I think it better to place an advertisement in the local newspaper to that effect.

I have tried to assist this government to the best of my ability and have received no thanks at all from the government members. I will now ask the members of the committee to withdraw the request that the committee travel to Charlottetown, because there are no funds available to place those advertisements in the newspapers. We will now have to wait until Tuesday.

Let me tell honourable senators what the committee members had in mind. Let me also tell honourable senators that these are not my ideas; I am only putting forth what the members of the committee have suggested. If I am not correct in what I say, I ask any member of the committee to stand and correct me.

As chairman of the committee, I was asked to make preparations for an appearance of the committee in Charlottetown on May 19. The proposed schedule was that we would leave Charlottetown on the afternoon of May 19, travel to St. John's, Newfoundland, hold a meeting there, then travel on to Fredericton and Halifax to hold meetings in those cities. It was proposed that we hold those meetings on May 19, May 20, May 21 and May 22, because there was a feeling that the Senate would not be sitting that week.

In order to let people know that that was the plan, I thought it necessary to place an advertisement in local newspapers so that anyone who wished to appear before the committee would know where it was meeting, so that anyone who wished to simply listen to the deliberations of the committee would know where the committee was meeting, and to inform anyone who wanted to report on the meeting where the meeting was being held.

The committee members then suggested that the following week the committee travel to British Columbia, then to Alberta, and then up to the Northwest Territories and then to the Yukon. They also proposed that during the week of June 1 the committee hold meetings in the central provinces. They made those suggestions so the committee could table a report in the Senate by June 16. That amounts to a tremendous task. That means 20 meetings of the committee would be held across the country in a three-week period. However, the committee was prepared to do that.

If honourable senators were not about to support the committee, I would have thought they would have said so. If honourable senators were not about to support the committee in its attempts to hold meetings across the country, I would have thought they would have said, "Don't travel."

The Senate recommended that the committee travel to the United States, but the members of the committee decided that that was not necessary, so it has not requested funds to travel there. The committee thinks it can present a report without the requirement of holding hearings in the United States. We have tried to cut the budget as best we could.

Honourable senators, let me tell you that if the Senate does not want to approve this report today, that is all right with me.

This is a committee of the Senate making the request, this is a committee of the Senate trying to do a job so that it can report back to the Senate so honourable senators will have time to consider the report and the legislation can be given Royal Assent in a timely fashion.

Some honourable senators think that we are working too hard now.

Senator Roblin: Oh, oh!

Senator Flynn: You are extremely amusing.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I see that my good friend Senator Roblin laughs at that.

• (1430)

Senator Frith: Well, you give them a holiday; give them a little more time!

Senator Bonnell: I would tell Senator Roblin that I never saw him come to any of the meetings yet, but if he had come there and stayed until 11.30 every night to hear those witnesses—and if he had asked questions—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: And up at seven in the morning.

Senator Bonnell: —I would be quite sure that there would be no laughs on his face after that.

Senator Roblin: I will laugh at you any day of the week. You are a funny fellow!

Senator Bonnell: I know that you can laugh at me any time you like—and I have always appreciated your laughs, your words and your comments—but I can assure you that your colleagues on your side of the house are working hard, as are those on our side of the house.

Honourable senators, you decide what you want to do, but do not expect our committee to do the impossible. When you find that we cannot get back to you on June 16, you will know whose fault it was. Thank you very much.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that this report be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, so that the record is clear, I did not really move that the debate be adjourned until tomorrow because I did not get leave to introduce it today. What the record should show is that I gave notice—because I could not get leave—of the motion for the next sitting.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I think I did say that the report would be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Yes, but Your Honour asked if it was agreed, and I am saying that it was not a motion that it be put on the Orders of the Day. It was not something that needed agreement. I just changed it into a notice of motion for the next sitting, that is all. It is a small difference, but it does not require it to be put to the chamber—that is all.

Motion agreed to.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE COMMUNIQUÉ—AGENDA FOR SENATE REFORM—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday next, May 12, 1987, I will move:

That it is timely for the Senate of Canada to take into consideration the agenda set out in the Meech Lake communiqué on the subject of Senate Reform, including the following:

- the functions and role of the Senate;
- the powers of the Senate;
- the method of selection of Senators; and
- the distribution of Senate seats.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 12, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs have power to sit at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on Tuesday, May 12 and 26 and June 2 and 9, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—INTERNATIONAL RAMIFICATIONS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on Tuesday I raised with the Leader of the Government in the Senate the question as to whether the expression "distinct society," which is used in the proposed constitutional changes, would provide any additional prerogative to Quebec in the international field greater than or different from that currently possessed by Quebec or by any other province. The result of my questioning was not entirely conclusive.

Today I want to pursue the matter by asking about a more specific aspect of that question. Is it the view of the Government of Canada that it would be possible for the Province of Quebec to oppose in the courts, for example, the entering by Canada into a trading arrangement with the United States and to use the "distinct society" concept as an argument?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I suppose that any province that tried to oppose a decision by the Government of Canada to enter into a treaty with another country would avail itself of any section of the Constitution that was at hand. Whether it would be possible or whether a government of Quebec and its legal advisers would decide to invoke that particular section I do not know.

Senator MacEachen: The Leader of the Government was quite explicit on Tuesday in saying that the Government of Quebec would have greater manoeuvrability and would certainly be able to go to the courts and have its case strengthened in the field of languages by the use of the expression "distinct society".

The Government of Canada must have a view on this, and I am asking about it. Is it the intention or thought of the Government of Canada that Quebec could use the expression "distinct society" legitimately to block a trade agreement by arguing that certain provisions of the trade agreement would imperil the existence of the "distinct society" in Quebec? Would the Leader of the Government disagree with that view? I understand that Premier Bourassa has already made this point. I want to know what the view of the Government of Canada is. Is it the intention that this expression, which is to be brought into Parliament by the Government of Canada, will confer that prerogative on the Government of Quebec?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, many weeks ago in response to questions I made the point that the Government of Canada alone can sign treaties on behalf of Canada.

Senator Frith: At present.

Senator Murray: The Government of Canada alone can sign treaties on behalf of Canada.

Senator Frith: Under the present Constitution.

Senator Murray: My opinion has not changed, and the proposed constitutional amendment will certainly not change that.

Senator MacEachen: It would be helpful if the Leader of the Government could be more explicit and state to us that in the view of the government the expression "distinct society" does not confer any opportunity or status on the part of Quebec to block the trading agreement.

● (1440)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my view on that matter and, indeed, the position of the government on that matter is as I expressed it some weeks ago.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, that is quite inadequate, because some weeks ago we did not have this particular Meech Lake agreement. Several weeks ago the minister said that, indeed, the Government of Canada has full authority in trade and that no province could assert any authority in trade and, therefore, could not block or attempt to block an arrangement with the United States. We accept that. But now we have a development involving a constitutional change with the expression "distinct society". It is a new development, and I want to know whether the new development, with the expression "distinct society", in any way alters the view which the minister gave several weeks ago.

Senator Murray: I am glad to have the opportunity to reply in the negative.

Senator MacEachen: I think that is very helpful because it will certainly assist the deliberations if it is made clear to all concerned that the use of the expression "distinct society" would not be a viable way of attempting to thwart the jurisdiction of the federal government in the trade field.

I am told that it is reported that Premier Bourassa has already stated that this could be done, and that if he didn't like it, he would use it. Surely these misunderstandings should not be allowed to develop at this stage. I am delighted that the minister has said that in his view and in the view of the government the "distinct society" expression does not confer on any province, in this case Quebec, any authority in the trade field that would have an implication for a trading arrangement with the United States.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the federal government alone exercises the right to sign treaties and to declare war or peace. That will continue to be the case. The proposed constitutional amendment does not change that situation.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—DISTRIBUTION OF POWERS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question relevant to the discussion that has just taken place.

Yesterday the minister told the Senate that the division of legislative powers between the Parliament of Canada and the legislature of Quebec would in no way be changed by the constitutional amendments which are to give effect to the Meech Lake accord.

Does this mean that those amendments will include a provision stating that the general rule that the Constitution of Canada is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society is not to be applied when the courts are interpreting sections 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act, 1867?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am sorry, but I do not quite grasp the meaning or the significance of the question. I will try to give it further thought, but the proposed constitutional amendment in the form in which it is set out in the Meech Lake communiqué surely speaks for itself.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, it does not speak clearly to me, and I am asking for information.

We know that there is a distribution of powers in the Constitution Act, 1867, and the very important subsection in section 92 refers to property and civil rights in the province. This might be a consideration when the capacity of the Government of Canada to act in accordance with any treaty into which it had entered came to be discussed. Therefore the question I am now asking is relevant to the one Senator MacEachen just asked.

We know that there is this division of power which has been the subject of extensive judicial consideration. We are now told that we are to have in the Constitution a provision which will require that the Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

Yesterday we were told repeatedly by the minister that the new constitutional provisions will not alter the distribution of powers between Parliament and the legislatures, as set forth in sections 91 and 92.

My question is this: When the courts come to consider specific cases involving that distribution of powers, will they or will they not be bound by the new provision that the Constitution of Canada is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society? To go back to my original formulation: Does the minister's statement that there is to be no change in the distribution of powers mean that there will be a provision stating that the general rule with regard to interpreting the Constitution—and sections 91 and 92 as part of the Constitution—consistent with the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society is not to be applied with regard to sections 91 and 92? Can we have a clear answer on that?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the proposal is that the Constitution will provide in that interpretative clause that the Constitution is to be interpreted in a manner consistent with "distinct society," and also what I have summarized in my language as being "linguistic duality." The Constitution shall be interpreted. It is not intended to exempt any particular section of the Constitution from that interpretative clause.

We do not purport to change the distribution of powers, and the courts do not change the distribution of powers. There is a process for changing the distribution of powers.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, we all understand the process by which constitutional amendments might be made to sections 91 and 92. However, none of us is so naive as to think that the words put down in 1867 have been interpreted as some of the authors of that document intended. There has been judicial interpretation.

Judicial interpretation is so important that in the Meech Lake accord there is to be an instruction as to the general rule to be followed in the interpretation of the Constitution. We have now been told by the Leader of the Government in the Senate that that rule is to be applied to the interpretation of sections 91 and 92. Consequently, there can be a new interpretation of those sections, an interpretation quite different from that which has hitherto prevailed; is that correct?

Senator Murray: As I understand it, the honourable senator is suggesting that we should exempt those sections from the interpretative clause. That is not the proposal.

Senator Stewart: I am not making any such suggestion, honourable senators. I simply want to know whether the honourable senator was being candid with us yesterday when he told us that the Meech Lake accord would not alter and does not purport to alter the distribution of powers in any way.

He has now told us that some of us may have been misled by that statement, because the distribution of powers is to be interpreted according to a new principle, a principle quite different from that which has hitherto prevailed.

Senator Murray: I remind the honourable senator that it applies also to the provision having to do with what I have referred to as "linguistic duality." So, yes, the Constitution is to be interpreted in that way. I do not understand how or why the honourable senator or any honourable senator would be misled by my statements of yesterday and the day before. I think they were very clear.

● (1450)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, let us put it in another context, because I really think the Leader of the Government is not quite understanding the question. Yesterday, when I pointed out that the reports were that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Government had been assuring English Canada that Quebec did not get a single power that it did not already have before Meech Lake, that it had nothing added after Meech Lake—

Senator Murray: Where did you see that?

Senator Frith: I quoted it yesterday.

Senator Murray: No, you did not; I beg your pardon, but what you quoted was part of a headline from a newspaper. I explained yesterday what I had said and what we had all said about this matter, that the proposed recognition of Quebec as a distinct society did not in any way alter the distribution of powers. We do not alter the distribution of powers nor do we purport to change the distribution of powers by this recognition.

Senator Frith: Exactly; that is precisely the point that Senator Stewart is making. The Leader of the Government said just a moment ago that there is a way in which the distribution of powers can be changed, and that is by constitutional amendment. Of course, that is correct. What we have here is a constitutional amendment. So it may very well be that the Leader of the Government and his associates do not intend to change the distribution of powers. The point of Senator Stewart's question is that if the Constitution of Canada is going to say:

The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canada . . .

b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

and if, as he has just told us, that applies to all provisions of the Constitution, then it applies to sections 91 and 92, which are the sections that deal with the distribution of legislative powers.

The point of the question is that after the amendments, whatever they may be, are put into effect, the courts will have to interpret the distribution of powers in accordance with a new rule of interpretation that is added to the Constitution and which is intended to be added to the Constitution.

Senator MacEachen: It is a new ball game.

Senator Frith: There may be other sections in the Constitution which state that it "shall be interpreted as follows," but not as far as I know. From the courses I have taken in constitutional law, the Interpretation Act and various rules of interpretation apply, but there is no provision in the Constitution which says that it "shall be interpreted in accordance with the following."

Senator Stewart is saying that if that applies to sections 91 and 92, then it does affect the distribution of powers because it is going to provide a new interpretative rule. If it does not apply to sections 91 and 92, he is asking whether the actual text will state that it does not apply. The Leader of the Government said yesterday that it does not apply to the distribution of powers, and that is why he said that if Quebec thinks it got any more powers that relate to the distribution of legislative powers than it had before, it is wrong, because it got nothing more. Senator Stewart is asking whether the text will state that or whether it will be left as it is, in which case I say—and I do not like to say I know more about any subject than the government leader, but I may have studied a little more constitutional law than he has—that that is a new rule of interpretation. If it applies to sections 91 and 92, it affects the distribution of powers.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it does not affect the distribution of powers. I wish the honourable senator would be more careful in quoting me. He quoted me as saying that it did not apply to the distribution of powers. I stated from the beginning that it does not alter the distribution of powers. The courts, of course, will interpret the distribution of powers, as they always have. They do not change the distribution of powers as between the federal Parliament and the provinces.

Senator Frith: You can't be serious!

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—INCLUSION OF INTERPRETATIVE SECTION IN RESULTING LEGISLATION—IDENTIFICATION OF AND INSTRUCTIONS TO DRAFTSMEN

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government advise us whether the new act arising out of the Meech Lake accord will have a general interpretative section?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, that has not yet been determined.

Senator Sinclair: I noticed, honourable senators, that the communiqué states that the Prime Minister and the ten premiers agreed to ask officials to transform into a constitutional text the principles in the accord. Who are those officials?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the advisers to the federal government in the Department of Justice, the Privy Council and the federal-provincial relations secretariat.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, when legislative draftsmen are given a job to do, somebody has to give them instructions. Who is giving those instructions with regard to putting into constitutional, legal terminology the accord?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the instructions are there in the Meech Lake accord. If there is difficulty or if there are questions raised by the officials, they will be discussed with the Prime Minister.

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, that takes me back to my first question, which is: Is there going to be a general interpretative clause or section to bring into effect the accord? That is a principle that must have been discussed. It is quite unusual to state in a constitutional document that we are going to interpret any provision in a certain way, and that is how I read this section of the accord. Am I wrong?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I hope it is clear that in the drafting of constitutional texts, the officials of the various governments will be working together. Second, it is true that the answer to the question put by the honourable senator has not yet been determined.

FUTURE AMENDMENT OF AMENDMENT PROVISIONS—UNANIMITY REQUIREMENT

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a rather different question which relates to the process by which an amendment might be made in the future to the amendment provisions in the Constitution. In other words, it has to do with the amendment of the amendment arrangements. Let me lay the ground for my question in this way.

[Senator Murray.]

Part V of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides for the amendment of the Constitution of Canada in two different ways. Under section 38, what we might call the general amending formula, what is required is a resolution by two thirds of the provinces with at least 50 per cent of the population of all the provinces. Then, under section 41 amendments with regard to certain specified matters require the agreement of all of the provincial legislative assemblies. Under the Meech Lake accord amendments relating to the matters specified in section 42, which amendments at present can be made only under subsection 38(1), will require the consent of all of the provinces. In other words, matters under section 42 are to be dealt with in the future in the same way as matters under section 41. Hereafter, for example, an amendment in relation to the method of selecting senators will require not the agreement of two thirds of the provincial legislatures but agreement of all of the provincial legislatures.

Honourable senators, it is possible that at some time in the future, sooner or later, after experience with this new amendment rule, the Government of Canada, the Government of Nova Scotia or the Government of Alberta will decide that the unanimity requirement for amendments relating to the matters under section 42 is unsatisfactory and that it is unworkable. That government may then wish to initiate an amendment to change the process by which amendments relative to such matters can be made. My question is this: Will the Meech Lake provisions require provincial unanimity for an amendment which would relax the new unanimity requirement for section 42 matters?

I am sure that the minister will have noted that section 41 contains such a provision, that is, a provision requiring provincial unanimity for changes in the process by which the Constitution, relative to the matters specified in that section, to be made. Or, alternatively, will the Meech Lake provisions permit an amendment to the new section 42 under the terms of the general amendment formula set forth in section 38(1)? That is to say, can the requirement for unanimity with regard to section 42 amendments be relaxed by an amendment made with the agreement of only two thirds of the provinces with the appropriate population?

• (1500)

Senator Stewart: That, of course, is not the case now. The situation where unanimity is required with regard to an amendment is dealt with in section 41, where we have amendments requiring unanimous consent, and the last of these amendments is "an amendment to this Part." But there is no provision elsewhere that protects other matters in a comparable way. All other amendments to the Constitution come under section 38.

Senator Murray: Which is under Part V.

Senator Stewart: Which is under Part V. Section 38 is included in Part V; it is the first section in Part V.

Senator Murray: But there would have to be unanimity to change section 38(1).

Senator Stewart: That is not correct. Section 38(1) is part of the Constitution and there is provided therein that any part of the Constitution, except section 41, can be changed by the provision set forth there; in other words, by two-thirds agreement. Honourable senators, that is why there is a specific provision with regard to amendments to section 41. The general rule applies, except to section 41.

Senator Murray: What my honourable friend is asking is whether it now takes unanimous consent to change the general amending formula, and it does. If, for example, the First Ministers had decided to adopt the Victoria formula suggested by his party in order to do that, as a general amending formula it would have taken the unanimous consent of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures. Perhaps I have misunderstood the question.

Senator Frith: You are right in what you are saying, but I do not think that is his question.

Senator Stewart: I know that it is a complicated matter, but it is of very great importance, and, I am sure, of the greatest importance to those premiers who wanted to have the Constitution changed so that unanimity of the provinces would be required with regard to matters under section 42.

If the Meech Lake agreement goes forward, then section 42 matters will require provincial unanimity, just as section 41 matters do now. I then go on to say: Suppose they become dissatisfied with that; suppose that Alberta becomes dissatisfied, let us say, with regard to the Senate and says, "We are being held up by one province"—Nova Scotia, let us say. "We want to start an amendment so that we can get away from the requirement of unanimity with regard to changing the rules for the selection of senators."

My question is—and I am sorry to repeat it: Will they have to get unanimity to abolish the requirement for unanimity, or can that be done under the much slacker requirements of section 38(1)?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will again study the question more closely; but, if I understood it correctly, my reply is that unanimity would be required to change that formula in that respect.

Senator Stewart: In other words, there will appear in the rewritten section 42, as there is now in section 41, a section which will require unanimity for an amendment to this section.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, it now says in section 42:

An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

That is the two-thirds provision. We could change that and say "an amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with section 41." Which is the unanimity requirement. Is that the intention?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators will see the draft in due course.

Senator Frith: I am not asking for the draft but just the effect.

Senator Murray: The effect of it would be to remove those institutions that are now in section 42 into section 41; and to change the unanimity requirement it would require unanimity.

Senator Stewart: That is very reassuring for Premier Bourassa, but I am sure it may be somewhat depressing for those premiers who want to see changes with regard to the mode of selection of senators.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA—RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT—ENTRENCHMENT OF COURT

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I am following along the same line of questioning in connection with the Meech Lake communiqué, particularly as it applies to the Supreme Court of Canada. I have read the two paragraphs that apply to the Supreme Court of Canada, and I am really quite uncertain as to their significance. The first paragraph says:

Entrench the Supreme Court and the requirement that at least three of the nine justices appointed be from the civil bar;

Perhaps my knowledge of constitutional law and constitutional evolution is somewhat lacking, but if honourable senators look at section 41 of the Constitution Act of 1982, they will see that the Supreme Court is already entrenched, and because of that fact the appointment of the three justices from the civil bar is already entrenched as being part of the Supreme Court Act. I do not know what this government means by "the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada."

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): It wasn't this government that wrote that.

Senator Lang: Well, I think this new government has to interpret it.

Senator Murray: Furthermore, I voted against the bill in 1982.

Senator Lang: What is the significance of that first paragraph in view of our present constitutional situation? I raise this particularly because on May 5 there was an announcement by the Minister of Justice with regard to Supreme Court procedural changes introduced. Are those amendments to the Supreme Court Act—which involve jurisdiction and matters of procedure—now to be subject to unanimous provincial consent?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the answer to the second part of the honourable senator's question is no. We are proposing to entrench the court, not the entire Supreme Court Act. With regard to the first part of his question, there is and has been for a few years some disagreement among legal constitutional scholars as to whether the court really is entrenched by virtue of section 41(d), where the reference is to the composition of the Supreme Court of Canada. Whether or not that refers to the fact that three of the judges are to be from the civil bar is a matter of disagreement. I cannot name the experts who would disagree with the honourable senator's contention that the court is already entrenched, but I would ask him to take my word that they exist. So, for greater certitude, we propose to entrench the court and the provision regarding the three judges from the civil bar.

● (1510)

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Would I be correct in assuming that this paragraph in the communiqué that is to be included in an amendment will be there for purposes of clarification and for no other reason?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we propose to entrench the Supreme Court and the requirement that three of the judges be from the civil bar because there now seems to be a disagreement among eminent constitutional experts as to whether those matters are now entrenched by virtue of section 41(d). Someone has just passed me a copy of an article in Le Devoir which deals with this matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Beaudoin, Professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Ottawa, wrote in Le Devoir, and I quote:

Most Constitutionalists believed that Section 41 gave Quebec adequate protection at the Supreme Court level by requiring the appointment of three Civil Code specialists. Other highly regarded jurists have claimed the opposite: the protection of three Quebec judges was far from evident.

[English]

Senator Frith: It is just composition.

Senator Murray: Therefore, it was felt that we should take this opportunity to clarify the situation and entrench the court and the requirement that three of its judges be from the civil bar.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, if I may continue this line of questioning, my next question is with regard to the second clause of the communiqué under the heading "Supreme Court of Canada". It reads:

-provide that, where there is a vacancy on the Supreme Court, the federal government shall appoint a person from a list of candidates proposed by the provinces and who is acceptable to the federal government.

By what sort of mechanism does the federal government propose to solicit names of candidates for this one job from ten provinces?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, as I said yesterday in reply to a question from Senator Austin, we have not quite determined all the modalities, but I would not take it for granted that the federal government would go asking for lists every time there was a vacancy. What might be possible, for example, is to have the provinces submit lists which would be updated annually.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SENATE REFORM—
RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT—QUEBEC VACANCY

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, and it is on the subject that I questioned him about before, which is the new method of appointing senators. I want to make it very clear that if I ask questions about this matter, it is not because I support the government's proposal. In fact, I think the government's proposal of having the provinces make appointments is the worst possible answer to Senate reform. However, that is what the government now proposes to do.

What I would like to know is this: There is presently one vacancy in the Senate from the province of Quebec. Has the government asked the Government of Quebec for a list of names?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, not that I am aware of. I may say that with regard to the Senate and, indeed, with regard to this question of the distinct society and all the matters that were covered in the Meech Lake declaration, I had the pleasure today to be present at a lunch at the Canadian Club which was addressed by the Premier of Ontario. I would commend to the attention of all honourable senators, in particular my honourable friends opposite, the excellent speech the Premier of Ontario made in support of the Meech Lake declaration and its significance for the future of our country.

Senator Frith: I am beginning to understand why you enjoyed it.

Senator Argue: I can understand Ontario loving it.

Senator Molgat: So the government has not asked the Province of Quebec for a list of names. In view of the fact that the wording in the communiqué is to the effect that the federal government will select from the list people who are acceptable to the government, the government must have had some criteria of what would be acceptable. I wonder if the minister could tell us the criteria the government has in mind?

Senator Murray: To maintain the present high quality of membership in this place.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question which has just occurred to me. The tradition is that the prerogative for appointments to the Senate is exclusively that of the Prime Minister. I know the appointments are made by the Governor General, but certainly the tradition and convention of the Constitution is that the Prime Minister does not have to consult anyone about his recommendations. Is there any significance in the fact that the accord uses the words "Government of Canada" rather than the Prime Minister?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, no, there is not. Once the lists have been submitted in respect to a particular vacancy and the candidate is selected, the person would be appointed by Her Excellency on the basis of what is called an instrument of advice from the Prime Minister.

Senator Frith: So the same procedure that is now used where it is essentially the Prime Minister's prerogative will still be used.

Senator Murray: Yes. These are not what are called order in council appointments by the government. They are done by an instrument of advice from the Prime Minister to Her Excellency.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM AGREEMENT—FORECAST OF PROJECTS

Question No. 9 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Senator MacEachen, P.C.:

12th March, 1987—Has the United States Government submitted to Canadian authorities its forecast of projects it wants to implement in Canada in 1987 under the Canada/U.S. Test and Evaluation Program Agreement and, if so, how many test flights of the cruise are contemplated?

Reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

The U.S.A. Government has submitted its forecast of test projects for 1987 under the Canada/U.S.A. Test and Evaluation Agreement. The flight tests of the air-launched cruise missile occurred on February 24 and March 1, 1987. No further cruise missile test flights will occur in 1987.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND LIGHTHOUSES

Question No. 11 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Senator Macquarrie:

26th March, 1987—1. What is the oldest lighthouse structure still in operation in Prince Edward Island?

2. Under what government jurisdiction did the East Point Lighthouse operate in the years 1867-1873?

3. If the projected plans to automate this lighthouse proceed, what provision will be made for tourist access to the lighthouse tower building which was constructed in 1867?

4. In the event of malfunction or non-function of an automated service, what are the provisions for repair and/or correction of such interruptions of service?

5. What fishermen, fishermen's associations or sailing groups have requested automation of the East Point Lighthouse?

6. In the last ten years what is the number of visitors to the lighthouse (per year)?

Reply by the Minister of Transport:

1. The oldest lighthouse operational in Prince Edward Island is Prim Point, established in 1846.
2. The Colonial Government.
3. The Province of Prince Edward Island, Department of Tourism, maintains a summer tourist guide and this service will continue. The Canadian Coast Guard is amenable to similar tourism services being provided by provincial authorities or public groups who may wish to do so at other stations.

4. Interruptions in service will continue to be attended to from Charlottetown Coast Guard base as is the present practice.

5. No service groups have requested automation.

6. Approximately 8,000 visitors per year.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 12, 1987 at 2 p.m.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON STUDY OF DRAFT

THURSDAY, May 7, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Draft Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, has, in obedience to the Orders of Reference of Tuesday, February 3, 1987 and Tuesday, April 14, 1987, examined the said Draft Revised Statutes and now presents the following report.

The 1985 statute revision will be the sixth since 1886, but the first in which, pursuant to the Statute Revision Act, S.C. 1974-75-76 c. 20, parliamentary committees are to review the work of the Statute Revision Commission "for the purpose of examination and approval". With respect to this issue of process, your Committee is of the opinion that future revisions should be presented to Parliament in a form that will better assist the committee or committees appointed to review them. The Draft under consideration consists of 17 volumes containing well over 10,000 pages of legislative text, with no indication as to the changes made by the Commission to the laws enacted by Parliament. The manner in which the Draft was presented is inconsistent with your Committee's mandate to examine and approve.

RECOMMENDATION 1 - In future revisions, changes made should be identified in such a way as to allow parliamentary committees to perform their statutory duty; perhaps in the same form as is used in amending Bills. Further, to facilitate the process in the future, it might be appropriate for the Minister of Justice to take advantage of s. 7 of the Act, which allows drafts of portions of a statute revision to be laid before Parliament "from time to time". This would permit consideration to take place in a more manageable way.

Your Committee has paid special attention to the Acts of Parliament that are not included in the revision. We requested a list of all such statutes, with an explanation of the reason for the omission. That list is appended. We wish to comment on one statute mentioned therein - the Geneva Conventions Act, RSC 1970 c. G-3. The rationale given for its deletion is that it has "very little application (wartime)".

In our view this is not acceptable. Pursuant to the three important Geneva Conventions of 1949, Canada has undertaken "in time of peace as in time of war to disseminate" the texts of the Conventions "as widely as possible", and to include them in courses of military and (if possible) civilian instruction "so that the principles thereof may become known to all ... armed forces and to the entire population." Failure to include the Act in the 1985 Revision would, in our view, place Canada in violation of the spirit of this international obligation, since, in a practical sense, the only access many citizens have to federal statutes is to the latest periodic revision. Further, deletion of the Act could be short-sighted, since the clear tendency of international law in this area is for the laws of war to apply to conflicts not having the full scope or intensity of declared war.

RECOMMENDATION 2 - Your Committee recommends that the Geneva Conventions Act be included in the main consolidation of the 1985 Revised Statutes of Canada, to emphasize our country's continued commitment to international humanitarian law of armed conflict.

Your Committee also gave consideration to several aspects of the proposed Parliament of Canada Act, Chapter P-1 in the Draft. This Act would consolidate into one several statutes relating to Parliament. While we had some doubts as to the jurisdiction of the Commission to effect such a consolidation having, as it does, a substantive aspect in relation to the long and short titles of the seven statutes, we are satisfied that this issue will be resolved by the enactment of a Bill to give legal effect to the revision. We remain concerned, however, as to the inclusion of an Act respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill", S.C. 1972 c. 11, in the consolidation, since it does not, like the six other statutes, address itself exclusively to the internal affairs of the Houses or the conduct of their officers. We do not feel that we would be justified in recommending that that statute appear as a separate chapter in the revision; but we do feel the matter should be re-examined in the future. Finally, we note that the Commission has agreed to revise some of the terminology used in the French version of the Parliament of Canada Act in response to concerns which were raised. We wish to inform the Senate that these concerns have been resolved to our satisfaction.

RECOMMENDATION 3 - That, in the next revision, the Statute Revision Commission should re-examine the issue of the inclusion of an Act respecting the use of the expression "Parliament Hill" in the proposed Parliament of Canada Act.

Your Committee also gave consideration to certain concerns expressed by counsel to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, and the Senate Chairman of that Committee. They submitted that a substantive change had been made in the revision of the French version of section 28 of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act (Chapter T-19 in the Draft Report). When made aware of a commitment to the Joint Committee by the responsible Minister to introduce amendments to that Act which would have the effect of deleting a limitation from the English version of that section, the Commission agreed that it might be preferable to reinstate the French version as it was originally enacted by Parliament.

RECOMMENDATION 4 - That the original French version of s. 28 of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act be reinstated in the Draft Report of the Statute Revision Committee. Further, we would urge the Minister of Justice to include, if possible, the appropriate amendment to the English version of s.28 in the bill that will give legislative form to the Draft Report, in order to give effect to the commitment made to the Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

Your Committee has been apprized of concerns expressed in the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General of the House of Commons as to the use of gender-based language in the Draft Report. We agree that, insofar as it is possible, statutes should be expressed in gender neutral language.

RECOMMENDATION 5 - That, in future revisions, as well as in the drafting of statutes, regulations and other statutory instruments in general, an effort be made to use gender neutral language.

In conclusion, your Committee has examined the draft Revised Statutes of 1985 and makes the following general recommendation.

RECOMMENDATION 6 - Your Committee expresses its general approval of the Report of the Statute Revision Commission and, subject to the recommendations made above, recommends that the further legislative process contemplated by the Statute Revision Act take place.

Respectfully submitted,

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 12, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

FORGIVENESS OF CERTAIN OFFICIAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE DEBTS BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, for Senator Murray, presented Bill S-9, relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the Governments of Togo and of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania and also to the former East African Community.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting of the senate.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSING OF MURRAY RIVER, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, POST OFFICE—PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I have a few petitions concerning the Canada Post Corporation. I ask that they be received and printed in the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(Text of petitions follows:)

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIA- MENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to effect widespread closures of rural post offices, and

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to change the locations of many rural post offices, and

WHEREAS such changes are more likely to take place in areas where the postmaster or postmistress is about to resign, retire or become promoted, and

WHEREAS the Murray River postmaster/postmistress will soon be reaching retirement age.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community and to take strong and immediate action to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with super mailboxes or any other inferior service.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

Gerald Moore, Abney

TO THE HONOURABLE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to effect widespread closures of rural post offices, and

WHEREAS, the Canada Post Corporation is threatening to change the locations of many rural post offices, and

WHEREAS such changes are more likely to take place in areas where the postmaster or postmistress is about to resign, retire or become promoted, and

WHEREAS the Murray River postmaster/postmistress will soon be reaching retirement age.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your Petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community and to take strong and immediate action to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with super mailboxes or any other inferior service.

And as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-42 TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to table its Thirteenth Report respecting the subject matter of the Bill C-42, An Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report see appendix, p. 1013.)

TERRORISM AND PUBLIC SAFETY

SPECIAL COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO EXTEND DATE OF PRESENTATION OF FINAL REPORT

Hon. William M. Kelly, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That, notwithstanding the Order of the Senate adopted on Wednesday, 8th October, 1986, the Special Committee of the Senate on Terrorism and Public Safety be empowered to present its final report no later than Tuesday, 30th June, 1987.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps Senator Kelly could explain briefly why he wants an extension. I am sure there is a good reason for this extension, but I think it should be on the record.

Senator Kelly: Honourable senators, we originally committed ourselves to presenting our final report by June 2, 1987. I am confident that we will be in a position to report by mid-June. However, I felt that permission to report by no later than June 30 would give us the leeway we need in order to complete our drafting. We are well along in that drafting, but we simply cannot meet the deadline of June 2.

Motion agreed to.

DOMESTIC PETROLEUM LIMITED

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY PROPOSED SALE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to study and report upon the proposed sale of Dome Petroleum Limited with particular reference to the impact of the sale on Canada, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee submit its report no later than 30th June, 1987.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO STUDY SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-56

Hon. Ian Sinclair, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to examine the subject-matter of the Bill C-56, An Act to amend certain Acts relating to financial institutions, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps the chairman of the committee, Senator Sinclair, would explain the reason for this request. I believe that this bill is the replacement for two bills that were withdrawn, namely, Bills C-8 and C-9. Those two bills had already been referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce for pre-study. I think that is a fact, but since we do not wish to have pre-study become a matter of routine, can Senator Sinclair explain why he is asking for this permission?

Senator Sinclair: Honourable senators, this bill arises out of the second tranche of the Minister of State (Finance). The minister is bringing forward three bills respecting financial institutions. The subject matter of the first of those bills relates to the report I tabled earlier today. This is the second bill. As honourable senators may know, it has a target date of June 30 to coincide with action to be taken by the Province of Ontario. In part, it deals with Bill C-8 and Bill C-9, but there are additional matters as well. So, I would suggest that it is appropriate to deal with it in the way I have requested.

Motion agreed to.

TAX REFORM

NOTICE OF MOTION TO AUTHORIZE BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE TO CONDUCT STUDY

Hon. Ian Sinclair: I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, May 13, 1987, I will move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to study and report upon tax reform in Canada, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee submit its report no later than 29th February, 1988.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Michel Cogger moved the second reading of Bill C-22, to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, it is an honour and a privilege to rise in this chamber this afternoon to support Bill C-22.

In the course of a session, various types of legislation are examined by senators, both in this chamber and in committee.

However, certain bills in particular reflect the government's will and determination to correct anomalies, normalize situations or take steps that are not without attendant political risks. That is indeed the case with Bill C-22.

Legislation that is both necessary and salutary for the country is not necessarily popular. The government recognized the need for amending the Patent Act, as the previous administration had done.

There are a number of anomalies in the legislation as it stands today. This is a situation that must be corrected. The principle of the bill, because at this stage we have to talk about the principle of the proposed legislation, is as straightforward as it is desirable. That principle is to ensure that a Canadian researcher who discovers a new drug sees the result of his efforts, his knowledge and his work, his studies and his research, protected against non-authorized use for a period of time commensurate with the kind of protection he would receive in other jurisdictions. That is the first part of the principle.

The second is to ensure that the protection offered does not result in excessively high prices for the Canadian consumer.

Bill C-22 meets this twofold objective perfectly, while maintaining the delicate balance that must exist between the two apparently contradictory aspects I have just mentioned.

Let us consider for a moment the first component, which is to protect the results of the innovative efforts of the Canadian researcher. I hardly think it should be necessary to try to convince senators of the tremendous importance for a country of providing a satisfactory system for the protection of intellectual property.

The protection of intellectual property is one of the major criteria by which a country is judged. It is judged by the respect it shows, in legislation and otherwise, for the fruits of the labour of its own citizens and those of other countries throughout the world.

Canada cannot afford to have a reputation as a country where one can infringe with impunity the laws that would normally protect the results of research or innovative work. As a signatory to several international conventions, Canada had to correct the following anomaly: The legislation protects all patents with one exception, which is at variance with both national and international standards. I am referring to the protection afforded intellectual property with respect to drugs, the only gap in our present legislation. What brought about the situation is of course history, all because of a system introduced several years ago which made permits compulsory.

It is hard to assess what it has cost Canada in terms of "brain drain", loss of talent and loss of jobs. Think of all the research being done across our borders, research that could have been done here.

This is a factor on which we cannot put a price. We can only guess at the tremendous cost to the country, to all Canadians, in terms of additional medical costs and in terms of setting back our whole Canadian health care system and related services.

With the passage of Bill C-22, Canadian researchers will once again work with the certainty that they will receive due compensation for the fruits of their labours. Manufacturers have already made a commitment to set aside considerable sums of money for research and development here in Canada and to invest annually the equivalent of 10 per cent of total sales.

These funds, most of which will be channelled to universities, hospitals and other centres, will bring a much needed renewal to our vitally important research sector. We all know the unanimous and enthusiastic support Bill C-22 has received in these circles.

Now for the other component. In its concern for acting in the best interests of Canadians and, as I said earlier, maintaining a delicate balance between protecting intellectual property and maintaining prices at reasonable levels for the Canadian consumer, the Government, in the same Bill, proposes to create a drug prices review board with extensive powers, with a mandate to ensure that patent protection will not lead to higher prices for Canadian consumers.

The minister has already announced that the government has asked Dr. Harry Eastman, author of the Eastman report and a nationally recognized authority on all aspects of drug manufacturing, to be the first chairman of this board. It seems to me that should be enough to reassure the most skeptical individual and put to rest the most common objection, which relates to the touchy issue of drug prices.

Honourable senators, considering these two aspects and the very significant creation of a prices review board, it seems to me that Bill C-22 is breaking new ground in the pharmaceutical industry while at the same time establishing from the outset protective measures which reassure me. Hopefully they will reassure honourable senators as well, and the new mode proposed by the Canadian government will not lead to such situations as we might regret later or be unable to correct.

Along with the implementation of the new drug manufacturing system, there will be a monitoring agency which will always defend the best interests of Canadian consumers.

[English]

Honourable senators, Bill C-22 is now before us, having been debated in the other place for nearly ninety hours and having been studied in committee in 22 separate meetings at which hundreds of witnesses attended. It was voted upon last Wednesday in the other place. I noted with interest that while the opposition voted against the bill, all of the Quebec members of the opposition, save one, were absent.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

Senator Cogger: That might have something to do with the fact that the adoption of Bill C-22 has been urged in three separate unanimous resolutions of the National Assembly of Quebec. It might also have something to do with the fact that it is supported strongly by the Quebec Chamber of Commerce, by the Montreal Board of Trade and even by the Quebec Association of Senior Citizens.

The special committee created by the Senate has already begun to meet on a pre-study of the bill. By the way, honourable senators will be interested to note that one of the first witnesses to appear before that committee in support of the bill was none other than the Honourable Judy Erola, who is currently President of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada.

Senator Frith: Yes. Why would she support the bill? That's very surprising. Considering the position she holds, that's astonishing!

Senator Steuart: She had a change of heart on the way to the bank.

Senator Cogger: I suspect that the majority of this house will very soon—like in the next few hours—approve of an unprecedented committee budget. The majority of the committee has, in its wisdom, decided to hold meetings in all capitals of the provinces and the territories. Honourable senators, I do not have long experience in this chamber, but, as a Tory from Quebec, I have had long experience in knowing what it is to be in the minority.

So be it. The budget, I suspect, will be approved. I and other members of our committee will pack our bags and follow our fearless chairman to the four corners of the country, starting quite by coincidence, no doubt, in Charlottetown—

Senator Bonnell: That's where the country started!

Senator Cogger: —with a view, honourable senators, to giving a voice to all those Canadians who wish to express interest in this legislation, particularly those who did not have an opportunity to be heard by the committee of the other place. I do not know whether that travelling and those hearings will change many minds. However, we will still endeavour to report to the Senate by June 16 in the hope that after due consideration and due deliberation in this house the Senate will, before the end of the session, transform Bill C-22 into the legislation that the people of Canada need and so largely deserve.

Senator Frith: In spite of themselves!

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Would the mover of the motion accept a question?

Senator Cogger: I would, sir.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, in Senator Cogger's opening statement he indicated that one of the major reasons to support this bill and the consequent change in legislation—and I am trying to quote some of his words—is to protect the Canadian researcher who discovers a new drug or develops a new process so that he will be able to reap the benefits of his discovery. There were two major points. That was the first one. My question is: Where in this bill does it indicate that this is restricted to Canadian researchers? So far as I can see as a member of the committee which has looked at this bill, I gather it covers any research done by any researcher representing any drug company in the world. But you have limited yourself to Canadian researchers. Can you explain to me where in the bill it refers to Canadians, and perhaps you can expand a little on why it has not been limited to Canadians? If it had been, it is quite possible that the position of senators on this side would be considerably different from what it is likely to be.

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, Senator Buckwold is quite right. I take his comment quite seriously. I did indeed indicate what the honourable senator said, and by not including the rest of the world I was probably mistaken. I do not wish to suggest that anywhere in the bill the protection offered should be reserved for or allotted only to Canadian researchers. Indeed, that is not the case. The protection offered will benefit all researchers.

The reason I referred to the Canadian researcher was because I believe it should be the concern of honourable senators, first and foremost, without disregarding the protection offered to others, to realize what happens to the Canadian researcher. He is the one who has been forced, because of current legislation, to conduct his research elsewhere. He is the one who has had to seek in other jurisdictions the protection which is normally offered for the benefit of the inventor.

I apologize to the honourable senator if I misled him into thinking that it was ever in my mind that this protection should apply to Canadians only.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I can only say that it appears to be a nonsensical answer. I really cannot follow what the honourable senator is trying to tell me. I wanted to know if there was anything in the bill to indicate that it was restricted to Canadian researchers. The honourable senator answered that. There is nothing! Yet, he based his whole premise on the fact that it is going to help Canadian researchers.

I do not know whether statistics really support what the honourable senator has said. There is a fair amount of research going on in Canada. Again, my question is: Why, if this was the major factor, did this bill not say, "for any invention, discovery, development patented by a Canadian working in the Canadian industry?" We will then have certain changes made in the Patent Act as against the worldwide one. I think the honourable senator's opening remarks were really a smokescreen to cover up the major objective of the bill, which is to help the multinational drug companies which operate around the world.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I certainly did not try to put up a smokescreen. If I did attempt that, then obviously I was not very successful.

Senator Frith: Hear, hear!

Senator Cogger: Senator Buckwold is a member of the committee, and at this point he will, like me, enjoy travelling throughout the country—

Senator Buckwold: I'm not so sure about that.

Senator Cogger:—and no doubt we will have the benefit of masses of information. Certainly, in my desk the number of briefs and the amount of documentation relating to Bill C-22 is already so massive that I was considering going to the whip to seek a bigger office.

Senator Frith: Here's another smokescreen!

Senator Cogger: The fact of the matter is that, no doubt, we will have an opportunity to get into all of this. I suggest to Senator Buckwold that even the current commitments, in dollar terms, for research and development to be conducted in this country in conjunction with hospitals, research labs and universities per se, should indicate to honourable senators one of the immediate benefits of the passage of Bill C-22.

● (1430)

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, that will be determined when the committee hears the evidence. I am not quite sure whether we can take as gospel the commitments made by some of the multinational drug companies.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I would like to address a question to the mover of the motion. Senator Cogger referred in his remarks, with satisfaction I believe, to the fact that a certain Dr. Eastman had agreed to chair the board referred to in clause 41.18 of the legislation as the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. Is this the same Dr. Eastman who conducted a substantial study into this whole matter of drug production and research and development in Canada and who completed a report within the last two or three years?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, it is the same Dr. Harry Eastman, I am told, who was retained by the previous government to conduct the inquiry to which the honourable senator has referred.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, is the mover of the motion aware of the fact that this same Dr. Eastman recommended a protection period of substantially less than the ten years provided for in subclause 41.11(2) of the legislation before us? Instead of ten years, I believe that Dr. Eastman suggested that a five-year period would give sufficient protection.

An Hon. Senator: It is four years.

Senator Hicks: It is eight years and ten years here, and I think it may have been four years and five years in the report, but the gist of my remarks is not affected. Did he not suggest that a period which is, in effect, half of that set forth in this legislation would give adequate protection to the inventors of new drugs?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I am aware of the discrepancies pointed out by Senator Hicks. I realize that the proposed legislation is not a carbon copy of Dr. Eastman's recommendations. By the way, Dr. Eastman will appear as a witness before the special committee this evening at 7.30, and I invite all honourable senators who wish to question the good doctor to come to that meeting.

Senator Sinclair: The Canadiens are playing!

[Translation]

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have a question for the mover of second reading of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act. I am somewhat surprised that the sponsor of this legislation did not mention facts which indicate that in 1969, after the adoption of the legislative measure which set a four-year limit on generic drug patent protection, there was indeed less research carried out in Canadian laboratories, hospitals and universities. As a result of the 1969 legislation, was there a reduction in research done in Canada?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I would suggest that Senator Thériault should not be surprised at some of the omissions which may have been made at this stage. I always thought that second reading was debate on the principle of the bill. Nor did I refer to another provision of the bill which I think is just as important, namely that the bill provides for automatic revision at the end of the four years.

I do not question the facts raised by Senator Thériault. I am simply saying that it is probably at the committee stage when witnesses are heard that light will be shed on the veracity of facts and the way statistics can be interpreted.

[English]

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, may I ask a question of Senator Cogger with respect to his presentation?

Senator Cogger: Yes.

Senator Barootes: Earlier a question was asked about Dr. Eastman's recommendation of a four-year exclusivity period vis-à-vis the suggestion of seven to ten years in the present bill. Did not Dr. Eastman recommend as compensation for his shorter period a 14 per cent royalty on the generic drug copier in place of the present 4 per cent? I think it was a feature of compensation. Am I correct in that, sir?

Senator Cogger: Honourable senators, I could not have phrased the question better myself, and the answer is yes.

Senator Frith: And thanks for asking!

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

FOURTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget of the Special Committee on the subject matter of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto) presented in the Senate on May 7, 1987.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be now adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: This had better be good, Jacques. You said that you were going to take the whole weekend to prepare it, so I hope it is good.

Senator Roblin: It is always good.

Senator Flynn: I hope that you will be able to say so after I have spoken.

Senator Frith: Who knows, you might do a good job with a bad case.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, last week I said I had some reservations about the motion for the adoption of the budget presented by the special committee to which we have referred the pre-study of Bill C-22. The first problem I have with the budget arises from the program of the committee in that this pre-study of the bill is no longer relevant since we now have the bill itself. A pre-study serves two purposes. The first purpose is to prepare ourselves to deal with the bill quickly when it reaches us at a later time. The second purpose is to give us the opportunity to tell the house in advance of a final decision being taken there what changes we think should be made to the bill. Those two aims of a pre-study are, as I suggested, now irrelevant in the case of Bill C-22.

The second problem is that the program presented by the committee will prove to have been useless if the Senate should vote against the principle of the bill. We are now dealing with the bill, and if eventually the Senate decides to stand against the principle of the bill, the travel by the committee will have served no purpose.

The third objection that I have is that, one way or the other, the witnesses who will be heard will be repeating arguments on both sides of the issue that we have already heard 100 times up to now, especially if you invite groups such as those who are the originators of the petitions that have been presented in this house. They will say simply that the cost of drugs will go up. Honourable senators, this is a question that is debatable, but we already know about it. We also know the argument in favour of the bill, that is that it will encourage research. Perhaps others will say it will not, but all of these arguments are not to be changed simply by virtue of being repeated in various places across Canada. We do not need to spend the kind of money that the committee is seeking in order to find out about both sides of the issue.

The chairman of the committee, for one, has been presenting petitions here. They all repeat the same thing. If he could tell me what else he expects to hear from the witnesses that he will call in Charlottetown, Toronto, Vancouver or elsewhere, I could possibly change my mind, but at this point I do not see that the committee will hear anything else other than what we have already heard up till now.

Perhaps it is a nice PR operation that the committee has in mind in going across the country, hearing a lot of people who will come and present their grievances; grievances, again, that we already know of. Honourable senators, I really do not see what you can achieve by travelling that you could not achieve here in Ottawa, even if you really want to hear something very special and something very different from the general arguments that we have heard up to now. I suggest that the amount sought is a pure waste at this time.

For instance, if the committee were to consider delaying its operations until after the Senate has made up its mind on the principle of the bill, we would probably better realize the uselessness of the exercise that is proposed. We could then deal with the bill in committee as we normally do when we wait until a bill has received second reading. In fact, if the pre-study system had worked properly, a good deal could have been done earlier. We know that the suggestion was made to refer the pre-study to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, which is the committee to which the bill should normally have been referred. However, that suggestion was rejected; there was delay and further delay, and finally came the proposal for the creation of a special committee. Possibly at that time we could not expect that the bill would finally come from the House when it did. However, I suggest that the situation has now completely changed, and I do not see at this time that we would be rendering any service to the community by spending close to $350,000 just to hear the same arguments on both sides, again and again, instead of dealing with the bill in the normal fashion.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, if there is going to be no reply from the opposition side—

Senator Frith: Not yet. We are waiting for something to reply to.

Senator Flynn: Thank you!

Senator Phillips: The government supporters began early in the new year requesting that the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce undertake a pre-study of Bill C-22. This was not an unusual request. It has been our practice and our procedure for a number of years to conduct a pre-study, and the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee is the committee that would normally receive a bill such as C-22. However, that request was refused and we were given various excuses, none of which is really worth repeating.

Then, on April 2, the Deputy Leader of the Opposition introduced a motion calling for the establishment of a special committee of eight senators to undertake a pre-study of Bill C-22. Honourable senators, at that time there was no mention of travelling; there was no mention of expenditure in that motion that was adopted by the Senate. Perhaps at this time I should remind honourable senators, in case they have forgotten my words of wisdom, that at that time I suggested that the subject matter would be more appropriately referred to the established committee.

Nevertheless, the special committee was established and had its first meeting on April 14. In case honourable senators have not had the opportunity to read the committee report, I think it is most interesting. The committee met and was offered certain information and staff from the Library of Parliament. The information that was offered was all of the information that had been made available to the House of Commons. There was really no discussion or no interest shown by that committee in looking at the material that was available and within 90 seconds the mover of the motion raised the subject of the committee's travelling. There was no discussion as to whether these excursions would be beneficial either to the members of the committee or to the Senate. Nothing would do but the committee had to travel.

The first question that was asked was: "Are we going to Europe?" Even the printed word of the committee proceedings shows the disappointment that was expressed when the chairman said: "No, we do not have the time." Again, the benefit was not discussed.

Then the Deputy Leader of the Opposition expressed a desire to go to Washington in order to get Senator Kennedy's views. Honourable senators, here is a leading light of the Liberal Party, a party which for years has objected to American investment in Canada, now wanting to go to Washington to canvass Senator Kennedy's opinion on a piece of Canadian legislation. Honourable senators, that excursion has been delayed, and I suggest to my good friend that perhaps a telephone call would be just as effective as the expenditure of travelling to Washington.

Honourable senators, the committee has requested permission to travel from place to place within Canada. I am concerned about the benefits of that travel. The story given to me by opposition senators is that they want to go out and meet the people and hear what the people think about this bill. Honourable senators, I say there is some form of discrimination being practised here, because the committee is intending to go only to capital cities with first class hotels. I say to the members of that committee: Why can't the people of Restigouche, New Brunswick, have the benefit and the honour of a visit from the Senate committee in the same way as Regina or Victoria? I think there is a great deal of discrimination. The mountain is going to Mohammed, but there are an awful lot of Mohammeds out there and they all should have the same rights. If a resident of Toronto has the right to receive a visit from this distinguished committee, surely a resident of Sudbury has the same right.

● (1450)

Senator McElman: Are you suggesting that Restigouche does not have first class accommodation?

Senator Phillips: I do not think you will find four-star signs on too many of the hotels in that area. I stayed in a number of the hotels in that area. They are pleasant and adequate, but not the type of hotel the committee chairman would normally stay in.

Senator McElman: People travel from the four corners of the world to Restigouche county, as my honourable friend sitting behind you can attest.

Senator Phillips: I am sure they do, but CN never got around to building a first class hotel in Restigouche.

Bill C-22 has passed all stages in the House of Commons. It was before a House of Commons committee. Honourable senators, I should like to take a moment to give you a couple of facts about the bill and how it was treated by that committee. The committee held 24 meetings and heard from 100 witnesses. It expended $22,173 of which $15,500 was spent on expenses for witnesses who appeared before the committee.

The special committee of the Senate, consisting of eight senators, has proposed a budget of no less than $315,337. There is a slight difference!

As I pointed out last Thursday, the fiscal year has just begun—only one month has gone by since it started. We have now allocated all committee budgets for the year, and many other important projects will come up during the year. I think it is extravagant to expend this amount of money on one special committee studying the subject matter of one bill, a bill that the House of Commons felt was studied adequately with only an expenditure of $22,000.

One of my friends on this side said the expenditure was "obscene". I won't go quite as far as to say that, honourable senators, but I do suggest that a great many of the items in the budget are unnecessary.

I should like to ask the chairman of the special committee how the budget was arrived at. Was it considered before the whole committee? Or did the chairman and the clerk design the budget and then submit it to the committee? Because I have difficulty believing that all eight senators would be that extravagant.

Let me point out some of the items included in this budget. There is a fee for counsel for 30 days at $800 a day. The Library of Parliament offered the special Senate committee the same counsel that was available to the House of Commons committee. Her services were available free of charge to the Senate. Normally, the chairman of the special committee is a fairly honest and decent chap. On a scale of one to ten, I would give him for honesty a four, perhaps a four point five, and that is rather high for a Grit. One wonders why he has to have two lawyers when he goes out to listen to witnesses when the libel is not likely to come from him but from the witnesses. Why does he need two attorneys?

The committee has a clerk and an assistant clerk. The chairman also wants a research assistant and, lo and behold, something new, an administrative assistant. There are 20 people going to Charlottetown, and not one of them could get an advertisement in the Charlottetown Guardian.

Let's have a look at the advertising expenditures: $40,000 to notify people in Canada that the special committee of the Senate is considering the subject matter of Bill C-22. The bill was introduced in the House of Commons. It has been the subject of many television broadcasts. Surely the people of Canada are aware that a special Senate committee is considering the subject matter of Bill C-22.

In addition to that, the committee proposes to spend $23,000 notifying the people in the capital cities that the special committee is travelling to those cities and on what dates. Honourable senators, perhaps the description of "obscene" was not that far off.

I want to raise one other matter, and that relates to staffing of Senate committees. From the Senate's viewpoint, I think this is very important, honourable senators. This week there are 22 committee meetings scheduled. All of those meetings have to be reported. We have a limited number of staff in that regard. It is not simply a matter of going out the door and saying to someone: "Come in, sit at this table and report the proceedings." It takes great skill, training and expertise. Such qualified people are just not available. I think when we start talking about having special committees and special studies, we should bear in mind that it is not only the senators who are involved. All those meetings have to be reported.

I am rather disturbed by the attitude of a number of honourable senators sitting opposite when it comes to expenditures by the Senate. They become almost smart alecky and say, "What's the government going to do about it? The government has to give us the money. There is nothing the government can do."

Honourable senators, it may be true that the government has normally respected the Senate's requests for funds, but in the past the Senate has also shown respect for the government's budget. That is not the case this year.

The other day Senator Bonnell, during his sanctimonious sermon, was talking about helping out the government. Honourable senators, deficit reduction is still an important part of government policy, and one that we should respect. We spent hours last year preparing the budgets, and one month into the fiscal year all of the funds have been allocated.

Honourable senators, I am still of the view that the subject matter of Bill C-22 should have been referred to the Standing

[Senator Phillips.]

Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. I suppose I could make that appeal to the Senate; however, in some 20-odd years I have made too many appeals and I have become accustomed to the fact that they are a waste of time and that certain people will not change their minds as a result of my appeals, but I do hope that the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, or the deputy chairman, will rise and tell us what they think it would cost that committee to conduct a pre-study. I am sure there will be a considerable difference between the budget presented by Senator Bonnell and one proposed by that committee.

● (1500)

Honourable senators, I will make a motion shortly to reduce the extravagant budget proposed by this committee. Before making the motion, may I again remind you that the House of Commons spent $22,000, and the Agriculture Committee is proposing a study of agricultural problems for which they are budgeting at $125,000, and the amount of study involved is comparable.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I ask you to consider the proposal to adopt the report of the Internal Economy Committee, and I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz:

That the report be not now adopted but that it be amended by striking out the figure $315,337 and substituting the figure $150,000.

Senator Denis: Is it $1,500?

Senator Nurgitz: No, it is $150,000.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sinclair:

That the fourteenth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be adopted.

In amendment, it is moved by Senator Phillips, seconded by Senator Nurgitz:

That the report be not now adopted but that it be amended by striking out the figure $315,337 and substituting the figure of $150,000.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, Senator Phillips has encouraged some members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce to comment on any knowledge that we might have as a result of the investigation we made into what it would have cost us to take on this pre-study had it been left with us.

We were aware of the future business of the committee, and I was instructed by the chairman to make some investigations along with our clerk. We did not complete the arithmetic, but it is safe to say, with Senator Sinclair's permission, that we were talking about a figure something less than $100,000.

The other day Senator Bonnell made a point—admittedly, I suspect, tongue in cheek—that he was trying to help the government to get this thing through as quickly as possible. He said:

—we would not wait for its passage in the House of Commons but would conduct a pre-study, with the full support of the Leader of the Government in the Senate as a member of the cabinet.

He also said:

I thought that we, as senators, being more liberal than those in the other place, would try to do justice to this legislation—

Further on he says:

—The reason why I want leave is to show that we in this house are trying to support the government of the country in getting this legislation passed before the end of June.

Senator Frith has indicated that he has not received a question to which he would care to respond. I ask Senator Frith to explain exactly what has been going on. Bill C-22 received first reading November 7, 1986. Since that time the subject matter of nine bills has been referred for pre-study; five bills have already passed the House of Commons; and two, Bill C-37 and Bill C-42—the bills before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce—have been reported on; and nine bills, subsequent to Bill C-22, have been referred for pre-study.

Could Senator Frith now take us through and explain if something else is going on that we do not understand? What has been your opposition to the reference of Bill C-22 for pre-study when that pre-study would have been completed long before now and at a fraction of the cost?

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, it is interesting to have an enlightened discussion with one of my colleagues on an important piece of legislation.

Senator Walker: You need it!

Senator Bonnell: Thank you, Senator Walker. I have always liked your attitude. You always help me along, because you always seem to come forward to keep me stirred up.

Senator Walker: It is about time somebody did.

Senator Bonnell: I know. Honourable senators, let me tell you that we only recently received this important piece of legislation which, as I just heard from Senator MacDonald—whom I respect highly; he is a good maritimer—was read first in the other place on November 7. If it was so important—and I thought that it was important—why did the government not proceed with the bill? They sent it to us just last Wednesday.

I am so convinced that this bill is important that I have been trying to pre-study the legislation before we got the bill, but the government held it up from November 7, 1986, until last Wednesday.

An Hon. Senator: Come on!

Senator Bonnell: You said that it was introduced November 7. I did not have that date—I am going by your words. You know that we got the bill only last Wednesday.

Perhaps if the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce had studied this bill, they could have done it for $22,000—the same amount as was spent by the House of Commons. But the people of Canada and many groups felt that they did not get a fair hearing. They probably thought that they should be heard by the Senate as a last resort so that it might receive sober second thought. After all, we have a bicameral system in Canada. The House of Commons represents the people by population; we in the Senate represent the regions.

At least three of the provinces want to be heard, but I have not called my clerk today to find out how many more wish to be heard. Let me further say that this is not my request. I did not vote against everybody else in the Senate on the question as to whether the committee should travel. It was a Senate decision to set up a special committee, it was not my decision. It was a Senate decision to refer the subject matter of the bill to this special committee, and it was the committee's decision that I should be chairman. I am speaking only on behalf of my committee. I am trying to the best of my ability to do a good job on behalf of our Canadian people and the regions of our country.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Bonnell: Senator Flynn, who has a lot of legal experience and knows the law well and has a lot of parliamentary experience—he sat in the cabinet in the government of this country, he sat in the Senate and was Leader of the Opposition in this house as well as being Leader of the Government here—tells us today that a pre-study is “useless.” That is the word he used.

If a pre-study is useless, we have been doing a lot of useless things lately, because we have had a lot of pre-studies. Maybe he meant that a pre-study is useless now because the bill is before us.

An Hon. Senator: That's right.

● (1510)

Senator Bonnell: The reason the Senate referred the bill to the committee which I chair, as I understood it, was because it wanted to proceed with the matter immediately in case the bill was held up even longer in the other place. My understanding was that that course was decided on in order to proceed as quickly as possible.

However, Senator Flynn has said that we should now wait until we have heard the debate and until after we have voted on the principle of the bill. In other words, he wants to hold the bill up even longer before we study it. After hearing the minister in committee, it seemed, to me at least, to be important that we pass this bill as soon as possible. I thought that when the House of Commons imposed closure on the debate, the government must have thought it was important to have speedy passage. Nonetheless, Senator Flynn says that we should wait until the bill itself is sent to committee and that we should not study the subject matter any further.

Honourable senators, it was the Senate which decided that the committee should travel across the country. It was not my decision. The Senate also decided that the committee should go to the United States. However, the committee made the decision not to travel to the United States at this time because of the costs involved and because we wanted to report back as quickly as possible. It was the feeling in committee that unless some urgent reason arose at the last minute, we were not going to travel to the United States. As a result, no estimates were put forward for travelling to the United States or to Europe. The decision to travel was not made by the committee, it was made by the Senate.

Senator Flynn also said that if he knew what I was going to learn by talking to all the people, maybe he would decide to go across the country and hear what they have to say.

Senator Flynn: I did not say that.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, if I knew what I was going to learn, I would not have to hear the people. I do not know what they are going to tell me. If I knew all of that now, I could tell this chamber what the people think, and I would say that we are only wasting the taxpayers' money by representing them here and by giving them an opportunity to be heard.

Senator Flynn: The honourable senator opposite collected signatures on a number of petitions, so he must know what they are saying.

Senator Bonnell: I know what some of my people in Prince Edward Island are saying, but it should be remembered that Prince Edward Island is a small province compared to Quebec and Ontario. The people of Prince Edward Island have been leaders in terms of putting this country together, and they are probably the leaders in voicing their opinions in terms of this social program. They were certainly leaders back in 1864.

Honourable senators, I do not believe in delaying this bill any further. I believe the government wants speedy passage of the bill. I am trying my best to do an impartial job as chairman of the committee.

Senator Flynn: It is obvious that you are trying.

Senator Bonnell: Perhaps Senator Flynn would help me.

Senator Flynn: It is a desperate case.

Senator Bonnell: I know it is a desperate case when I am asking help from him, but perhaps he is a little more desperate and will try harder. It is hard to get help from someone who has nothing to give you. It is hard to get blood from a stone.

Senator Flynn also says that we should postpone this debate; that we should postpone the budget; and that we should wait until second reading of this bill and then start to hear from the people of Canada. Honourable senators, you should have made that decision before you decided to set up the special committee. That decision should have been made before the decision to send the committee across Canada. Honourable senators, those were decisions made by the Senate, not by me.

Honourable senators, Senator Phillips has only given me a rating of four point five or five on a scale of one to ten. However, I will give him a nine point five, because Senator Phillips represents his area well and the people speak well of him. I know that he is well regarded and respected in Prince Edward Island.

I also know that if he were speaking from his heart, he would be supporting this motion 100 per cent. However, today he has to act as house leader and he has to voice the opinions of someone else. Honourable senators, we are not hearing the words of Senator Phillips today. Senator Phillips is an Islander and he knows the feelings of the Islanders in Prince Edward Island. He knows that they cannot afford the high price of drugs, or anything else, when they are enduring low wages, harder times and unemployment.

Honourable senators, as far as the motion to cut the budget is concerned, if Senator Phillips is telling me in one breath that I should go to those little places where they have smaller hotels and all those other little places in Canada, yes, I agree with him. It would be lovely to do that. I would love to meet those people and hear their voice.

However, I would point out that we ran an advertisement in the paper informing the public that we wanted to report this bill as soon as possible, and we asked that briefs be submitted by May 18 in order to prepare our report. We did that to try to save money, because we realize that this government has to curtail expenditures, as Senator Phillips said. We did not want to spend extra money going to all of these small villages and towns so we decided to go only to the capital cities. If it is the wish of the Senate that the committee travel to those smaller villages and towns, we can always come back to the Senate and ask for an increase in the budget later on. We can also ask for an extension of time. I certainly know that the members of my committee, although it would require hard work, would be prepared to go out and listen to the Canadian people, because, after all, the people are the power in this country. If we are to represent the regions of this country honestly, as the Senate was set up to do in 1867, then the regions must be heard.

Honourable senators, my good friend Senator Phillips from Prince Edward Island has pointed out that we may have translation services. He has pointed out that we have to record the committee proceedings. That is true; he is telling the truth and that is why I rate him at 9.5. The truth is, however, that this is a bilingual country. Some people in Prince Edward Island speak French and they will want to be heard in their own language. There are also members of our committee whose native tongue is French and they will want to understand in their native tongue. If we as an arm of the Parliament of Canada cannot give the people in this country their rights of bilingualism, then we should stand up as a government and say that there will be no more bilingualism in this country.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, on a point of order, I do not think that anyone objected to translation. There was no reference to translation. The honourable senator is well aware of that, and if he does not correct his attitude we will have to drop him down to a rating of four.

Senator Bonnell: Honourable senators, I may have to be rated at three, but the facts are that this is a bilingual country.

Senator Flynn: That is irrelevant.

Senator Bonnell: I think it is relevant that we have two languages. I would think that the province from which Senator Flynn comes would think that he has just made an awful remark.

Honourable senators, we have to record the proceedings of the committee. Today Senator Phillips read from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the committee. He would not have that privilege if the committee hearing had not been recorded. If we do not record, we would have to have very good memories to remember everything that everyone has said.

Honourable senators, it sounds as though I am asking you for something, but the facts indicate that I am acting as your servant, doing your job for your government to the best of my ability, so I will leave the matter with you.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, I would like to have an answer to the question. It is obvious that there is no point in putting the question to Senator Bonnell, because we will have another wearying, red herring discourse.

• (1520)

Senator Olson: That's a terrible thing to say.

Senator MacDonald: I am asking Senator Frith if he will give us an explanation as to why Bill C-22 was not referred to the appropriate committee for pre-study in November or December. If he did not think that was the appropriate committee, why was this committee, the Bonnell committee, not set up earlier? Why were nine bills referred to committee for pre-study—all of which bills have since been disposed of—subsequent to the first reading of this bill? Can Senator Frith answer that question?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not think it is my responsibility here to answer that question.

Senator Roblin: But you'll do it, anyway.

Senator Frith: I think that Senator Bonnell has answered all of the points raised by senators opposite, such as they were. I must say that I found it a little difficult, taking all of the interventions that were made, to follow exactly their position on this motion, which is a motion to adopt the report of one of our committees approving a budget for a committee set up by the Senate. That is the issue before us. If I were to try to answer why it took Mr. Mazankowski so long to get the bill through the other place, I would say I am sure he may have had a very good reason. But we have before us simply a motion to approve a budget. The issue before us is not whether there should be a committee and it is not whether that committee should travel; the issue is whether this is an appropriate budget.

The budget was examined by the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and by the subcommittee on budgets. Both committees approved this budget—

Senator Simard: On division.

Senator Frith: Yes, quite so. The committees approved it. My motion is for the adoption of the report of the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. The only point that had to do with me specifically, which was raised by Senator Phillips, was a technical matter. He wanted to know why my original motion to set up this committee did not mention travel. The reason is that the rules prohibit its doing so. Schedule 2:02, referred to in rule 83A, provides:

A notice of motion to establish a special committee or to authorize a committee to conduct a special study—which is the case here,

—shall not refer to special expenses but shall set a date by which the committee is to report to the Senate.

As senators are aware, that is the procedure that was set up. It is at the second stage that the question of travel and expenses is brought up, and that is how it was done here.

Therefore, honourable senators, on the simple motion before us and on the motion in amendment, I ask the Senate to support the study done by the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. All of the other aspects—whether we should set up the committee and whether it should travel—have already been decided. I ask that we support the report of the Committee on Internal Economy, which sets out the figure in the original motion. I ask that we defeat the motion in amendment and pass the motion.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT NEGATIVED

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Sinclair:

That the Fourteenth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration be adopted.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz:

That the Report be not now adopted but that it be amended by striking out the figure $315,337 and substituting the figure of $150,000.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say “yea”?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say “nay”?

[Senator Frith.]

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the “nays” have it.

And two honourable senators having risen.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Call in the senators.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (post-secondary education) tabled in the Senate on 25th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Marsden).

Hon. Lorna Marsden: Honourable senators, I would like to return to the question of the report produced by the National Finance Committee entitled: "Federal Policy on Post-Secondary Education". Senator Simard has opened this debate by laying out very well all of the issues. I wish to elaborate this afternoon upon one aspect of the report which, in my opinion, has not been sufficiently widely debated or thought about among the commentators on the report.

As Senator Simard has pointed out, one of the recommendations of the report has been the topic of a great deal of criticism in the press, some of it from leaders of the university community and, in particular, from some, but by no means all, of the presidents of Canadian universities. One of our central recommendations—the transfer of funds to the accountable level of government or the movement of cash and tax points to the government which, by our constitution, sets policy in the area, that is, the provincial governments—has been rejected firmly in the press by Dr. Arnold Naimark, President of the University of Manitoba, Dr. David Johnston of McGill University and Dr. Doug Wright of the University of Waterloo. These are university presidents for whom I have the highest regard. I know that each of them is strongly committed to trying to establish the best university education in Canada. However, on this question and on several other questions, and with all due respect to them, I do not believe they really appreciate either the obstacles to the kind of cost-shared program they advocate or the very balanced nature of our recommendations.

I would like to remind honourable senators that the proposal of this report is widely misunderstood. The report addresses a fiscal obstacle to the main purpose of studying the question: That is, the future of post-secondary education in Canada for all Canadians and, therefore, the future of our society, our culture and our economy.

What these critics advocate is a regime in which the federal government, by tying funding in some manner, would force provincial governments to spend more money on post-secondary education and, in particular, to spend federal funds transferred for those purposes on the universities in their provinces. This series of proposals was examined in the committee in many of its variants and in considerable detail. It was the conclusion of the committee, reflected in the report, that under the division of constitutional powers made in 1867, it would not be possible for the federal government to force this kind of outcome in any satisfactory way, and that a challenge to the Supreme Court of Canada would quite probably not be successful. Of course, in light of the Meech Lake agreement, it may be necessary to examine the final wording of that agreement in order to see how the question under consideration by our committee might be affected now and in the future.

Furthermore, the type of federal intrusion which would be necessary in examining provincial accounts to ensure that they had, in fact, spent those dollars designated for the purpose on post-secondary education is probably, in legal terms, extremely difficult. Certainly, in many senses having to do with the cooperative nature of our federal system, it would not be desirable.

This does not mean that senators are opposed to national goals and standards nor does it mean that senators would not like a national policy with national financing. However, we would urge those leaders in the educational community, and in the press, who truly believe that this can be achieved, to spell out the process and the manner in which it would be achieved, based upon the fiscal, constitutional and political realities of life in Canada at the present time.

Certainly, many members of this Senate committee, I am sure, would welcome a proposal along these lines which would be workable in the foreseeable future. However, I would like to stress the fact that we came with some regret to the conclusion that this was a rather romantic vision, entrancing but very difficult to bring to fruition. While many of those vitally interested in the future of universities are caught up with the vision of a national policy and national educational system, Canadian universities are losing ground relative to where they were in the past, and certainly relative to the world context, which is increasingly the standard for all, and not just a few Canadian universities, and for all, and not just the very best, of our students.

In the work of the Senate committee, and under the guidance of the chairman, Senator Leblanc, we focused our attention on a practical solution, balancing financing in the areas of research and student financing against the movement of EPF funds to that level of government with exclusive constitutional rights to make policy. This afternoon I propose to deal with the recommendations concerning research, which are found in chapter IV, the final chapter of our report. Chapter IV is entitled: "Research and Excellence", and it is a topic that the committee and, I hope, Canadians in general take seriously.

The phrase "research and development" has taken on the status of a mantra in Canada. "More research and development" is muttered on almost every occasion in a ritualistic fashion. I see that the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Mazankowski, gave another rendition this weekend at the Technical University of Nova Scotia. However, very little happens. The key to actually obtaining more research and development and actually bringing it about in Canada, is to institutionalize the practice in various places in Canadian society, of course in the private sector, of course in public business, certainly in government agencies, but mostly in universities, and particularly in the ideas by which Canadians approach their work at all kinds of levels.

We have recommended in our report that in the universities research should be much more significantly supported in three ways: First, by national leadership by the national government in areas of research, to which point I will return later. Second, by putting a great deal of financial backing into the overhead costs of research and new money into centres of research. Third, by improving the quality of faculty by improving the process of promotion in the universities. In so doing we will become a part of a worldwide movement to improve research and development in universities.

I draw your attention to a recent report of a White House Science Council in the U.S., which report was circulated to all senators recently from the Canadian Association of University Teachers. The report of the White House Science Council emphasized, and I am quoting:

—the essential role research and universities have played in the past in the American economy. The strength of America in trade, health and defence is related directly to past investments in science and technology.

This is recognized in the U.S.; it is recognized in other countries, and it needs to be recognized in Canada.

The reasons lying behind the nature of our recommendations may not be obvious to every Canadian. However, the issue which lies at the heart of the matter of research is what actually goes on in practice inside Canadian universities. What does a university education or employment in a university as an academic mean in daily life? In any Canadian university from the smallest arts and science college to the University of Toronto, which is the fifth largest university in North America, the type of education under discussion is inextricably linked to research in any and every field, from the study of old English drama to physics and astronomy. It is linked to the products of research, the process of research, the methods of research and the ideas of research. Research is fundamental to what goes on, day and night, in every classroom, tutorial and lab at every university.

This aspect is different from the way in which research is conceived of in the popular press, where many people think of it only in terms of the high points; the significant breakthroughs of the kind that win Nobel prizes or very wide readership in the scholarly press. Or they think of research in a series of cartoons with bearded men in lab coats making stinks and bangs, or wild-eyed scholars worrying about the nuances of the meaning of "momentarily" in the pages of the Globe and Mail.

• (1600)

In characterizing research this way, people are creating two classes of persons: On the one hand, the researcher; on the other, everybody else. That is not a modern idea. In modern society there can be no such division. There is a continuum from those people who do and use research very little to those who do and use research every day in every way. But, nonetheless, every Canadian must have in his or her mind some notion of what research is about.

Research is done in laboratories and is used by industries for economic development, or by scholars for purposes the ends of which they cannot conceive. But that is not what research is about, and that misses the point of the necessity for increased funding of universities. Our society, culture and economy are only possible and only grow because of the actions of individual Canadians working in every type of industry. In this modern age workers must learn how to approach their jobs no matter how mundane or how esoteric in schools, colleges and universities through the process of formal education.

The modern world incorporates and institutionalizes ideas of change, of adjustment, of competing ideas and explanations in daily life. These ideas, these explanations, these solutions to problems are based on information, on knowledge, on a process of reasoning and rationality. That work is not just the work of scientists; it is not just the work of scholars; it is not just the work of leaders in any particular field; but it is especially important in the work of those doing everyday tasks from installing telephones to planting crops, working with young children, with families, working in the justice system, and working in any part of the Canadian society. Every worker in Canada is called upon to combine reason as well as passion in their work.

The way in which they do and carry out their work is based upon information, ideas about change, ideas about how to solve problems, ideas about how to deal with other people, ideas about information data and experimentation. Every worker must judge by what he or she knows, what is needed and how to approach on a day-by-day, task-by-task basis a rapidly changing world. We all do this in daily life, from running our bank accounts to making consumer choices. But in order to have those ideas about how to cope with change, ideas that were not nearly as widespread or known in an earlier period about how to deal with procedures for change which are found in everything in our daily lives, we have to learn the method. That, of course, is exactly what modern education is about. Modern education is based upon those underlying notions of science and the scientific method. The basics of that, of course, are taught in schools— literacy, numeracy, how to approach a problem—but significantly extended in universities and in the minds, we hope, of university-educated people in our society.

So, our future depends upon the extent to which people who are going to be working in every aspect of Canadian society understand what research is all about. The term has to be used in as broad a sense as possible in order to make sense of our recommendations.

There are those who argue that we do not have to do any basic or fundamental research in this country, that it can all be imported from elsewhere. I would suggest—and I believe my colleagues on the Senate committee who have studied this subject would agree—that that is absolutely wrong. The idea is not simply to buy the product and put it into action—we do that already and we will continue to do that—but it is the process that has to be understood.

To illustrate this I should like to tell you about a conversation I had with a distinguished professor of physics and chemistry at the University of Toronto last week, Professor Geraldine Kenney-Wallace who has just made a major breakthrough in laser physics, which is her area of expertise and which she describes to a person such as me, a person who does not understand laser physics, as “making molecules dance.”

When I asked about the kind of research going on in her laboratory, she pointed out that at all times there have to be people working on the most fundamental problems and who take those problems through to application in industry, with which she works a great deal. In other words, research cannot be divided easily into those phases. It is not “fundamental” in the universities and “applied” in business; it is both in both places. There are many private sector organizations conducting important fundamental research, but a great deal of that research must be done in universities, and it is only when Canadians understand that problems have to be taken through all of their stages, to application and development, that our economy, our society, our culture can grow and expand, which is why we must have new funding in universities for basic and fundamental research.

While, of course, in the universities the process of passing on these ideas about how one solves and approaches problems can always be improved—and we argue that it should be improved, and we suggest a means by which it should be improved—I suggest to you that the real difficulty in R&D in Canada lies at the receiving end; that is, those Canadians who do not think that it is their obligation to know and understand the process of research.

We heard earlier this afternoon a discussion about the research and development clauses of Bill C-22 and, as Senator Buckwold pointed out, the absurdities being perpetuated with respect to that bill, that research can go on anywhere and somehow or other Canada will benefit. That is simply not true. It is absolutely essential that the research and development process go on in Canada. It cannot go on in Canada unless it goes on in Canadian universities, and Canadian universities cannot continue what they have been doing and cannot meet the demands of the modern world unless sufficient funding, accountability and the process of work in the universities are widely supported, as the report argues.

It is for those reasons we have suggested that the central government, the national government, can play an important leadership role. Our recommendations suggest several ways in which this can be done and must be done. First of all, we have recommended that overhead costs be added to all grants which are now given from the granting councils. I urge honourable senators to ask the presidents of universities, or the vice-presidents of research in the universities of their home provinces, to tell them how much is currently being spent on overhead costs associated with grants. Honourable senators will find, I believe, that in many universities grants cannot be accepted even when a scholar or a scientist has won that grant because the overhead costs are too great. It is not simply the actual cost, it is where you get the money from for this. In at least one major university overhead costs have to come out of a private endowment fund because, otherwise, the publicly-financed research could not go ahead.

That may or may not be the right way of going about it, but it is a subject that needs to be reviewed in every university. We have suggested that paying those overhead costs would significantly advance the cause of research and development in Canadian universities not only in the laboratories and works of scholars and scientists but in terms of access which their students have to learning the process and ideas of research.

Next, the committee has recommended that 65 per cent be added to payroll on government-contracted research for overhead purposes. The way in which university people play a role in the development of public policy is largely through contracts for research, and there is a great deal of that being contracted out from Ottawa and the provincial governments. On the side of Ottawa, we are suggesting that those overhead costs be paid. That will have tremendous direct benefits in universities. People will return their contracted work to the universities and enable the universities to keep continuously hired laboratory technicians, glass blowers, word process unit operators and other people required to maintain high quality research in institutions.

Third, we have recommended that new money be put into centres of research. The amount we have recommended is $100 million annually for the next ten years, followed by a review. That new money is essential because research these days has taken new forms. We have argued this fully in the report, and I will not go over that argument now, but I will say that unless this country starts to take on the challenge of providing new directions for research, providing centres of research which are stable to the extent that people will get on with their projects and complete their projects, we will have lost so much ground over the next ten years that I cannot imagine how we will ever catch up.

Ten years from now will be too late, which is why we cannot afford the luxury of continuing to dream about the possibility of a national policy on the whole of post-secondary education. It is unlikely to come about. If it is likely to come about, then that plan has not been spelled out. We cannot afford the time—while the basis of university research and life is disappearing rapidly in Canada; while young people entering universities now do not have the benefit of even knowing how to go about doing research should they have the opportunity when they get into industry or anywhere else; and while all of that is corroding the basis of a fine post-secondary system—to discuss for ten, twenty or thirty more years these problems of funding. There must either be some rapid solution to the impasse with the current established programs financing system or we suggest that our solution is the most straightforward, workable and practical way of continuing the traditions that have been built up in this country. We have fine universities. We have had them and may continue to have them. Only with them will Canada be able to maintain its place in the world.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I do not know if anyone else wants to speak to this report, but, in case they do, I will move the adjournment of the debate and note in passing that I will yield to anyone who wishes to speak to it.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

SENIOR CITIZENS

OBSERVATION OF SPECIAL WEEK IN TRIBUTE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson:

That the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada and to individuals and organizations in Canada that, in honour of the senior citizens of this country, the last complete week of August of this year and of each and every year thereafter, be kept and observed throughout Canada as "Senior Citizens' Week" as a way of paying tribute to the diverse contributions being made to Canada by the older citizens of our society.—(Honourable Senator Robertson).

Hon. Brenda Robertson: Honourable senators, in supporting Senator Croll's motion, I do so with a great deal of pleasure.

The group of citizens to which Senator Croll refers, our senior citizens, are perhaps one of the most important groups of citizens in our country, as referred to in this motion which asks the Senate to recommend to the Government of Canada and to individuals and organizations in Canada that, in honour of the senior citizens of this country, the last complete week of August of this year and of each and every year thereafter be kept and observed throughout Canada as "Senior Citizens' Week" as a way of paying tribute to the diverse contributions being made to Canada by the older citizens of our society.

When Senator Croll spoke to his motion, he mentioned that there were some 2.7 million Canadians who are 65 years of age or more. I want to remind you that this is three times the number just 55 years ago. As Canada enters the twenty-first century, the population aged 65-plus will number nearly 4 million. In the next 45 years the aging population is expected to triple in size. In the second decade of the next century the babyboom generation, those born between 1946 and 1966, will be entering the ranks of the senior population. The senior population will grow dramatically, reaching 6 million by the year 2021 and 7.5 million by the year 2031. By the year 2021 one in every five Canadians will be 65 years of age or older.

Women account for a rising proportion in the older population as age increases. In 1986, for every 100 men who were between the ages of 65 to 69 there were about 125 women; for every 100 men in the age group of 80 to 84 there were 175 women; and for that older group, the senior citizens over 90 years of age, for every 100 men there were 267 women.

A lot of problems are faced by our senior citizens. Some of us have touched on the problems before. We have the problem of poverty. Unfortunately, many of our single senior citizens who are women live in poverty. There is also the problem of transportation and the problem of housing. We have 1,603,000 heads of households who are senior citizens. Of that number 394,000 heads of households are senior citizens who are at the mercy of the marketplace for their rental accommodation. I will come back to that point in a moment.

Poverty hits those in Canada who have health problems, housing problems and transportation problems. If you do not have health problems, housing problems or transportation problems, generally you are living above the poverty line. But if you have those problems, generally the rule is that you are below the poverty line.

There is another problem, as well; the problem of the lack of education of those who serve our seniors. Our senior citizens, generally in the health field, are served by professionals and para-professionals who have had little education relative to the aging population. There is a real lack of expertise here, and it is something that perhaps I will have an opportunity to come back to later. Whether they are working with family physicians or nurses, physiotherapists or speech therapists, few of these professionals or para-professionals have had any training whatsoever relative to the aging process, and, of course, senior citizens must be treated differently from younger people.

In identifying some of the problems in Canada, it is interesting to know that we do not stand by ourselves. In 1950, according to the United Nations estimates, there were approximately 200 million persons 60 years of age and over throughout the world. That was in 1950, honourable senators. By 1975 their number had increased to 350 million. United Nations projections to the year 2000 indicate that the number will increase to 590 million, and by the year 2025 the number will be over 1 billion. That is an increase of 224 per cent since 1975. During the same period the world's population as a whole is expected to increase from 4.1 billion to 8.2 billion, or an increase of 102 per cent. Thus, 45 years from now, the aged will constitute 13.7 per cent of the world's population.

The world population is aging as rapidly as the Canadian population. It is doing so at an unprecedented rate, and the social, economic and cultural problems created by this drastic demographic shift will reach crisis proportions in the next century unless we begin to address these problems now. For those of you to whom the words "next century" sounds too far away to worry about, let me remind you that the next century is only a few years away.

I have thought for some time now that what we need at the United Nations is what was brought up at the advisory committee for the World Assembly for Aging in Vienna in 1982. That is a specific agency within the United Nations to deal with the pressing needs, problems and issues of this growing segment of the world population. Right now in the United Nations we have a model for such an agency which was created in answer to a parallel critical demographic shift in population. That model, of course, is UNICEF.

Few people realize that in 1946 the population of the world was a young one, and the war torn countries, as well as Third World countries, simply did not have the resources to provide for such a growing population. Many of them were, of course, war orphans. Hunger, disease, lack of education and health care affected the world's treasure—its young. The General Assembly of the United Nations responded to this emergency situation by establishing UNICEF. That agency, of course, was devoted to the world's young and their pressing needs. So effective and far-reaching has been UNICEF's work that it has been awarded a Nobel Peace Prize and it has become a household word.

I do hope that the United Nations will now respond to another of its threatened treasures, that is, its aged population. Since 1946 the demographic tide has shifted and the same crisis situation that children were facing in 1946 will be faced by the world's old in the years to come. The international community must have the vision and the determination to prevent such a crisis now.

There is a proposal before the United Nations advocating the formation of an organization modelled after UNICEF to respond to the needs of the world's aging. It will be called the United Nations International Fund for the Aged. This autonomous agency within the United Nations would devote itself exclusively to the issues of the aging population of the world; address its problems; study its demography; and implement much needed programs. This agency would pool all of the resources from within and without the United Nations system, including those of the pre-existing Aging Unit in the Centre for Social Development that has been in existence for a few years. It would also encourage cooperation among our developing countries.

A year ago last July the United States Senate set up a Special Senate Committee called "The Greying of the Nation", which was chaired by Senator John Glenn. That committee, of course, supports this international concept to tackle the problem of aging. I would hope that in Canada we would be able to take a leadership position before too long in order that the aging have more recognition.

Honourable senators, let me come back to the issue at hand which was raised by Senator Croll about a month ago. I believe that the recommendation contained in Senator Croll's motion, that is, to dedicate a week in Canada to honour our citizens who have built this nation, would be a small but important measure towards encouraging the awareness of the remainder of our citizens to the problems of the aging population. A great deal of knowledge, information and dedication must be shared with the general public in order to get a true appreciation of the problems seniors face, and I believe that by setting aside a special week we would be aiming in the right direction.

As you all probably know, at the moment most provinces have one day set aside which they call "Senior Citizens' Day". In fact, some have a week which they call "Senior Citizen's Week". I believe that if the federal government took the leadership in this regard, the provinces would fall in line and celebrate with our senior citizens one collective week across the country.

Honourable senators, in the fall I shall be asking the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology to study the "greying of Canada." The last study, which was chaired by Senator Croll, was done in 1966. That study, honourable senators, has had a strong impact on our country. However, I feel that it is time to update the issues.

Honourable senators, I am delighted to support Senator Croll's motion and trust that the Senate will ask the government to designate a week in honour of our senior citizens.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

FINANCE

DOCUMENT ENTITLED "NEW DIRECTIONS FOR THE FINANCIAL SECTOR"—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Sinclair calling the attention of the Senate to the document entitled: "New Directions for the Financial Sector", tabled in the Senate on 19th December, 1986 (Sessional Paper No. 332-169).—(Honourable Senator Sinclair).

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, when this document, "New Directions for the Financial Sector", was tabled in the Senate last December, I indicated that it touched upon some very important and difficult matters.

Since that time, the Honourable the Minister of State for Finance has moved with considerable alacrity and has introduced Bill C-42 on which the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has now issued its report following pre-study. Today the Senate referred to that same committee a second bill dealing with financial institutions, namely, Bill C-56.

The Minister of State for Finance has indicated that the third tranche arising out of that white paper will be made available by the summer. In light of that, with leave of the Senate, I move that debate on this motion now be concluded.

The Hon. the Speaker: As no other honourable senator wishes to participate in the debate, this motion is considered debated.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS AND DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-42

TUESDAY, May 12, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its

THIRTEENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the subject-matter of the Bill C-42, An Act respecting financial institutions and the deposit insurance system, in advance of the said Bill coming before the Senate, or any matter relating thereto, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, 25th March, 1987, examined the subject-matter of the said Bill and now reports as follows:

Introduction

This is the first of a number of bills that will implement the policy on financial institutions set out in the White Paper, New Directions for the Financial Sector, released on 18th December, 1986. It corresponds to chapter five of that Paper, which deals with the system of supervision and deposit insurance. These two areas are covered in Parts I and II of the Bill. Parts III through X contain amendments to several Acts respecting financial institutions. Most of these amendments are consequential to the changes in the system of supervision, but some are substantive. Chief among the latter is a revised set of procedures for assuming control over troubled institutions.

Structure of the Supervisory System

Consolidation of Regulatory Authorities

Under a proposed new Act, entitled the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions Act, the Office of the Inspector General of Banks (OIGB), which is responsible for the supervision of chartered banks, and the Department of Insurance (DOI), which supervises federally-incorporated non-bank financial institutions, will be consolidated into a new Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions (OSFI). The Superintendent will be appointed by the Governor in Council for a seven year term.

Consolidation of the OIGB and DOI into a single supervisory body had been raised as an option in the Government's Green Paper on financial institutions released in April 1985. In its report on the Green Paper, this Committee recommended against consolidation, arguing that the existing institutional structure had served Canada well and that there might be advantages to a system of "competing" regulatory agencies.

The Committee also recognized, however, that in a world of increasing financial integration there are advantages to a comprehensive regulatory authority, most particularly the capacity to oversee cross-pillar activities without generating regulatory overlaps or leaving regulatory gaps. Events since our report was written have made such a capacity much more useful. The melding of financial institutions has advanced a long way and is proceeding apace. The Government's proposals for financial reform will greatly accelerate this trend, rendering distinctions between sectors less relevant or certain. It is highly improbable that distinctions between sectors will be completely eliminated in the near future. The Bill takes this into account by providing for the appointment of three Deputy Superintendents, so that supervision of each major financial sector — banking, trust, insurance — can be made the primary responsibility of a person specialized in that sector.

The Committee views this arrangement as a good compromise between the need for a comprehensive supervisory body (in light of the growing integration between financial sectors) and the requirement for a degree of functional specialization (recognizing the residual differences between sectors).

Separate Employer Status

The Bill will endow OSFI with the status of "separate employer" under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Financial Administration Act. This will give OSFI authority to set job classification standards and pay scales independent of those standards and scales established by Treasury Board. In his appearance before the Committee, Mr. Michael Mackenzie, the newly appointed Inspector General of Banks (and designated Superintendent of Financial Institutions, when that Office is established), indicated that he will be seeking to strengthen the supervisory capacity of his Office by hiring more specialists knowledgeable in all aspects of banking operations. The present salary structure of the Office, he said, makes it difficult to attract people with the required skills and experience.

Coordinating Committee of Senior Officials

The Bill also provides for the creation of a committee composed of the Superintendent, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Chairman of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation (CDIC) and the Deputy Minister of Finance for the purpose of facilitating consultations and the exchange of information on matters relating to the supervision of financial institutions. Every member of the committee will be entitled to any information relating to the supervision of financial institutions that is in the possession of any other member. The Bill establishes no specific mandate for this committee, nor does it require that it meet or consult regularly. Nevertheless, as Mr. Mackenzie noted, the formal existence of such a committee will make it easier for the Superintendent to bring together the heads of supervisory agencies, and should encourage consultations. Our own review of the background to the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank 18 months ago brought out the need for greater consultation and information sharing between supervisory agencies, the CDIC and the Bank of Canada. We therefore view the formation of this coordinating committee with favour, and note with approval that there is no provision in the Bill for alternate members to those expressly named to the committee. We also believe that the usefulness of the committee as a forum for exchanging views between members and keeping aware of developments in each other's domain would be enhanced if its terms of reference required it to meet regularly, rather than only on those occasions when a matter of urgency necessitates a meeting.

Private Sector Advisory Committee

The December White Paper indicated that the Government would also establish a committee of experts from the accounting, auditing, legal and other professions to advise the Superintendent on new developments in financial markets and assist him in the design of "early warning systems" and uniform guidelines for financial accounting. While the Bill makes no provision for the formation of an advisory committee, the Minister of State (Finance), the Honourable Thomas Hockin, assured us that the Government remains committed to establishing one. He explained that ministerial authority to name such a committee already exists and that it is his intention to designate members as soon as the terms of reference are agreed upon. The rapid innovations currently underway in financial markets make the task of regulating financial institutions a formidable one. In this light, we think that the continuing advice of a group of experts from the private sector can be crucial to the effectiveness of financial regulation and supervision. We therefore urge the Minister to proceed expeditiously with his plan to establish a technical advisory committee to OSFI.

Deposit Insurance

Part II of the Bill will amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act to clarify the objectives of CDIC, provide for a more parallel treatment of federal and provincial member institutions, and enhance the ability of CDIC to carry out its mandate.

The legislative mandate of CDIC will be expanded to include, in addition to the protection of insured depositors, the maintenance of confidence and stability in the financial system and the promotion of standards of sound business and financial practices. These objectives are implicit in the CDIC's present mandate. The proposed amendments will give them formal expression.

New Powers

To serve these objectives, the powers of CDIC will be expanded in a number of areas.

- With the approval of the Governor in Council, the CDIC will be able to set up a new company and acquire all its shares for the purpose of facilitating the management or disposal of assets of a member institution.

- CDIC will be authorized to make discretionary payments to depositors prior to the winding-up of a member institution.
- Provision of deposit insurance to provincially chartered institutions will be conditional on CDIC's having adequate access to information regarding that institution.
- CDIC will be authorized to levy premium surcharges on member institutions that do not follow CDIC's by-laws on standards of sound business and financial practices. The premium surcharge could be up to 1/3% of insured deposits less the regular premium rate for the year.

Parallel treatment of federal and provincial institutions will be introduced by requiring all future member institutions to apply for insurance. At present, this requirement extends only to provincial institutions; banks and federally incorporated trust and loan companies are insured automatically.

Parallel treatment of institutions will also be introduced in the termination of insurance. Existing legislative provisions allow CDIC to terminate the insurance of a provincial institution which does not operate according to sound business and financial practices or is in breach of the conditions of its insurance policy. C-42 will empower CDIC to terminate the insurance of federal member institutions as well, subject to ministerial approval.

Funding provisions

The Bill provides that CDIC insurance premiums be set by the Governor in Council up to a maximum of 1/6% of insured deposits. At present, premiums are specified in the CDIC Act. Bill C-86, assented to in June 1986, raised the premiums from 1/30% to 1/10% for the 15 month period ending 30th April, 1987. On 29th April, the Honourable Thomas Hockin announced that, subject to passage of C-42, he would be recommending that the premium rate for the year beginning 1st May remain at the rate of 1/10%. CDIC estimates show that, barring further major institutional insolvencies, a premium rate of 1/10% would cover ongoing financial requirements and eliminate the deficit of the Corporation (which currently stands at $1.2 billion) by 1994. The original premium of 1/30% would not be sufficient to meet the current financial requirements and would cause the deposit insurance fund deficit to grow by at least $50 million a year.

The Committee heard testimony from the Trust Companies Association of Canada (TCAC) and the Canadian Bankers' Association (CBA), arguing that part of the CDIC deficit should be financed by the Government because it can be attributed to government policies. Specifically, according to the brief of the CBA, the CDIC deficit has been augmented by payments made to uninsured depositors of failed institutions and payments resulting from the 1983 retroactive increase in deposit insurance from $20,000 to $60,000. CDIC's estimates of the possible losses resulting from these two sets of policies are $53 million and $24 million respectively as of the end of 1986. It should also be noted that between the end of April 1985 and the winding-up date, insured deposits at the Canadian Commercial Bank (CCB) rose by $32.7 million, an increase which could be attributed to government assurances concerning the viability of CCB and which may also have had an adverse effect on the deficit of CDIC. The CBA argues that the Government must accept liability for these amounts since they resulted from specific government decisions to make payments above agreed insurance limits.

Mr. Ronald McKinlay, Chairman of CDIC, and the Honourable Thomas Hockin rejected these cost estimates as hypothetical and misleading. Uninsured depositors, they argued, were compensated only in those cases where CDIC decided to use agency agreements to wind down failed institutions, and those decisions were made only after an assessment that the agency agreement would be a more cost effective route of disposing the assets of those institutions than liquidation. In CDIC's judgement, therefore, the payment of uninsured depositors, which was necessary in order to enable the use of agency agreements, did not contribute to the Corporation's deficit.

In principle, the policy of CDIC on agency agreements as outlined by its Chairman is obviously sound. Unfortunately, member institutions have not been given adequate information by CDIC to satisfy themselves that it has also been sound in practice. We believe that, without breaking confidentiality requirements, CDIC could make more information available on the terms and conditions of the agency agreements and cost recoveries from work-outs. This would make it less difficult for outsiders to judge CDIC's performance in winding down failed institutions and would help allay the concerns of member institutions who have to pay the deficit in the insurance fund.

Borrowing Authority

The maximum that CDIC may borrow from the Consolidated Revenue Fund (CRF) will be increased from $1.5 billion to $3 billion. CDIC's outstanding debt to the CRF is $1.2 billion. Its present borrowing authority therefore leaves CDIC with little room to meet new obligations that may arise from member institutions falling into difficulties.

Co-insurance and Insurance Pools

Absent from the Bill are two proposals that this Committee had made in its report on deposit insurance tabled in December 1985. The first called for the introduction of a system of co-insurance as a means of encouraging depositors to exercise judgement in their choice of deposit institutions. This should strengthen the market discipline that is brought to bear upon such institutions. Under the Committee's proposal, full deposit insurance coverage would be limited to the first $25,000 in deposit accounts; for deposits between $25,000 and $75,000, insurance coverage would be limited to 80%. Small depositors, therefore, would continue to enjoy full protection (evidence received by the Committee shows that, as of 30th April, 1984, 96% of bank deposit accounts had balances under $20,000), but larger depositors would have some incentive to take into account an institution's record, reputation and performance — not only the interest rates offered — when deciding whether to trust it with their deposits. They would therefore exert some pressure on management to manage risk-taking prudently. In the Committee's view, a form of co-insurance might provide a useful market-based supplement to the regulatory devices used to contain excessive risk-taking by insured institutions. Witnesses opposed to co-insurance pointed out the difficulty members of the public would have in understanding financial statements and reports of financial institutions. We also recognize that, having operated with the present level of insurance coverage for four years now, there are serious practical difficulties to reducing it by any significant extent.

The second proposal in the Committee's report on deposit insurance called for the establishment within CDIC of separate insurance funds (or pools) for banks, and trust and loan companies. The reasoning behind the proposal was that it would strengthen incentives for industry self-regulation by increasing the insurance costs that institutions would have to bear for losses by any member within the same institutional group. This rationale could be weakened by the blurring of distinctions between types of financial institutions. This blurring will reduce the risk differential between institutional groups. It does not reduce the need to deter excessive risk-taking by insured institutions.

As noted in testimony to the Committee by Ms. Judith Maxwell, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, the tendency to excessive risk-taking is characteristic of an insurance system based on flat rate premiums. In the absence of risk-based premium rates, we must therefore introduce other measures to contain risk.

We recognize as one such measure the provisions in C-42 which would allow CDIC to levy premium surcharges on delinquent institutions. The Minister indicated to the Committee that the Government is currently examining other approaches to creating incentives for self-regulation of risk exposure, including the option of risk-related capital requirements as recently adopted by regulators in the United States and the United Kingdom. We are in full support of these efforts, which we view as all the more urgent in the absence of a system of separate insurance pools for different classes of financial institutions.

Appointments to CDIC Board

The TCAC and the CBA expressed concern that private sector appointments to the board of directors of CDIC, as called for by Bill C-86, have not yet been made. The Minister told the Committee that consultations with industry representatives have already taken place, and that recommendations for appointment will be made shortly. The experience, perspective and knowledge that private sector representatives can bring to the CDIC board will contribute significantly to the board's scope and effectiveness. At any rate, private sector representation on the board has been a legal requirement for almost a year now. The Government should therefore proceed with the necessary appointments as soon as possible.

Your Committee has reviewed the subject-matter of Bill C-42 in accordance with the Order of Reference and recommends that the said Bill, when examined by the Senate, be favourably considered.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL SYSTEM AND INSTITUTIONS

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to table its Fifth Report respecting its examination of Canada's participation in the International Financial System and institutions and, in particular, the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank Group and the Regional Development Banks, including the debt repayment problems of developing countries.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I ask permission to say a few words on the report at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, as you can imagine, this has been a most complex and extensive subject for the committee to study as exhaustively as it has. Today I can only give you a few highlights of the committee's report.

I might start by pointing out—although many of you know these figures—that the external debt of the Third World is estimated to be approximately $1 trillion. When I was young, I do not think that they had invented that word yet, but it is $1,000 billion. This has been loaned to the Third World basically from the International Monetary Fund, the World Bank, creditor governments and from the commercial banks—mostly of the OECD group of countries. Over one half of this debt, approximately $560 billion, is owed by 57 debtor countries that are having problems with their debt repayment. About two thirds of that $560 billion worth of problem debt is in South America.

If I may digress, I will give you a quick overview of why it is that the report deals with South America more extensively than elsewhere.

If you take the Pacific Rim countries, they are, generally speaking, able to manage their debt—even though some of them, such as Korea, have had to seek some rescheduling—and they are capable of repaying it, with the exception of the Philippines. India, incidentally—and it was of interest to me—has gone through this whole period without encountering foreign debt.

However, when you come to Africa, it is a dramatically different story, because about 80 per cent of the African debt—which might be $200 billion if you include the Northern Tier African countries; if you take the Sub-Sahara Africa, you are talking about possibly $100 million—is sovereign debt owed to nations or international institutions; only about 20 per cent of it is owed to the private banks. Again, from the point of view of the world financial system, that is not a problem. Those countries are unable to handle that debt. We know of the tragic situation in most of the countries of Africa, and in the report we applaud the action of the government in recently writing off—for all intents and purposes it was a little bit like the loan, Senator Murray, to General Motors where the government forgave interest for 15 years, but we call it writing off—the loan. We applaud the government for that and for its stated policy for the future of giving aid to Africa in the form of outright grants rather than additional loans to further exacerbate their problem.

That brings us to the Latin American countries where the situation is dramatically different, because 80 per cent of the debt is owed to private commercial banks and only some 20 per cent is sovereign debt. This makes the problem much more difficult to deal with.

Another problem with Third World debt is that it is growing. It is not diminishing; it is not being reduced; and it is not being paid off. It is growing. The committee maintains that only integrated policies by all of the actors are capable of solving the problem, that is, that the creditor governments—and I will come to them later—the debtor governments, the commercial banks and the international financial institutions are all going to have to be part of a solution.

The committee further agrees with the economic adjustment measures prescribed by the IMF, the World Bank and the private research institutes. As you know, there have been criticisms of these conditions along the lines that they are too tough. It is necessary for these debtor countries, if they are to get on a growth path again, to follow certain policy objectives which we set forth in the committee report as follows:

- Adopt and maintain competitive exchange rates;
- Encourage savings and productive investment;
- Institute sound budgetary controls in order to reduce deficit;
- Make their economies more market responsive;
- Improve their export performance;

Encourage private capital inflows;
Exercise restraint in the use of subsidies; and Divest inefficient state enterprises.

In case some may say that that is a free market economy prescription that we should not be lecturing them on, let me just say that we make the point in the report that those countries that are most able to handle their debt have, indeed, been following market economy practices and those that are in the most trouble have not.

Honourable senators, so that that is not perceived to be a point of view only of free market adherence, let me quote an article in the Globe and Mail of Monday. I am referring to an article relative to a speech by a Soviet economist, Larisa Popkova, in a Soviet newspaper. Among other things, she stated:

Third World countries that rely on free markets are quickly catching up with the Soviet Union and those that have introduced socialism are going hungry.

The Russian change of attitude towards market economy is such that they thoroughly agree with our prescription as contained in the report. In any event, that one economist from Russia does.

Honourable senators, I will touch for one minute on capital flight. This subject, of course, is dealt with in much more detail in the report. I will not give you examples of this enormous problem from all parts of the world. However, I will give you one.

The best figures available on Mexico are that they have had capital flight in the last few years of approximately $70 billion. The total debt in that country is $100 billion. Therefore, their debt, if they had not had capital flight and had policies at home which would have encouraged their citizens to retain and invest their money in Mexico, would now be a manageable $30 billion instead of $100 billion.

Capital flight is a very serious problem throughout the Third World, and measures such as I have just outlined are needed if this is to be stopped and, indeed, reversed. The committee spent some time on that subject.

The report analyzes the international financial institutions at some length. Contrary to some remarks made in recent times by others, this report is, in balance, complimentary of the International Monetary Fund and the job it has done. But the mandate of the International Monetary Fund is one of short-term remedies while, on the other hand, that of the World Bank involves program lending that has basically been long term. Senators might recall that John Maynard Keynes, after the Second World War, at the time of the Bretton Woods meetings that established these institutions, made the remark that we have created a fund that is a bank and a bank that is a fund. The World Bank, however, is now moving towards structural lending and is coordinating its affairs much more with the IMF. Mr. Conable, the new President of the World Bank, said to us in Ottawa that he hoped they could move to structural lending of up to 50 per cent of their capital in due course.

[Senator van Roggen.]

In dealing with these institutions, the report also touches on the U.S. veto. After the Second World War, the United States found itself—with Europe on its back economically and with Japan not yet having created its economic miracle—by far the biggest contributor of moneys going into these institutions. The voting system was such that it was tied to contributions, and the U.S. had, in effect, a veto. Since then, however, other nations have introduced their fair share of capital to the subsequent capital increases. Matters have reached the point where on one or two occasions, if additional money had come from a different country, the Americans would have lost their veto. They objected to the acceptance of this additional capital on that basis. We are critical of this and have suggested that the time has come when the Americans no longer need a veto, and that they should step aside to allow these institutions to be funded to as large an extent as those individual countries are willing to do, although that in no way suggests that the institutions could be properly capitalized for the job they need to do for the future without full American participation. In the opinion of the committee, these institutions must position themselves, in terms of personnel, expertise and in every other way, to play a much larger role in the immediate future than they have played in the past.

A section in the report deals with OPEC, which I will not go into in any great detail. Senators may, however, be interested in this. I know that I and, I believe, many others were of the general impression that this whole problem arose as a result of the oil crunch, that the enormous sums of OPEC money recycled back into the western world were loaned, in turn, by our institutions to the Third World, that the Arabs ended up with our covenant so that their money is quite safe, and that we ended up with the Third World's covenant where the money is not so safe. That is, in part, true, but we were interested to discover in our investigations that the heavy move towards Third World lending started before the first oil crisis. It started in the late 1960s and early 1970s as a result of dramatic increases in world commodity prices generally, not just the price of oil. This idea that the tree would grow to the sky and that we would have ever escalating prices on all world commodities, because they were going to be in such short supply, led people to believe that they were on an endless upward track and that they could, therefore, both borrow and lend these enormous sums quite safely. Even the second oil crunch, funnily enough, did not have the effect one might have expected it would. The amount of money being invested in this manner escalated after a further surge in lending as a result of an increase in commodity prices in about 1977, just before the second oil crunch. So, there are factors other than oil that have given rise to the problems we are now facing.

The report then deals at some length with the commercial banks. The six major Canadian commercial banks have outstanding $27 billion in Third World problem debtor countries. That is not $27 billion worth of debt in default or arrears, but it is $27 billion invested in Third World countries, mostly in Latin America and the Caribbean, countries which are having difficulty servicing that debt or borrowing capital to pay interest, and things of that sort.

• (1410)

In recent years these Canadian banks have greatly increased their write-downs and their provisioning. The total of those write-downs, write-offs and provisioning for this year will start approaching $4 billion. That is a figure that will have to be repeated, so far as some of us can see, a good many years into the future.

The $4 billion is not being all provisioned against Third World debt. Breakdowns are not available. I would simply give a rough estimate that half of their bad debt is probably domestic, both in Canada and the United States—not only Dome but the Oil Patch Western Farms, Oklahoma and Texas loans—and in many cases those are being written down, if not written off.

I do not want to bore honourable senators with detail, but the distinction between writing down and “provisioning”, quite simply, is that with writing down one is taking an amount off a specific loan that is identifiable as to the borrower and as to amount, whereas in provisioning one is taking a general amount of money and—although it has the same effect on one’s balance sheet—putting it to one side, but not stipulating which creditor one has in mind when that provisioning is done. That is very reasonable, because if one bank said to Brazil, “We are writing down your debt by 10 per cent,” then all of the other countries would come along and say, “You must do the same for us.” So at the moment they are provisioning against Third World debt rather than writing it off. At some point they will have to take further steps.

On the matter of provisioning, the Canadian Inspector of Banks—who, I believe, is now the Inspector of Financial Institutions—

An Hon. Senator: Not yet.

Senator van Roggen: He will be. The Canadian Inspector of Banks has required the Canadian banks to provision against Third World debt in varying amounts, and recently increased their targets from 18 per cent to 20 per cent over the next two or three years. We say in the report that this will have to be further increased in the future. Incidentally, this is for a bag of 34 problem countries.

In the committee’s opinion the banks will have to bear an increased cost of carrying the debt burden, including capping of interest rates, and even reducing interest rates. In that connection I might say that the reduction of interest rates on the total Third World debt of 1 per cent amounts to $4 billion a year in saved payments for the Third World.

This is not without cost to the Canadian body economic, because the $4 billion which the banks are finding for this purpose this year, and will be finding in years to come, has to come out of the body economic of Canada, from the customers of the bank—which are nearly all of us—in the form of interest rates and service charges.

The shareholders do not at the moment appear to be bearing an inordinate amount of this burden, but the capitalization of the banks is such that they could not really do so if we wished them to. It is obviously not to the advantage of any Canadian to have one of our major financial institutions fail or be forced to the wall; and therefore it is incumbent upon us all to join in the management of this serious problem.

We say in the report, as I have just mentioned, that the lender governments, the creditor governments, should become more involved in this problem. To date they have not been willing to become involved. As an example, in January, or possibly February, when Brazil decided to suspend payment of interest on its debt, the Brazilian Minister of Finance travelled to Tokyo, London and Washington to meet with Ministers of Finance, Chancellors of the Exchequer, and so on, in those capital cities, and he was basically told in each city, “Don’t talk to us; go off and talk to the banks.” We do not believe that this is sufficient to deal with this problem in the future, and we say that the creditor governments must become involved.

Solutions. The report stresses the need to keep our markets open to the Third World when, in every instance, we appear to be doing exactly the opposite. We talk about and deal with the harmonization of bank regulations between Europe, the United States, Japan and Canada. By way of example, some of the European banks, particularly those in Switzerland and Germany, have already provisioned 50 per cent against their share of this debt. Because of the regulations within their country, the U.S. banks have provisioned very little because of the difficulty of their system in writing such provisions off. As I have already mentioned, the Canadian banks have provisioned substantially. If possible, there should be harmonization between these different regimes if we are to deal with the problem properly in the future, although we need to be careful, in trying to arrive at harmonization, not to arrive at the lowest common denominator of present regulations.

We must maintain a flow of fresh capital to the Third World. This is where difficulty arises, because present bank lending has pretty much dried up, as one can well imagine when one looks at the situation they are in. I will not keep you too long, but I would like to read just one paragraph from the report in that connection:

The current difficulties between debtors and creditors are capable of threatening the under-pinnings of the world financial system. To avoid serious disruptions to their own domestic economies, creditor governments will have to participate more directly in the management of the debt problem. The time may have now come for creditor governments to lift their objections to direct dialogue with debtor governments. Such discussions could serve a useful purpose in building a consensus to strengthen commitments on both sides for an agreed debt strategy. It would also give hard-pressed debtor governments some evidence that creditor governments understood their plight and were sympathetic. The Canadian Government should publicly endorse and advocate the principle of a dialogue within the IMF’s Interim Committee involving creditor and debtor governments.

In that connection you will note that we are careful to suggest that that dialogue take place within the confines of the Interim Committee of the IMF. We are not advocating an international conference and a huge north-south circus, where everybody could point the finger at everybody else, as we think it would serve no useful purpose.

To summarize, the commercial banks will be pre-occupied with the problem of the existing debt for some years into the future. Looking over a ten-year period and calculating inflation at whatever you choose, 3 or 4 per cent, and provisioning at the levels I have spoken about, this debt will become infinitely more manageable a number of years down the road as far as the banks are concerned. Certainly, the banks in Canada and the United States are to be commended for having strengthened their balance sheets very substantially in the last five years. But while they have got themselves in a better position, the Third World has not improved its position one iota in that same period. As I mentioned a few minutes ago, new lending has almost dried up.

The Mexican rescheduling package of last fall, which we deal with in detail in the report, in our opinion, required too much fresh capital from the banks. The package of $12 billion, which was for a comparatively short term—some of it as little as the next two years—required $6 billion, about half of the package, from the banks. The banks were cajoled and pushed by their governments into providing it. This was at a time when Brazil was still performing very well with a balance of payments on trade of some $12 billion. The parties involved thought that this might send a signal to Brazil and other countries that, “Yes, if you do your job properly, we will be willing to come to the party.” Certainly, the Baker plan, devised by Treasury Secretary James Baker of the United States, envisaged new capital from the commercial banks. We feel that that plan is not going to perform its function in that mode and so, while the banks are looking after their own problem—and we are not suggesting that they be bailed out, except to the degree that a healthy world economy will bail anyone out—we say that if the Third World is to grow and not contract, it must have more capital, subject to the conditions such as I have mentioned, in running their economies properly, and that this new capital will have to be channelled through the international financial institutions such as the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the subsidiary banks of the World Bank. That will require very large amounts of new capital from the participating governments.

● (1420)

Canada cannot do it all by itself, but we can certainly start to lead the way in international circles in persuading others to join with us in seeing that the Third World receives the capital it needs so that it can maintain some level of growth in the next generation. If they do not, then not only will the Third World suffer but we, too, will suffer.

While most of Canada's trade is with the U.S., as we all know, or at least a preponderant amount, a very large percentage of the trade of Europe, the United States and Japan is with the Third World. If the Third World is unable to trade properly in the way of importing goods from and exporting goods to the United States, Europe, Japan, Canada and the OECD countries, then they are in for a very serious recession, and Canada's trade will be indirectly affected by the loss of jobs in the American economy.

In the report we estimate—and we are quoting other studies that have indicated these figures—that Canada has already possibly lost as many as 50,000 jobs because of the situation in the Third World and from a reduction in trading that we were doing only two years ago. The figure in the United States that is being attributed to the loss of trade with the Third World is already 440,000 jobs: Almost ten times that number. Therefore, if we are not to see those sorts of job losses in Canada, in the United States and elsewhere in the OECD continuing into the future, we must help these countries sustain some level of growth.

I hesitate to draw such a comparison, but just to put the matter in context, we have either lost or are in danger of losing as many jobs in this connection as we would gain from a free trade agreement with the United States according to figures produced by most economists. That is how important it is to us; that is why we feel that the government must address itself to this problem immediately and in a forthcoming fashion.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, permit me to take just a moment to acknowledge the work done on the report just tabled by the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. I was an active member of that committee for some years before my appointment to cabinet. I say “active” member as distinct from “ex officio member,” which is what I am now. I was one of those on the committee who urged the chairman and my fellow members of the committee to take on this mandate of studying Canada's role in international financial institutions, with particular reference to the international debt problem.

This is an enormously important matter. It is important to the future economic and political stability of the world, and therefore to the peace of the world, and is obviously of the greatest importance to our country. It is an area in which the countries of the world have come, over the years, to expect some leadership from Canada.

The debt situation in many of the countries to which my honourable friend refers is, indeed, precarious. One of the most unfair generalizations that can be made about their situation is that they got themselves into it by their own alleged lack of fiscal discipline. What happened, especially in the poorest of those countries, was that the prices of the commodities they exported plunged at the same time as there was a recession in the western world—which meant that we were investing less with them and buying less from them—and interest rates in the western world shot sky high, which made the cost of borrowing money to those poorer countries completely prohibitive. So, they are in a terrible situation that is not entirely of their own doing, by any means.

I think we all recognize, as the honourable senator has pointed out, and as Secretary Baker in the United States has said, that the only way that they can work themselves out of that terrible situation is through economic growth. That, of course, raises all of the questions of trade, aid and development on which questions the world has come, over the years, to expect leadership from this country.

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has done very valuable work over the years. It has presented reports on Canada's relations with Europe, Canada's relations with the Caribbean, one on Canada-U.S. trade, and, more recently, one on Canada's role in the Middle East. These have made an important contribution to public policy development and public policy debate. All of those reports, if my memory serves me correctly, came in under the distinguished chairmanship of Senator van Roggen, with whom I was pleased to serve on the committee. I congratulate him on his continued leadership in that committee.

I am sure the report he has tabled today will be in that same fine tradition. Again, I thank him and all of the members of the committee on behalf of the government and, I am sure, on behalf of all members of the Senate for this report and for their excellent work.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On motion of Senator van Roggen, debate adjourned

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Paul C. Lafond, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 13, 1987

The Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence has the honour to present its

FIRST REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on April 7, 1987, to hear evidence on and to consider the following matter relating to National Defence, namely, Canada's land forces, including Mobile Command, and such other matters as may from time to time be referred to it by the Senate, respectfully requests that it be empowered (i) to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study; and (ii) to adjourn from place to place within and outside Canada for the purpose of such study.

Your Committee notes that on March 26, 1987, the Senate agreed to the report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration recommending that it be authorized to release no more than 3/12th of those approved funds until the end of June 1987 for Committee budgets submitted to it for the financial year 1987-88.

In accordance with the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees, your Committee will therefore present to the Senate a copy of its budget and the report thereon of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, once the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration has examined and reported all committee budgets.

Respectfully submitted,

PAUL C. LAFOND
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, may I have leave to explain this before putting the motion?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Lafond: Honourable senators, it is obvious that the mandate of the committee to inquire into land forces requires a certain amount of travel. We have to visit major bases of the Canadian Armed Forces land component.

We have complied with the rules and guidelines. We presented our proposed budget to the Senate Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. The Subcommittee on Budgets of the Internal Economy Committee met yesterday and approved our submission.

● (1430)

I understand that most probably the Senate will adjourn this afternoon until May 26. In our travel plans, we have to make a prolonged visit to western Canada to cover the major commands there—1st Canadian Brigade Group in Calgary, Training Command in Chilliwack and major exercises taking place in Suffield, Alberta. The travel of committees in the last weeks of the session is something that is not generally looked upon with favour by the whips on either side of this chamber, or of any other chamber, so our objective is to undertake that one week's trip in the first week of June in order to have all members of the committee back in the Senate by the second week of June. We require authority to travel in order to enable us to do the necessary planning to get that trip over and done with to the satisfaction of both whips.

Furthermore, our next extensive trip would be to visit our major base, 4th Canadian Brigade Group in Lahr, Germany, and our base in Cyprus. We plan to do that in about the second week of September, before the Senate reconvenes. Thereafter, there might be a number of trips lasting from 12 to 36 hours, say, to Petawawa, Valcartier, Gagetown, and places around here, which visits would be flexible and replaceable.

That is why we are now asking for the authority to travel at an early date.

I can move, because the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration is not meeting tomorrow—

Senator Frith: Yes, it is.

Senator Lafond: If it is meeting tomorrow, the Senate will not be meeting for another ten days, so I could move for the adoption of this report now, but I have no objection to its being postponed until May 26, having reasonable assurance that we will be granted this authority to make our trip to western Canada in the first week of June.

So, honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(f), I move that this report be adopted now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I understand why the request for travel is a corollary or a logical continuation of the authority that the committee has been given—and I do not quarrel with the fact that in order to fulfil its mandate some travel is necessary. However, I want to have an opportunity to consult the whip and my colleagues on the question of whether it is a good idea for it to do so in June, in view of the probable amount of business that we will be having here in the chamber at that time.

I will propose the adjournment of the debate on the motion until May 26, but that is not conditional; I am not asking for the adjournment conditional on giving a reasonable assurance that the authority will be given. I can say that I will certainly take the position with my colleagues that it is natural that this committee will want to travel, but I cannot say what the reaction of the whip or my colleagues might be on the question of whether it should be in June or not. However, I will undertake to speak to it on May 26, and to consult with my colleagues, if possible, before that date.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

PREScription DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT— PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I have three petitions from residents of Prince Edward Island praying that this house reject Bill C-22, because they feel—

Senator Corbin: Name them!

Senator Thériault: Name the petitioners?

Senator Corbin: Name a few of them.

Senator Thériault: Do you want me to read them?

Some Hon. Senators: No.

[Senator Lafond.]

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Senator Thériault: This will be the longest and best speech I have ever made!

W.A. Keenan; R.A.G. Gormley; A. Reuben; J.A. Cox; Norm E. Stewart; Teresa Jackson; Betty Livingstone; Kevin Lannigan; Roy Buell—and on, and on, and on.

In fact, honourable senators, they pray that this honourable house reject Bill C-22 because of the effect that it will have on the cost of drugs that they need to keep healthy. Thank you.

I present this petition and ask that the petition and names be printed in the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, is it the object to list the name of every resident of Prince Edward Island in the record of this Senate? We have occupied an awful lot of space in listing the names of the constituents—

Senator Flynn: We are spending a bit more; that is okay with Senator Bonnell.

Senator Hicks: There should be a limit to these things, just the same.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, I think that the honoured citizens of Prince Edward Island have the right to petition this house. I have presented their petition, which proves to me that they are concerned and intelligent Canadian citizens.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I rise on a point of order here, perhaps simply to alert honourable senators and to give notice that I would like to have a discussion on procedure one of these days, and before long, about the bad habits that we are getting into with regard to petitions.

Senator Denis: It is not so bad, after all.

Senator Murray: One of the bad habits that we have got into is the notion that an honourable senator may read a list of names on a petition. The other bad habit is that we are printing the names in Debates of the Senate.

Today, for example, Debates of the Senate were not available to us until noon because, I am told, the names of the petitioners had to be inscribed therein.

The habit in most parliamentary assemblies that I am familiar with is that a member brings in a petition, makes a brief statement on it, and tables it, but does not read the petition, does not make a speech, and certainly does not read the names of the petitioners. Those names are available from the Clerk for people who may be interested, but they are not, as I understand it, published in Hansard.

● (1440)

Honourable senators, I will leave it at that for the moment, and suggest to you that you may wish to do some research on the matter and we can have a procedural discussion in a few days' time.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, on the point of order raised by Senator Murray, perhaps when the Leader of the Opposition returns, he may recall that a few months ago he raised some serious objections to the delay in the production of the Debates of the Senate. I am sure he would want to take that into consideration.

If the petition is presented and the names are not read, we really have no means of knowing if those names are actually on the petition. I am looking at the list of names from yesterday and I see the name of "Pat Binns" from Hopefield. I am sure that the MP for Cardigan has other ways of making his views known to Parliament rather than signing petitions to the Senate. I would really like the opportunity to ask Mr. Binns if he did, in fact, sign this petition.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, on the point of order, I would like to say that I asked the honourable member of Parliament for the Cardigan district, Mr. Pat Binns, if he did sign it, and he told me that he signed it because he was not getting any action himself and he was glad to have some help from the Senate. It is good to know that we can help those members in the other place.

Senator Flynn: The impartial chairman of the special committee!

Senator Bonnell: I feel quite proud of Mr. Binns for, at least, showing his support for the people in that constituency.

Senator Phillips: I am sure the honourable senator will return the support in the next election.

Senator Bonnell: If he keeps it up, you never know.

Senator Flynn: You are the one who collected the signatures.

Senator Murray: I do want to draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that yesterday in the other place several petitions were presented. These can be found at page 5985 of Hansard. They were presented to the House of Commons by Mr. Benjamin, Mr. Oostrom, Mr. Heap and Mr. Robichaud. In each case the member in question stated what the petition was about, where the petitioners come from, and that was it. There was no question of listing the names of the petitioners in Hansard.

Honourable senators, I think we had better have a discussion on this within a few days before we go much further.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, on the point of order, I just want to state that I agree with the Leader of the Government. I was surprised when this procedure was first followed in this chamber and the names were made part of the record. My experience in Parliament has been that when petitions are presented, they are put on the table, but they do not appear in the record. When I stood up, I followed what I thought was the accepted practice of this honourable house.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I take it that a point of order is not being raised at this stage. As we know, correctly, a point of order should be raised at the time the breach of order takes place. I know of no provision for giving notice on a point of order, but I must say that in this case it seems to be appropriate to do so.

I take it that the Leader of the Government means to wait for some occasion when another petition is presented and use that occasion to raise the point of order and initiate a discussion on the matter. In the meantime, this will give us an opportunity to do some research and reflect on the point at issue.

There is no point of order before us now.

Senator Flynn: Why not?

Senator Frith: Because the Leader of the Government said he was not raising a point of order.

Senator Flynn: It was raised at the time the petition was presented.

Senator Frith: No, it wasn't. If you want to pick a fight, that is fine, but there is no fight going on.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, leave granted to print the names on the petition as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate?

Senator Flynn: On a point of order, His Honour is asking whether we give leave. If we have to give leave, my response would be that I do not give such leave.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Leave is not granted.

INTER-PARLIAMENTARY UNION

SEVENTY-SEVENTH CONFERENCE, MANAGUA, NICARAGUA—
NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, June 16, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Seventy-Seventh Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, held in Managua, Nicaragua, from April 27 to May 2, 1987.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 26, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, if leave is granted and if it is the wish of the Senate, I will give a brief explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, since Easter the debates in the other place have not been of the type that produce legislation, at least, to date. The coming week is a four-day week in the House of Commons, two of which are devoted to Opposition days. Therefore, we do not anticipate legislation being passed in that house next week. If it is, however, we are subject to recall.

Presently we have before us Bill C-22, and I understand that the spokesman for the Opposition, Senator Gigantès, is very involved with his Sub-Committee on Training and Employment and that he does not wish to speak until he has completed his committee work.

I remind honourable senators that committees will be meeting next week as usual. There are some 20 committees scheduled for next week at the present time, and it is quite possible that some of the committees scheduled, particularly for Wednesday afternoon when the Senate rises, may wish to meet at an earlier hour. I ask honourable senators to check the committee schedule before making their final travel plans.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while it is true that debate on second reading of Bill C-22 has been adjourned by Senator Gigantès, he is certainly not the sole spokesman for our side on that bill. Therefore, I want to invite members on either side to join in the second reading debate on that bill since I am sure that Senator Gigantès would yield.

However, as we know, the committee studying that bill will be active. I see no reason why we should not be debating second reading at the same time as that committee is studying the bill. Of course, pursuant to the original order regarding that committee, this bill will be automatically referred, even without further motion, to that committee in due course.

Honourable senators, I want it to be clear that I hope we are not suggesting that we are going to put off the debate on second reading of Bill C-22 until Senator Gigantès has completed his sub-committee's work. I also underline that, of course, we are willing and anxious to return should we receive legislation from the other place to deal with next week.

Motion agreed to.

RENÉ M. JALBERT, C.V., C.D.

TRIBUTES ON ACT OF HEROISM

Hon. Robert Muir: Honourable senators, I beg your indulgence for a few short moments. As my dear mother used to say, "if I am spared" until June 10, I will have spent 30 years on the Hill, more recently in this chamber and previously in the other.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Muir: That, however, is not why I rise at this time. During those 30 years, honourable senators, I have heard tributes paid to many people, some from inside Canada and some from outside Canada, some deserved, some undeserved, as I thought—but that is only me. Today I thought I should draw to the attention of my honourable colleagues, especially those who did not see "The National" or "The Journal" last night, the actions of Major René Jalbert in the National Assembly of Quebec three years ago. I sat transfixed in my chair watching a gentleman, a great man, a brave man—one who is in our midst today. He is our own Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. In a calm, cool and collected manner he took control of that terribly sad affair in the National Assembly. He is a man among men, as far as I am concerned. I could not help but wonder what many of us would do in a similar situation. Bullets were flying all around the place, yet he was standing there calmly, with one foot on the step, one hand on his hip, smoking a cigarette, trying to talk reasonably to an individual who undoubtedly did not know what he was doing. Then, he actually had coffee brought in in an effort to calm this person down.

[Senator Phillips.]

Honourable senators, I couldn't sleep last night. Many of you will think, "So what? I don't care if you slept or not," but I couldn't. I kept wondering how this man could do that. He could have been riddled with bullets. I could see myself trying to drink a cup of coffee under those circumstances—I think it would be on the floor!

In looking at the parliamentary "Bible," as I call it, I see René M. Jalbert, CV, CD, MCLJ, KCLJ—a very distinguished man and a great Canadian. I may not be correct in this, but I believe he was a distinguished member of the famous Van Doos. He served in England, France, Korea, Indo-China, Cyprus, and so on. I could not pass up this opportunity to say something in praise of this great Canadian. I am sure that we are all very proud of him, and the people of his province must be extremely proud. I know that if he were a Nova Scotian, I would be just as proud, but maybe a little more so just because he was from Nouvelle-Écosse.

I know that many senators are veterans and have been involved in some peculiar situations, but we can move freely around this building knowing that we have people like René Jalbert around. I have to say, sir, that I am proud of you, I am sure everyone in this chamber is proud of you, and all of Canada is proud of you. I salute you, sir, and I ask everyone within hearing distance to rise and pay tribute to Major René Jalbert.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Some honourable senators, who may not often be as "Yankophile" as I am, might not realize that the same remarkable film footage was shown last night on the CBS News, and that very experienced TV journalist Dan Rather, who has probably seen everything, was obviously as impressed as Senator Muir and the rest of us by Major Jalbert's role. So our pride in Black Rod is reinforced by the fact that this film footage was shown all across the United States on one of the world's largest TV networks.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, being from Quebec City myself, I would like to say a few words as well.

When Mr. Jalbert came to the Senate about three years ago as our new Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, we welcomed him with open arms and with great pride, not only because of his brilliant military career but also because of his extraordinary act of heroism on the day of that terrible incident at the National Assembly.

Last night I found it extremely traumatic to watch a film on the English network of what happened that day, showing the exceptional bravery and incredible heroism of Major René Jalbert, which indeed we could not have witnessed otherwise than by watching this film sequence.

I have often had an opportunity to express my admiration for him. He knows that all senators hold him in great esteem, and I want him to know how much we all admire him and how proud we are to have him with us.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—MAINTENANCE OF OFFICIAL BILINGUALISM

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Regarding the commitment by the provinces, contained in the Meech Lake accord, to protect one of Canada's essential characteristics which is official bilingualism, will the constitutional text the legal experts are now drafting identify specific measures the provinces will take, so that this commitment will be more than just a pious wish, and their commitment to preserve the linguistic and cultural values of French Canadians outside Quebec is reflected clearly as provided in subsection 16(3) of the Constitution Act, 1982?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the texts are now being prepared by senior officials. They will be sent to the provincial governments. There will be a meeting of First Ministers in the first week of June, and I hope the texts are approved by this country's eleven governments at that meeting.

Subsequently, the government will table these texts before both Houses of Parliament.

Senator Corbin: Furthermore, will the principle of Canada as an officially bilingual country, which has been institutionalized quite successfully since 1970, be maintained and strengthened in the forthcoming constitutional text?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, for the first time we intend to include in the Constitution specific recognition of the existence of two linguistic communities in our country.

Honourable senators, perhaps I may take this opportunity, subsequent to the question put by Senator Corbin, to say that on the weekend I had a chance to read over the answers I gave to a number of questions on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

● (1500)

[English]

For an hour or more on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week the most involved questions were put to me concerning the Meech Lake accord and the intentions of the government with regard to the legal text. Questions were put to me which sought legal interpretations or opinions, which invited me to speculate on judicial decisions or interpretations that might be made at some time in the future, or, indeed, positions that might be taken by various provinces or others before the courts of the country.

As I have said, I have re-read all of the answers that I gave last week and there is no difficulty with any of those replies, but it occurs to me, given the nature of our Question Period and the importance of these matters, that the prudent thing for me to do, at least for the next few weeks, would be to take most of the substantive questions as notice and to bring in a written reply, which I will undertake to do, wherever possible, within 24 hours.

[Translation]

Senator Corbin: This of course would not prevent me from asking questions which directly concern the francophone minority in Canada. I accept the remarks of the Leader of the Government, and I also appreciate the fact that he may want to respond later.

Still I am asking these questions to express the concern of the francophone linguistic minority group in Canada which is wary of the blank and open spaces which have yet to be filled in the Meech Lake accord.

One of the aspects which worries the francophone minority is that we certainly want the federal government to remain, to the fullest extent possible, the main constitutional protector of minorities. We hope that the federal institutions will not in any way be weakened with respect to services in either official language, in favour of Quebec and to the detriment of the other provinces.

Perhaps I might be more specific and say that we do not want Quebec to become a sort of mother house or procurator's office for French Canadians who live elsewhere in the country. Hopefully the Leader of the Government will be in a position to allay my fears in this respect because by making concessions to Quebec—we have nothing against Quebec being included in the Canadian Constitution and accepting its full responsibilities in that respect—but the role of Quebec as it relates to francophone minorities elsewhere in Canada needs to be defined since Quebec has been acknowledged as being the main homeland of francophones in Canada.

So the minorities want to know where they stand. Will our real father always be the federal government, or will we be expected to deal directly with the Quebec government on certain occasions, for certain services, for certain cultural benefits?

Senator Murray: If I may say so, the question just put to me by my friend shows how wise I was to take such enquiries under advisement before providing a written answer, tomorrow or as soon as possible.

POSSIBILITY OF SIMULTANEOUS PRESENTATION OF REVISED OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND TEXT OF ACCORD

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I have a final question to put to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. This question must necessarily be related to the publication of constitutional papers concerning the Meech Lake accord.

Does the government intend to introduce its revised official language policy in Canada before or with the constitutional proposal?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the government is committed to amend our language policy and the Official Languages Act and we will be tabling a bill during the present session of this Parliament. We stand by this commitment.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to make a last comment. I should find it difficult to give my opinion on the government constitutional proposal if we do not get at the same time the bill amending the legislation on official languages. There is a real connection between these two items. It deeply concerns francophones outside Quebec. We feel that both questions are related.

I hope that the government will be in a position to state its policy on official languages at the same time as it will be tabling its constitutional proposal or at about the same time.

[English]

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—DATE OF PRESENTATION OF TEXT

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, on the subject of the text, the Leader of the Government will have noted—indeed, he has just commented on the fact—that many senators are interested, even impatient, to see the text so that we can pursue some of the exchanges we have had on the Meech Lake accord.

Can the Leader of the Government tell us when, according to the government's plans, the Senate will likely see the first draft, or any draft—or, in fact, the text—presented to the Senate? Is there any program for when the Senate might see textual manifestations of the Meech Lake accord?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the process, according to the one or two precedents that we have, is that the texts are agreed to by the governments, which we hope will happen during the first week in June, and it is only then that they are tabled in various legislatures and in Parliament.

Senator Frith: The Leader of the Government during informal exchanges we had earlier today mentioned this precedent. Perhaps he will put that on the record.

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senators. In 1983 there was the Aboriginal Rights amendment. The amendment was agreed to by the provinces and the federal government. The amendment was then tabled in Parliament where it was debated and passed.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—IMPLICATIONS OF INTERPRETATIVE DECLARATION—AVAILABILITY OF LEGAL OPINIONS—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—
APPLICABILITY OF TERM

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I would like to pursue another line of questioning that has been raised during Question Period on the subject of the Meech Lake accord. I am referring to the line of questioning about the implications of the interpretative declaration in that accord and what implications that declaration might have on the interpretation of other provisions of the Constitution Acts of 1867 and 1982. I have noted that the Leader of the Government plans to take such questions as notice and to try to get some answers. I want to add two questions to that line of questioning.

The first question is a general one as to whether the Department of Justice or other law officers or legal advisers of the Crown prepared any memoranda or opinions on the implications of that interpretative declaration on other aspects of the Constitution and, if so, would the leader be prepared to share them with us to illuminate our discussions on that subject?

My second question on that same line is: Does the term "distinct society" apply to all of the sections of the Constitution? For example, does it apply to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms? Would it apply, for example, to section 1, which makes the Charter "subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society"? Those are the now rather famous words of section 1. Could those "reasonable limits" now be subject to definition according to a "distinct society"? Would that term apply to the interpretation of section 52(1)? That section reads:

The Constitution of Canada is the supreme law of Canada, and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect.

I do not expect an answer now, but would he put these questions into the hopper with the other questions that he has taken as notice?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall do so. I should mention, however, that legal opinions given to ministers by law officers of the Crown are normally regarded as privileged and are not produced in Parliament. But subject to that proviso, I will take the honourable senator's questions as notice, and I will bring in a reply as soon as I can.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I understand the point raised as to privilege. If it is the same principle that applies to privilege in law as between solicitor and client, he probably knows the privilege is the client's privilege, not the solicitor's privilege. So, in this case the privilege would be Senator Murray's, and he can decide whether or not he wants to share it.

Senator Roblin: That does not apply in Parliament, and you know that.

Senator Frith: No, I do not.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL SPENDING PATTERNS—FEDERAL POWERS AFFECTING BROADCASTING AND BANKING

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, with respect to the Meech Lake accord, could the Leader of the Government in the Senate inform the Senate what percentage of each Canadian citizen's tax dollar is spent currently by the federal government and what percentage is spent by the provincial governments? Second, did the government do any economic impact studies on the Meech Lake accord to predict what changes to the federal-provincial spending patterns might occur in the future if the accord is ratified? Finally, does the accord anticipate or imply, or are there envisaged, any changes with respect to federal powers affecting broadcasting and banking?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, one is almost tempted to break the rule one has just set for oneself with regard to answering questions, especially questions the answers to which I think are self-evident, but I will undertake to bring in a written reply to the questions put by my honourable friend.

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Stands!

[Translation]

Hon. Paul David: Honourable senators—

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I must apologize to Senator David, for he had already mentioned to me that Senator Gigantès would yield to him for this debate.

Senator David: Do not mention it, Senator Frith. As a matter of fact, I had intended to thank you and Senator Gigantès for allowing me to take part in this debate in his place yesterday. Because the Senate will not sit next week and I am a member of the committee which will travel from St-John's to Victoria within three weeks after our return, I wanted to speak now.

Honourable senators, I am quite proud to support Bill C-22. The purpose of my remarks is to demonstrate the fundamental importance for medicine and the Canadian people of an innovative pharmaceutical industry.

All industrialized nations in the Western world, including Canada, have signed international agreements to protect intellectual property and promote the free flow of knowledge. The Paris Convention of 1934, amended in 1958 and 1968, defines the rules and grants the inventor an exclusive right for a period extending from 17 to 20 years.

In 1969, the Government of Canada passed legislation allowing generic drug companies to make drugs similar to those of the innovative companies against payment of a 4 per cent royalty, thereby cancelling in Canada the 17-year average exclusivity right which still governs most of our trading partners.

Now, generic drug companies can copy the original products of innovative pharmaceutical companies as soon as they are marketed. Experience has shown that only products used by a great many customers are copied, while the others are not. So, with a minimum of risk and investment, generic companies can, without creating anything new, cheaply exploit the discoveries of the innovative pharmaceutical industry and offer their products at a lower price a long time before the usual seven-teen years have elapsed.

[English]

The primary response to the legislation of 1969 was one of rejection by the innovative companies as a whole. The headquarters of these powerful companies are located in the United States, England, West Germany, Switzerland, France, Italy, Japan, Sweden, Holland and Belgium. These companies viewed Canada as a country hostile to intellectual property protection and restricted their investment in research and development in Canada. They restricted their activities to storage, distribution and sales networks for their products. In order to obtain a notice of compliance from the Health Protection Branch, they met the minimum requirements regarding clinical testing in Canadian hospitals.

There followed a restructuring and re-orientation of the innovative pharmaceutical industry which affected primarily the province of Quebec, which I have the honour of representing in the Senate. The entire greater Montreal region was particularly hard hit by closures, transfers of laboratories and layoffs of scientists and technicians.

[Translation]

I think it is useful to remind honourable senators from Quebec that on three occasions, under two different governments, the National Assembly of the province we represent in this house unanimously endorsed motions on the drug industry.

The first motion was introduced on June 6, 1984, the second on June 20, 1985 and the third on December 19, 1985.

So the nearsightedness of the 1969 act isolated this country from all our trading partners at a time which was especially rife with major pharmaceutical breakthroughs. In that context, let us look together, honourable senators, at medical progress in the light of discoveries by the innovative drug industry, because there in fact lies the basic problem, what innovative companies do for the good of patients and the population as a whole. As you can very well anticipate, my examples will be taken from the field of cardiology, the evolution of which over some 40 years I am especially familiar with.

● (1520)

[English]

In 1944, the year I graduated from the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Montreal, the heart was an inaccessible, untouchable organ—except at the sentimental level. At about this time Cournaud and his colleagues in New York demonstrated the possibility of using cardiac catheterization to show the interior of the cavities of the heart and the blood vessels of the human heart on X-rays, using opaque substances tested by the pharmaceutical industry. This very precise examination is now a standard procedure carried out before all major cardiac surgery.

Spectacular progress has been made in the field of cardiac surgery since the introduction around 1955 of the heart-lung machine. This device makes it possible to maintain circulation and oxygenation in the organism during repair of a heart, which does not move and lungs which are temporarily useless.

In concrete terms, these developments have made it possible to cure most congenital malformations during childhood; to replace diseased valves by prosthetic cardiac valves; to overcome obstacles relating to coronary circulation by bridging the aorta and the distal portion of the diseased artery.

[Translation]

The so-called by-pass.

[English]

Another development that has been made possible is to replace a diseased heart with a new healthy heart.

I have summarized in a few minutes an era which has required millions of hours of research and testing, and considerable financial investments by qualified scientists, daring surgeons and well-structured, sufficiently-funded hospitals. Unfortunately, too often we overlook the very significant contribution of the innovative pharmaceutical industry to the development of this spectacular field of surgery.

[Translation]

Let me extract the essential.

Is there any need to refer to “ether’s volatility” and “chloroform’s toxicity” in the 40’s to stress that heart surgery never could have been performed without the discovery of new anaesthetic substances that can be administered safely for hours by specialists, who become the “waking conscience” of their “sleeping patients”? The innovative drug companies are constantly improving their products and help lower the risk of heart operations now being performed on increasingly older patients.

[Senator David.]

It is not rare to perform a bypass on 80-year olds, to replace ailing valves on 75 to 80-year olds.

Infection still remains a hazard for heart surgery patients, because, for instance, of the deep chest opening. We know that hospital-acquired infections often are resistant and require the use of increasingly powerful antibiotics. The patient is totally dependent on the innovative drug industry in that area. As microbes become more resistant new antibiotics must be discovered to fight those new microbes that cause the current infection.

The early diagnosis of rejection symptoms through biopsies of the heart’s internal wall and the administration of a new anti-rejection substance for weeks, months and years on end after heart transplant radically change the survival pattern of those patients. The experience of the first nine operations at the Institute in 1968 and 1969 was a failure, the longest survival time being nine months. After a twelve-year moratorium, and thanks to the discovery of cyclosporin, heart transplants were resumed four years ago with extremely encouraging results, since 21 patients out of 25 are living, the first of which celebrated his fourth anniversary last April.

[English]

When I began my practice in cardiology, our therapeutic arsenal was very limited and usually ineffective in the treatment of hypertension, acute rheumatic fever, bacterial endocarditis, cardiac arrhythmia, heart failure and coronary disease. How do things stand today? Hypertension is a very widespread disease, the main cause of which is still little understood, despite intensive research conducted at many laboratories. Among the most common complications are heart and kidney failure, myocardial infarction and brain hemorrhage. I hasten to assure you that since the discovery of effective drugs by innovative pharmaceutical companies, we have been able to reduce and control high blood pressure. Complications can generally be prevented by taking the medication prescribed, without ever discontinuing it, and by adjusting the dosage through periodic medical visits. This innovative pharmacological contribution is probably the main cause of the drop in the death rate of patients suffering from ischemic heart disease in the last ten years.

[Translation]

The acute articular fever of the teenager has almost disappeared in Canada. I remember that in 1966, at the Institute of Cardiology, we had a children’s ward with 24 beds for that disease alone. Most patients were suffering from complications or were on the verge of having complications capable of damaging the heart valves. The disappearance of this disease in Canada and Quebec is the result of better diagnosis and use, by the pediatrician or family physician, of the appropriate antibiotic to cure sore throats or ear infections, but especially streptococcal throat infections in teenagers.

[English]

Until the discovery of penicillin during the Second World War, septic bacterial endocarditis was fatal. It is caused by an infection which disseminates microbes through the bloodstream that can destroy the heart valves in which they congregate. Although still very serious, this disease can often be cured by antibiotics. However, the fight against very small microbes which adapt to and resist antibiotics requires the constant discovery of new products, hence the capital importance of the innovative pharmaceutical industry.

● (1530)

For lack of sufficient knowledge, I will not venture very far into the world of viruses, which is still more complex than that of bacteria. One has only to think about the present and future scourge of AIDS to hope for the rapid discovery of a vaccine or a curative drug. The curative drug may come before the vaccine. In order to defeat this plague that is spreading before our very eyes, we must call upon the services of our scientists and researchers and hope for rapid discoveries by innovative drug companies.

[Translation]

Sudden death is the most dramatic example of a breakdown in the production or transmission system of the heart's power plant. To prevent it and cure several other serious heart irregularities, the innovative pharmaceutical industry has launched vast research programs in order to experiment and supply more and more effective anti-arrhythmic drugs. Recent reports show that some new drugs seem to be very promising.

[English]

Heart failure is still the eventual end result of all chronic heart disease. Fluid accumulating in the thorax, abdomen and legs used to be evacuated by making punctures with needles, syringes and tubes. Nowadays, through the use of effective low-toxicity diuretics, these painful procedures are seldom employed, and patients can live more comfortably for years by taking drugs that prevent the retention of fluids and ensure their natural elimination. These remarkable developments would not have been possible without the discoveries of the innovative pharmaceutical industry.

[Translation]

Coronary disease is well known in the public under its three common designations; angina, coronary thrombosis and myocardial infarction. It is the most frequent and most lethal disease on the North American continent. It is the result of a deposit of atherosclerosis which gradually blocks the opening of coronary arteries. These arteries supply the heart muscle with the blood and the oxygen it requires to act as a pump which sends the blood through the vessel network of the body with an average of 100,000 contractions per day, or 36,500,000 per year. That, honourable senators, is what your hearts perform every year.

A broad range of new products has been offered by the innovative pharmaceutical industry in the past ten years to relieve anginous pain, to prevent thrombosis or blood coagulation in the arteries, and to control the scope and complications of myocardial infarction. These drugs come under four categories, which I will just mention by their names: vasodilators, beta-blocking agents, calcium antagonists, and anticoagulants. Let me add that vast hopes have been triggered by the recent marketing of substances used to dissolve the blood clot which causes the coronary thrombosis when the infarction occurs. The clinical implementation of those discoveries of the innovative drug industry might revolutionize the treatment of the acute phase, the most lethal one, of myocardial infarction.

[English]

Honourable senators, these few examples are taken from my personal experience in a medical specialty which was my main preoccupation for 40 years. This overview of the progress made in cardiology has enabled me to illustrate the essential role of the innovative pharmacological industry in the prevention, relief and cure of cardiac disease to the benefit of countless Canadians.

Such examples can be found in all specialties and fields of medicine. Take, for instance, the discovery and use of psychotropic drugs, which reduce anxiety and depression. These products prevent long stays in hospital and have eliminated the need for thousands of psychiatric beds; or the medication that has cured thousands of people suffering from tuberculosis and made it possible to transform sanatoriums into general hospitals. Surgery on stomach or duodenal ulcers has seldom been performed since the discovery of effective drugs for ulcer patients. One rarely dies nowadays from pneumonia or bronchial-pneumonia, diseases which were among the main causes of death in the early years of my practice. Poliomyelitis has virtually disappeared through the preventive administration of a vaccine. None of us would want to go back to the treatments of 1944, or even 1969, and yet this could have been a possibility if all industrialized nations had followed Canada's disheartening example regarding the overly limited protection of intellectual property under pharmaceutical patents.

[Translation]

All the so-called medical "miracles" are in fact the result of innovative, time-consuming and costly research carried out in spite of innumerable difficulties. In that sense, medicine progress follows the same laws as technological progress.

This combined progress of technology and of the drug industry has accounted for a 15-year life expectancy increase in the past sixty years. With this average life expectancy of 75 years at the present time, 80 per cent of the deaths in our population are caused by one of these three factors: heart and vessel disease (48 per cent), cancer (22 per cent) and miscellaneous accidents (10 per cent).

[English]

The effects of the advances in the field of medicine have greatly benefited Canadians. The same cannot be said for many of the world's nations. The 1983 statistics published in the World Bank's World Development Report are particularly eloquent. Of the 118 countries analyzed—the U.S.S.R. and Eastern bloc countries excluded—life expectancy in the 15 poorest nations varies from 43 to 55 years; in the 15 richest countries it ranges from 73 to 79. This means a difference of 24 years at best and 30 years at worst. It is comforting to note that the average per capita income of Canadians makes our country the seventh richest of the 118 nations analyzed in this report.

In these circumstances, is it not ungenerous of Canada to extend a policy which prevents it from actively participating in the efforts of the innovative pharmaceutical industry to improve the health of Canadians and of the people of poorer countries to whom we are glad to lend assistance?

[Translation]

Bill C-22 corrects a mistake and creates new opportunities for our scientists to show value and energy and for the Canadian innovative drug industry to prove its dynamism and aggressiveness.

During the eighteen years which have elapsed since 1969, the Canadian medical community has earned a very distinguished position on the international scene. Our universities have produced highly qualified people in all the branches of science needed by an innovative drug industry: chemistry, physics, biology, physiology, computer science, statistics, pharmacology and medicine. Our federal and provincial governments have invested enormous amounts to help universities prepare our young people for the challenges of a technical revolution without equal since the advent of man.

The same remarks apply to the Canadian network of hospital care which includes university hospitals providing teaching and research, as well as many specialized institutes. We have the necessary human resources to develop basic and clinical research which are the cornerstones of an innovative drug industry. I am confident that Bill C-22 is a welcome signal which could open a new era in Canadian leadership. With enthusiasm, I foresee fallout which could exceed our most optimistic expectations.

• (1540)

[English]

To justify this optimism, allow me to tell you of a success story in which I was indirectly involved.

In the early 1970s a Japanese drug company, which was looking for new byproducts of a well-known tranquilizer called Valium, developed a new chemical compound, diltiazem hydrochloride. It is not important to remember the name. In preliminary studies on animals researchers observed that this product affected the heart and blood vessels. It was felt that it was probably a beta-blocking agent. In 1976 the company, Nordic, situated in Montreal, obtained the licence for manufacturing rights for Canada and called the product Cardizem. Nordic asked Dr. Martial Bourassa, Director of the Research Centre of the Montreal Institute of Cardiology, to review all the Japanese findings and research. As a result of this analysis, it was suspected that the properties of the product were similar to those of substances known as calcium-antagonists.

A long series of experiments on animals and tests on human beings conducted between 1977 and 1982 confirmed the hypothesis of Dr. Bourassa. In 1983 the Health Protection Branch issued a notice of compliance. Cardizem is a remarkable antianginal drug. It is now prescribed in nearly 100 countries.

[Senator David.]

I have overly-simplified the lengthy process leading up to this discovery, which required the cooperation and hard work of many researchers and physicians throughout Canada. This example of leadership regarding a product discovered in Japan, tested in Canada, and now marketed worldwide, is a good illustration of the resources that we can offer, and explains my optimism for the future. If this product is copied, the company will have to slow down or suspend its research program aimed at exploring new areas in which this drug would probably also be effective.

[Translation]

During this debate on Bill C-22, some have used often and with an offensive connotation the words "monopoly" and "multinational" when dealing with the higher costs of prescribed medicine.

On the other hand, some have underestimated the enormous competition which forces "multinationals" to come up constantly with improved products for a given condition. This very strong competition is similar to that which exists between many other industries identified also as multinationals. For example, the automobile industry, the computer industry, the oil industry, the airline industry, the farm implement industry, and a great many others. This competition among multinationals must respond to the law of supply and demand through competitive prices. The large number of innovative drug industries precludes therefore the creation of a monopoly and an abusive cost structure.

[English]

The other point that should be remembered is the large amount of venture capital needed by these companies to produce and commercialize new substances; to undertake animal research and clinical testing; to cover losses incurred by fruitless research; to manufacture products that have a limited clientele; and to market new products. For the above reasons, it is estimated that a new product that appears on the market represents an average investment of between $50 million to $100 million. These figures likely explain why no "multinational" has its headquarters in Canada. The amendment of 1969 added a dissuasive element which would maintain this situation indefinitely.

Bill C-22 opens new horizons, and I am now hopeful, even certain, that Canada will be able to prove itself in the field in which the two main driving forces are the imagination of qualified researchers and sufficient protection of intellectual resources to make investments profitable.

The advantage of the bill that has been submitted to us is that it establishes a well-controlled balance between the creativity of innovative drug companies and the eventual copying of the products by generic firms.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the anticipated increase in the cost of drugs seems to be the main concern, if not the sole concern of those who, under the pretence of humanism and compassion, oppose Bill C-22 for what are in fact demagogic and partisan considerations.

I find those fears unjustified for many reasons.

First, we agree that the cost of drugs will increase at the rate of inflation and we all hope the trend will remain stable.

Second, generic drugs will continue to be produced at the expiry of patents which will last for a maximum of ten years, according to Bill C-22, that is seven years less than is the case for our commercial partners in other industrialized countries.

Third, the innovative companies will keep up against one another the ruthless competition which is an important factor in cost stabilization.

Fourth, provincial governments are the principal buyers of drugs and account for about 60 per cent of the prescription drugs market. They control the costs through massive buying in hospital systems where drugs are provided "free" to patients and through their knowledge of retail prices in drugstores since they provide those drugs "free" to those 65 years old and over and to welfare recipients. It is estimated that presently 85 per cent of Canadian men and women have total or partial drug expense coverage.

Fifth, statistics show that drug expenses amount to $2.1 billion and represent 5.4 per cent of the $39 billion expenditures that were allocated to health care in Canada in 1985.

Finally, Bill C-22 provides for the establishment of a patented medicine prices review board. It will be chaired by Dr. Harry Eastman, an expert whose credentials are recognized by all interested parties and whom the committee had the pleasure of hearing yesterday evening.

It would seem to me that all these checks and balances should be sufficient to lay to rest the concerns of those who anticipate costly consequences for the ill and the aged. On the contrary, I submit that those who are ill and those who are still in good health will benefit most from this legislation because the challenges of medical science are still tremendous and we need research scientists in the field of pharmacology to find the answers.

● (1550)

[English]

I have given you, honourable senators, several examples of the spectacular progress of medicine in the last half century. However, much remains to be done. How can we prevent and slow down atherosclerosis, the main cause of cardiovascular mortality and morbidity? How can we prevent and cure the many forms of cancer? We must remember that these two diseases are the cause of 70 per cent of deaths in North America. Think of the many chronic and debilitating diseases which compromise the quality of life and make it often painful to bear such illnesses as arthritis, diabetes, leukemia, multiple sclerosis, cystic fibrosis, Parkinson's disease, kidney failure, Alzheimer's disease, and many others.

Having considered the immense complexity of all the acute, subacute and chronic disorders suffered by man, I subscribe with enthusiasm and much hope to the objectives of Bill C-22. It is primarily through the discovery of new drugs that medical science can hope to improve the health of Canadians, 20 per cent of whom will be 65 years old in the near future.

If the question of cost is a major obstacle, I fail to understand a controversy which focuses on a mere 5 per cent of the problem without considering the other 95 per cent of the expenses of health in this country. This attitude is especially surprising since Canada spends considerable amounts to adapt to and join forces with modern technology. The contradiction is even more apparent when we consider that Bill C-22 is associated with a commitment on the part of the innovative drug companies to invest $1.4 billion in the next five years and to create 3,000 new jobs. I feel this contribution by the private sector is as valid as the generous grants made with taxpayers' money to other sectors, the humanitarian repercussions of which are often much less apparent.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, before I conclude, I would like to tell you very sincerely that what I have to say will remain the same, no matter where I may be seated in this house.

[English]

Bill C-22 is a compromise accepted by the innovative pharmaceutical industry to end stagnation of a major commercial activity which has been hurt by regulations incompatible with the philosophy of intellectual property adapted by our industrialized partner countries.

[Translation]

This bill will allow our universities and Canadian hospital centres to receive grants for fundamental and clinical research. It will encourage those in the university community to show their talent and their skills in a field of high technology. I have full confidence in our universities to successfully meet the challenge.

May I thank you, honourable senators, for your benevolence and your patience in hearing me out at this late hour.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Would the honorable senator allow me a question?

Senator David: Certainly, Senator Thériault.

Senator Thériault: Honourable senators, like all my colleagues I listened very closely to Senator David, who deserves the respect and admiration of all of us for the work he did all those years. I am a living example of the successful work he has been doing along with some of his medical colleagues in the area of heart illnesses.

I must tell him that I am extremely disappointed at a small portion of his speech, although he commanded respect throughout. But at one point, while claiming to be totally apolitical and stating he would make the same speech on whatever side of the house, he charged those like myself who, in all sincerity—

An Hon. Senator: Question!

Senator Thériault: —he charged those like myself who, in all sincerity, question Bill C-22 across the country and in this house.

I would therefore ask him how he can justify that?

Senator David: I apologize, Senator Thériault, if I offended you in any way, because such was not my intention. Perhaps I used the wrong terms or phrases.

Anyway, it is my view that you may question Bill C-22. I suggest that all that could be said on that bill already has. My view is that we all remain in positions that may vary somewhat, but that are fairly well known and I do not question in any way your good faith, Senator Thériault.

Hon. Peter Bosa: Would Senator David allow a question?

Senator David: Of course, Senator Bosa.

Senator Bosa: If I understood Senator David correctly, he stated that out of a list of 118 countries, Canada ranked seventh for longevity.

Can he say what other countries beat Canada?

Senator David: I would like to answer your question, but that list is in my office because I did not feel I should bring it here today. Those are seven industrialized nations, as you may well imagine, and they are all very well known.

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, Senator David, in his very interesting exposition on behalf of Bill C-22, at one stage mentioned that the innovative drug companies had made a "commitment"—I am quite sure that was the word he used—that if this bill were passed, they would expend something approximating $1.4 billion, presumably upon additional research support in Canada.

There is no mention of this commitment in the legislation before us. Can Senator David give me some idea as to how and when this commitment was made?

Senator David: These commitments are found very easily in the medical press at the present time. I have in my office many press releases by companies that have publicly made their commitment. I believe that at the present time the total amount that has been publicly committed by those companies varies between $700 million and $800 million.

Being assured that the Eastman committee will have to monitor the research and the development money once a year, every year, and will have to present a report to the Government of Canada, I am quite confident that all these companies are proud enough to fulfil their commitments.

Senator Hicks: I think it is improper to call it a "commitment," although I quite agree that in their magazines and other publicity the companies have expressed an intention to spend research moneys approximating $700 million to $800 million, as the honourable senator has said. Initially, Senator David said the amount was $1.4 billion. Why is there that discrepancy?

● (1600)

Senator David: This $1.4 billion is what was given by the minister as the objective. At present, today as we are speaking, there has been solemnly promised $700 million to $800 million. The difference, then, is not too great, and I hope that with the passage of the law, those who have not yet dared to make any commitment will do so. If the law is passed soon enough, perhaps I could provide to you a good answer by next September.

Senator Hicks: I thank Senator David for his answer, but I am not sure I can go along with him in saying that the difference is not too great when it is actually a factor of two. In any event, we need not follow that further.

[Translation]

Hon. Azellus Denis: I have a question for Senator David. When he claims that progress in the medical field takes place largely thanks to the pharmaceutical companies, why did the honourable senator forget to mention the skills of our surgeons, of which he is a shining example?

Why did he forget to mention the research done in our Canadian hospitals, where the products of these companies are tested free, a definitive advantage, as is the equally free advice given by surgeons like the Honourable Senator David?

Senator David: I want to thank Senator Denis for his kind words which I really do not deserve, since I have never done any surgery in my whole life.

I was a cardiologist who referred patients to the surgeon, and I was generally able to provide a good diagnosis. That was not bad, I admit.

Senator Denis: To other doctors?

Senator David: Yes, and they did the surgery.

I was trying to show in my speech that fantastic progress has been made when we consider that today bypass operations can be done on patients up to the age of 85 or 90, that the death rate for bypass operations, in any good hospital where the operation is done routinely, is under 3 per cent, and that these operations are always done with a heart-lung machine.

The bypass operation itself is a technique, but a technique supported by a whole series of drugs. You have no idea what goes into your body during an operation. There are drugs to raise your blood pressure and others to bring it down. You are given heparin to make your blood more fluid. There is another drug to help the blood coagulate, and calcium too, because the rate of calcium tends to drop. It is truly incredible what goes on.

With today's anesthetic substances, they can do operations, I would not say for unlimited periods but operations that take four, six, eight or even ten hours, which was impossible only a few years ago.

I maintain that every pharmacological discovery has contributed to the well-being of the community.

(On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.)

FORGIVENESS OF CERTAIN OFFICIAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE DEBTS BILL*SECOND READING

Hon. Martial Asselin moved the second reading of Bill S-9, an Act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the Governments of Togo and of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania and also to the former East African Community

He said: Honourable senators, I want to thank you for allowing me to introduce Bill S-9 for your consideration. This bill fits perfectly within the scope of the report on the debt problem of developing countries tabled earlier today by Senator van Roggen.

The bill before you provides for the forgiveness of debts incurred in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the Governments of Togo, Mauritania, and the former East African Community.

Two aspects are at stake: first the desperate situation of the African economies involved, second the reputation of Canada in the world. Let me explain.

In the mid-60s when development assistance became generalized worldwide, poor Third World countries were understandably quite willing to accept all loans which rich nations were prepared to extend to them. Both borrower and lender optimistically—and naively—believed that such loans would soon signal the end of the latter's financial difficulties and that the former would not have any problem about being repaid. Nobody could foresee such impending obstacles as the declining prices of many products exported by developing countries nor the skyrocketing costs of petroleum products. A number of Third World countries were then forced to borrow still more just to remain afloat.

About the mid-70s the situation was obvious: most borrowers had become much too poor to be able to repay loans made by Canada and other industrialized nations. As they tried to make their payments they fell ever deeper into debt and were forced to seek new loans, an endless vicious circle of economic dependence.

In 1977, at the time of the North-South Dialogue, Canada agreed to cancel development assistance debts owed by twelve countries on the United Nations list of least developed countries. In December of that year, the Parliament of Canada passed legislation on the forgiveness of the debts of these twelve countries. World public opinion acknowledged this was a most admirable and eminently reasonable initiative. After all, keeping countries in a crisis situation by forcing them to fulfil their financial obligations could only harm the world economy as a whole in the long run. Ten years ago, Canada was one of the first countries to publicly recognize this fact and to take the appropriate measures. I would like to take this opportunity today to say that the present Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, the Honourable Allan MacEachen, is to be commended for the political insight and leadership he showed at the time by forgiving the debts of these developing countries.

We have continued to play a leadership role on the international scene in the area of Third World indebtedness. Today, we had a perfect example of this, when the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs tabled a report which summarizes its findings on this issue. Of course, I fully concur with Senator Murray who has commended this committee for the tremendous work it has done.

In February, 1986, the Right Honourable Joe Clark announced that Canada's development assistance would no longer take the form of loans. From now on, our assistance program would be made up entirely of subsidies. In this way, Third World countries would not get more into debt by accepting Canadian assistance, as all funds made available by our country would be non-repayable subsidies. Mr. Clark had described this decision as a step toward a more efficient Third World assistance policy. The other donors as well as the beneficiaries have welcomed this decision.

Unfortunately, this initiative was not enough. African countries of the sub-Sahara have been experiencing a tremendous human and financial crisis. Not only have they accumulated enormous debts, but the desert was destroying more and more farm lands, year after year, the crops were bad and Africans, by the millions, were starving. They had to use the few resources available to feed themselves, to buy seeds, to improve agriculture, but not to reimburse their loans. That is why, in May 1986, Canada announced to the United Nations a five-year moratorium on the debts incurred by African states in the sub-Sahara. This moratorium was to be extended every five years, which means that these countries will be freed from any financial obligation to Canada for five years, and in case their economic situation does not improve markedly, Canada will allow them to postpone the reimbursement of their debts for additional periods of five years up to the year 2000, if necessary.

The international community, especially Africa, has praised this humanitarian initiative which it considers an act of generosity. Canada's decision has re-established the world leadership role which our country plays when dealing with the serious economic problems facing the African continent. It is in this spirit, honourable senators, that I ask you to consider the legislation before us today.

In a way, this bill is a follow-up on the decision made by Canada in 1977 to officially forgive the debt of countries considered at the time by the United Nations as the least developed countries. Since then, two other African countries, Togo and the Islamic Republic of Mauritania, have been included in that category because of the seriousness of their economic problems. The Government of Canada is of the opinion that we should have a uniform policy with respect to all those countries and that we should therefore forgive the debt incurred in respect of our assistance to Togo and Mauritania. We should also forgive the debt of the former East African Community which was composed of three countries, two of which (Tanzania and Uganda) are among the least developed countries.

Our situation is especially delicate with respect to Togo, as we suggested our intention to forgive its debt as early as 1982. Such a delay is already bad in itself, but procrastinating further would have the effect of seriously undermining the deep trusting relationship that we now enjoy with African countries.

Last January, as I was on an assignment in Africa, I visited Togo. I had the opportunity to meet the president of the republic, Mr. Eyadema, who inquired whether the Canadian Parliament had passed the legislation to forgive the debt of his country with Canada. In view of the difficult economic situation of his country, he was very anxious that this legislation be given a speedy passage. He took that opportunity to ask me to thank Canadians for their generosity with Togo.

I hope you will give this legislation the priority it deserves. Our international reputation is at stake. Moreover, we should give those countries a chance to fulfill their development aspirations.

I hope you will agree, honorable senators, that this bill may help African developing countries achieve their own objectives.

• (1610)

[English]

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, I propose to speak briefly in support of this bill, but before doing so I should like to put a question to the mover. Can he give us the amounts of the debts that are being forgiven as a result of this legislation?

Senator Asselin: Unfortunately, I do not have the figures with me. I have them in my office. If the honourable senator is willing, I will send him the list and the amounts later.

Senator Hicks: That would be interesting to know. We should know the extent of the generosity that we are authorizing the Government of Canada to exercise in the passing of this legislation. I would be glad if the information were available before the bill achieves third reading—in any way in which the honourable senator wishes to do so.

Honourable senators, Senator Asselin has covered the ground very well, indeed. It is a fortuitous coincidence that this legislation comes to us for second reading this afternoon, following so closely upon the tabling of the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs dealing with the international financial institutions and the debt problem of developing countries.

Senator Asselin has said that the report makes some reference to the subject matter of Bill S-9, and indeed the reference is on page 79 of the report where we refer, as did Senator Asselin, to Canada's action, along with some other countries, in 1977 in forgiving the outstanding debt of eight of the poorest African states. He also referred, of course, to subsequent actions which Canada took in 1986 to offer some further forgiveness and to offer a moratorium in five-year stages, which will almost certainly extend to a fifteen-year moratorium on the payment of interest in respect to some other countries whose financial plight makes it difficult and probably impossible for them to meet the terms of the commitments they have made to repay development loans.

[Senator Asselin]

I believe also that it is a matter of real satisfaction that Canada has taken a lead in stating that in the future ODA, Official Development Assistance, will be made by us only in the form of grants, and not of loans, so that we will not be encumbering either our own account books or the ledgers of the hard-put developing countries. In other words, we shall make the grants that we can afford to pay, and they will not constitute a debt burden on the developing countries whom we are assisting.

In our report we went a little further than that and said:

—the Committee—

That is the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs:

—would like to see other OECD governments adopt, as a minimum, policies similar to the 1986 Canadian offer of a 15-year moratorium on the interest payments on their official loans.

We referred again to those OECD countries which have not done as Canada and some other countries did and said that they —should be encouraged to emulate the 1977 action of some countries including Canada that wrote off or converted to grants all existing loans to the least developed countries.

The Netherlands has followed Canada's example to date, but, alas, not many of the other—indeed, at the time that we completed our report, no other—OECD countries.

So, honourable senators, since I supported enthusiastically the thrust of the report which I have in my hand, and since this legislation is a manifestation of government action along the lines previously followed by Canada—the continuation of which was recommended in this report—I have no hesitation in joining with Senator Asselin in urging all honourable senators to support the passage of Bill S-9—with the one little proviso, and that is that I would like to know the amount of our generosity.

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I now have the figures which the honourable senator wanted. Togo owes Canada $6.5 million; Mauritania, $4.2 million; Kenya, $19.9 million; Tanzania, $15.2 million; and Uganda, $12.3 million.

Senator Frith: What is the total?

Senator McElman: The total is $57.6 million.

Senator Hicks: There is a total of from $58 million to $60 million involved in this legislation, in addition to the previous forgiveness of debts which Canada accomplished, starting first in 1977 and extending up to 1986. I repeat my commendation of the legislation and my urging of honourable senators to support the bill.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, if I understand the intent of earlier discussions on this bill, it will go to a committee; is that correct? It seems to me that it would be very appropriate if it were to go to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. That was the implication of the discussions we had, that we would complete second reading debate today so that it could go to committee.

Senator Asselin: I was advised this afternoon to introduce the bill, but I was not aware of any discussion you may have had.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, this bill might fall within several committee mandates, but the combination of foreign aid, which comes under the mandate of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, plus the fact that that committee has just dealt with the subject in its report, means that it would receive sensitive and speedy treatment in that committee. Therefore, I suggest that is where it should go. I recommend to the mover of the motion that it go to that committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Asselin, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (post-secondary education) tabled in the Senate on 25th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, as I mentioned yesterday, I do not propose to speak on this order, and I will yield to anyone else who wishes to speak on it. Perhaps we can leave it until we come back, and if no one else wishes to speak on it then we can consider it debated.

Order stands.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1985

REPORT OF LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON DRAFT ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs (Draft Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985) presented in the Senate on May 7, 1987.

Hon. Joan Neiman: Honourable senators, when this matter was referred to the Legal Affairs Committee, I explained in some detail the mandate and objectives of the draft of the Statute Revision Commission with respect to the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985. The committee did not study the statutes in any detail since they comprise about 17 volumes and some 10,000 pages of legislative text. We were simply presented with what you might call a fait accompli as far as the revisions were concerned. Therefore, we directed our attention in the first instance to the process, which we felt left something to be desired. Accordingly, our first recommendation to the commission concerned future revisions which, I assume, will commence immediately after this particular revision of the statutes of 1985 has been approved in statutory form. We suggested in our report that the commission arrange to refer volumes to the committee and to make periodic reports as the volumes are completed so that we may make, I hope, useful suggestions concerning the revisions undertaken.

Another of the committee's endeavours was to learn what statutes had been omitted in the consolidation made by the commission. Therefore, we asked the commission to give us a detailed list of the statutes which would not form part of the current revised edition, and to give us the reasons for their omission. Generally, the reasons were that the statutes were out of date, were no longer applicable, and so on. The reasons were well founded. We questioned the omission of a couple of statutes. For example, we recommended that the Geneva Conventions Act be included in the consolidation. The commission had thought that it was unnecessary to include this act because it was not a statute in the usual sense of the word. However, Canada had undertaken to have the three important Geneva Conventions of 1949 widely publicized and disseminated. Therefore, we recommended that they be part of the revised statutes.

The commission was somewhat innovative in putting together seven statutes concerning Parliament. We found that six of these statutes are exclusively concerned with the internal affairs of the house and the conduct of officers of Parliament. We questioned whether the commission's mandate went so far as to permit it to put these statutes together, although we approved of the idea. The commission had included a seventh statute which really did not come within the ambit of the other six statutes. The seventh statute dealt with the use of the name "Parliament Hill". We recommended that for future revisions the commission look at this statute again with the idea of, perhaps, putting it under a different heading and not including it with these other six statutes.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments found a discrepancy between the English and French versions of a particular section in the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. That committee had brought this discrepancy—and it is a substantive one—to the attention of the then Minister of Transport, the Honourable Don Mazankowski. He had undertaken to have the English version revised, as it was decided that it was incorrect. However, it was never done. The commission decided that it could make the change itself. We decided that, since it was a substantive one, the commission did not have the authority to make the change without the assent of Parliament. So, we recommended that the original, incorrect version of that particular paragraph be reinstated. However, we have brought this matter to the attention of the minister and have recommended that when the bill is drawn to approve the statutes he include the proper form of the English version.

The only other comment I have is with respect to a point that we did not feel that strongly about but which had apparently received some considerable attention in the other place, and that is the usage of gender in the statutes. The commission went to a great deal of trouble to remove references to only the masculine gender throughout all these many thousands of pages of legal text. We have recommended that when the next revision is undertaken they try to remove the remaining references that still seem to trouble some of our members of Parliament.

Honourable senators, with that, I move that the report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

ILLITERACY IN CANADA

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Fairbairn calling the attention of the Senate to the question of illiteracy in Canada.—(Honourable Senator Doyle).

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, in this debate about illiteracy in Canada it is difficult to get very far away from the work of Frontier College which in most parts of our country, and for one year more than the years of our century, has been seeking out and serving those who cannot read or write.

Frontier College is the publisher of a fascinating book called: "The Right to Read", which is the organizer's guide to its Student-Centred Individualized Learning Program. The third chapter of the book is introduced with these words from a Frontier student:

It's amazing, you know, sometimes I look at a word and suddenly I realize I can read it! People must think I'm crazy when I grin at a word but it's better than having people think you're crazy because you can't read. Now I go to the library. One day I hope I can pick up a whole book and just read it, just like that.

I would suppose that tributes such as that one, that joyful expression of discovery, more than anything else have kept the college functioning and flourishing in hard times—and times are always hard in the illiteracy business. There is never enough money; there are always too many in need; there is rarely among the rest of us knowledge of the beast or understanding of how it can be vanquished.

When Senator Joyce Fairbairn began this debate a few weeks ago, those of us who listened to her recital of the consequences of stunted literacy were appalled, or would it be better to say conscience-stricken. "I didn't know it was still that bad," is what one colleague said to me that afternoon. Still that bad? The truth, as Senators Lorna Marsden and Mira Spivak have made clear, is worse than ever. With growth of urbanization, with the demands of galloping technology and the refinement of service functions in the job market, there is very little room left, socially or economically, for those 20 per cent of our citizens who have less than a grade eight education, and only the meanest of prospects for the million or so who cannot read or write at all. Yet, while sensible arguments are made that we must spend more on education—and particularly on post-secondary education—the fact remains that of the money we do spend on schooling, only 0.001 per cent goes to the fight against illiteracy. As Frontier College points out, that is not enough even to be reflected in the graphs.

Illiteracy is said to cost the U.S. economy $20 billion annually. Because we are without statistical studies, there is no Canadian figure handy to dramatize the horrendous price we pay in this country for this absence of skills that are so easy to acquire. Would the figure be $2 billion? Would we sigh with relief if it were $1 billion?

The Frontier people came to Parliament Hill last fall—as they have been coming here to make their case to one government or another for 20 years. The night before their appearance before the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in the other place, they took time out to get their electronic gear together. As Jack Pearpoint, their president, put it, "We were having a discussion whether we should be angry this morning. We talked ourselves down, but I think you should know, it was pretty difficult."

One of the things that staved off the anger was this: "We are delighted—and I mean this quite genuinely," said Mr. Pearpoint, "delighted that literacy is finally in the Throne Speech for the first time in Canadian history."

Honourable senators, if any of us here today are inclined to be blasé about Throne Speeches, we should be aware that the people we represent listen to them very carefully, and we should take heed of the college's response to just what was said in this place on October 1, 1986. At that time the Governor General said:

My Ministers are committed to federal-provincial and private sector co-operative action that will enhance job opportunities and encourage greater participation and involvement of young Canadians in productive and challenging initiatives.

At this point Her Excellency invoked the inspiration of Rick Hansen in new initiatives to aid the disabled. Then these words:

My Government will work with the provinces and the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop measures to ensure that Canadians have access to the literacy skills that are the prerequisites for participation in an advanced economy.

Honourable senators, had we been in the midst of the debate so eloquently launched by Senator Fairbairn when that speech was read into the record, we might have been excused had we interrupted Her Excellency with loud applause and uncharacteristic cheers at such a pledge.

We did not have long to wait for the first initiative. On March 3 Solicitor General James Kelleher announced the establishment of a new Adult Basic Education Program for federal penitentiary inmates to begin not at some "appropriate time" but the next month.

Consider this: Approximately half of all federal inmates, 6,000 men and women, are functionally illiterate, and only about 150 of them complete remedial courses each year. The others who leave those institutions go into society without the skills needed to read "Help Wanted" ads; without the know-how to fill out application forms; without the capacity to read and understand basic job instructions and, worst of all, without the confidence or even the glimmering hope that there is a place for them in our communities. Frontier College can tell you—and it is anxious to tell you—how literacy can provide the motivation to turn around a life of crime. It does not need profound studies of the linkage between illiteracy and anti-social behaviour to buttress its experience.

It is the intention of both Mr. Kelleher and the government to enroll 600 more inmates—both French and English—in its 1987-88 literacy program; 1,200 in the second year and 1,800 in the third. It may be early to anticipate results, but the word coming back from the penitentiaries is optimistic. There is every reason to believe that prisoners are shedding their reluctance to admit their need. What a great stride forward this would be!

The embarrassment, yes, even the agony of acknowledging the handicap, has been a universal stumbling block to overcoming this educational deficiency. The one or two of us here today who drink will remember the time when Ontario liquor stores required us to fill out order forms and will also remember the humiliation of men who asked others to write up their orders for them. "I forgot my glasses," they would say, and chances are you would think, "They must have quite a habit to go through this much embarrassment." Sometimes there was hesitation. Just a twinge. If these people couldn't write, should we really help them to drink?

Take it through its thousand faces. "What street is this?" "How much is that?" "Which bus is loading?" Remember the next time you walk through doors marked with little figures of men and women, those signs were not devised just for foreign travellers or newly-arrived immigrants.

What more can this government do? Well, Frontier College said that it could use $1 million to acquire more staff and extend its reach and perhaps escape from the hazards of funding new ventures like the successful "Beat the Street" program without a penny in the budget and no assurance of where the next grant is coming from. When "Beat the Street" began, there was no text to work with. The workers used street signs for letters and licence plates for adding, subtracting and multiplying. No government could match the daring of volunteer agencies or the determination of their managers.

But it must be added that organizations like Frontier College are deserving of more back-up from governments than they are receiving. The thought that the college has been receiving an amount annually for its core literacy program from the federal government that is somewhat less than half of what the committee of this Senate will spend on its examination of Bill C-22 fairly takes the breath away.

Public support for organizations working to foster literacy in the communities is growing and, thank goodness, it is being fed with a healthy dollop of selfishness. Coles Bookstores, a subsidiary of Southams Inc., and other bookstores assist Frontier College in its "Give the Gift of Literacy" campaign, and cheerfully admit that in their business it makes good sense. The Newspapers in Education committee of the Canadian Daily Newspapers Association acknowledges illiteracy as "a trend in society that could imperil, or at least threaten, our future fortunes."

The Business Council of British Columbia warns of the social and economic costs of ignoring illiteracy. The Canadian Business Task Force on Literacy tells corporations that illiteracy causes low productivity and poor product quality, diminishes advertising and promotional impact, and inhibits internal communication. And then it says: "Your company can help to tackle illiteracy in Canada. It's our business. And in doing so you will be serving your own best interests."

Not long ago, when he was receiving an honorary doctorate at the University of Western Ontario, Clark W. Davey, the publisher of the Montreal Gazette, said that he believed illiteracy would become one of the great issues of the next decade for this country. He said:

The figure of 20 per cent of functional illiterates is probably significantly understated. One great skill many illiterates have acquired is their ability to mask their inadequacy. The implications for society seem to be almost terrifying. The gap between the haves and have-nots is going to get wider—ultimately this trend has the potential to tear apart the very fabric of society.

Davey, who has made his living for 40 years with written words, asked his audience of university graduates to participate as volunteers in one-on-one instruction "which is able, in a relatively short time, to open the wonderful world of reading to people who never believed it could happen to them."

Obviously, agencies in Canada such as Frontier College and Lauback Literacy of Canada are ready for greater efforts. Private sponsors are ready to assist—particularly in promoting initiative. Provinces, schools, libraries and churches are assisting already, and the awareness that any undertakings will benefit all concerned is being established and acknowledged.

The Government of Canada, as the Speech from the Throne insisted, is determined to play its part. Perhaps its most useful function will be to envision and perhaps endow some form of coordination of all the skills and all the good intentions available for a national undertaking that will break through jurisdictional divisions that have been set up as stumbling blocks and have inhibited concerted efforts in the past.

The year 1989 is to be the United Nations International Year of Literacy, and the goal will be learning opportunities for 500,000 adults a year for a decade. There is scant time for Canada to put its own literacy campaign in order before tackling our share of the international challenges our UN participation demands of us.

One thing we can do is examine what has been done elsewhere and profit by the successes and failures of others.

On the plus side is the British experience in the 1970s, where government organization of a small and efficient coordinating unit, combined with the BBC as a teaching facility and local responsibility for recruitment and tutorials, saw more than 300,000 students upgraded in adult skills in a decade.

The American experience—particularly in response to President Ronald Reagan's call for a national literacy initiative—has been successful where it has relied on local volunteerism and state-level action. The high expectations of the national campaign have not been realized.

Progress worthy of study has been made in Australia, the Nordic countries and Iceland, France and the Netherlands. What all have learned is that campaigns to overcome the years of neglect can be successful only if they are long-term, carefully targeted, flexible and vigorously championed.

Frontier College—since the days when its worker-teachers pioneered in the isolated mining and lumber camps—has understood the absolute necessity of reaching out to the rest of us and of making us auxiliary champions of the cause.

In its scheme to set up a learning foundation to generate operating funds for literacy programs, the College has, with accustomed cunning, proposed the organization of a committee of "friends" to spread the good word. It hopes to have such people—such genuine communicators—as Salome Bay, Hume Cronyn, Peter Gzowski, Moses Znaimer and Maureen Forrester on board.

Would it be asking too much to suggest that all members of this often-too-silent Senate—without invitation or appointment—become at least friends of the "friends" and make noises where we can?

On motion of Senator Gigantès, debate adjourned.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE COMMUNIQUÉ—AGENDA FOR SENATE REFORM— DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Duff Roblin moved, pursuant to notice of Thursday, May 7, 1987:

That it is timely for the Senate of Canada to take into consideration the agenda set out in the Meech Lake Communiqué on the subject of Senate reform, including the following:

- the functions and role of the Senate;
- the powers of the Senate;
- the method of selection of Senators; and
- the distribution of Senate seats.

He said: Honourable senators, this is perhaps not the most auspicious time to introduce such an important topic as this, in my opinion, to the Senate of Canada, but I came with my speech and it would be a good idea to get it off my chest at the present time.

Senator Frith: You brought your music, in other words.

Senator Roblin: I brought my music and I am prepared to play.

For the first time since 1867, a Canadian Prime Minister and all of the provincial premiers have agreed unanimously that the reform of the Senate of Canada should now move to the top of our national constitutional agenda. The leaders of the governments of the nation propose to entrench in the Constitution itself an agenda for Senate reform which includes the following subjects:

- the functions and role of the Senate;
- the powers of the Senate;
- the method of selection of Senators; and
- the distribution of Senate seats.

When they also agree to consider the matter expeditiously, the public and Parliament, including the Senate, may properly expect that something will happen. Today we have no positive means of knowing what shape that "something" will take. Indeed, we cannot tell at this remove whether the principal actors will agree unanimously, as agree they must if change is to take place. But there are clear signs of movement. That is why I take this occasion to place before the house, and hopefully before others, what I would propose as a consistent, relevant and workable set of policies for an effective reformed second chamber in Canada—policies that are suitable for use in a federal parliamentary democracy like this country, based on the principles of representative and responsible government.

I may be pardoned, perhaps, for reminding the Senate that I suggested a reform of this institution in February 24, 1982, in the following words:

That this House affirms that the federal character of representative and responsible government in Canada will be strengthened if the membership of the Senate is constituted by election rather than by appointment.

At the time that idea attracted little support in this chamber and, as far as I can tell, scant interest elsewhere. But I have not changed my opinion, though I hope some of the concepts have developed in my mind since that time. Senators should be elected. That is still the critical principle on which effective Senate reform must be based.

When I spoke in February of 1982, I gave the reasons why a second regionally-based chamber was an essential institution in a federal state like ours. We know that it was necessary to invent the Senate in 1867 when the nation was formed from several distinctly articulated regional societies, and we have every reason to think that without a Senate Confederation might have foundered. The problem remains with us today as it did then, namely, how to reconcile legitimate regional interests with the common good of the Canadian society. This Senate, the Senate of 1867, is, I am afraid, widely perceived as failing to do that job.

In 1982 I ventured the opinion that "our credibility with the general public is undeniably low". I would be surprised if it were much better today. In seeking the cure in 1982, I advanced the proposition that Canadians should elect their Senate. I still maintain that the principle of election is the central item to be considered in reform of this institution. That proposition, I am glad to say, is more widely accepted now than it was when I discussed it a few years ago.

Senator Frith: Although you did get some support in the Senate for that.

Senator Roblin: Yes, I did. I think there were five or six senators, including, perhaps, my honourable friend, who supported me, and some others—and I am grateful for all of the help that I can get. Senator Flynn was not lacking in this respect. There may be several others, and if I have overlooked some for the roll of honour, please forgive me.

Senator Le Moynes: I was not one of them.

Senator Roblin: No. As a matter of fact—

Senator Flynn: Lord Le Moynes!

Senator Roblin: I can probably count on the fingers of one hand those senators who thought that my proposition made any sense in 1982. But since then a few things have happened.

Senator McElman: Have you six fingers?

Senator Roblin: The first thing is that a committee of this Senate had an opportunity to visit Australia to examine how an elected Senate actually worked in a government like ours, a sister Commonwealth country with representative and responsible government and operating a federal parliamentary system strikingly similar to ours. The singular exception is that the Senate in Australia was elected on a system of proportional representation—elected.

Senator Frith: Since 1949.

Senator Roblin: Yes. Before that it was also elected, but not on the system of proportional representation—and I will come to that later.

I for one—and I think I may say the entire delegation—was impressed with the evidence that the Senate elected in Australia works well and provides interesting testimony that an elected Senate is compatible with the Australian constitution and federal state, and that the same could be said of Canada as well. However, as far as I am concerned, with respect to the Australian system, there is one important reservation which I will make about the way it operates, which is relevant to us in our consideration today.

In 1984 there was a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons of this Parliament that looked into the question of Senate reform. They concluded in reporting their decisions that in principle an elected Senate was the kind of Senate that they wanted to see. They included certain other recommendations that I for one did not support.

More recently we have had the more extensive investigation—I think that is fair comment—of the Macdonald Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects of the Nation, which also strongly supported the principle of an elected Senate for Canada. Besides which, and considerably more important, popular opinion, whether expressed in opinion polls or by associations or in the deliberations of other institutions such as political parties, or otherwise, has disclosed substantial support for the idea of the election of senators. Contrary opinions either to abolish the Senate or to continue the present system of appointment, or some variation of the same, certainly do not express present day mainstream opinions. I take it as settled that any serious reform of the Senate today will include the direct election of senators by the people themselves.

It is on this basis that I now want to offer some reflections on the four considerations that were set out in the unanimous communiqué that the premiers and the Prime Minister agreed on at Meech Lake.

The first concerns the function and role of the reformed Senate. I put it to you that the function and role of the reformed Senate will be pretty much the same as the function and role of the Senate that we have today. While representation by population is the first principle of democracy, and it is embodied in the House of Commons, representation of regions or provinces is the first principle of federalism and is embodied in the Senate. The function and role of the Senate, therefore, is to be a voice, the voice for regional interests, particularly minority interests within the federal sphere of the Constitution. The federal Senate is no substitute for provincial governments or, indeed, for provincial premiers, and the Senate must discharge its regional representative function within the ambit of the federal power in the Constitution. An elected Senate would also continue to be a chamber of legislative review, providing an opportunity for those famous sober second thoughts. Its specialty of independent committee work would be enhanced, if anything. In combination with these functions, an elected reformed Senate, particularly if elected on the principle of proportional representation, could introduce a modest fulcrum of checks and balances against the power of the executive not otherwise available in our parliamentary system. The elected character of a new Senate, and particularly if reinforced by the method of election that I shall propose, will give some authority to its opinions which it might otherwise not have. Later on I shall describe how I think the election process bears on that point.

• (1700)

The next subject that was listed at Meech Lake was that of the powers of the Senate. I recommend that the powers of the reformed Senate—with one exception, which I will come to later—be the same powers the Senate has today. These are the power to initiate legislation, except bills that require messages from the Governor General; the power to agree with, to amend or to disagree with legislation that is received from the House of Commons. Just as at present, the new Senate would not be a confidence body, and the executive government would not be responsible to an elected Senate. The executive body would be responsible only to the House of Commons.

The power to deal with legislation under this description of the Senate that I am proposing is the same as it is today, that is, an absolute discretion.

Neither the joint report of the Senate and the House of Commons Committee on Senate Reform nor the Macdonald Royal Commission went so far as to retain the absolute veto that the Senate has at the present time. They opted for a form of a suspensive veto in an elected Senate. In my opinion a suspensive veto limitation on an elected Senate renders the whole process somewhat doubtful. Power is of the essence if you have the moral authority and the political legitimacy to use it. The present Senate has the power, but it lacks the moral authority and it lacks the political legitimacy to act other than rarely. If we give an elected Senate both moral authority and political legitimacy but withhold the power to make it effective, perhaps we labour in vain.

This question of power automatically raises another matter, and that is the question as to the deadlock that might be possible between the two houses. That possibility is real. Even now, strangely enough, under present rules it is real. We will have to provide for it in the future, even though we have not provided for it in the past. When I conclude my comment on the whole Meech Lake agenda, I will return to this question of power and the issue of deadlock between two federal elected bodies.

The next consideration at Meech Lake was the method of the selection of senators. I had made the case before for elected senators in some considerable detail, and I will not repeat that argument here. I will simply draw the conclusion, as I have already done, that selection by election is, indeed, strongly indicated.

The method of election is a subject on which hangs a good deal of the usefulness and effectiveness of a new, reformed and elected Senate. Members of the House of Commons are elected in single member seats. The man or the woman with the most votes first past the post is elected as the member. One of the virtues of this system, in my view, is that it is decisive and usually produces a majority party able to secure continuity in the executive parliamentary government. I think this is a desirable attribute for the House of Commons, which is the confidence body in our parliamentary system.

It is not so obviously necessary for an elected second chamber which is not a confidence body, to whom the executive is not responsible, and where the government may be defeated without forcing its resignation.

The Senate may be conveniently and profitably elected on a system of proportional representation, which is sometimes called the "single transferable vote"; a system which, as my friend opposite has indicated, has been in use in the Commonwealth of Australia since 1949.

Honourable senators, there is another interesting consideration. If the single member seat system were used to elect senators, it would very often produce electoral results that would duplicate in the Senate the political make-up of the House of Commons. To deliberately give the Senate a similar cast to that of the House of Commons can only have one effect. It would reduce the ability of the Senate to fulfil the expectations set out in that definition of roles and functions that I have been discussing.

A different system of election of senators can and should be used, and the experience of the Commonwealth of Australia illustrates both the practicality and the desirability of electing senators on a system of proportional representation or the single transferable vote.

Under this system of proportional representation, each state or province or senatorial division, whatever it is, comprises the senatorial electoral division, electing at one time all the senators required to fill the senatorial vacancies in that division. In parenthesis, I might say that if the senatorial term is six years, half may be elected every three years.

Under the system of proportional representation—if I could give you a thumb-nail sketch—the names of all the candidates proposed by the political parties, by independents, or by anybody who has a right to nominate, which is any citizen in the area, to fill the six seats, or whatever it happens to be in that senatorial division—all those names, and there may be a good many of them, appear on the ballot paper.

When the voter goes into the voting box and he picks up his ballot, he will see those many names. He can then indicate the order of his choice by voting one, two, three, four, or whatever, until all the choices are exhausted with respect to his desire to elect certain people to the Senate. He may vote for any party; he may vote for any name in any order whatsoever; and he is the master of the voting ballot.

Depending on the number of places to be filled, a quota is set. If six senators are to be chosen, the quota is 100 per cent divided by six, which is 16 2/3 per cent plus one vote. That is the quota that people have to reach if they wish to be elected.

Candidates passing the quota on the first choice are declared elected. After that, the other choices of the voters continue to be distributed in the order of their choice until the full slate of six candidates has been chosen and six names pass the quota. There are other technicalities which it is not useful to discuss at the present time.

The result is what counts. The result of proportional representation is to reflect more clearly the numerical distribution of public opinion. Minority views have a better chance to be represented and, even within the region, local minorities have a better chance of being represented. Another consequence which must not be overlooked is that the executive branch will find it much more difficult to control the Senate under this system.

Senate views may, therefore, be more effectively expressed, but as the Senate is not a confidence body, as the executive government is not responsible to the Senate, this situation is a luxury which regional interests and democracy can afford when designing an elected second chamber to represent the regions.

I now come to the last Meech Lake agenda item, and it is a particularly difficult one, the distribution of Senate seats among provinces and territories. The case for equal numbers is strongly made in some parts of western Canada. The case for equal numbers in each province is strong for those who gain numbers, but it sounds a little weak to those who may have to give numbers up.

However you look at it, we cannot avoid history. In 1867 the Fathers of Confederation, when they arrived at their system of seat allocations, accepted a principle of equality, but it was not provincial equality. It was regional equality. They divided the 1867 Canada into three senatorial divisions, namely, Ontario, Quebec and the Atlantic. Each regional senatorial division was allocated the same number of senators. They were equal. Each region was allocated 24 senators.

When the west was counted in later on, a fourth regional senatorial division was added and also allocated 24 senators. You had four equal regions with 24 senators each, totalling 96 senators. The regions themselves are, indeed, equal. If I might use a rather unparliamentary expression, in addition to the 96 senators I mentioned, "ringers" were introduced from Newfoundland, the Yukon, and the Northwest Territories which added eight more to give us our present total of 104.

● (1710)

If 1867 were 1987, I very much doubt whether this system of equal regional Senate divisions would appeal to the constitution makers or, indeed, to the public. A system like that of Australia, where ten senators are allocated to each state, might find more favour. But I am afraid it is unlikely that we can undo 1867. In the nature of things, few provinces are inclined to give up what they have. We may try, but the odds are against it. I will have to tell some of my friends in western Canada this hard fact.

If the principle of an equal number of senators from each province is out of reach, what alternatives do we have? There are, no doubt, endless variations on the theme of numbers. I am going to offer two ideas, one which is mine and the second which is probably better but does not belong to me. The one that I suggest is the simple and practical alternative to leave the distribution of seats in the Senate as they are, except for those of western Canada. For the west add another regional Senate division, giving two instead of the one that is there now, each entitled to the 24 senator allocations. This doubles western Canada's representation in the Senate from 24 to 48 senators and raises the total number to 128.

If senators want to hear something a little more sophisticated—and I guess many would—I suggest that they look at the report of the Macdonald Royal Commission which offered an interesting redistribution of Senate seats based on a total of 144. They divided the whole country into 24 senatorial electoral divisions with six senators to be elected from each one. This gives the following results: Prince Edward Island is one division and it gets six senators—that ought to please you, Mr. Whip. The Yukon and Northwest Territories make up one senatorial division and they get six senators. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland have two senatorial divisions apiece, which gives each of those provinces 12 senators. Quebec and Ontario have four senatorial divisions each and their total is, therefore, 24 senators each. This is an interesting plan, which gives us 144 senators, an increase of 40. It won't appeal to everybody, but it more nearly approximates the principle of equality and might perhaps be the basis for an agreement.

We have to be certain that some compromise is necessary between political reality and the perfect equality that some seek. It is likely that compromise will be needed.

Now I come to a most important question. Granted that you may agree—a highly improbable proposition—with everything I have said so far. The theory may look good. One now has to ask the ultimate question: But will it work? Can an elected Senate with a function and role and the particular powers that I have described work in a federal parliamentary system like ours? In particular, what happens if the two elected federal houses disagree? Remember that the reformed Senate is subjected to no change in powers. It has the same old powers that the Senate has today. There is no shift of powers under this plan from the House of Commons to the Senate; there is no shift of powers from the provinces or the premiers to the Senate; there is no change in the division of powers under the Constitution—the powers are unchanged, but a change in structure has been made. Perhaps it is a little modest to describe it as procedural, but the change is that senators will be selected by election rather than by appointment. Even so, even if what I have said about powers is correct, the change to an elected Senate from an appointed one will make a real change, or else why on earth would we do it?

The real change is that an elected Senate would have a legitimate and moral authority to use its present powers to amend House of Commons legislation, so we must expect that it will do so. This means that a deadlock between the two houses is indeed possible, and that we must be prepared to deal with it.

The reformed elected Senate I am proposing for Canada bears a strong resemblance to the system in use in Australia. For 90 years or so in that country a powerful elected Senate has been operating, and operating in a country whose constitutional and political system is a mirror image of what we have here—a federal parliamentary government like ours with the same principles of responsibility and representation. There are elaborate provisions in Australia to deal with deadlocks between the two houses, and it is instructive to see what history and experience discloses with respect to how they have found the system to work.

Of significance to Canadians is the fact that there was a deadlock in Australia in 1974 and 1975 when the Australian Senate refused to pass a supply bill. They refused to pass a supply bill presented by the House of Representatives, as they call their House of Commons, and it followed, as the night the day, that without money the government could not govern. The Australian solution provided in its Constitution, in the event of a deadlock of that kind, is called a double dissolution; that is, both the House of Representatives and the Senate are dissolved at the same time. They have an election. Both appeal to the voters, and the people ultimately decide.

Just to express an opinion on what happened there in 1975, I think the people sustained the Senate rather than the government of the day. But there is a flaw in the Australian system which leads to this confrontation that I speak of. There is a flaw in the Australian system which was the cause of the crisis of 1974 and 1975. As I see it, it is because that Constitution does not explicitly recognize one of our fundamental principles, which is that the government of the day should be responsible to one chamber only, namely, to the House of Representatives in that country, the House of Commons here. But because the Senate of Australia could withhold supply and thus make it impossible for the executive to carry on, the effect is to make the executive responsible to the Senate of Australia as well as to the House of Representatives there. There is absolutely no reason why Canada should copy Australia in this respect, and I propose that we should not.

The Canadian Senate—and here is the one change that I would make to the powers of the Senate as set out in the present Constitution—should not have the power to withhold supply. It seems to me that that principle is conformable to our convention that the executive is not responsible to the Senate. By introducing this principle of limitation of the powers of a reformed Senate, we would remove a major source of possible deadlock, as the Australian history shows, without diminishing the appropriate powers the reformed Senate ought to enjoy. Apart from this limitation on supply bills, the Senate powers, I suggest, ought to remain as they are now, and disagreements between the two houses, uncompromised and unresolved, would block the passage of legislation as, indeed, is the case in this country today. That point I want to underline.

We know that in the United States, if their two houses disagree, they have a conference and they either solve the matter or that is the end of it. But it seems to me that if the executive in Canada is determined to override the Senate, and having failed twice after a three-month interval to persuade the Senate to change its mind, the Prime Minister ought to have some recourse. That recourse, I suggest, is to do what they do in Australia and have a double dissolution. Have both houses face the people and let the people say who is right. All members of both houses should be put to the test of an election at the same time so that in the end, and in the result, the people would decide. If a double election, as is possible, still left the issue in doubt, there could be a joint meeting of both houses afterwards, where a majority of the total combined membership would have the final say.

Apart, then, from this possible quarrel over supply, which we would eliminate in Canada, a double dissolution and election would be a rather rare bird. The Senate would not have uncovenanted powers that would make the government responsible to it, and a double election, in my view, would not be lightly enterprised, either, by any government without the most serious consideration of the issues involved.

If the role of the Senate is to be other than advisory—and that is what suspensive vetoes mean—such a possibility must be provided for, and we must grasp this nettle as to the power of the Senate.

[Senator Roblin.]

So much for that. What are the chances, then, of anything being done? After all, there have been Senate reformers time out of mind who have achieved little or nothing over all the years. Some of us thought that the inflexibility of Mr. Trudeau's Constitution was bad enough, and that inflexibility called for seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the people and the federal government to respond affirmatively to a change in the Senate.

Senator Nurgitz: It's better now!

Senator Roblin: Now we have the Meech Lake stipulation, which my friend here likes—he obviously couldn't get elected, that's his problem—which outlines the principle of unanimity. Every one of the 11 legislatures must agree to changes to the Senate. Strangely enough, the situation may not really be much worse than it was before, because there was a hidden joker in the present Constitution which has just been surfacing with respect to changing the Senate. It has to do with the province of Quebec. Quebec has a special provision about senators, provided in 1867, whereby each senator from Quebec sits for his own special geographically designated area. This, of course, is different from other provinces, where senators sit for the province at large. There is a substantial legal opinion which I have seen that holds that we are not able to change the special arrangements for the province of Quebec in the Senate without the consent of that province. So maybe all along Quebec has had a concealed pocket veto on changes in this institution.

• (1720)

But I want to say that I do not find the principle of unanimity on Senate reform surprising. If you want to change the one federal legislative institution especially constructed with provincial interests in mind, then it does not seem unreasonable that all provinces should be asked to agree before anything major is done.

Then, even if you accept that proposition, you have to ask yourself the following question: But will they? Of course, I do not know. But there are some things that I do know. The Prime Minister and the premiers have raised Senate reform to the top of the constitutional agenda. Indeed, they propose to enshrine the item of Senate reform in the very Constitution itself. The Prime Minister has undertaken to lay before a constitutional conference a plan for Senate reform before the end of next year. There seems to be in this recital of facts an implicit and explicit undertaking that something is going to be done—and I put it to honourable senators that it is beyond a doubt that Senate reform has now reached the status of a serious proposition.

I then ask myself: Will Senate reform include the elective principle? My answer is that when one considers the alternatives, the odds are that it will. The appointive principle, whether it be appointment by the Prime Minister, by the premiers, or by any other body, is a principle that will not support an effective Senate in the last half of the twentieth century. No appointed body can pretend to equality with an elected one. If we are satisfied with an advisory institution only, then, of course, it does not really matter what we do; but if we want a Senate that effectively is going to perform the tasks which the Fathers of Confederation gave it, and which some people in this country are demanding today, then one must proceed with the principle of election.

The interim arrangement giving premiers and provinces a role in the appointment process will not be accepted, I suggest, as the end of the process of Senate reform.

I know, honourable senators, that one man's Constitution is another man's anathema, and there is plenty of room for debate on these issues of Senate reform that I have advanced today. I have no doubt that sensible compromises would also be sought.

I recall that in 1982 an elected Senate was considered to be alien, if not bizarre, to people in this house and to many other Canadians as being unsuitable for our particular form of government. But today the idea is not so strange, and it is certainly not so strange in western Canada where the concept would be widely welcomed. We can now see that whatever else you may say about the kind of Senate I have been talking about, it would certainly work.

A meaningful Senate must be an elected Senate. I suggest that there is no doubting of that principle; and I suggest and expect that when the Meech Lake consensus is reduced to constitutional form and it is debated in 11 legislatures, the question of Senate reform will surely arise in the course of those discussions. It will not go unnoticed, and policy may well be clarified before we are very much older.

Even so, will we get unanimous consent? Who is to know? Other constitutional issues have been resolved unanimously before. I will not list them. We have them on the record. But on the very fundamental issue of Quebec's place in the Constitution, who would have predicted that Meech Lake would have succeeded, and succeeded with unanimity? Who would have thought—I put it to honourable senators—that those ten men with the Prime Minister of Canada would have come to an agreement, whether we like that agreement or not, and agree unanimously? Meech Lake, I think, is evidence of good faith. Where there is good faith, there is hope. Where there is hope, the debate on the ways and means of Senate reform should proceed. I want to see this chamber take the lead.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John B. Stewart: I should like to ask the honourable senator a question. I know the hour is late, but he has given us a very interesting discourse on a most important topic. The relationship between the ministry and the House of Commons is a dual relationship. On the one hand, the House of Commons can defeat a government, and, on the other, a Prime Minister can dissolve the House of Commons. It is almost like a western street scene in that each party is carrying a loaded gun. On the other hand, according to the scheme which the honourable senator has put before us this afternoon, the Prime Minister can have the Senate dissolved. In other words, to follow through on my analogy, the Prime Minister can shoot down the Senate. On the other hand, Senator Roblin has told us that a government of the day is not to be responsible to the Senate.

I wonder why he thinks that kind of valuable tension between the ministry and the House of Commons—which prevails now and which would continue to prevail under his model—would not be desirable in the case of the Senate. If the Prime Minister is going to be able to dissolve a Senate which he does not like because of what it is doing to government legislation, is the Senate then going to be helpless before such a dissolution? It seems to me that there is something of a lack of symmetry there, which raises some very important political and constitutional questions. I am sure he has anticipated this question and is eager to answer it.

Senator Roblin: I wonder if my friend understood me. I am not suggesting that the Prime Minister could dissolve the Senate, period. He can only dissolve it in conjunction with the House of Commons. It is the double dissolution of both bodies, together, at the one time, and I think that Prime Ministers would be very careful to make sure that their grounds were solid in this respect, and that it was a matter for the people to decide. But apart altogether from the question of the Prime Minister's power, if the solution is to have the people decide in their vote, I for one find that a pretty good answer to problems of confrontation.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I see the line that Senator Roblin is taking. I will simply say that I am not satisfied with it and I think that other senators will want to raise questions at this time.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I was interested in the fact that under the functions and role of the Senate the honourable senator did not name one of my favourite topics, which is that the Senate should be the guardian of human rights. I drew that to the attention of the Senate a few weeks ago, and several years ago I gave an hour-and-a-half speech on the subject. Senator Frith some years ago categorized the five functions of the Senate and he included human rights. The Australian Senate has a scrutiny committee which is very effective, and human rights is at the top of the list of their functions. There have been various reports of committees on Senates in the Commonwealth saying that this should be one of the functions of a second chamber. Did the honourable senator deliberately exclude human rights, or was that an oversight?

Senator Roblin: No. I included the subject. I said that the work of independent Senate committees would be even more valuable than it is at the present time. That includes particularly the Committee on Rules and Regulations for one, and one might say that we might perform the same function as the Australian Senate does in having the last word on regulations. If they were defeated in the Australian Senate, they would cease to have form and effect. One can think of all kinds of variations on the theme, but the principle of strong and independent Senate committees is included in my proposal.

Hon. Mira Spivak: Honourable senators, I hope that Senator Roblin's address, which was wonderful to listen to, will provoke a great deal of debate here, but I should like to ask one question, if I may. Obviously, one of the most important reasons for an elected Senate is that senators should speak for the regions. But how will an election deal with the question of partisanship? Because it seems to me that one of the difficulties in speaking for regions is that sometimes loyalty to the region may conflict with loyalty to party. How does the honourable senator visualize the party system working or not working in the election of senators?

• (1730)

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I start with a premise: When you are in a political body, you will never get rid of parties. That is the essence of our system. The whole of our system of representative responsible government is based on political parties. So the concept that the Senate would be a non-party body is, in my opinion, a non-starter from the very word go. Therefore, I do not contemplate working toward that end.

However, I have some comfort for the honourable senator, and that is that the stranglehold of the party system, if you want to refer to it in those terms, will not be quite so intense, because under the system of proportional representation—and this is the great virtue of it—using as an example the province of Manitoba, we will not all be Conservatives. There will be some Conservatives. There might even be a Liberal elected! I think one would be in these days. There may be an Independent speaking for the Indian community or the French-Canadian community, or something like that. We would find the Senate mixed, and the likelihood of one party having a majority in this house under those circumstances is not great. That is the case in Australia.

Senator Frith: That is the point.

Senator Roblin: No party has had a majority there for some time. So, the party mix is not nearly as strangulating as it is at the present time, and a good deal more independent expression of opinion is available. So you cannot get rid of a party, but you can mitigate it to an extent by proportional representation. You could not make such a recommendation for the House of Commons, but I think it is quite safe to do it here.

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I would like to pose a question, as well. Like Senators Roblin and Frith, I have visited Australia and have had some very lengthy discussions with parliamentarians there. I would say that there is not among the parliamentarians with whom I have talked total support for this system, which is not to say that there is not a great deal of support. My question arises out of the crisis that developed in Australia a few years ago. I arrived there just after it occurred. In that case neither the government nor the opposition requested the double dissolution. It was done by the Governor General. In light of the historic Bing experience of 1925 and the practices within Canada over such a long period, would the Honourable Senator Roblin foresee a Prime Minister calling for double dissolution, or would there be a resurrection of the powers of the Governor General? What does the honourable senator have in mind in that respect? In the crisis in Australia the Queen was even drawn in in a very unhappy fashion. However, they bumbled their way through it, as we have done in the past in various ways. But they did not do it without a good deal of difficulty and soul-searching. I wonder what the honourable senator would have in mind in that respect. I have one other question after he answers this one.

Senator Roblin: I will deal with your first question as to whether the Senate in Australia is popular with the politicians. I do not know about that, but I do know that the Labour Party of Australia has had as its platform for many years the proposition that the Senate should be abolished. That party has been in office several times, and yet this promise remains unfulfilled. I think they have now dropped it. So whether or not the Senate is popular with politicians, it is popular with the people. They appear to perceive the Senate as being effective in the defence of regional institutions. I am not saying that the Australian system is perfect. It is not. I have mentioned one variation on that theme, but it is a workable system.

To deal with the honourable senator's particular point, as a matter of historical fact, the first double dissolution in Australia of 1974 was based on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The second one in 1975 was based on dismissal of the government by the Governor General and the new government asking for a dissolution. The reason for that was that the old government refused to resign, even though it did not have the money to carry on the government. We do not get into this mess. We finesse the whole thing. My proposal suggests that supply bills—and that was the cause of the trouble in Australia—cannot be held up by the Senate. That constitutes an elimination of and reduction in our power that I think we should willingly support. If the supply bill is not subject to a Senate veto, then the Senate does not, by default, slip into the position of a confidence body which could invoke the Governor General's action in the way you describe. In my opinion that issue is completely finessed by making clear that the Senate does not have a veto on supply bills. With regard to other bills upon which we may disagree, it is purely a question of whether or not the government feels strongly enough to do something about it that is as drastic as the situation suggests. If the Senate is to be effective in protecting regional interests, it has to have some real power of that kind. In that instance there is no room for the Governor General to intervene. It is clearly a decision of the Prime Minister as to whether he should dissolve both houses. The only person who could recommend a dissolution would be the Prime Minister. The Governor General would put his or her imprimatur on it, but he or she would not get into the act in the way Sir John Kerr did in Australia.

Senator McElman: I felt that that would be the reaction of the honourable senator, and I thank him for it. Certainly, I do not envisage powers returning, as they were in the past, to the office of the Governor General.

I am quite confident that I know the honourable senator's answer to my next question. However, in light of the Triple-E proposition which has come forward from the prairies, and since the honourable senator comes from that region, I will give him the opportunity to make it very clear. Some of the leading proponents of the Triple-E proposal in each of their propositions and in each of their public comments when referring to their proposed Senate tack on the words "like they have in the States." I assume that some people must believe that we could go to a congressional system in Canada. I do not happen to believe that. I believe I am accurate in suggesting that Senator Roblin is not supporting in his proposition that approach that some in the west have taken, that we become like the United States in that respect.

Senator Roblin: Heaven forbid! I am sure that because of the similarity of names some people confuse the two institutions in the two countries. However, anyone who thinks about it for a moment would realize that the two senates are two entirely different animals. One cannot be related to the other in any way. Our Senate is designed to fit into representative, responsible, parliamentary federal government. Theirs is the congressional system, and never the twain shall meet.

Senator McElman: In light of some of the recent comments made publicly, I felt that the honourable senator should, as a westerner, put that view on record.

Senator Roblin: They know what I think about that matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to adjourn the debate, but first I want to congratulate Senator Roblin on a very thoughtful speech which was, as usual, articulately, indeed eloquently, presented.

Because I agreed with practically everything he said, it might tend to impeach my sincerity in congratulating him—

Senator Roblin: I won't complain.

Senator Frith: —but I do not want it to so impeach my congratulations. I should also say that Senator Roblin knows from a speech I made about the time he made his first speech that, except for some variations, I agree with his proposal. Consequently, someone who is less supportive of Senator Roblin's proposal may like to speak, in which case I would be glad to yield. I do mean to enter the debate, but I would be prepared to yield to somebody else if they feel it more appropriate to have a dissident view expressed before I express my mostly supportive one.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I wish to remind all honourable senators that on May 25, at 2.30 in the afternoon, the President of France, Monsieur Mitterrand, will address the members of both houses of Parliament in the House of Commons. All senators are invited to attend.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE

CANCELLATION OF COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, this is probably superfluous, but I have been asked to advise the members of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce that the meeting that was proposed for this afternoon has been cancelled.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 26, 1987 at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 26, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker pro tempore in the Chair.

Prayers.

RICK HANSEN

"MAN IN MOTION"—TRIBUTE ON COMPLETION OF WORLD TOUR

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, last Friday, May 22, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Rick Hansen wheelchaired into Oakridge Shopping Centre in Vancouver, completing an incredible epic journey around the world. He was on the road for 26 months, travelling 40,000 kilometres in 34 countries, to raise more than $15 million for spinal cord research.

Wherever he went, in countries large or small, east or west, he impressed people with his kindness, his honesty and his courage. But most of all, he inspired people from all walks of life, especially the handicapped, to dream dreams and have them come true, and "for everyone to be the best you can be with what you have."

The people of Williams Lake and the Cariboo, and indeed all Canadians, are proud of Rick Hansen. I know that honourable senators from both sides of the chamber will join me in saluting this outstanding Canadian hero. In doing so, I somehow feel that what we have heard from Rick so far is just the beginning.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

ADDRESS TO MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that the address of the President of France, delivered on May 25, 1987, to both houses of Parliament, the introductory speech by the Right Honourable the Prime Minister of Canada and the speeches of the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons be printed as an appendix to Debates of the Senate of this day.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of speeches, see appendix p. 1079.)

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-37, respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

SCHEDULE OF AUTHORIZED SALARY REVISIONS TABLED

Hon. Royce Frith, Deputy Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, tabled the report of the committee approving the schedule of authorized salary revisions for certain Senate positions, effective April 1, 1987, as approved by the committee on May 21, 1987.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at three thirty o'clock in the afternoon today, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TAX REFORM

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO CONDUCT STUDY

Leave having been given to proceed to Motion No. 3:

Hon. Ian Sinclair, pursuant to notice of Tuesday, May 12, 1987, moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce be authorized to study and report upon tax reform in Canada, or any matter relating thereto; and

That the Committee submit its report no later than 29th February, 1988.

He said: Honourable senators, I gave notice of this motion on May 12. The motion is to set up a special study of tax reform. As you know, last October certain principles were enunciated by the Minister of Finance and tabled in this house. Shortly a white paper will be coming forward. I would like to deal with this matter by setting up our committee and laying out our work for the summer.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I have a good deal of sympathy for committee chairmen in this chamber because, I am glad to say, they have a good deal of work to do. Naturally, they are no less zealous to get on with the job than my honourable friend who just spoke. However, the trouble is that at the present time we have run into a very awkward situation for some senators. This afternoon there are three committees sitting—Banking, Trade and Commerce, Foreign Affairs, and Defence—and they are all meeting at approximately the same time.

A short while ago we set up, through our whips, an elaborate procedure to schedule these committee meetings in such a way that there would be a minimum of overlapping, even if it could not be prevented altogether. I wonder what has gone wrong with our plan, because I have either the misfortune or the distinction of being a member of all three of these committees and I am expected to attend all three of them this afternoon at three different places at approximately the same time which, of course, I will not do. Therefore, I simply want to say that I have a problem with this situation, and I would be grateful indeed if the people who set these committee schedules were to review the matter to see if they cannot do something to correct a situation that makes it impossible to discharge one's obligations.

Senator MacEachen: It never happened when you were leader!

Senator Roblin: Hardly ever!

Motion agreed to.

FORGIVENESS OF CERTAIN OFFICIAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE DEBTS BILL

BILL WITHDRAWN

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government), with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(h), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from considering the Bill S-9, An Act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the Governments of Togo and of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania and also to the former East African Community; and

That the said Bill be withdrawn.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think I know the reason for this motion, but perhaps we should have an explanation.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, I am told that this particular motion might more properly have been introduced in the other place, so on the advice of some of the officials, we looked up some precedents and discovered that the proper procedure for withdrawing a bill which had been incorrectly brought forward is the one that we have just followed, and I thank you for granting leave.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, of course I do not quarrel with the precedents or the form of the motion as presented, nor do I quarrel with the reasons. I wanted to say something about this motion because I understand the reason for it is that we have an opinion that it is a money bill and ought to be introduced in the House of Commons with a Royal Recommendation. If that is so, it might discourage the Leader of the Government in the Senate from introducing bills in the Senate or from encouraging his colleagues to introduce bills in the Senate with this fresh in their minds. I hope this will not discourage him or or his colleagues from doing so.

● (1410)

Senator Flynn: We thought the opposition was so alert that it would have raised this question.

Senator Frith: Where do you think the question first came from?

Senator van Roggen: I, as chairman of the committee, first raised the question which gave rise to this matter.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): The motion has not been put, has it?

Senator Frith: It has been put, but not passed.

Senator MacEachen: I simply want to make a comment not in opposition to the withdrawal of the bill but to say that this is an interesting event which we are witnessing, and one not without procedural significance. A bill which had been given second reading and referred to a standing committee of the

[Senator Bosa.]

Senate on a motion put by the government is going to be discharged and withdrawn. Presumably that possibility, though I have not examined it, would only be open to the government. If it were open to any single senator, it would be possible at this stage, in dealing with the pharmaceutical bill, and if it were the wish of the Senate, for a senator to move a motion that the bill be withdrawn and discharged. It would then disappear from the legislative landscape. I cite that as a possibility which may intrigue us at some future stage.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Roblin: Wait until you are elected!

Motion agreed to and bill withdrawn.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—POSSIBLE POSTPONEMENT OF CONFERENCE—COMMITTEE STUDY AND APPROVAL OF RESOLUTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether there is any intention to postpone the federal-provincial conference which, I understand, is slated for next week, because insufficient progress has been made in securing agreement on a final text of the Meech Lake accord?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: The assurance that the conference will go ahead and the likelihood, or the expectation at least, that sufficient progress has been made to have the conference result in an official text, which would presumably come before Parliament in the form of a resolution, brings a number of questions to mind which the Leader of the Government might answer.

Is it the intention of the government to establish a joint committee of Parliament, as was speculated upon by the Leader of the Government himself on May 6, to examine the constitutional resolution when it is presented?

Senator Murray: With regard to the text, I should inform the Senate that there will be a further meeting of officials later this week, but certainly I can confirm that sufficient progress has already been made to warrant the holding of the meeting which the Prime Minister has called for June 2.

Frankly, I must say that the government has not yet decided whether it will propose the creation of a joint committee of Parliament, as was done during the 1981-82 exercise, or whether it will propose that each chamber operate separately. We simply have not addressed the question yet.

Senator MacEachen: Can I conclude from what the Leader of the Government has said that, in any event, there will be committee study, whether undertaken separately in each house or jointly?

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senators.

Senator MacEachen: Is it the intention of the government to seek parliamentary approval and to complete the committee study earlier than the fall? Presumably, if a resolution is introduced, it will be referred to a committee of each house or to a joint committee for study. This would suggest that if there is to be a reasonable study, then neither house would be called upon to deal with that resolution until late in the fall.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not agree with that latter statement. The issues have been with us a sufficiently long time and are sufficiently well enough known that it should be possible for Parliament to deal with a resolution sooner than that, if that were the consensus of the governments. What will happen on June 2, I trust, is that the text will be agreed to by the 11 governments, and, at the same time, the First Ministers will come to some political agreement as to when they would try to have those resolutions passed in their respective legislatures.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, it is now almost the end of May. Normally Parliament rises for the summer at the end of June. Am I to understand from the leader's reply that it would be the intention of the government to secure approval of the constitutional resolutions before the summer adjournment?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I realize that Parliament normally adjourns at the end of June, but I have seen the same speculation as the Leader of the Opposition has seen to the effect that this year we may well be sitting into the summer. I have seen—as he has seen—the legislative timetable of the government, so I do not think we can be completely certain that we will have adjourned by the end of June.

In any case, if these texts are agreed upon on June 2, there is no reason why they cannot be tabled in both chambers shortly afterwards.

Senator MacEachen: I understand that, honourable senators, and I understand the possibility that Parliament may be asked to sit into July and maybe until the end of July. However, taking into account both of these possibilities, my question is still relevant as to whether it is the intention of the government to press Parliament to conduct a committee study and to deal with the constitutional resolutions before the summer adjournment—whether it takes place at the end of June or the end of July.

Senator Murray: My honourable friend is anticipating a discussion which can only come after June 2 and after the First Ministers have discussed the matter. Let me state it as my personal opinion that I hope and believe that it will be possible for all legislatures to have passed these resolutions in their respective legislatures before the summer recess.

Senator MacEachen: I am almost struck speechless by the suggestion—

Senator Flynn: I hope it is true!

Senator MacEachen:—of the Leader of the Government that it would be the intention of the government to seek final approval of these important constitutional changes before the summer adjournment and wrap into that period not only the necessity for a debate but also for an intensive committee study. That is far from what happened in 1981-82, a procedure which was followed largely at the insistence of the opposition at that time. I hope that the words of the Leader of the Government are entirely speculative and that common sense will prevail before that type of proposal is put forward.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN—1987 CROP YEAR—LEVEL OF PAYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government, in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, a question about the grain payments, whatever they are called. When can the farmers in western Canada expect the government to make an announcement about what the level of payments will be for the 1987 crop year?

By way of background, we know there is a meeting being held in Humboldt, Saskatchewan, today at which the premiers of the four western provinces will be in attendance.

Premier Howard Pawley has, apparently, indicated that he is asking the federal government for a payment of $2 billion for this current year. Grant Devine, the Premier of Saskatchewan, believes that a subsidy of between $4 billion and $5 billion would be appropriate. Premier Don Getty of Alberta is somewhat more modest in saying that he expects that it will be at least larger than last year, because the initial payment for grain has been reduced by 18 per cent by the federal government.

I should like to ask the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations if there has already been a great provincialization of the federal spending power or whether the federal government can make a decision in this respect. If they still hold the power to make that decision, how much longer are they going to keep the farmers in suspense as to what will be the federal government's response to a further 18 per cent reduction in the initial payments to farmers? Can farmers make any plans on the basis of what their cash flow or, indeed, their revenue might be for this year?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have lost track of the question, if there was one, in the preamble of the honourable senator. I am not sure whether he was asking when a decision will be announced on the final payment or whether he was asking when an announcement might be forthcoming on further assistance to the farmers.

The answer to the latter part of the question, if it was a question, is that the farm groups and the provinces are now being consulted by the federal government as to the nature and level of further assistance from Ottawa.

Senator Olson: I was not asking a question on the first part of the response that the Leader of the Government gave because I already understand that that is part of the law of this land. There is a program now in place called the Western Grain Stabilization Act under which the federal government is obliged to honour what that law calls for. Incidentally, that law was put in place by the previous government.

I was asking a question related to the second part of the minister's response. If the Leader of the Government is telling me that it is only a matter of further consultations with farm leaders and the provinces until we arrive at a method and the amount, that gives some encouragement, because to date the government has given no indication that there would be a program or a payment at all. I can take it, then, that the government has decided that there will be a payment, and that all they need to decide now is the amount and the date on which it is going to be paid.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my honourable friend should consider what I have said. I have said that the federal government is now in the process of consulting with farm leaders and the provincial governments as to what additional assistance may be needed as well as developing a long-term strategy for strengthening this industry. That is my answer to his question.

Senator Olson: Does that mean that the federal government is not committed to a level of subsidy at least equal to that of last year, notwithstanding that grain prices have been reduced by 18 per cent? Can he at least give the farmers some assurance that they are not going to pull back on the payments, as well as the initial payments?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, when a decision on that matter is made, it will be announced in the usual way.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT OF MONTREAL-SUDBURY RAILWAY SERVICE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Le Moine: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week, two of our colleagues in the other place expressed their very serious concern about the CNR's intention to abandon several subsections between Montreal and Sudbury, which would result in the elimination of all passenger and freight services between Montreal and Ottawa. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate have any reassuring words for us about this matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall consult with my colleague the Minister of Transport (Hon. John Crosbie) and report to my honourable friend within the next few days.

[Senator Murray.]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIER OF MANITOBA

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate in his capacity as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. In view of the concerns and reservations expressed by Premier Pawley of the province of Manitoba on the Meech Lake accord, has the minister had any further discussions with that premier since his return?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, I have not, honourable senators.

Senator Molgat: To his knowledge, has the Prime Minister had further discussions with Premier Pawley?

Senator Murray: Yes, honourable senators. The Prime Minister is in fairly frequent touch with all premiers, including Premier Pawley.

FIJI

CURRENT POLITICAL SITUATION

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As we know from the media, there have been political difficulties in a Commonwealth country in the Pacific. Can the Leader of the Government give the Senate a description or appraisal of the situation in Fiji? Will he tell the Senate, either now or when he is ready to do so, what is the status in the view of the Government of Canada of those now in power in that government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I am informed that we are continuing to monitor very closely developments in Fiji and that we are consulting with other interested governments, including those of Australia, New Zealand, India, the U.S.A., Britain and Japan, on the situation. Until those consultations have been completed, we will defer a decision on questions relating to the future of our bilateral relationship with Fiji.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, does this then mean that the Government of Canada as of now thinks that it does not have sufficient information to take a definite stand on the legitimacy of those now in power in Fiji?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think that would be a fair assumption.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSED ADVISORY COUNCIL—COMPOSITION, ROLE AND TERMS OF REFERENCE

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I direct my questions to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Yesterday the Secretary of State discussed with a journalist from one of the capital's newspapers the creation of an advisory council on official languages. I am sure that the government leader will have to send me the answers to my questions, because I have a number of them.

As joint chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, I would like to have the following information: What would be the mandate of such an advisory council? Who will decide who are to be the people to sit on such a council? Would the existing minority group associations play a role in the selection of its members? Would the council have any meaningful powers? Would it be non-partisan? Would it be empowered to study and advise on new regulations and programs or would it be there to see that present programs and regulations are applied? How would the role of such a council complement the work of the Commissioner of Official Languages? Would the council also advise on the regulations and programs that apply within the federal public service? Through what department would the council report to Parliament? Would the proposal for such a council be part of the new proposals to amend the Official Languages Act? I have one last question: When would these proposals be introduced in the House of Commons?

• (1430)

Senator Wood: Is the advisory council to be struck now or after? Is it to be appointed before the legislation or after the legislation?

Senator Murray: Certainly not before.

Senator Argue: And maybe not even after.

DEFINITION OF "SUFFICIENT" MINORITY

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, my question also arises out of a news report. Would the Leader of the Government take into consideration a statement which has been made which has caused me and many people in my area some concern? We are concerned about the wording which says, "where the minority is sufficient", they would then have services in the other official language.

I am concerned about the travelling public in light of that statement. I am also concerned about the policy of the government whereby it wants to provide service to everyone in either of the two official languages. I ask the Leader of the Government to convey to the Minister of State that this is a very important matter, that we should not say "where the minority is sufficient".

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, my honourable friend is aware that the travelling public is explicitly covered in the present Official Languages Act. As for the phrase "where numbers warrant", he also knows that it will also be found, among other places, in the Charter of Rights, and perhaps also in the Official Languages Act. In any event, those concepts have always proven to be difficult to administer, and this is one of the questions that the government, the Joint Committee on Official Languages and the Commissioner of Official Languages as well as the minority language groups in the country have addressed for some time, and which we will try to address in the amendments, the policy and the regulations that we will be bringing forward before the summer adjournment.

Senator Guay: In view of the Leader of the Government's knowledge in this sector and the fact that he is an ex-joint chairman of the Joint Committee on Official Languages, no doubt we can depend on him to look after our interests when this matter is raised at the cabinet level.

Senator Murray: I can assure honourable senators that linguistic justice has the highest priority for this government, and particularly for the Prime Minister whose whole political life has been associated with that cause. I may also tell the honourable senator that in the development of policy reforms and amendments to the legislation, there has been the most extensive consultation between the government and the minority language groups across the country: the English-speaking minority in Quebec and the French-language minorities elsewhere.

Senator Guay: My insistence is based on the fact that if the Leader of the Government has followed the proceedings of the Official Languages Committee, which is reviewing aspects of crown corporations and various departments, he will have noted where the rule has not been observed. That is why I am seeking his support, since he will be raising the matter toward the end of June. At the committee level we have found out that heads of departments, supervisors and managers do not always implement the policies as they should be implemented. The new act should be strong enough to deal with that aspect of it and insist that it is being done so that services in the two official languages can be available in all departments and crown corporations not only in Ottawa and in some provinces but all across Canada as a whole.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FEDERAL SPENDING POWER— OPTING-OUT PROVISIONS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government respecting the Meech Lake accord. Recently in the press there appears to have been a differing interpretation by the Premier of Manitoba and the Attorney General of Ontario, on the one hand, and Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Rémillard, on the other hand, with respect to the interpretation of the accord's impact on the federal spending power as it applies to the opting-out provisions respecting programs that contain national objectives. Could the Leader of the Government advise us as to what is the federal government's position on this question?

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—INTERNATIONAL RAMIFICATIONS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: While the Leader of the Government is looking at that, I would appreciate it if he would examine the comments of the Premier of Quebec, who appears to have said that as a result of the Meech Lake accord, the Province of Quebec would be entitled, in a decentralized federation, to full status at international forums equal to that of the federal government. Could the Leader of the Government give us some views about whether or not the accord will be read in that particular fashion by the federal government?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thought that we had ventilated that question quite fully a couple of weeks ago. I would suggest that my honourable friend review the Hansards for the days immediately following the Meech Lake accord. However, I will examine his question to see whether it would be proper for me to bring in any further information or statement at this time.

CANADA-FRANCE RELATIONS

VISIT OF PRESIDENT OF FRANCE—FISHERIES DISPUTE AND AGRICULTURAL SUBSIDIES—PRESIDENT'S RESPONSE AND AUTHORITY

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Could he inform the Senate as to what progress was made by the Prime Minister and the cabinet in dealing with President Mitterrand concerning the fisheries dispute and with regard to the European Community and French subsidies to agriculture? Could he give us some idea of the President's response and what we may hope will follow that response?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can tell my honourable friend that ministers of the federal government, including the Prime Minister, took the occasion of their discussions with President Mitterrand to present Canada's case very strongly on the question of some of the subsidy practices and other international issues affecting agriculture. We presented our case, and we also presented very strongly the consensus, if I may call it that, of the Cairns Group which met here in Ottawa and was addressed by the Prime Minister last week.

The same opportunity presented itself today during a very welcome discussion which the Prime Minister and ministers had with another distinguished European leader, namely, the Prime Minister of Italy, Mr. Fanfani. I may say that Canada is pleased with the progress recently made at the OECD on this matter, and we intend to build on that progress when the Prime Minister attends the economic summit meeting in Venice.

With regard to the fishery, during the meetings with President Mitterrand yesterday, the Minister of Transport, the Honourable John Crosbie, took the opportunity to express to the French President in very clear terms Canada's concerns regarding the fisheries agreement. It is our belief that the President of France and the French ministers who were in attendance will have a clearer understanding of what is at stake for Canada, particularly for Atlantic Canada and Newfoundland, on this matter.

Senator Frith: And they will explain the matter to Mr. Chirac?

Senator Argue: The Leader of the Government has given us an interesting piece of information. It would seem from his statement that the strength of the statement on the fisheries side is perhaps stronger than the statement on the agriculture side.

Senator Murray: Not at all.

Senator Argue: Not at all? Very well. Can the Leader of the Government say which ministers from France were in attendance, and whether it included a minister who has as his specific responsibility agriculture, or a portfolio bearing on agriculture?

● (1440)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I do not have the list of French ministers, but I am reasonably certain that the Foreign Minister and a trade minister were present.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, not being learned by any means in constitutions, can the Leader of the Government explain to me or to honourable senators just what authority or what power President Mitterrand has in a legislative way or in a way that might lead to a resolution of some of these problems? A report on the radio this morning said that an unnamed person in External Affairs said, and I paraphrase, that, really, President Mitterrand did not have any particular powers over fisheries, and that the government was dealing with Prime Minister Chirac. My inadequate understanding is that the President of France does not have any legislative power, and perhaps not even any legislative influence, and that, therefore, he has no part in the government process, and that the government will decide what, in fact, is to be done.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators—

Senator MacEachen: Explain cohabitation.

Senator Frith: In a few words tell us about cohabitation.

Senator Murray:—I shall obtain a copy of the Constitution of the Fifth Republic and send it to my honourable friend. It would be very impertinent of me, who have just refrained from extemporizing on constitutional amendments in Canada, to try to discuss in detail the powers of the President in the Fifth Republic.

Senator Frith: Less risky, though.

Senator Murray: As I recall, the constitution provides that he has overall responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs and the defence of the republic. As head of state and President of the Republic, he also has certain powers which he is able to exercise that would be exercised by our head of state only upon recommendations by ministers. I have probably gone too far already.

Senator Frith: Go on.

Senator Murray: The President of the Republic is elected for a seven-year term and is a very powerful figure in the nation.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I happen to have the English version of the French Constitution in front of me, or at least those portions that deal with the constitutional powers of the President. As I understand it, he has the authority to name ambassadors and to govern during a constitutional crisis. He is Commander of the Armed Forces, but he has no legislative authority over such questions as agricultural subsidies. So, I ask the minister: Am I right in saying that when the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Devine, meets with President Mitterrand on Wednesday evening and Thursday morning, President Mitterrand will not have any direct legislative authority or power to deal with these subsidies, that the person who has this authority, plus support in the National Assembly, is Prime Minister Chirac, and that really the whole question should be addressed, if it is done in a completely effective way, to the Government of France, not to the President as such, whose powers are great, but in relation to this question are most inadequate?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the President of the French Republic has immense moral and political authority in his country. He does not, as he reminded us yesterday in his excellent address to both houses, go into the Senate or into the National Assembly in France. However, I remind my honourable friend that the Socialist Party, of which the President was the head for many years, is very strongly represented in the legislatures in France. As for Prime Minister Chirac, of course we are addressing problems such as the agricultural problem to him and to his government, and we are discussing those matters in various multilateral fora such as the OECD. Further to that, Prime Minister Chirac himself will, I believe, be coming to Canada in the near future, and we will have further opportunity to discuss those matters at that level.

Senator Argue: What the minister has now said really confirms my analysis; namely, that the President does not have legislative authority. The President is a Socialist. I am not certain if as President he is Leader of the Socialist Party, but, in any event, that party may well be in office in a short time. It is fine to deal with the opposition on occasion, but I think it is crystal clear that the responsibility lies with the government, and that dealing with the President is not the avenue that will necessarily change the situation. I agree with the minister that in many fields the President has very important powers.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have delayed answers to seven questions. I propose to give some information on them, and if the honourable senator concerned wishes me to read the answer to his particular question, I shall do so. Otherwise, I ask that they be printed as part of today's proceedings.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ACQUIRED IMMUNE DEFICIENCY SYNDROME—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on March 11, 1987, by Senator Haidasz regarding Health and Welfare—Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome—Government Action.

(The answer follows:)

The following is a list of activities and projects undertaken under the National AIDS Program, since its introduction in May 1986. Items are listed by category to correspond with the components of the Program.

1. RESEARCH

a) A special National Health Research and Development Program (NHRDP) solicitation of AIDS research in the summer of 1986. Fifty four new proposals were submitted for review, 17 were recommended for support without major qualification, 11 others have been or are being reviewed with the investigators concerned for changes leading to eventual support, and 14 investigators have been invited to resubmit their proposals after major changes.

b) A national seroprevalence survey of sexually active women with multiple sex partners is in progress. The survey was designed by the National AIDS Centre and a network of outside researchers, and is being funded by the NHRDP.

c) Two research studies of azidothymidine (AZT) are in progress. One, funded by the NHRDP, is studying safe drug dose levels in seropositive symptomatic individuals. The other, supported by the provinces, the manufacturer, and the National AIDS Centre, is a therapeutic study among AIDS patients.

d) Preparations are under way for a 1987 research solicitation of research projects. The NHRDP also plans to provide support for the development of proposals for multicentre studies, and for researcher exchanges to enhance Canadian research capability.

2. PUBLIC EDUCATION

a) The Canadian Public Health Association (CPHA) has produced and released a series of public service announcements on AIDS as a first step in the national education campaign. The CPHA also sponsored an international expert meeting on AIDS education, and several regional workshops in Canada for health professionals and the public. The CPHA is providing partial support for the publication of AIDS information books and videotapes, and provides speakers for numerous public meetings.

b) Work is in progress in the National AIDS Centre on a series of brochures that present guidelines and information previously released in the Canada Diseases Weekly Report in a format suitable for general public information.

c) The National AIDS Centre is working with private sector representatives and the CPHA to develop education materials on AIDS in the workplace.

d) The Medical Services Branch and the National AIDS Centre are preparing education material for health workers and residents of native communities. The work is being done in conjunction with native health representatives.

e) A mobile information display has been developed by the National AIDS Centre for use in federal government agencies. Some 40,000 public servants have seen the display to date.

f) Departmental support has been provided to the Canadian Hemophilia Society for a series of workshops, and the production of information materials for Canadian hemophiliacs and their families.

g) Publication of "AIDS in Canada: What You Should Know", 3 editions.

3. SUPPORT FOR COMMUNITY-BASED AIDS ORGANIZATIONS

a) The Health Promotion Contribution Program has provided funding for 15 community-based organizations in Canada.

b) The National AIDS Centre provided developmental support for the Canadian AIDS Society; a national umbrella organization of community groups that provides a national voice and planning functions for the groups.

4. ENHANCEMENT OF DIAGNOSTIC CAPABILITY IN CANADA

a) Federal funds have been provided for the enhancement of viral laboratory facilities in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Quebec and Nova Scotia. Other provinces have not requested assistance.

b) Provincial laboratory personnel are trained in AIDS virus isolation and culture techniques at federal expense at the Laboratory Centre for Disease Control (LCDC).

c) LCDC provides a national centre for research and evaluation of new diagnostic techniques and reagents, and a national reference service for AIDS virus identification. LCDC is also a World Health Organization Collaborating Centre for AIDS.

d) Federal and provincial laboratory directors and senior epidemiological staff are now linked by an interactive EDP network funded by the National AIDS Centre. The network supports AIDS case reporting and the exchange of data and analytical information. Provincial operators of the network have been trained at federal expense.

5. NATIONAL AIDS CENTRE

In addition to collaborating on many of the activities listed above, the Centre provides internal coordination of AIDS activities in Health and Welfare Canada, and maintains national surveillance systems on the number of AIDS cases reported and accidental exposures to the AIDS virus among health care workers and others. The Centre provides a secretariat to the National Advisory Committee on AIDS and the Federal-Provincial-Territorial Ad Hoc Committee on AIDS. The Centre has initiated expert studies of palliative care for AIDS patients, on the impact of AIDS in the social services, on economic forecasting of the AIDS problem, and on AIDS and artificial insemination. The Centre has also supported feasibility studies on vaccine development, and is negotiating the undertaking of public policy studies on AIDS by the Royal Society of Canada.

6. OTHER ACTIVITIES

a) Through the Canadian International Development Agency, Canada has contributed $5 million to the World Health Organization for global AIDS control programs.

b) Canada will host the 1989 International Congress on AIDS, with a theme of partnership between high-technology and low-technology nations in achieving global management of the AIDS problem.

c) The Laboratory Centre for Disease Control is engaged in collaborative research on vaccine development with the United States and France.

d) The Department has been host to delegations on AIDS from several other nations.

YUKON

CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT TRAVEL SERVICE—EFFECT ON LOCAL BUSINESS PEOPLE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 5 last by the Honourable Senator Lucier regarding Yukon—Changes in Government Travel Service—Effect on Local Business People.

(The answer follows:)

At the present time, Marlin Travel has not applied to have the government business travel originating in the Yukon or Northwest Territories included in its contract.

Treasury Board Policy on travel permits departments in the Yukon and Northwest Territories the choice of using either local carriers or travel agents, and at the moment there is no plan to change the policy.

It is understood that Marlin Travel will be expanding their presence in the Yukon and NWT and consequently they would be available to compete with the local travel agents for federal government business. However, the option remains with departments to choose between local carriers, travel agents or the new Government Travel Service.

AGRICULTURE

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have two delayed answers to questions asked on May 6 by Senator Argue: one, Deficiency Payments to Western Grain Farmers—Delay in Payment of Second Instalment; and the other, Farm Credit Crisis—Discussions Between Government and Banks.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could have the answers to my two questions read.

Senator Doody: Senator Argue has asked that the two answers be read. One of them is quite long, being almost two pages. If the honourable senator wishes it read, of course I will read it. The other one is quite short.

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF SECOND INSTALMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): The answer reads as follows:

The two-payment system for the Special Canadian Grains Program was devised to get funds into the hands of farmers as quickly as possible to assist with spring seeding for this year.

The first cheques, which make up about 30 per cent of a farmer's total benefits, were mailed to Canadian Wheat Board permit book holders on 26 January.

To accommodate the $1 billion limit on program expenditures, accurate figures were needed for all program participants before the final cheques could be issued. I am informed that processing of application and certification forms is proceeding smoothly. Final payments are currently expected to commence towards the middle of June.

This two-payment system was adopted to speed the delivery of benefits to producers. It was felt that, rather than making western producers apply for their benefits, it would be faster to distribute part of their payment automatically, based on Canadian Wheat Board records. Using this system, producers can amend inaccuracies in the Wheat Board data, and their final payments can be adjusted accordingly.

FARM CREDIT CRISIS—DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND BANKS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): This is in answer to a question on the same date by Senator Argue regarding Agriculture—Farm Credit Crisis—Discussions between Government and Banks.

(The answer follows:)

There is no question that the past few years have been financially very difficult for the industry and many farmers continue to experience very serious problems. With depressed world markets for grain aggravated by subsidy programs by our major competitors, western grain farmers and indeed grain farmers in all parts of Canada have faced very low prices for their products.

The Government has responded with very substantial assistance to farmers. In the past sixteen months, over $1.5 billion has been paid to western grain farmers under the Western Grain Stabilization Program, and an additional $1 billion has been provided under the Special Canadian Grains Program.

The Government continues to use every means at its disposal to try to convince our competitors in world markets to give up the unfair subsidies that are creating such difficulties for our farmers and such uncertainties in world markets for grains and oilseeds.

In the meantime, discussions are continuing with farm leaders and provincial governments on the very serious situation in the agricultural sector and the appropriate ways of dealing with it.

When considering the attitudes and actions of the banks towards farmers in financial difficulty, it is essential to remember that every farmer's situation is different. What may be appropriate in one instance may be of no use in another situation.

Therefore, the government has established a system of farm debt review boards across the country. Before any creditor can realize on the security provided by a farmer, they must notify the farmer of his right to have his case reviewed by a farm debt review board.

Once a farmer makes application to a farm debt review board, no action can be taken by creditors while the case is being reviewed. Depending on the complexities of the case and the time required for the review, this stay of proceeding can be for up to 120 days.

A separate three member review panel is set up for each case. Review panel members include experienced farmers and others with experience in financial matters. The panel ensures that all possible avenues are explored with a view to finding an arrangement which will be satisfactory to both the farmer and the creditors.

The program has now been operational since last fall, and the initial experience has been positive. In many of the cases that have been concluded, it has been possible to reach an agreement with the creditors which has permitted the farm business to continue.

The Farm Debt Review process of dealing with the creditors of a farmer on an individual basis is much more beneficial to farmers in financial difficulty than any attempt to establish general rules that will apply in all cases but which will not be appropriate in all cases.

Also individual reviews which seek a voluntary agreement among the parties involved avoids interfering unduly with the normal arrangements between creditors and borrowers. Any attempt to impose settlements on creditors runs a very real risk of causing banks and other lenders to withdraw from the field of agricultural credit. This would only exacerbate the financial difficulties of farmers.

There are, of course, situations where the farm business is in such a poor financial position that it is in the farm family's best interest to seek to establish themselves in a new life off the farm. When this is the case, the Canadian Rural Transition Program is available to help these families in their difficult adjustment period.

The Rural Transition Program provides job training and financial assistance, including assistance with living expenses to help the family to become re-established.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—IMPLICATIONS OF INTERPRETATIVE DECLARATION—AVAILABILITY OF LEGAL OPINIONS—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—APPLICABILITY OF TERM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 13 last by the Honourable Senator Frith regarding The Constitution—First Ministers' Accord—Implications of Interpretative Declaration—Availability of Legal Opinions—Recognition of Quebec as Distinct Society—Applicability of Term.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Could I hear that answer, please?

Senator Doody: Certainly. The answer reads as follows:

Legal opinions provided to ministers by law officers of the Crown are privileged. These opinions therefore are not published but, where appropriate, they are reflected in formal statements by the Government.

The agreement in principle reached at Meech Lake on recognition of Quebec's distinct society and the recognition of a fundamental characteristic of Canada—that is, an English-speaking Canada and a French-speaking Canada, neither of which is concentrated exclusively in one part of the country—must be read together. The courts, in interpreting the Constitution, must take account of both recognitions: one cannot be invoked in isolation from the other.

When the recognitions referred to above are entrenched in the Constitution, all provisions of the Constitution will have to be interpreted in a manner consistent with those recognitions, including section 1 of the Charter and paragraph 51(1).

The recognitions are statements of existing realities. Arguments based upon Quebec's distinct society and the related fundamental characteristic of Canada could now be made before the courts, but the courts might, in the course of events, overlook them when deciding particular cases. Upon entrenchment, the courts could no longer overlook these considerations.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I thought I had made reference in my question about the effect of the interpretation declaration on sections 91 and 92. They were not specifically dealt with as other sections were.

Senator Doody: We could make an inquiry.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL SPENDING PATTERNS—FEDERAL POWERS AFFECTING BROADCASTING AND BANKING

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, a question was also asked on May 13 by Senator Grafstein regarding First Ministers' Accord—Federal-Provincial Spending Patterns—Federal Powers Affecting Broadcasting and Banking.

(The answer follows:)

First, with respect to current federal-provincial spending patterns, the National Accounts for 1986 show the federal share of total current government spending to be 53.6 per cent (including transfers to provincial and local governments) and the provincial share to be 46.4 per cent. If transfer payments are included in provincial spending, the federal share stands at 43.6 per cent and the provincial share increases to 56.4 per cent.

Second, concerning the question about the possible impact of the Meech Lake agreement on federal-provincial spending patterns, I would ask the Honourable Senator to identify which of the agreement's provisions he is referring to and in what respect.

Third, there are no changes anticipated to federal powers affecting broadcasting and banking that arise from the Meech Lake accord.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—MAINTENANCE OF OFFICIAL BILINGUALISM

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 13 last by the Honourable Senator Corbin regarding The Constitution—

First Ministers' Accord—Recognition Of Quebec As Distinct Society—Maintenance of Official Bilingualism.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like that answer read out, please.

Senator Doody: Very well.

Under the Meech Lake agreement, Parliament and all provincial legislatures are committed, in the exercise of their respective powers, to preserving the fundamental characteristic of the federation based on the existence of a French-speaking Canada, centred in but not limited to Quebec, and an English-speaking Canada, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec.

In addition to setting out this commitment shared by all legislatures, the agreement affirms the role of the legislature and Government of Quebec in preserving and promoting the distinct identity of Quebec.

Parliament thus maintains its ability, in the exercise of its powers, to protect the official-language minorities, and the Meech Lake agreement reinforces the federal government's commitment in this regard.

As a result of the Meech Lake agreement, all the legislative assemblies, among other things, have confirmed the commitment to the official-language minorities made in 1982, when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guaranteed the right to minority language instruction under article 23.

Finally, although the National Assembly has jurisdiction only within Quebec, there is no doubt that, under the agreement, the affirmation of a strong Francophone community within Quebec will benefit Francophones throughout Canada.

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the Deputy Leader of the Government when it is his intention to answer the question which I put on the order paper on March 12, 1987, dealing with Canada's commitments with respect to nuclear weapons.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, ever since the introduction of this bill, I have been puzzled as to why it was being introduced. Let us recall why compulsory licensing was brought in in the 1960s. It was brought in to stop monopolistic gouging of the consumer by the producers of pharmaceutical products. It was brought in following intensive study of the issue by three major government inquiries: an inquiry by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, an inquiry by the Royal Commission on Health Services, and an inquiry by a special committee of the House of Commons. All of those bodies recommended compulsory licensing, which brought about the existing legislation.

The existing legislation on compulsory licensing has worked and is still working. Prices fell by approximately 50 per cent on many items. Provinces which offer assistance to citizens in the purchase of medication will be very badly hit if the price compressing mechanism of encouraging competition by generic drug manufacturers against the pharmaceutical giants is removed.

British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba spend approximately $600 million per year on these programs and another $241 million in hospitals for medication used there. These costs to these provinces and to other provinces will go up.

Despite compulsory licensing, output grew. It did not stop production. In constant dollars the increase in pharmaceutical products was 133 per cent from 1967 to 1982, whereas for the whole of manufacturing it only increased 44.5 per cent. Therefore, the conditions were not so depressive for this industry that it was in any way going out of business. It was doing very nicely, thank you.

Also, investments grew. If the existing legislation were so terrible and traumatizing to this poor industry, why is it that the assets in the pharmaceutical industry grew from $256 million in constant dollars in 1967 to $1.3 billion in 1982? This is an increase of 410 per cent in their assets. The increase for the whole of manufacturing is approximately 350 per cent.

Employment also grew. The government is talking about employment prospects growing thanks to Bill C-22. The total employment in the industry rose 29 per cent in Canada between 1967 and 1982 compared with an increase of only 23 per cent in the drug industry in the United States. The growth rate for employment of Canadian manufacturing as a whole over this period was less than 4 per cent. Therefore, the drug industry did very nicely, thank you.

Moreover, the profits of the drug industry rose. We, as a government, did not gouge them. The average profits were among the highest of all Canadian industries during the years 1968 to 1982, and were also among the most stable. According to the Eastman commission, the profit levels appeared to be higher in Canada than in Japan, Germany, Britain, France and Switzerland, where most of the non-American multinationals reside. Profit levels in Canada have not been as high as in the United States. That, of course, is why the multinationals are complaining.

Why are we trying to fix a situation that seems to be working? If it is working, don't fix it. However, we are trying to fix it. There seem to be three explanations: One is that we are afraid of being thought a kind of scavenger of intellectual property. We steal the intellectual property of those poor drug manufacturers and strip them of what they have invented.

The other argument is that if we give them greater opportunity of making profits through the monopoly exploitation of one of their inventions, they will invest in research and development in this country.

The third explanation that I have heard for this change in the present system is that if we are entering into free trade talks with the United States, our compulsory licensing is somehow going to upset our major trading partner of drug patents to the south.

● (1500)

I should like to address these three issues one after the other. Let us take intellectual property first. Intellectual property, even for authors and inventors, is not absolute, and it is not considered absolute, otherwise, there would not be a limit. I would lose all property rights 28 years after my book had been published, even if I produced a new edition. There are also certain aspects of intellectual property which are totally outside patent protection. We do not hear that the great ideas of Nobel prize winners are their property, and that they have the right to charge other nuclear scientists or mathematicians who then use the formulas developed by those Nobel prize winners. As far I know, Einstein did not collect a single cent for his contributions to the quantum theory which led to the development of nuclear power. Let's not talk of bombs!

This is the most telling evidence that intellectual property is not absolute but is something we own for a limited time, something we pay for one way or another. There is more than one way of paying for this intellectual property. One is to pay a royalty. Then one can argue that the royalty we have asked our generic drug manufacturers to pay to patent owners is too low. In Britain patent owners receive royalties of 21 per cent, but they do have compulsory licensing. In Mrs. Thatcher's Britain, they pay the drug manufacturers a guaranteed royalty for a limited period of time.

We are told that some of these drug manufacturers will not market some of their products in Canada because of Canada's legislation. Let us suppose that one of them invents a vaccine against AIDS, and that manufacturer says, "We will not make this available in Canada because we do not like the legislation in Canada." That is akin to somebody owning the only source of life-giving water in a community and refusing to sell that water to the citizens of that community. In all such situations, in all civilized societies, regulation steps in and says, "No, your property is not absolute when it is a matter of life or death." I put it to you, honourable senators, that medicine, which is necessary to save lives, cannot be allowed to be used as an instrument for gouging prices.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Does the pharmaceutical industry gouge? Go to your neighbourhood pharmacist and pick up a packet of generic aspirin and read the contents and the ingredients. It is 300 milligrams of acetylsalicylic acid. Then pick up something manufactured by one of the brand-name companies and look at the contents. You will see the contents are exactly the same, 300 milligrams of the same acetylsalicylic acid. There has been no research undertaken to change that acid in any way for years; the generic aspirin costs one third the price of the brand-name aspirin. Many of us are idiotic enough to buy brand-name aspirin. That is because we have been brainwashed through advertising. We should not, but we do.

Senator Barootes: You don't have to!

Senator Gigantès: I did not interrupt you, but you go right ahead. Heckling is one of the things I most enjoy.

Of all production by Canadian pharmaceutical producers 80 per cent is from subsidiaries of multinational firms. Nearly all of those are heavy importers from affiliates located abroad. That is also true with respect to ingredients which are processed in Canada and finished products. So, we pay for those products in more ways than one, and we pay for their research abroad because of the heavy price a subsidiary has to pay to the mother company, which is several times the world price in most instances. So, they are hardly being ill-treated by us.

There are other nations that have to deal with this problem, and all developed countries regulate their pharmaceutical industries both through controls and some inducements. In France, which now has a government that is not socialist, each drug company must negotiate prices with the French Transparency Commission. I think the title is extremely important. The pricing and how one arrives at it must be transparent. If one has a good set of accountants, one can make it very opaque. Applications are judged on the basis of research efforts in France; our legislation does not obligate the pharmaceutical companies to carry out a certain level of research here. In France the applications are judged on the basis of research efforts within France, improvements in efficacy, reduction in side effects, merits of form and suitability of presentation, dosage equivalence, length of treatments, and level of patients' contributions to the payments.

Spain is committed to stimulating domestic companies through preferential pricing, subsidies, custom treatment, registration, and supply contracts. Foreign companies are welcome as long as they do some manufacturing and conduct some research in Spain. There is nothing in our bill that obliges these pharmaceutical companies to do a certain level of manufacturing or research. Once a company in Spain depends on more than 30 per cent of its sales through foreign technology, it is forced to begin manufacturing raw materials in Spain or lose its licences.

In the United Kingdom the Prescription Price Regulation Scheme specifies the level of profitability. If the generic manufacturer can sell for $1 what the brand-name manufacturer sells for $3, this commission looks at that, and quite rightly so, because this is not perfume, this is not an unnecessary garment, this is not jewellery, this may be a substance that may make the difference between life and death to an individual, and such substances are not, I submit, honourable senators, of the same kind as any other trading commodity.

In the Netherlands they have a dual scheme. There is a price for those who can afford it and a price for those who cannot afford it, but the pricing and how it is arrived at is tightly controlled.

In the whole of Latin America there is no patent protection for drugs, because the principle prevails that a drug is too important to allow someone to gouge.

I will pass to the second reason for allegedly proposing this bill—that is, it will boost research in Canada. The Canadian market for pharmaceuticals is dominated by multinational enterprises. Not one of them is Canadian based. The largest Canadian-owned firm ranks only twenty-third here measured by sales. Most drug research in Canada is limited to clinical testing to establish the safety and therapeutic effectiveness of drugs. There is no basic research. Such testing is required by Health and Welfare Canada. Few patent owners actually manufacture chemicals here; they import them from their headquarters. Manufacturing processes in Canada mainly involve the preparation and packaging of dosage forms from imported bulk drugs. What is there in this bill that will convince these multinationals to change these practices?

● (1510)

If the government wants to increase research in Canada in order to help Canadian scientists, fine! Finance research institutes within our universities, have them collaborate with Canadian pharmaceutical firms, have them market their resulting discoveries, and let the profits from such research go partly to relieve the burden on the health service, partly to improve the financial condition of universities, and partly to those private Canadian drug manufacturers who participate in the research and marketing. We do that elsewhere, and we do it successfully. There are major research activities in agriculture, energy, mining and fisheries. Why should we not follow that route instead of trusting that, without any compulsion whatsoever, the drug multinationals will change their fundamental habit, which is to do all the research at headquarters, and then to sell the product in bulk and let their subsidiaries in other countries simply do whatever clinical testing is required by the local health authorities.

Let me come to the last argument, which is that we should not upset the U.S. I have heard this argument; it has been given publicly by supporters of the government and by supporters of this bill outside the government. They say, "It would be better if we removed this irritant before the negotiations conclude." This is another of these strange tactics of giving up your aces before the bidding starts. This is what we did before we changed FIRA. We did not make them pay for anything—no conditions. We changed the National Energy Policy—and I do not object to those two changes—but since we are to negotiate alleged free trade with the United States, let us put those on the table and get something in exchange. But, no, this is another ace that we are prepared to give away so as not to upset the Americans.

Ninety five per cent of all patents in the Canadian patent system are owned by non-residents. All the evidence around the world shows that the big gainers from technological advances are those countries that use patents and not those countries that develop them. We should encourage the use of foreign patents here without giving the right to the owners of those patents to gouge—and we have means to exert pressure; we could say to a foreign company that has developed a vital drug, "If you refuse to market that in Canada, there is no protection for any of your patents—none; we will remove it!" We do not have the right to let a drug manufacturer put a price on the life of a single Canadian patient.

To sum up, what is our aim? More research? We can do it another way and a much better way, and ensure that the research occurs here by financing institutions of higher learning and having them go into joint research ventures with native Canadian drug manufacturers.

Is our aim more jobs? The number of jobs that are predicted is derisory—3,000 between now and I do not know how many years. Count them per month, or per day. And what jobs? Not jobs of fundamental research, no, just clinical research—the kind that we are doing now.

Is our aim fairness to drug manufacturers? I do not think that we are being unfair if we say, "We want to make sure that you do not gouge, but we want to pay your royalty." Why should a Conservative government that believes in competition try to restrain competition between multinational drug firms and Canadian manufacturers of generic drugs? For what? I do not know.

To calm us, the authors of this bill have produced a toothless tiger of a price review board, which can do absolutely nothing about the "entrance" price. They will be kept to the increase of the cost of living, we are told, after they introduce the drug at a given price. They multiply the fair price by five or six times, they introduce it, and then they get the increases commensurate with increases in the cost of living—and we have no way of rolling back that price. Every other country does, save the United States. Do we have to do as the Americans do? Is it absolutely necessary? Must we imitate the one advanced country in the world that does not have the kind of medicare that we have? Must we imitate the one country in the world where the concept of intellectual property as it relates to health matters is carried to the point where, in 1983, a man who was knifed in the stomach in Alabama was put into a police ambulance and taken to three hospitals in succession. He was refused admission because he had no money and no credit cards. He bled to death on the way to the fourth hospital. That was intellectual property in action! The hospitals had care to give, expertise to sell, and if somebody did not have the money to pay for it, too bad, let them die!

Here we are facing a situation that, I submit, honourable senators, is not without parallel to this Alabama example. We are facing a situation where we are not really taking measures that would say to a drug manufacturer, "You cannot hold up a sick person who cannot afford it. You cannot wreck our health service by pushing up your prices." This is not a fantasy. The German health service is being wrecked this minute by the constant gouging increases by the drug manufacturers, until the drugs there are out of sight, and their cost is crippling their health service. Why? To give the drug manufacturers absolutely unfettered capacity to increase the prices at the expense of the public interest and at the expense of a health service that has to survive because health services must survive in civilized societies.

This is a bad bill. It does not fulfil any of the so-called objectives that we were told it was introduced for. I urge honourable senators to amend it when the time comes, or to reject it.

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, would my honourable friend entertain a question, please?

Senator Gigantès: All the questions that you would like to ask.

Senator Barootes: There are a lot that I would like to ask, but I will ask only two.

It was an interesting speech, and there were some interesting statistics which I do not challenge. I think, senator, that you said that the provincial governments which have publicly-assisted programs for drugs in the west are expending $650 million on these. I believe the honourable senator said that in those provinces where the hospitals tender for drugs, the cost is in the region of $250 million more. My friend's fear is that the cost to the provincial governments for the provision of these drugs would rise—and I do not know if he used the word "astronomically"—considerably if this bill were passed.

• (1520)

Is it so? My understanding is that the drugs now being purchased and on the market will remain as they are, whether they are made by generic or other firms, and that the prices of those drugs will not be allowed to rise any higher than the increment in the cost of living. Am I right or wrong in my understanding?

Senator Gigantès: You are perfectly right in that, but we hope there will be some important new discoveries, because we seem to have some important new diseases, and any discovery, improvement in the process or any new wrinkle to any particular drug is going to cost more. I will tell you one thing: The manufacturers of existing patent medicine will very soon withdraw drugs they already have on the market and replace them with new drugs so that they can jack up their prices—I do not say "astronomically", because that is too great an exaggeration—considerably as they did in Germany.

Senator Barootes: I believe the honourable senator said that the present list of drugs on these formularies, and being purchased by hospitals and drug plans, will remain at approximately the same level. Is it what will happen with the new drugs that my honourable friend fears?

Senator Gigantès: Yes.

[Senator Gigantès.]

Senator Barootes: I have another general question. I know that my honourable friend is an author and a fairly extensive writer of books. Should we remove the copyright on songs, music and books because they are also public properties, or should that innovator, the owner of that intellectual property, be allowed to retain that copyright?

Senator Gigantès: I am delighted that the honourable senator raises that point again, because I think this is at the crux of the matter. I tried to explain, but obviously I did not get through. I apologize for my lack of skill as a communicator.

We would not allow someone who owns a supply of water that is the only supply of water for a community to gouge that community and charge anything he likes. Traditionally, whenever there has been a monopoly, even in such things as communications such as that held by Bell Canada, regulations have been imposed.

Therefore, there is not just one kind of intellectual property; there are many kinds. I might very humbly admit that if someone never read anything I ever wrote, that person would not suffer at all. However, if people are suffering from AIDS and there is a drug that they cannot afford, then they would suffer. If they required to drink water and someone were charging a dollar a glass, then they would suffer. There are different kinds of intellectual property.

I do not mind protecting the perfume industry. We could protect them forever. We could protect a new way of treating furs or a design by Christian Dior. If no protection is offered for my books, that would not matter to me at all, because by now they are out of print. In any case, very few people buy them, and my publishers lose money.

Senator Barootes: I think I understand my friend, and I thank him for answering so explicitly that the matter of copyrights for music, authorship, and so on, should be considered protected property, but that we should not protect the invention of drugs by scientists and pharmaceutical people.

Senator Gigantès: I did not suggest that all rights be taken away from them. There is the system of royalties. In Britain there is the system of regulating profitability and stipulating exactly how much can be made in terms of profit. I believe, at 21 per cent, they have the highest rate.

However, no one, not even an author, is given absolute copyright protection. It lapses. The current Canadian legislation stipulates protection for a certain number of years. What we are talking about is how many years is fair. Against this fairness we have to balance the rights of the consumer. I am afraid that the rights of the consumer in matters of life or liberty must take precedence over every other consideration. Human beings count more than authors, musicians and inventors. Life and liberty come first.

That is why we do not allow our judges to market their intellectual property, which is their legal knowledge. That is why we, as legislators, are not allowed to accept money from someone in order to present a certain bill. I know that some people do accept money for certain things, but the theory is that a legislator should not behave in that way, and that a judge should not be for sale. The particular editor of a newspaper, who is sitting beside you, was never for sale, although some may be.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Peter Bosa moved the second reading of Bill S-8, an act to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses).

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill S-8 is to amend the Citizenship Act. At the outset I would like honourable senators to appreciate the limited circumstances in which the proposed amendment would apply.

The bill deals with the situation where an application for citizenship is made in the following special circumstances:

- (a) the applicant is a foreigner who has been granted permanent residence in Canada;
- (b) the applicant is married to and residing with a Canadian citizen;
- (c) the Canadian citizen is required to live outside of Canada because of his or her duties either in the Canadian Forces or in the public service of Canada or of a province; and
- (d) the applicant would like to continue to live with his or her Canadian spouse abroad while, at the same time, continuing to complete the three-year residency requirement for Canadian citizenship.

The remedy provided for in the bill is to allow the minister, in the circumstances I have just described, to treat the applicant's residence abroad as being the equivalent of residence in Canada for the purposes of the Citizenship Act.

As honourable senators will appreciate, the bill has a very narrow application in the sense that it is of potential benefit to only a very small number of people. However, for those particular people it is of tremendous importance.

Honourable senators may recall that it was in February of 1977 that Canada's present Citizenship Act came into effect. The 1977 act not only repealed the former act of 1946, it also revoked a certain concept of citizenship that formed the basis of that act. Prior to 1977 citizenship was considered a privilege, and it was, accordingly, subject to ministerial discretion. After 1977, however, citizenship ceased being a privilege and became a right.

Thus, under the present law a landed immigrant has the right to be granted citizenship once the immigrant has satisfied the conditions set out in the law. In other words, the minister has no choice in the matter. If the applicant satisfies the statutory conditions entitling that applicant to citizenship, then the minister is obligated by law to grant a certificate of citizenship. Under the old law, even if the statutory conditions were met, the application for citizenship was still subject to ministerial discretion.

One of the statutory conditions, of course, is that of residence; that is, the period of time during which an applicant must have resided in the country before becoming eligible for a grant of citizenship. The present law modified that condition requiring of the applicant three years of residence rather than the previous five years.

Since citizenship is now recognized as a right to be enjoyed, once the prerequisites of the act have been met, the principle of equality of opportunity to become a Canadian citizen is now a prominent feature of the present law. Underpinning that feature of the law is the concept of residence. If in an exceptional case the three-year residency requirement is to be relaxed, then I believe the relaxation should be on the basis of a discretionary power of the minister rather than on the basis of a right.

It is for this reason that I asked that the amendment proposed in Bill S-8, which is concerned with alleviating a problem for foreign spouses arising out of the residency requirement, be set out in terms of a privilege, subject to ministerial discretion, rather than in terms of a statutory right. This way of dealing with the matter is, in my view, more in keeping with the spirit of the act.

Honourable senators may be interested to note that the Citizenship Act, at present, provides for three types of situations where an applicant may be excused from the residency requirement. In one case the exception is set out in terms of a right. In the other two cases the exceptions are set out in terms of privileges; that is, they are subject to the discretionary powers, respectively, of the minister and the Governor in Council.

The exception that is set out in terms of a right is that of a child born outside Canada to parents who, at the time of the child's birth, were non-Canadian but who later became Canadian citizens. Under subsection 5(2), a minor in these circumstances is entitled as of right to obtain his or her citizenship without meeting the residency requirement.

One of the two exceptions that are set out in terms of a privilege is found in subsection 5(3) of the act. Under this subsection, the minister may waive the residency requirement on compassionate grounds in the case of any person who is suffering a disability. "Disability", for the purposes of the act, is defined by section 2 to mean minors and those who are mentally incompetent.

The other exception involving discretionary power is found in subsection 5(4). It confers on the Governor in Council the power to direct the minister to grant citizenship in order to alleviate cases of special or unusual hardship, or to reward service of exceptional value to Canada.

The amendment proposed in Bill S-8 would add a fourth exception to the residency requirement in the form of a new subsection 5(4.1). This fourth exception would allow the minister to treat residence abroad as the equivalent of residence in Canada in a case where the applicant is married to and residing with a spouse who is living outside Canada while serving in the Canadian forces or employed in the public service of Canada or of a province. The proposed amendment, in effect, provides for a partial waiver of the residency requirement in the sense that it authorizes the minister to waive the location, but not the length, of residence required under act.

In other words, the amendment would allow the minister to count any period of residence abroad as residence in Canada in the case of an applicant who is married and is required to live outside Canada in the circumstances that I have already described. The important thing to remember is that the amendment applies only to a spouse who is a landed immigrant; that is, someone who has been lawfully admitted to Canada for permanent residence.

Such a person is described in the Immigration Act as a "permanent resident". In order to become a permanent resident, a person has to appear before an immigration officer at a Canadian port of entry for the purpose of being examined to determine if he or she will be granted admission as a landed immigrant. This means that the physical presence of the applicant on Canadian soil is required before the process provided for in the amendment I am proposing would apply. In other words, the three-year period of residence would have to begin in Canada. The bill would not extend to a foreign spouse married abroad who has not entered Canada.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Why?

Senator Bosa: That is so because they have to be landed first.

Honourable senators, as I have mentioned, this bill is quite narrow in its application. It would apply essentially only to foreign spouses of Canadians, and only to those foreign spouses who have already been admitted to Canada and who are required to interrupt their three-year period of residence in Canada because of the posting abroad of their Canadian spouses. It is not reasonable, in my view, that a person in such a situation should be expected to stay behind in Canada in order to complete the three-year residency requirement while that person's husband or wife is serving Canada abroad.

Honourable senators, this is not a new concept in the citizenship law of this country. The amendment I am proposing is based on a similar exemption that existed in the Canadian Citizenship Act of 1946. There are a few minor technical differences between what I am proposing and the original exemption contained in the 1946 act, but they can be explained in committee. The point is that Bill S-8 is not without precedent. I believe it is worthy of your consideration, and I suggest that the bill, if it is given second reading in this chamber today, be referred for further study to the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology.

Senator Frith: Might I ask a question? Clause 2 of the bill states:

Subsection 14(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

[Senator Bosa]

I do not have the present subsection 14(1) in front of me, so I am not clear as to how it fits into the scheme. However, the amendment states:

Where a citizenship judge is unable to approve an application under subsection 13(2), he shall, before deciding not to approve it, consider whether or not to recommend an exercise of discretion under subsection 5(3), (4) or (4.1) or subsection 8(2), as the circumstances may require.

Does that mean that in order for someone to take advantage of section 5, subsection (4.1), he must first go to a citizenship judge, or is that only one of the ways in which it can happen? In other words, can the minister exercise the discretion that we will be giving him without going through a judge?

Senator Bosa: No, the person would still have to appear before a judge of citizenship. That person would appear before the judge with a document saying that that person has resided outside Canada as a spouse of a Canadian diplomat or a Canadian in the Armed Forces or in the service of a province who is working outside Canada. It is considered that a diplomatic post is an extension of the territory of Canada. Consequently, if that person has resided in such a place for the period prescribed in the act, then that person, at the discretion granted to the minister, would be given the necessary documentation to appear before a judge to say that he or she has, in effect, complied with the requirements of the act.

Senator Frith: I am simply asking about the procedure. Is it only on a recommendation of a judge that a minister can exercise discretion? In other words, does it always have to be a two-step procedure, an application to the judge, after which the judge recommends the exercising of discretion? Is that the way it works?

Senator Bosa: While I have not dealt at length with the mechanism of this matter, it would seem to me that it would be at the discretion of the minister to ascertain that that person has complied with the act.

• (1540)

I will be pleased to pursue these questions in greater detail in committee.

Senator Frith: I was hoping to avoid having this go to committee, but I guess I can't.

On motion of Senator Doody, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—DEBATE
CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prela-ture of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Le Moyne).

Hon. Jean Le Moyne: Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Hébert, while reserving the right to adjourn the debate subsequently.

Hon. Jacques Hébert: Honourable senators, I do not particularly relish my self-imposed task to shed some light on an organization that for more than half a century has preferred to flourish in the shadows of secrecy. I am referring to the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei which, through the good offices of Senator Bélisle, is asking us to pass a special bill that would grant its Vicar privileges comparable to those already granted to certain churches.

I might add that I do not relish the thought either of challenging my honourable colleague, a man of great integrity and generosity, who I am sure was acting entirely in good faith. I find some consolation in the thought that he need not be overly concerned about my little exposé. It will not be the first time for Opus Dei, and besides, its members always have an answer ready and are admirably and implacably effective in scourging their adversaries, great and small. All the arguments I will give you today will be contradicted, all testimony challenged, witnesses discredited and facts denied.

No sooner had I commented spontaneously to a few reporters on the strong feelings of distrust aroused in me by Opus Dei than the organization had launched one of its typical counter-attacks. Letters were sent to the newspapers, often without any indication that the author was a member of Opus Dei. "Serious" articles were published, sometimes written by journalists who may or may not have been members of the organization. People are especially delegated to visit detractors of Opus Dei and, either directly or indirectly, to make every effort to convince them of the error of their ways. They are bombarded with books and documents, which has been my experience as well as that of Senator Le Moyne and several friends who dared to criticize what its less charitable opponents go so far as to call the "Holy Mafia". In fact, La Sainte Mafia is the title of a book by Yvon Le Vaillant, published by Mercure de France (1971), in which the author describes in detail Opus Dei's defence tactics.

After letters, articles and visits, writes Le Vaillant, there is "another, more efficient and more serious tactic: dossiers and files . . . As soon as Opus Dei see a "target", it mobilizes its "disorganized organization" (in the misleading words of its founder). This is a machine whose gears are well oiled, silent, discreet and effective. They start digging up details of peoples' private lives, asking apparently harmless questions at dinners and receptions . . . they start investigating, following trails . . . Then, discreet blackmail. Whisper campaigns spread insidious libel from ear to ear."

But why get involved in all this and waste enormous amounts of time examining a wealth of information that has been accumulating since 1928, the year in which it seems the organization was founded, when we know we are outnumbered by the powerful fanatic defenders of Opus Dei? Because we are entitled to the truth and because I believe this chamber should have more information, both for and against, before voting on Bill S-7.

In the last few weeks, I have read thousands of pages about Opus Dei, in French, in English and even in Spanish, some written by the founder himself, Msgr. Escriva, about whom my colleague and friend, Senator Le Moyne, will speak later with his usual erudition and verve.

Last April 7 Senator Bélisle summed up the objectives of Opus Dei as being, quite simply, "the promotion of the ideals of Christian holiness in the midst of one's everyday occupations". Praise the Lord! Alleluia! With the help of Opus Dei propagandists I have no doubt that our esteemed colleague will have an opportunity to tell us more about this pious association. To avoid duplication I will only point out the most frequent criticisms aimed at Opus Dei within and without the Church since its birth in Spain, under the shadow of the Franco régime.

I will quote authors, witnesses and journalists whose good faith is unquestionable. I systematically set aside anticlerical publications and sought the most responsible sources of information: the New York Times, The Times of London, such internationally known magazines as The Tablet, The Economist, and so on.

In any event, the hardest blows to Opus Dei in recent years came from Catholics, priests and laymen, who quit the organization after having been long-time active members. Perhaps one of the most famous is Oxford Professor John Roche whose revelations had prompted a devastating article in a newspaper well known for the quality of its inquiries, The Times of London.

I will quote at length this article of January 12, 1981 which has never been openly disproved, in spite of the attempts of Opus Dei.

[English]

Serious questions about Opus Dei's fitness for the role it desires are raised by the disclosures of a former senior member who has shown The Times his private collection of secret official documents describing its hidden internal life and ultimate aims. His evidence has been supported by many other sources and papers seen during a detailed investigation by The Times.

On the basis of these documents and his own experiences as a member, Dr. John Roche, of Linacre College, Oxford—who remains a practising Catholic—alleges that Opus Dei is a church within a church, ultimately loyal only to itself, and psychologically dangerous to its own members. "Personal identity suffers a severe battering; some are reduced to shadows of their former selves, others become severely disturbed. Opus Dei must be thoroughly and exhaustively investigated by the Church", he said. He has offered his evidence to Cardinal Basil Hume, President of the Roman Catholic Bishops' Conference of England and Wales.

He also produced instruments of mortification—a small whip and a spiked chain—which are a normal part of the rigid spiritual discipline which Opus Dei imposes on its members, including adolescents of both sexes.

There is an extraordinary history of antagonism between Opus Dei and the Roman Catholic chaplaincy at Oxford University. The present chaplain and assistant chaplain, and several previous chaplains, have spoken of the harmful influence which they believe Opus Dei has over its members, and students are now warned against it as a matter of policy.

[Translation]

As a member of Opus Dei Dr. John Roche held a very senior post, that of director, which gave him ready access to an internal and confidential journal called Cronica. He was able to make photocopies of this publication dealing with the members' basic spirituality: they simply did not have access to it unless the director was present, Dr. Roche, as it happened.

In that respect, again I would like to quote The Times:

[English]

Several senior Roman Catholic clergy have seen some or all the material in The Times's possession. One was a member of the English hierarchy; one an academic theologian and a member of the Theological Commission of the Roman Catholic Bishops' Conference; and one holds a senior position in the Benedictine Order. Their views coincided, that it was "unhealthy" and psychologically and spiritually harmful. Doubts were raised about the orthodoxy of some of the doctrine. They were satisfied that it was in the best interests of the Roman Catholic Church that it should come to light.

● (1550)

From the pages of Cronica it is possible to deduce the internal philosophy and self-image of Opus Dei, and its relationship to the Church. The Church, Cronica makes plain, has fallen away from its true path, and the destiny of Opus Dei is to spread itself throughout the world by every means. The Church appears to have no other role than to be a vehicle for this process, the ultimate priority. No other means of salvation exists.

A characteristic teaching is "divine filiation", a doctrine repeatedly elaborated in Cronica. By God's direct appointment, Msgr Escriva had become the true earthly father of all Opus Dei members, and this was not to be understood as a sentimental metaphor. Cronica quotes from Ecclesiasticus, applying to Escriva the passage:

"When tested he was found loyal. For this reason God promised him with an oath that in his descendants the nations would be blessed..." It is a reference to Abraham.

Cronica is not ashamed to interpret Biblical passages as prophecies of Opus Dei's destiny, and uses for Msgr Escriva such biblical images as Father, Shepherd, and "he who spends his life so that we, his children, may have it in greater abundance". Traditional spiritual ideas are frequently taken over and re-applied in this way, both to Msgr Escriva and to Opus Dei itself. Cronica describes Opus Dei as sinless, perfect, "our Beautiful Mother", and as Christ's "Mystical Body".

Opus Dei is holy, unchangeable, everlasting; it will never die or grow old; it contains everything necessary for salvation, and no point of this "internal law" can ever be changed. Opus Dei could never need reform. In one of the very few references to the Second Vatican Council, Cronica states that Msgr Escriva anticipated the council in his creation of Opus Dei, and therefore Opus Dei has no need to turn to the council's decrees for its own guidance. It has spread everywhere, affirming the reign of Christ forever. It is the context of "God's work"—Cronica often plays on the words "Opus Dei"—and its vocation is universal.

[Translation]

Who is this Msgr. José Maria Escriva de Balaguer, the beloved founder and head of Opus Dei until he died in 1975, when he was succeeded by Msgr. Portillo, now called the Prelate? Without a doubt, an exceptional man, charismatic (in the didactic, not the theological meaning of the word), passionate, a man of great convictions and a very convincing man. To quote Yvon Le Vaillant:

"We have seen how important Escriva was throughout the history of Opus Dei: his immense influence, his creative intelligence, his activity as a visionary, and so forth. Ridiculed by some and worshipped by others."

We know he is about to be canonized, to the great delight of Opus Dei members. If it is true that having some pull in the Vatican doesn't do any harm his chances are not too bad... Unless, of course, the devil's advocate decides to take a closer look at the years of Escriva's life about which he says nothing, about the nature of his relationship with Franco, the quality of his mysticism, even some minor faults which, though innocent, are hardly compatible with sainthood: his strong love of adulation, honours, decorations, awards, which would seem to contradict other character traits of the founder of Opus Dei, including the rigorous discipline he imposed on his followers.

According to The Tablet of October 16, 1982, a Catholic periodical published in London:

[English]

Both his famous book of maxims, The Way—

In Spanish it is called El Camino

—and the constitutions of Opus Dei were compiled against the background of the Spanish civil war. Escriva was an associate of Franco, and a protagonist of "national Catholicism." His writings inculcate a sternly masculine discipline and a conservative outlook. The reader of The Way is encouraged to laugh at the "discredited liberal ideas of the 19th century." Superiors are best fitted to make decisions: they will not be questioned. The attitude of a subject to a superior should be that of a child to his father. The notion of charity consists more in "understanding" than in giving. Indeed Escriva recommends the "apostolate of not giving" since: "It is human nature to have little respect for what costs but little." And do you not think, he asks, "that equality as some people understand it is synonymous with injustice?" There is little equality, it might be added, within the structures of Opus itself.

[Translation]

In fact, Opus Dei is set up as a real army, "una milicia", to fight against the devils of modernism which are gnawing at the Catholic Church from within. Monsignor Escriva demands obedience, blind obedience as evidenced by the maxims in his book El Camino, the Opus Dei bible, from which I quote two verses:

"617.—Obey, as an instrument in the hands of the artist—an instrument does not ask why it does this or that—with the assurance that you will never be asked for something which is not good and not meant for God's greatest glory."

"941.—To obey... The right road.—Blindly obey one's superior... the road of holiness.—Obey in your apostolate... the only road; because in a work of God the attitude must be to obey or to depart.

In a nutshell, this has to be quite reassuring to those who believe that Monsignor Escriva is a saint who has drawn his inspiration from God himself, but rather disquieting for others who might think he is a simple, error prone mortal.

Let us see now how this "milicia" is organized. Inspired by Dr. John Roche, The Times sums it up this way:

[English]

Structurally Opus Dei comes in threes. At the top are three priests, the President-General (known now as the Prelate), the Secretary-General and the Counsellor-General. Escriva died in Rome on June 26, 1975, and was succeeded as President-General by Father Alvaro del Portillo.

The order as a whole is divided into three, vertically and horizontally. There are three entirely separate sections for priests, laymen and women, the vertical division. Horizontally, there are three levels of membership. The most important is the numerary, itself made up of three grades which may be called inscribed electors, inscribed non-electors and simple numeraries. Only electors have access to the inner circles, the regular general councils (one for each vertical division) and the very occasional congress (the last known met in 1975 to choose Escriva's successor).

Numeraries must conform to three requirements: they must take the three monastic vows of poverty, chastity and obedience; they must be of high intellectual calibre and they must live in OD residences. They form the kernel in which priestly numeraries dominate: lay order or no, the clergy dominates OD.

Then comes a much larger number of supernumeraries who lead ordinary lives and follow a much simpler set of rules without vows. They are important because they embody OD's temporal influence and raise its funds. The third category comprises the associates (formerly oblates) who are to be found living in OD residences and doing the menial work. OD's "membership" of 75,000 also includes a special category of "co-operators", people regarded as sympathetic to its aims who may not even know they are so regarded and play no active part at all.

[Translation]

The essential components of this "militia", which has vowed to obey "like a musical instrument", are regulated by strictly secret Constitutions... as unequivocally stated in article 193:

"These Constitutions, the published instructions and those which may be published in future, as well as the other documents, must not be divulged; still more, without the permission of the Father, (now of the Prelate), there shall be no translation, even in a common language, of those of the said documents which will be written in latin."

Should anyone dare make the reproach, Opus Dei will deny that it is a kind of militia, and yet it is written in so many words in the Constitutions, article 197:

Our institute, (now Prelature), is certainly a family, but it is also a militia. A family which is not saddled with the inconveniences of carnal affection; a militia with the strength of a very strict discipline, best suited to fighting.

Today, Opus Dei is trying to mitigate the bad impression that can be created by the concept of militia, especially among its young sympathizers. They prefer to refer to "modern-day knighthood", which is more reassuring, even though it is somewhat at variance with Section 197 of the Constitutions.

One of the numerous criticisms levelled at Opus Dei is its elitist nature. Members of the most exalted level are of necessity taken from candidates who are the most gifted intellectually, the most endowed with degrees and the best placed in the professional world, banking, politics, public service. And, supreme elitist coquetry, those super members must be very personable, sound of body and elegantly dressed.

Msgr. Escriva had no qualms anyway about telling his flock that their normal place was at the top of the social ladder, standing for example in Section 16 of his personal bible "El Camino":

"Reduce yourself to the common run, you, be part of the common crowd? But you were born to be a leader. Among us, there is no place for the lukewarm. Humble yourself, and Christ will inflame you with the fire of love."

That elitist attitude is especially visible in Spain where members of the Opus Dei are most numerous, and understandably so. In the above mentioned work, Yvon Le Vaillant refers to a new race of men that grew in that country: "the Opus Dei men". It is not easy to draw a composite picture of them. The components multiply and overlap. So much so that often they are used as alibis. There are the seniors, those who have faces like the founding Fathers', like Escriva's, like Escriva's family, like Escriva's entourage at the beginning. They are of the same type as the "propagandists", somewhat run-of-the-mill type, physically rather dull, without any concern for impressing, appearing. Then there are the "moderns", the young, the new Opus generation, those who take much more care of their bodies and their clothes, with a rather American look. There is also the leaders and the foot soldiers. The leaders who know everything, who run everything, who manage the business, who are involved in legal or fraudulent operations, the leader caste nobody knows in principle. And then the infantry who are pushed to the forefront by the official propaganda—miners of the Asturias and peasants from the Andes, nursemaids and black African rugbymen, the lower class who know nothing, run nothing, who share only in the shallow mysticism.

According to Section 3 of the Constitutions of the Opus Dei, its first goal is to rechristianize the intellectual class and the leading class in society. To that end, they have more need of senior public servants, lawyers and engineers than of peasants or rugbymen. As Jean Saunier writes in "Histoire des personnages mystérieux et des sociétés secrètes", published by éditions CELT in Paris in 1973, and I quote:

In fact, one cannot deny that Opus Dei includes a certain number of people of low origin, who play the role that is held in other religious congregations by lay brothers; it is no less certain that those examples, incessantly put forward, cannot hide the true nature of Opus Dei, which essentially recruits in the aristocracy and the upper middle-class.

What about members of the Opus Dei in Canada? In the Globe and Mail of April 3, 1985, Stanley Oziewicz interviewed in that respect Reverend José Luis Soria, then head of the Canadian section, who has since been replaced by Reverend Gregory V. Haddock, "regional vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei", the individual indeed who is applying to the Senate for a very special status.

And I quote:

[English]

According to Father Soria, who carried the title of regional vicar, there are 500 to 600 Opus Dei members in Canada, roughly equal numbers of men and women in separate branches. Only eight are priests and the vast majority are married lay people.

Father Soria refused a request to see the membership list, arguing that this should not be viewed as secrecy but a desire for privacy by Opus Dei members who wish to be seen merely as "ordinary Catholics".

John De Souza, an Opus Dei official, says that every profession is represented. Participants at a recent Opus Dei meeting in Montreal included a chartered accountant, chemist, biochemist, economic teacher, aeronautical engineer, programming analyst and university administrator.

Father Soria said that he doesn't see any reason why Canadian politicians at all levels can't become Opus Dei members. He said that one Quebec MLA is a member, and he expects more politicians to join in the future.

[Senator Hébert.]

[Translation]

This could perhaps be seen as a discreet invitation to senators to apply . . . I will take their names after the sitting!

Bill S-7 qualifies Opus Dei as a prelature. For the benefit of those who may not be familiar with the jargon of the Vatican, perhaps it would be useful to provide some explanations gleaned from the New York Times Magazine of January 8, 1984:

[English]

In November 1982, Opus Dei acquired the Status of a "personal prelature", the first and so far the only one of its kind authorized by the Second Vatican Council. It meant that Opus Dei became similar to a worldwide diocese, with a Prelate who, like heads of religious orders, has authority throughout the world over its members. Since Roman Catholic laymen are normally fully under the authority of their local bishops, this establishes a new principle of power sharing between diocesan bishops and The Prelate. In view of the Pope's evident favor, bold would be the diocesan bishop who, in case of conflict, sided against Opus Dei.

[Translation]

We shall see later on that a number of bishops and priests took the risk of acting according to the dictates of their conscience, especially when Opus Dei, acting in a manner reminiscent of the Moonies or other Krishnas, started working on children and adolescents who are poorly equipped to withstand brainwashing.

In fact, recruitment is a constant concern of Opus Dei members, a real obsession. As The Times writes in the article I referred to earlier:

[English]

Recruitment to Opus Dei, called Proselytism, is the highest priority of every member: it is "the way, precisely the road, to reach sanctity". Not to proselytize is to be dead; members should hunger and thirst for proselytism. "Holy shrewdness" and "holy coercion" should be used to win recruits, who should be "pushed little by little, but constantly". It is taken for granted that candidates are already devout Roman Catholics, and Cronica does not use proselytism to refer to gaining converts for Christianity or Catholicism. In the material available, this is not discussed.

OD's experience, especially since the internal tension arose between the spiritually minded and the materialist element who went for temporal influence in the 1950's and after, has been that the older the numeraries are when recruited, the more likely they are to defect and many of our sources bore this out.

That article further states:

● (1610)

In recent years therefore, the emphasis has shifted to recruiting numeraries not at undergraduate level but at the minimum age allowed by the rules, 14 years six months. With six months' probation and six years' training in an Opus Dei house, the recruit can become a fully fledged numerary at 21.

What most disturbs observers, critics and lapsed members of Opus Dei is the effect of the old-fashioned and strict quasi-monastic regime in an Opus Dei numerary residence on immature young people. Numeraries are expected to wear the Cilis, a strip of metal rather like chainmail, with the points of the links bent inwards, for two hours a day, usually around the top of one thigh so it, and the resulting contusions, cannot be seen.

Once a week, numeraries are required to apply the Discipline, a whip with five or six thongs, to their own buttocks in private for the length of time it takes to say the prayer Salve Regina. With special permission, they may increase the frequency to a maximum of three times a week.

These practices were once commonplace in monastic communities but have virtually died out. Several sources told us that these implements of self-mortification are given to recruits within weeks of joining, whatever their age. A member is expected to discuss all aspects of his life with his lay director, a senior Opus Dei numerary, in an intimate session known as a "confidence" once a week. This is in addition to regular confession of sins to a priest; and confession to a priest outside Opus Dei is discouraged.

[Translation]

In Canada as in other countries, Opus Dei has concentrated its attempts at recruitment on teenagers and even children from 10 to 12 years old, in recreational organizations connected with Catholic schools. The tactics and methods used are very similar to those of the sects and cults that, in the last couple of decades, have caused tremendous harm among young people in search of the absolute ideal. This was made very clear in a CBC report on The Fifth Estate, broadcast on January 22, 1985, which Senator Le Moine and myself have recommended for screening to members of this chamber.

We hear, for instance, from a ten-year old boy who had been attracted to the Boy's Club at his Catholic school in Toronto by the prospect of learning carpentry and how to program a computer.

[English]

But what the boy received was a form of religious programming; what the boy went through, without his parents' knowledge, was the first stage of recruitment by the Opus Dei organization. Here is part of the interview:

CBC: Do you recall the theme of some of the religious talks?

BOY: Most of them were about sinning and being repentant about your sins, so every time you sinned you were getting farther away from God and getting closer to the devil. But when you joined them and started repenting for your sins and going to see them every night, then you were becoming closer to God.

CBC: Did you go home and tell your parents what you had done?

BOY: Well, we didn't tell them fully because we were told not to. We just told them that we had a benediction and that we prayed.

CBC: You were told not to tell your parents?

BOY: Yeah.

CBC: What specifically were you told?

BOY: Well, we were told not to tell them because they might not understand. Like, we could tell other people who belonged to this group, but our parents wouldn't understand and they might think they were kooks or that they were doing something illegal and they might call the police on them and we wouldn't be able to go anymore and we wouldn't be able to have fun and all that.

[Translation]

According to the testimony of his parents, who finally realized what was happening to their son, it was a very traumatic experience because he no longer knew whether he should believe his parents or his Opus Dei protectors.

A Montreal priest, Father Jim MacDonald of the parish of Pierrefonds, tells what happened to two of his nephews, students at Mary Mount Academy, who at a tender age came under the influence of an Opus Dei club.

[English]

Here are some extracts:

FATHER MACDONALD: The questioning and the concern began only several years later when the youngsters were in their mid-teens and when the Opus Dei movement that they now were members of began to take a larger and larger part in the life of the boys. We hoped that they would make up their own mind about their faith as they grew up and that they would have the freedom to do that with a variety of experiences, and this was one of those experiences that didn't seem to be nefarious at the time.

CBC: And now?

FATHER MACDONALD: And now we regret very much that they got involved with that club for boys back in those days, and certainly we're distraught.

CBC: You think it is nefarious?

FATHER MACDONALD: I think that anything that takes over the parental role in the lives of children very early and very gradually, in another undercover kind of way, that this is certainly nefarious. Now, there may be parents who got involved in the movement themselves and who didn't see it as such and who don't feel that this is the case, but certainly for parents who don't get involved in the movement themselves and buy the whole thing, it will eventually come between them and their children.

In the same program, CBC gives us another example of a young girl literally dragged away from her father and mother:

Archie Booklus says he had a loving relationship with his daughter as she grew up. At 16, in Mary Mount Academy, one of her teachers, Father David Sands, suggested she learn Spanish at an Opus Dei centre. Sands is one of the group's leaders of Opus Dei. Since that time 10 years ago, she has never spent a night at home.

MR. ARCHIE BOOKLUS: So far as our experience as a family with Opus Dei is concerned, they are clandestine. Secondly, I am scandalized, as a Catholic, with what they have done in their handling of my daughter, particularly in the beginning when she was not yet of age. And thirdly, I think that they have connived at the breach of the fourth commandment, which is to honour thy father and thy mother, by counselling her and breaking that bond of confidence that had always existed and should have existed with my daughter.

CBC: Do you feel you have lost your daughter?

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: I don't feel that, no.

CBC: It sounds as if you have.

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: Well, I feel she's on a desert island somewhere and she needs a lifeboat, but I don't feel I've lost her.

CBC: Is she happy?

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: That's impossible to tell.

CBC: You're her father.

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: I know, but she doesn't live with us. She came to spend Christmas with us; she came on the train at midday, had Christmas dinner with us, had to sleep in an Opus Dei house that night, I had to deliver her there, pick her up in the morning and take her back to the train to go back.

CBC: That was Christmas?

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: That was Christmas.

Archie Booklus has been trying for many years to get help from the archdiocese of Montreal with his case, but with no result.

QUESTION TO MR. BOOKLUS BY CBC: Has it shaken your faith as a devout Roman Catholic?

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: No, it hasn't. Now I've come to the point where I am not able to get the support within the church to have a proper hearing for my point of view, and no hope of having this thing put right. But what I also want to make quite clear is that I would like other Catholic parents with children to be extremely vigilant about what happens to them until they're of age, when they are in Catholic schools where they may be coming under the same influences that may be leading them to groups under the auspices of Opus Dei.

CBC: But do you realize what you are saying? You, a Roman Catholic, are warning other Roman Catholic parents . . .

ARCHIE BOOKLUS: To be vigilant of their children.

[Translation]

In England, Opus Dei, in line with its policy of recruiting a young intellectual elite, was, of course, eager to get a foothold at Oxford. However, Catholic chaplains on the campus were systematically opposed to having a house set up by the organization. In the fifties and sixties, this action was led by Father Michael Hollings. His successor, Father Crispian Hollis, even went so far as to describe the influence of Opus Dei as pernicious. Finally, a third chaplain at Oxford, Father Walter Drumm, stated to the Times that he had taken it upon himself to warn new students against recruitment campaigns by Opus Dei.

However, the most scathing and the most damning statement came from an eminently respected prelate, Cardinal Hume, Archbishop of Westminster, who publicly gave Opus Dei a number of strict instructions, the text of which was published in The Tablet of December 12, 1981:

• (1620)

[English]

(1) No person under 18 years of age should be allowed to take any vow or long-term commitment in association with Opus Dei. (2) It is essential that young people who wish to join Opus Dei should first discuss the matter with their parents or legal guardians. If there are, by exception, good reasons for not approaching their families, these reasons should, in every case, be discussed with the local bishop or his delegate. (3) While it is accepted that those who join Opus Dei take on the proper duties and responsibilities of membership, care must be taken to respect the freedom of the individual; first, the freedom of the individual to join or to leave the organization without undue pressure being exerted; secondly, the freedom of the individual at any stage to choose his or her own spiritual director, whether or not the director is a member of Opus Dei. (4) Initiatives and activities of Opus Dei, within the diocese of Westminster, should carry a clear indication of their sponsorship.

[Translation]

Let us now deal with another worrisome aspect of this pious association dedicated to the sanctification of the soul: its political influence, striking in Spain but ever stronger in other countries of Europe and Latin America.

Opus Dei screams when this delicate subject is raised, and it proclaims that the individual activities of its members does not compromise it in any way. As Yvon Le Vaillant wrote:

It is false to claim that the infiltration of Opus Dei members in the higher echelons of public life is simply due to chance, to the natural orders of things, to the competence of those gentlemen.

It was expected. Article 202 of the Constitutions states:

Public responsibilities, particularly those which include active management, constitute a particular means of institute apostolate.

If Spain is invaded by Opus ministers, if there are four Opus ministers in Venezuela, a number of Opus members in the entourage of former President Allessandrini, a presidential candidate in Chile, other Opus ministers in Southern Ireland, in Portugal; if these gentlemen are everywhere to be seen in the corridors of power, it is simply because it happens to be a deliberate conquest, a kind of lasting small conspiracy.

Opus Dei may very well deny that it plays a political role, but it has to admit that the simple fact of having members practically everywhere in government, academic and business circles does give Opus Dei an opportunity to influence decisions which affect the whole society, without having to answer for its activities.

It is false . . .

Le Vaillant goes on to write,

. . . to say that Opus Dei does not belong to any régime, does not follow any political trend, and cannot be identified with any political movement whatsoever. Everything is political, even apolitical attitudes, especially from the moment one has a minimum of impact on the civic reality. Which is the case of Opus. And it is clearer still for Opus when we know that article 7 of the Constitutions (unpublished and secret) states:

Members have great respect for the legitimate laws of civil society.

Valid respect for civil—therefore political—societies of countries where Opus Dei “legally” operates . . . In friendly countries no attempt is ever made to question the society, the establishment(. . .) Everybody must “obey all the laws of the land”.

Particularly the laws of Spain. More specifically, at the time, the laws of the pro-Franco régime. In 1947, when the Constitutions were being drafted, Opus Dei really existed only in Spain and “civil society” to be respected was the direct product of civil war, it was the Francoism of combat. These Constitutions were drafted in a Spanish atmosphere of triumphant Fascism: they will make respect for a dictatorship mandatory.

Indeed the dictator, Francisco Franco, did not err. Beginning in 1957, he will authorize and cover the ever growing wave of Opus members in his successive governments and his ministries, tolerate their pressing presence in his entourage and in the alleys of a power over which he has full control, arbitrate conflicts and arguments in their favour, at the very least without heaping opprobrium or disgrace on them. He needs them.

As it was denying involvement in politics, Opus Dei literally invaded Spanish society during the dark and long night of Francoism. In his book Histoire de l'Espagne franquiste published in 1975 by Robert Laffont in Paris, Max Gallo wrote about this period, and I quote:

And so does Opus Dei, through the men it places, contribute to the interpenetration of the positions it conquers, the thoughts it spreads, religion-politics-academics, and thus it tends to make Catholicism the bond that ties Spanish society, while at the same time making sure it has in this society—and soon in the Church, some will say—a position of hegemony.

As early as 1951, indeed, Open Dei members held almost a quarter of university chairs and, as American journalist Paul Blanshard pointed out in his book Freedom and Catholic Power in Spain and Portugal published by Boston's Beacon Press in 1962, a good many of the other professors felt they had to co-operate with Opus Dei if only to pursue their careers. Some of the professors interviewed by Blanshard considered that Opus Dei was the most serious threat to intellectual freedom under the Franco régime.

Government support and Opus Dei influence in Spanish universities made it possible to train excellent technocrats—members of Opus Dei—who in the early 50s held key positions in the Spanish government and financial circles. Although they did spread the influence of the organization, there is no denying that Opus Dei technocrats did contribute to modernizing Spain in the economic sector. Some people even claim that Opus Dei allegedly contributed to the liberalization of Spanish society in the late 60s, whereas in fact it was the contrary: Opus Dei fought against such liberalization.

This happens to be the conclusion of a study on Spain published by London's The Economist magazine in its March 1, 1986 issue. According to the author of the study, the aim of Opus Dei technocrats was to create such prosperity as to encourage citizens to forget all about politics and leave the destiny of their country in the hands of a non-elected elite.

In its October 16, 1982 issue, the Catholic magazine The Tablet had this to say about Opus Dei members:

[English]

Their political preferences have been recorded. Some distinguished members were associated with the Government of Spain in the 1960s. When the Spanish hierarchy distanced itself from the Franco regime in 1971 there was an Opus-backed attempt to stop the bishops from doing so. B.H. Smith's Church and Politics in Chile has recently drawn attention to Opus's opposition to Allende, and to the support given by some of its members to the Pinochet regime. José Comblin has spoken generally of their backing for military governments in Latin America.

[Translation]

In his book, Catholic Cults, published by Griffin House in Toronto in 1982, André McNicoll tends to agree:

[English]

There are other facets of Opus Dei that are equally troubling, such as its unambiguous inclination for right-wing politics. A few weeks after the violent military coup that brought Augusto Pinochet to power in Chile, the founder of Opus Dei was warmly received in the capital of Santiago. Two members of the present ruling military junta in this conspicuous dictatorship are rumoured to be full-fledged members of the Mundo Obrero.

[Translation]

This fact was confirmed by Time in its June 11, 1986 issue, which repeated that the Pinochet Government had appointed several members of Opus Dei to key government positions, especially in education, while other members had taken control of newspapers and periodicals.

Clifford Longley and Dan van der Vat expressed similar views in The Times of January 12, 1982:

● (1630)

[English]

The late 1960's in Spain were "the age of the three Lopez's"—Sr Lopez Rodo, Minister of Economic Planning, Sr Lopez Bravo, Minister of Industry and later Foreign Minister, and Sr Lopez Letona, Minister of Commerce and later of Finance. They were all OD members and they worked as a team to revive and expand the Spanish economy at a speed which won the amazement and applause of much of the rest of the world. It was not done by Opus Dei as such but by three of its members whose presence in the government nonetheless brought OD influence in Spanish politics to its peak in the period 1969-73. An elitist body with a strong sense of discipline can reasonably be said to have a lot of political influence when three of its members sit in the same cabinet at the same time, jointly running a booming economy.

If the fresh air of post-Franco democracy in Spain has blown away OD's influence at the political summit, though not at still significant lower levels of the state apparatus, its connections with big business are very large and continue to grow.

[Translation]

And that brings us to another reason for which Opus Dei is criticized: its financial power. It is of course particularly obvious in Spain, as explained by the same reporters of the London Times:

[English]

The largest conglomerate in Spain's private sector is RUMASA (Ruiz-Mateos Sociedad Anonima), a holding company with more than 300 subsidiaries including 21 banks and 13 firms which appear in the list of the top 1,500 Spanish enterprises. With about 37,000 on its combined payrolls, RUMASA is the largest employer of labour in Spain's private sector. Its resources amount to about £300m, its annual sales to about £600m and deposits at its banks to about £1,800m. Its shares are not quoted and its profits are not disclosed. In Spain it is often called "Octopus Dei."

Sr. José Maria Ruiz Mateos Jimenez de Tejada owns half the shares in RUMASA and made it what it is. He is a devoted supernumerary member of Opus Dei and one of its main benefactors who also pays more personal income tax than any other Spaniard.

[Translation]

The answer given by Opus Dei is that although it rejoices in the financial success of its members, it is not responsible for them, anymore than it is for their failures. And it certainly is not responsible for the many financial scandals that have tarnished the reputations of some prestigious members of Opus Dei. It is not responsible for the Matesa scandal that rocked

[Senator Hébert.]

Spain. Not responsible for Ortega Pardo, a crook and great benefactor of Opus Dei. Not responsible for Louis Meleux, a French member of Opus Dei who was found dead in the forest of Fontainebleau in March 1965 after a major financial scandal. Not responsible for Prince Jean de Broglie, a member of the National Assembly and right-hand man of Giscard Valéry D'Estaing, whose father, Edmond, was a prominent member of Opus Dei. After some shady transactions with Opus Dei members in Spain and Luxemburg, the Prince and member of the National Assembly was killed in Paris on December 24, 1976, in circumstances that remain mysterious. Not responsible for Roberto Calvi, who was linked to the scandal involving Msgr Marcinkus, formerly the Vatican's banker. Roberto Calvi was found hanged in London on June 18, 1982, and his widow still insists he was murdered.

It is possible that some press groups have exaggerated the role of Opus Dei in these scandals, that it was accused on the basis of circumstantial evidence alone, that the organization was right to protest indignantly that this was libel: "It isn't Opus Dei, but individual members!" Maybe so, but the organization's recruitment policy is precisely to focus on the political, business and administrative elite. Now, these financiers, politicians and senior officials have often made a vow of absolute obedience to Opus Dei. This is all very ambiguous and, it seems to me, hardly compatible with sound democratic principles.

One thing is certain that in a country like Spain, Opus Dei, or rather, since they prefer it that way, members of Opus Dei, have created a veritable economic empire, especially in the banking sector, credit unions, financial corporations and insurance companies. This is all described in detail in a book by Jésus Ynfante, La Prodigiosa aventura del Opus Dei, published in Paris, in Spanish, by Ruedo Ibérica, in 1970.

And of course all these bankers, these financiers, these administrators, Opus Dei members, lead the good life although they made three vows—obedience, chastity, poverty. How can they reconcile their behaviour not only with their vows but also with the very mission of the Church on earth? According to Yvon Le Vaillant, Opus Dei's answer is of disarming simplicity:

Genuine poverty does not consist in not owning material things but in being detached from them, in voluntarily renouncing their domination. This is why some poor are truly rich, and vice versa.

(Another deep thought of Monsignor Escrivá!) Genuine poverty is a state of mind: it is an affective detachment from worldly goods. Since members live in the world, they must show themselves as they feel, as the world sees them.

From this we can therefore conclude that, depending on the case, a member will have the right and duty to use one car, two cars, no car at all. To buy one suit, two suits, eighteen suits. The vow of poverty, of the vice-president of a major bank, is reflected in an expense account sent to the treasurers of Opus Dei: one chauffeur, 6,000 pesetas; four maids, 22,000 pesetas, and so forth.

With Opus Dei, money acquires an odour of sanctity. However, this virtuous justification is not taken very seriously. In Spain, people tell the following story: One day, the rector of the University of Salamanca, a member of Opus Dei, invited a professor to his home, hoping to persuade him to become a member as well. He received him with such pomp and circumstance that the professor smiled and said: "Done, I'll become a member. If that is poverty, then chastity is Brigitte Bardot."

Well established in eighty-seven countries with 75,000 members, Opus Dei possesses a number of media institutions and organizations. According to Jean Duflot and Jacques Kermoval, in their book Entre Dieu et César, published in Paris by Éditions Mègreles in 1982, Opus Dei controls the following:

497 universities or colleges strung across five continents, 696 publications and newspapers, thirty-eight information agencies, fifty-two radio and television programs, twelve film production agencies, and an impressive number of cultural centres.

In all countries, Opus Dei never uses its name to acquire property or institutions. It invents names as reassuring as they are vague, obviously to avoid scaring off customers. In fact, this is entirely in line with Article 9 of the Statutes, which says that:

Opus Dei associates act either individually or through associations which may be of a cultural, artistic or financial nature, and so forth, which are called auxiliary companies. These companies are also, in their activities, required to obey the hierarchic authority of the Institute.

In fact, this is another cover-up operation that confirms Opus Dei's love of secrecy, which of course its defenders deny to their last breath.

In this respect, in an open letter published in the Catholic Register of March 2, 1985, Father J. Lynch, SFM, of Scarborough, Ontario writes:

[English]

Opus Dei affirms that, "all allegation of secrecy, as well as all allegations that Opus Dei does not carry out its activities openly but rather acts under camouflage, using the names of other organizations, have no basis in reality. If that is the case," writes Father Lynch, "then it would be nice if someone in that organization would explain to me why they are registered in the province of Ontario as the Wellspring Cultural Foundation!"

[Translation]

In Quebec, Opus Dei chose a name that has no chance of raising suspicions among the working classes: La Fondation pour la Culture et l'Éducation. Over the recent years, it has bought large properties in the most beautiful districts. I have obtained the folder for the Riverview Centre, located at 3618 Museum Avenue, in Montreal, right in the prestigious "Square Mile". Various services are proposed to students, who "must excel in their studies and have a high degree of maturity". The centre "encourages among young people the practice of Leader skills", provides them "with an opportunity to meet people already involved in the labour market", and finally offers "a course on faith deepening". There is as yet no reference to the whip or the cilice—this must be the privilege of the best candidates. Those who like myself like to read the fine print can also learn that:

Riverview operates under the auspices of the Foundation for Culture and Education, a non-profit corporation registered with the Federal Department of Revenue as a charitable organization.

And they add, almost timidly:

The spiritual activities of Riverview are directed by Opus Dei.

Well now!

In Quebec alone, by interposed foundation Opus Dei has bought a number of real estate properties worth $2 million. In Montreal they are all located in the nicest neighbourhoods: Louis-Colin Street, Plantagenet Street, Pine Avenue, Redpath Crescent; outside Montreal, in Côteau-du-Lac, Opus Dei's address is the Manoir de Beaujeu, classified as a historic monument.

How many Canadians realize that the main purpose of all these houses is to recruit Opus Dei members, by the most crafty means, particularly among the very young?

And Opus Dei supporters continue to affirm that the organization has nothing of a secret society, an expression which usually makes them jump out of their skin. But why, after more than half a century of existence, should Opus Dei members maintain their defence against this criticism which seemingly hurts them more than any other? And among those who insist on blaming the organization for its excessive taste for secrecy, there are not only non-believers. Here are the remarks of London Times religious writer Clifton Longly in a January 26, 1981 article where he sincerely wished Opus Dei would accept criticisms and reform for its own greatest good and that of the Catholic Church:

● (1640)

[English]

Opus Dei professes to abhor secrecy, so there is no barrier to the publication of its constitutions. That would eliminate the persistent rumour that those constitutions do in fact demand secrecy: sceptics could search for such a rule, and not find it.

Secrecy generates neurosis, both inside and outside any organization which practises it. It exposes it to unpleasant surprises when curious journalists discover some curious facts, and publish them. Secrecy stands as a barrier between such an organization and those whose proper business it is to know what goes on, in this case the bishop of any diocese in which Opus Dei operates.

Secrecy generates its own unhealthy magnetism to certain types of personality, and repels others; no organization which has an air of secrecy can also claim to attract a cross-section of human types. Secrecy, above all, points to a lack of real confidence.

[Translation]

Clifton Langley has obviously hit a sore point: if it has nothing to hide and if it is not a secret society, why does Opus Dei consistently refuse to publish its statutes? The answer is obvious: by doing so, Opus Dei would prove it has many characteristics of a secret society. We have already quoted Article 193 of these statutes which formally prohibits their publication. In fact, they were finally made public in 1970 by a former member of Opus Dei, Jésus Ynfante, in a book published in Spanish in 1970, which I mentioned earlier.

In several other articles, the excuse of "collective humility" is given for ordering members to "be discreet in discussing Opus Dei with non-members" (Article 6), and since Opus Dei "wants to live hidden", it will not have "a common name or a designation by which members are designated". (Article 189) furthermore (Article 190), "everything the associates do is not attributed to Opus Dei, but all the good they do is attributed to God". It sounds wonderful! And finally (Article 191), "lack of discretion could be a major obstacle for apostolic work, or lead to problems within their own family or in their professional life. Numerary and supernumerary members must be determined to remain prudently silent regarding the names of other members and should not reveal to anyone their own membership in Opus Dei, even with the intention of making the institution known, without special permission from the local director. The same discretion is particularly binding on members of the Institute and associates who have left the Institute for any reason, and so forth."

As we can see, Opus Dei has some excellent reasons for prohibiting the publication of its statutes. But then, the organization should not get upset when its opponents, both inside and outside the Catholic Church, refer to it as a secret society or Holy Mafia. Mystère oblige . . .

That being said, I am glad I live in a democratic and open country where the Little Sisters of the Poor, the Knights of Columbus, the Moonies and Opus Dei are free to express their beliefs. But when somebody asks me to grant special status, that of a corporation sole, to a mere priest, the reason given that Opus Dei is a very special organization, I protest. Sure, Opus Dei is a very special organization and I think I have proved it, but it is the kind that makes me sick.

Consequently, I will vote against Bill S-7, and I hope all my honourable colleagues will do likewise.

Amen.

On motion of Senator Le Moyne, debate adjourned.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), I move:

[Senator Hébert.]

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Honourable senators, this committee meeting was scheduled for 5 o'clock this afternoon.

[English]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted to introduce the motion, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources have power to sit while the Senate is sitting today and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Duff Roblin: No, it is not, honourable senators. At least, I do not agree with adopting this motion. This makes the fourth committee of the Senate of which I am a member meeting at the same time this afternoon, or having the power to do so. I present my protest once again. I would like some assurance from those who are setting up these committee schedules that this sort of conflict will be taken under consideration. It seems to me to be quite unreasonable to have four committees of the Senate, served by members other than myself, meeting at the same time as the Senate itself is meeting. That contradicts the clear rule of the Senate that committees should not meet when the Senate is sitting—although we very often give permission to ignore that rule—and it certainly seems to be quite contrary to the policy that the whips have been following that these Senate committees are staggered in scheduling so that we do not get this kind of conflict. But such appears not to be the case.

I myself let the first instance pass without raising a protest in the emphatic manner in which I do at present, but I am not prepared to do the same thing now. Although the Senate may decide that this motion will be approved, that will certainly be done without my consent.

Senator Frith: It cannot be done without leave.

Senator Roblin: I have not refused leave. I believe the Speaker asked whether leave was granted; I said nothing on leave. I think that is obscurantism, or something. I am not prepared to stand on that, but I am prepared to stand on the substance. As far as the substance is concerned, I am against it.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, speaking to the motion, I understand the concerns of Senator Roblin, and the points he has raised are well taken. However, I do point out that this committee was not scheduled to meet at the same time as the others. It was scheduled for 5 o'clock, and it was hoped that the Senate might be adjourned by that time. While his points are well taken, it is not exactly in the category of the other committees, which were, as he said, overlapping.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps I could make a brief comment. That may well be true, but the effect of the matter is precisely as I have described it, that four committees are authorized to meet at the same time as the Senate itself is meeting, and if one is a member of each one of those four, one has to have some reservations about the procedure.

Hon. Gildas Molgat: Perhaps Senator Frith could indicate whether there is a reason. Is it because there are witnesses appearing before the Energy Committee? Can he say why the committee meeting was scheduled?

Senator Frith: No, it is not for that reason. As I understand it, the meeting concerns witnesses, but it is in camera and it proposes to sit to deal with the business of the committee, and particularly to decide on hearing witnesses this week. It has to know whether they are to tell witnesses if they are to appear this week. So, while the meeting of the committee will deal with witnesses, it is not because of the presence of witnesses today.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: So, is the motion carried, on division?

Senator Roblin: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Duff Roblin moved the second reading of Bill C-37, respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a bill which will perhaps require some debate in the Senate, and at this stage I am moving that it receive second reading.

Several days ago the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce tabled its report covering a pre-study of Bill C-37. I must say that the committee tackled its responsibilities on pre-study very seriously, indeed, and held a number of meetings right across the country to ensure that there was an opportunity for all views to be expressed, regardless of the citizens' place of residence in Canada. The report, for those who read it—and I hope that some have done so—gives a pretty full review of what transpired at the various hearings of the committee. It is apparent from reading the list of those who gave evidence that, apart from the usual departmental briefs, almost all of the witnesses represented the management side of the softwood lumber industry in Canada, apart from the notable exception of Mr. Jack Munro of the International Woodworkers Union of America, who is the head of the principal union in the forest industry, and who appeared before us at our meeting in Vancouver.

Following those extensive—perhaps I might even say exhaustive—hearings, the committee concluded that despite the flaws it detected in the legislation, it would advise the Senate to pass Bill C-37 without any amendment. I agree with that conclusion, and therefore I am pleased to present this motion for second reading.

The history of events which led up to the writing of Bill C-37 is a melancholy record. It is a melancholy record, in one respect at least, to the shifting and stiffening protectionist sentiment in the industrial sector of the United States of America—a movement which, in my view, many of us in Canada failed to recognize in time as being stamped with the character which it ultimately displayed. In this issue I think that Canadian hopes were placed in respect of a happy issue on the softwood lumber dispute that was adjudicated in the United States in 1983.

In 1983 complaints similar to those that were raised at the adjudication of 1986 were dealt with, following the usual procedure in the United States trade dispute system. On that occasion in 1983 our interests received favourable consideration. I believe I am not being unfair in saying that in 1983 facts were still important in the American investigative process, and there was a set of objective criteria—certainly in my view more objective criteria than those which have prevailed recently—and, at the same time, Canada had allies within the United States system, the combination of which was able to produce a verdict which I thought was certainly favourable and also fair in respect of the issue in question.

But by 1986 things had greatly changed. Canadian lumber exports to the United States had been rising, assisted in two particulars, at least, by an increase in the efficiency of the industry in this country, which was quite significant, and also by the falling Canadian dollar. Those two factors enabled our exports of softwood lumber to the United States to reach record levels, and the domestic American lumber interests responded to the situation by putting together a combination of political and economic muscle that certainly could not be ignored.

In the process a new interpretation of American trade law was developed, an interpretation which is quite different from that which was in force in 1983, and an interpretation which was supported—and, indeed, if not manufactured—by a protectionist mood evident not only within the American lumber industry but certainly within the American Congress itself.

So, where we succeeded in 1983, we failed in 1986, and given the political momentum which protectionism has received in the American Congress, the Government of Canada concluded—although some may say rather late in the day—that our best interests would be served by interrupting the process of adjudication of a trade dispute under the American rules, and attempting a political solution by way of negotiation.

From the evidence before the committee it was clear that the Canadian lumber interests did not agree with that decision on the part of the government. If I understand their position correctly, those interests opposed negotiation, and they preferred to take their chances on the due process, as they described it, in the American trade adjudication system, and, indeed, the American courts. They were prepared, failing success in that venue, to make an appeal for a decision under GATT.

In my opinion the Canadian government chose the better alternative, because with the political momentum for protectionism riding so high in the United States as it is today, it seems to me that it was idle dreaming to expect substantial relief either through the American trade system or through the American courts. Of course, if that failed, and we had recourse to GATT, and our recourse was successful, the power of enforcement would leave something to be desired so far as GATT is concerned. In fact, one might say that it is lacking. It seems to me that on this study of the situation, the industry seriously misread its chances of success if it had followed the course it recommended.

The government did something else: It decided to move by negotiation. But this Canadian domestic difference of opinion had unfortunate consequences, because for a short time, and at a critical time, communication between the government and the industry was not what it should have been. It is alleged in the report of the committee that it broke down. Perhaps that is going a bit far, but it certainly was not as close as it could have been, and that was to no one's particular benefit.

The government then proceeded on the path of what proved to be very difficult negotiation, and at the last moment the two governments, the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States, reached an agreement on a Memorandum of Understanding, which is now enshrined and is the basis of Bill C-37.

I will touch briefly on some of the principal clauses of that Memorandum of Understanding which we now find in the bill. One of them was that the Canadian government would levy an export tax of 15 per cent on lumber exports to the United States. This was the alternative to the Government of the United States levying an import tax of its own on imports from Canada, presumably also of 15 per cent. As this levy of 15 per cent is likely to realize around $600 million, which under the memorandum of agreement Canada would retain, and as it would not find its way into the American treasury, the advantages of that are considerable.

The United States government also agreed to refund about $82 million which had previously been deposited by the Canadian industry pending the solution of the complaint, and that money has, I believe, found its way back into the books of the Canadian softwood lumber industry.

The 15 per cent tax was to be based on the final mill price. Understandably enough, this did not suit many Canadians, because they were hoping that the tax would be based on the value-added figure which would amount to a smaller tax than what was eventually decided in the Memorandum of Understanding. That certainly was not helpful. In the Memorandum of Understanding certain exemptions were granted by the United States to some remanufacturers and other special groups in the Canadian industry. The tax could also be converted from a levy, to be raised by the federal Government of Canada, on exports to the United States to provincial stumpage charges, provided that this conversion was approved by mutual agreement between the two governments. There was a 30-day cancellation clause in the agreement.

● (1700)

The government believes that the Memorandum of Understanding has certain advantages which redound to the credit of Canada. The fact that we are able to keep the $600 million of duty or export tax money in Canada, and that it is not money to be transferred to the American treasury, is certainly an advantage, particularly as arrangements are being made to transfer that tax from the federal treasury to the treasuries of the provinces from which the exports are being made. That will allow them, I hope, to put some of the money toward improving their forest assets. The agreement also limited the intrusion of the U.S. government and U.S. industry into Canadian provincial and industry concerns—a demand which was very strongly pressed by the U.S. industry, but which does not appear in the Memorandum of Understanding. The Canadian government also believes that by reason of this agreement we have avoided, at least for the time being, if not permanently, the establishment of certain precedents in connection with United States trade rules, which might have an undesirable effect on other items of commerce between the two countries. I think it can be said that clearly from the Canadian point of view the Memorandum of Understanding is a damage limitation exercise, and if we cannot get the best to happen, we can certainly try to prevent the worst. I think that has been achieved by the Memorandum of Understanding.

As I have said, the committee heard industry complaints on this question of process. The industry opposed negotiation, and stressed the desirability of determination of the final issues through the American trade dispute system. I am quite satisfied that the government was right on this occasion, particularly in view of its responsibilities, which are not limited to the particular industry in question but which are national in scope. Therefore, they must consider the implications of the agreement as opposed to the American adjudication process on the totality of the Canadian trade situation. As a result, the government concluded, as I do, that negotiations were the way to go. I note in passing that Mr. Jack Munro, whom I have mentioned before, thought so, too. His criticism was that the Canadian government should have started negotiations sooner.

I want to tell the chamber that there are real flaws in this Memorandum of Understanding, and it is no use trying to overlook them. For example, there are a large number of small exporters in the maritimes which are—unfairly, in my view—caught in this 15 per cent net. It is perfectly true that they represent a very small proportion of the trade with the United States—very small, indeed—but, nevertheless, they have been caught in this particular situation in a manner which is not fair. Some of the exporters had been exempted under previous negotiations with the United States and some had not. That certainly is not a satisfactory situation. Remanufacturers of lumber, too, are in a difficult position. Some of them were excluded by the previous arrangement with the United States and some are not excluded. Those who are not excluded are paying a 15 per cent tax which they deem to be unfair. Canadian producers who import logs from the United States, turn them into something else, and export them back to the United States, believe it or not, are also being asked to pay this 15 per cent tax. It seems to me that these deficiencies in the Memorandum of Understanding are real and that we ought to take note of them.

The government is trying to make some progress in having the Memorandum of Understanding amended to take care of these complaints, which I regard as legitimate. I am quite sure that it will be very difficult to secure the kind of changes in the Memorandum of Understanding that are wanted, because the American industry is still as hawkish on Canadian trade in softwood lumber as they ever were. The prospects of success in negotiations are not certain, but they are certainly not hopeless either. So I have to believe that we will make some progress in that connection.

Despite the shortcomings—and I think I have described them quite frankly—which were ventilated at the meetings of the committee across the country, it was the strong consensus of all the witnesses, even those who felt they were being unfairly treated, that we would do well to accept the Memorandum of Understanding, and thus Bill C-37, rather than not to do so. I think that is an intelligent conclusion to have reached. The committee agreed with that point of view, and their recommendation is that the bill should pass without amendment.

I offer some concluding reflections on the whole of this matter. One is that, fortunately, the 15 per cent tax is not likely to cause serious or widespread job loss or unemployment in the industry. As a matter of fact, Mr. Jack Munro testified that he did not expect that more than 1,000 to 1,500 jobs would be affected over several years. You can say that certainly for the people concerned it is a serious matter, and there is no mistake. He pointed out that improved technology in the lumber industry was affecting unemployment and job loss far more than this particular measure is doing, which I think is cause for some reflection. I can also say that so far—and I do no more than to say “so far”—the economic effects of the 15 per cent tax have been tolerable to the Canadian lumber industry. The American consumer up to the present has been paying part of the levy. Certainly the Canadian lumber industry tycoon—and I will not give his name, because he would not like me describing him in that way—who said that the industry would be an “industrial paraplegic” as a result of this bill has not been an accurate forecaster to date. Heaven knows what will happen in the future, and I make no prophecy with respect to it.

We can also console ourselves—and I suppose that is the correct phrase—that some unexpected dollars could very well go into the improvement of and investment in the forest industry across the country. If the provinces use the substantial sums they will be receiving from the federal government—totalling perhaps some $600 million in the course of the year—it may turn out to be a very good thing.

It is a long road that has no turns, but perhaps there are some aspects about which we may console ourselves.

Nevertheless, the whole experience must be described as highly distasteful to Canadians. It has exposed us to the raw power of American special interests, in this case the lumber industry, and the inclination of Congress to let them have their way. That is food for thought. Probably from the American point of view, in the medium-term, and perhaps in the not so medium-term, this arrangement will turn out to be quite unnecessary and unproductive insofar as the United States economy is concerned. I certainly hope that some study will be given to that issue in the councils of that nation. Above all, it will certainly lend a powerful impetus to find a fairer and better system of managing our mutual interests in trade. We cannot afford to quarrel on this question of trade, because both sides have too much at stake. We have to look for better ways. We have to find some system of tempering the manifold difficulties that American protectionism holds for fair trade between our two countries, and we have to look at our own posture in the matter, because while we hear a good deal about American protectionism and the problems it brings to us Canadians from time to time, we have to remember that in all this, as in so many other aspects of life, there are two sides to the story.

While at this time I have been presenting the Canadian case, I am sure American spokesmen would ask certain questions of us as to what we are doing in order to bring about a fairer system of international trade between our two nations.

So, there we have it, honourable senators. We have Bill C-37. It is not a happy bill to bring to the chamber. However, it is one that it is essential we should accept, because in my view it represents the best issue from what was certainly a very difficult and trying situation. I think we can hope with some justification that the ingenuity and the technical capacity of the Canadian industry will be such that they will be able to rise above this impediment, which we hope will not be a permanent feature of the trade situation between our two countries, and to make sure that that exceedingly important industry, with its ramifications for the welfare of so many Canadians, does prosper and grow in the days ahead.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

On Motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's international relations.—(Honourable Senator Doody)

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I ask that this order stand in the name of Senator Doyle.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Order stands in name of Senator Doyle.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1048)

ADDRESS

OF

FRANÇOIS MITTERRAND

PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

TO

MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

IN THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA

ON

MONDAY, MAY 25, 1987

The President was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada, and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate, and Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): Order, please.

Mr. President, on behalf of all Members of the Senate and the House of Commons, we welcome you to the Parliament of Canada.

● (1510)

[English]

We are honoured to have you in our midst.

[Translation]

I now invite the Right Honourable the Prime Minister to introduce our distinguished guest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. President, it is a profoundly moving occasion for me to introduce you to the Members of our House of Commons and Senate. Your presence in this Chamber marks a highpoint in relations between our two countries.

The visit you embark upon today is without doubt inspired by friendship. Yet we know it must be viewed equally in a broader context, one that embraces both continuity and change.

Your purpose in coming here was to affirm the enduring ties that bind us: language and culture, our allegiance to the values of freedom and democracy, and the solidarity that has drawn us closer in times of crisis.

From the trenches of Picardy in one war, to the beaches of Normandy in the next, thousands of Canadians have made the ultimate sacrifice for liberty.

As they are remembered in the hearts of their fellow citizens in Canada, so is their memory honoured in France, from Vimy Ridge to Beny-sur-Mer. One is a famed memorial, and the other a simple country cemetery where French and English-speaking Canadians, officers and enlisted men, without distinction as to language or rank, have found a final resting place together.

Nowhere is our nation more united, Mr. President, than in such small corners of yours. In rendering homage at our National Cenotaph this morning, you have not only honoured all Canadians, but also the memory of those brave souls.

The durability of France, the constancy and creativity she represents, are personified today in one of her most distinguished sons, a great President who has our respect and admiration and whom we welcome.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Yet at the same time, your official visit comes amid the irreversible tide that sweeps all shores and demands a new perspective.

[English]

Our country has taken decisive steps in the course of an intensive but necessary evolution which has made us more aware of our own identity.

We have summoned the national resolve and the clarity of purpose to face the vital challenges of our time. We resolved them in our own country, among ourselves, as we should, in the full exercise of our sovereignty. In so doing, we have found the way to a new national consensus. Today, Canada is following that path with determination, fully aware of our responsibility toward the future.

Twenty years after General de Gaulle's visit, you will find, Mr. President, a Canada at peace with itself, aware of its diversity and resolved to recognize it with respect, tolerance and generosity. In the week ahead you will cross a country that spans a continent, a nation confident of its role and eager to contribute its share to world peace and justice.

For the first time a President of the French Republic will officially travel across Canada to the heartland of the Prairies and then on to a great metropolitan area in Toronto. For the first time he will bear France's greetings to Canadians of Acadian descent after renewing the special cordial ties between his country and Quebec.

Today we turn a new page in the history of the relationship between France and Canada. We cannot change the past, but we can shape our future. What matters is the chapter we write together. It holds great promise for political rapprochement, industrial co-operation and increased trade.

Mr. President, on behalf of all Canadians may I tell you that your presence here today will contribute enormously to the renewal of that relationship.

[Translation]

Another way to fulfil these hopes is by achieving franco-phone solidarity. History will credit you as the artisan of the Paris Summit, where heads of state and government from some 40 countries, and all five continents, gathered last year.

The agreement we reached with the Governments of Quebec and New Brunswick, as you know, removed the final obstacle to building a new solidarity within the French-speaking community. The Government of Canada eagerly joined this worthy venture.

The interests of Canada as a whole, embracing both French and English cultures, demand that we foster our participation in La Francophonie and the Commonwealth. This double window on the world makes Canada the meeting-place of two of the great currents of international relations.

As a manifestation of our commitment to La Francophonie, it was our desire that Quebec City be the site of the second Summit this coming September. Let no one overlook the significance of holding the Summit on the banks of the St. Lawrence. It is a clear and serene recognition of Canada's, and Quebec's, role in the francophone family.

We desire to fulfill this vocation as equals, following an approach focused on modern and concrete objectives.

Other, equally pressing considerations, warrant and require closer ties with France.

These stem from Europe's importance in international politics and economics. As an inexhaustible reservoir of human resources and skills, and as an enlarged Community, Europe plays a pre-eminent role in world affairs.

How could anyone overlook the unified domestic market of 320 million consumers the Europe of the 90s will become? And how could anyone not see that France lies at the very heart of the grand design of Europe?

[English]

That is another reason why we are working to develop even closer ties with your country.

• (1520)

But our co-operation must be nourished with substance, and must develop around initiatives that touch the basic interests of our two nations. We must expand the scope of our bilateral activities, involving scientists, for example, and business leaders. Above all, we must never relent in the persistence of our efforts. For we are only at the beginning of the road, which is as long as the successes awaiting us can be far-reaching.

And there shall be problems, perhaps some serious problems, along the way. The issue of fishing quotas and the fixing of the boundary line for the offshore limits around St. Pierre and Miquelon constitute a test of our political maturity and ability to resolve our differences through the promotion of our mutual interests. France must surely be aware of the difficult nature of this controversy, and of the seriousness of the issues it raises for our fishermen in Atlantic Canada, as well as for Canadian sovereignty. I know, Mr. President, you share my view that this matter be resolved fairly.

[Translation]

Your stay among us comes at a moment in history when the dynamics of the situation and our own aims have converged. We have before us a wide field of responsibilities. We have before us opportunities which history, and our own peoples, will not permit to slip away.

The time has come not only for awareness, but for action; not only of renew promises, but to fulfill them; not only to evoke our roots, but to make them bear fruit.

We Canadians cherish our unique heritage from France, her élan, her culture, her humanism. We cherish her as one of our two mother countries.

Loyal as they are to the values of the past, we are also mindful of the realities of tomorrow. That is why Canadians choose to go forward together, with you, with France.

Mr. President, I speak on behalf of all Canadians in saying how happy and delighted we are to have you among us.

All week long, Mrs. Mitterrand and you will receive the special welcome we reserve for our fondest friend. At every stop, you will be reminded that Canada is, for France, a land of friendship and brotherhood.

Members of the House, distinguished Senators, I am honoured to present to you the President of the French Republic, Mr. François Mitterrand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. François Mitterrand (President of the Republic of France): Speakers of the House and the Senate, Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen. I am moved by the tribute I have just received on behalf of France and I am honoured by this most cordial welcome to your Parliament.

After meeting this morning with Her Excellency the Governor General and with the Prime Minister, I now have the privilege of speaking to you, ladies and gentlemen, the elected representatives of Canada and guardians of the institutions that have made your country one of great democracies of the world.

Actually, I was a parliamentarian in my country for thirty-five years, in the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies. Since 1981, however, when I was elected President of the Republic, I have had to leave all that behind me. I do not have the right to enter the very precincts where I worked for so many years and where, in fact, I seldom received such a unanimous welcome. Sometimes there are feelings of regret, and when visiting one of our friends, as I am doing today, I like to compensate. I take a personal pleasure, as well as pride, in representing my country before assemblies like yours, and I want to thank you once again.

Perhaps I may comment, first of all, that Canada's political structures, that your country's economic and social framework and the positions you defend at the international level, reflect a focus on common ideals.

France and Canada share the conviction that they cannot conceive of a future without pluralism, without alternating majorities, the unrestricted expression of divergent views, and the rule of a majority that respects minorities.

On behalf of the French people, I would like to transmit to you, and through you to every man, woman and child in this country, the feelings of friendship of our country for yours. The message that France sends you is one of friendship and solidarity. And I could repeat, word for word, what was said by the Prime Minister, and I thank him for saying them. Because of the kind of society we have chosen, and notwithstanding differences that are grounded in our respective history, geography and customs, dialogue is second nature to us.

Indeed, our past has made the relationship between Canada and France a rather special one. Since the beginning of modern history and the time of the great explorers, the French have played a major role in the life of your country. The descendants of those who came here originally, who today number several million, represent over one quarter of the population and occupy a unique and inimitable position alongside their English-speaking compatriots. We see communities that are dynamic and enterprising, faithful to their traditions but also very much of this modern day and age and this continent. Unique and, at the same time, universal, they contribute to the rich diversity of this great country of yours. Canada's bi-cultural dimension brings joy to the heart of every Frenchman, and to my own, I can assure you, and perhaps I may also say a few words, although there would be so much to say, about the sacrifices made by your fathers and brothers in two World Wars. Whatever their origins and wherever they had their homes, whatever opposing sides they may have taken in the past, they were now fighting on the same side, with us. Would victory and freedom have been possible without the presence of these young men from all over the world, and particularly from Canada?

Prime Minister, you mentioned several historic places where the memory, suffering and death of so many are mourned, and where tragedy is still present in the hearts of so many mourners. It was the price we had to pay for freedom.

● (1530)

Ladies and gentlemen, we owe so much to your soldiers, and I would like to take this opportunity, at this solemn moment, to address these words to your compatriots who are listening to us now.

If I may, I would like to comment on some of the major issues of the day. My choice will be rather arbitrary, because otherwise there would be too much to say, and too little time to say it.

The world is in a crisis. Some people would say it always is. In any case, we have the feeling that the crisis we are experiencing today may be worse than at other times in our history. Our problems are similar. We have to fight unemployment. We have to create a new environment to create new jobs and to prepare our countries for the next century. We must intensify all forms of intellectual creativity, we must intensify research and increase the capabilities of our intellects from childhood onward, so that we will finally have the means to master the secrets of the material world and thus enhance the human condition. We have to modernize our production equipment. We have to make our economies more competitive, since we are largely dependant on external trade. We have every interest in further developing trade between our countries. One imagines that Canada's natural tendency would probably be to trade mainly with the United States of America, while ours would be to trade with our Common Market neighbours. Nevertheless, I think that considering the modest level of our trade relationship, our two countries could do far more and far better. I hope that during this visit, we will be able to explore some possibilities for the future.

In fact, various agreements concluded in recent years, have provided for increased co-operation in space, oceanology, oceanography and biotechnology, all of which involve new procedures that will stimulate industrial innovation. In January, we agreed to facilitate relations between our small business groups. Although relations between our scientists, industrialists and business people are little developed, there has been definite progress, both bilaterally—I am thinking of the SPOT satellite—and in connection with multilateral projects, and I refer to the European Eureka project. When our interests clash, on occasion, as on the fisheries issue, I believe that with a little common sense, concern for the law and the political will to settle disputes, we should be able to resolve these problems.

Ladies and gentlemen, at this point I would like to comment briefly on the world economic situation. The problems have been identified, and a response is of the essence. Prime Minister, in two weeks or so, we will be meeting again in Venice, where we shall have to deal with some of the problems that are of international concern.

I want to stress the urgency of some of the decisions to be made, and on an occasion that would seem entirely appropriate for discussing, in full recognition of the sovereignty and equality of our respective countries, the major problems we share, I would like to take this opportunity to outline four principles.

The first of these directions would be for countries with a trade surplus to use whatever leeway they have to boost their own growth and stimulate the growth of other countries.

The second direction would be to promote the recovery of the international monetary system by taking steps to stabilize exchange rates with respect to mutually agreed reference zones, to lower interest rates and to better co-ordinate efforts to control market speculation.

Thirdly, we should try to remove protectionist barriers in every area, since protectionism is present everywhere, in the services, industrial and agricultural sectors. I know that discussions are under way with your neighbour, the United States of America, a special free trade agreement within the framework of GATT and along common rules. I wish you the best of success, granted that we have accepted common rules that apply to you as to ourselves. However, let us be open on this. Let us quit fighting over deadlocks between Europe and the American continent or Third World countries. Let us admit that protectionism is found in each and every country, and that what may be left for us to do is to compare and identify where protectionism is openly allowed in legislation or regulation, where it hides in hypocritical fashion behind the customs and traditions, where it takes the form of imperialist action, or simply where it so often appears by way of laissez-faire when leaders responsible for managing the world should in fact strive to reach an agreement for the well-being of all nations.

I have mentioned those three directions, but what I have is foremost in my mind at the present time is the fourth one. It is a concern with the future of the Third World, of developing countries, and especially with the problem of indebtedness. One may consider postponing the date of payment, extending repayment schedules for the most indebted countries. One could think of designing more generous procedures in the Club of Paris. But in my opinion, at the present time, we should mostly consider, without excluding any other solution, recycling on a multilateral basis part of the financial surpluses of those countries which do have surpluses. We should think of Japan, we might after all think of Germany too. Whoever reaches that stage, enjoys a fairly prosperous economy, should become very clearly aware of a new stage of responsibility. We would then increase the means of the international monetary fund. We would increase the capital of the World Bank and help those countries of the Third World which are among the poorest get through this tragedy which will eventually hurt the whole world.

I frequently tell my fellow citizens that there are probably two major war threats for the next century: The atomic bomb or nuclear war with unending confrontations leading to a competition that may reach a paroxysmal stage, but also the widening of the gap between rich and poor countries. Both our countries, though, are among the few which have decided to assign a significant percentage of their national product to the co-operation with the least developed countries.

I am aware of the increasing share of the Canadian revenue which is set aside every year throughout the world, through private initiatives or through the actions of public agencies, to fight under-development, and I thank you for that. I thank you, for that cause has been a deep, longstanding concern of mine.

• (1540)

As for France, it has significantly increased its assistance, especially in the past six years, and is intending to reach as quickly as possible, as recommended by international institutions, the figure of .7 per cent of its Gross National Product to be used for development assistance.

But what is the reality we are facing today? Southern countries or so-called southern countries are hurt more than others by the slowing down of international growth, by the dramatic fall in the prices of raw materials, and by the burden of their debt.

Is it normal that the poor countries should be forced to refund every year more than the new amounts getting in? Can they ask their populations to produce more and more all the time while receiving an ever smaller share of the product of their work?

Remember when a procedure was set up in the early 1980's, when some countries in the Middle East had considerable surplus capital. Let us do it again, let us follow that procedure. Since the end of the Second World War, those circumstances have occurred several times. I hope your country as well as mine are willing to take a leadership role in this vast initiative which will lead responsible, industrial, advanced nations to understand that there lies the answer for themselves as well as for others to the great question mark of our time.

Of course, ladies and gentlemen, the future of our planet does not only depend on the capabilities of states to ensure an adequate economic growth for the world. That will not solve all the needs of mankind. That future depends even more immediately on their capacity to preserve peace.

I made some comments on the organization of markets, on the fight against monetary disorder, on the necessary assistance to the development of poor countries. But I would like to say a few words about peace.

Having been invaded three times in 75 years, France is very much aware of the drama this represents, I can assure you. I referred to the help of Canadian soldiers. I lived through World War II myself, and I was born during World War I. How could my generation not be essentially marked by this nearly cyclical return to confrontations which, in the case of Europe alone, were the signal of a tragic civil war from which we are barely beginning to recover!

Shortly after the second conflict my country became a signatory to the Charter of the United Nations and its underlying principles. As a permanent member of the Security Council, France never hesitated to support the international organization. She helped it fulfil its duties, she denounced encroachments upon the rights of nations and individuals, she contributed as required to the peacekeeping operations. On behalf of the United Nations, France is still present on sites where the strongest passions clash.

The fact remains that the ratio of military strength, especially between the two most powerful nations, has led to massive stocks of weapons and a dangerous imbalance.

Despite efforts, the disarmament negotiations have not made it possible to limit, let alone reduce the massive strategic arsenals of the United States of America and of the Soviet Union.

The so-called ABM treaty, to this day the only major arms control agreement still in force, is the object of vigorous debates which make us fear it may be weakened and even disappear.

Only the negotiations on so-called intermediate nuclear weapons, which do not cross the Atlantic but can reach all European countries, now show some signs of progress. And I say loudly from this podium that France hopes they will be successful. Let us not forget, incidentally, that the object of disarmament is to increase rather than to decrease security, to maintain rather than to compromise balances.

Our hope is that an intermediate nuclear weapons agreement is only one step towards disarmament, a step linked with the strategic disarmament on one hand—some 11,000 nuclear warheads in the Soviet Union, 12,000 to 13,000 in the United States of America—a step linked with the strategic disarmament on one hand and, on the other, with the disarmament of conventional forces, chemical weapons, or any other kind of weapon of whatever range which may lead to confrontation. All this within the limits of control, of flawless verification, that is to say of full respect for previous commitments.

France, as you know, is not party to the ongoing negotiations. She was not asked to sit at the disarmament negotiation table. Had she been asked, she would have refused. Indeed, as long as the two major powers remain at the stage where they are now, with the number of nuclear warheads I just mentioned, before asking others, particularly Great Britain or France which do have weapons, of course, but barely one hundred or two hundreds, great progress would have to be accomplished. Such is the theme I developed before the United Nations in 1983. But my country, like her neighbours, simply has to be concerned over a conflict or over the ongoing disarmament negotiations. And if we aim to preserve our independent strategy of nuclear deterrent, upon which we believe our security rests, we want to add our efforts to those of others to reduce tensions.

Ladies and gentlemen, France lies only a few hundred kilometres from the world on the other side of this Europe cut in half, from Teheran to Yalta. With her immediate neighbours she founded a community, six at first, a specifically continental group, then nine, ten, twelve. This Europe, we would like it to be able to organize its economy, 320 million people, a wider market than that of the United States of America, much wider than that of the Soviet Union, a body of technical and scientific competence, larger than Japan's, a historical capacity not to dominate—for henceforth such words cannot apply to the world's future—but to guarantee the presence of each of the states and nations of which it is made up.

Such is our first choice, our first will, our first objective. We want to build Europe and we are dedicated to this end. We are confronted with many obstacles. I was a young parliamentarian in 1948, nearly 40 years ago, attending the first European Congress, three years after the end of World War II, a congress chaired by Churchill. The Germans were there, and in each of our families grief, sorrow, separation and suffering still marked our mind when they had not marked our body. And yet a few of us were seeking reconciliation, to begin by France-Germany reconciliation, to help the other nations of Europe. Building Europe as we are doing today is not to dream nor to project onto an unknown horizon the too well known difficulties we are experiencing today. Europe is our main objective, but not the only one. The other, as I have already said, is to contribute to world harmony, to make sure that France, a country which maintained a presence for so long in Africa and elsewhere, as it still does, but differently, uses every opportunity to bring cultures closer together. Hence the importance of La Francophonie.

By the way, I am coming back shortly to your country to take part in the 2nd Francophone Summit, in Quebec City, next September. You will have seen much of me within two seasons, but I am not complaining and I am not expecting to return the following year to Ottawa, where the Seven will meet again according to the agreed schedule, under a somewhat systematic moira which makes us meet year after year, always to face the very same problems, but in different locations.

Europe, the francophone brotherhood, universal enlightenment through peace and development, all these issues bring me to say that I could not conclude these remarks before your Parliament without raising with you the issue of human rights. In doing so, according to a theme which I have often developed in my own country, I shall borrow a quote which was also used by Hemingway in the title of one of his major works, For whom the bell tolls: When a freedom somewhere in the world is lost, when the right of a man is denied, when a life is unfairly broken, the bell tolls not only for that individual, but also for all of us. The struggle for freedom which you may lead, together with a great many others, in your daily actions is consistent with the major battles which have been fought for centuries to liberate man and every individual in the states where freedom would be secured. That may also be part of learning about democracy; in view of the present state of the world and current trends, we have every reason to fear for freedom. How good it makes me feel to be able to say that in a forum of free men and women! It is certainly the secret reason behind this deep understanding which unites us, above and beyond our conflicts and quarrels. We are part of that family. I am well aware of the problems you have to face in your own country, as you certainly are of those which are spreading in mine.

I am not forgetting the special duties of my country—I will stress them tomorrow and the day after—to that part of Canada which once belonged to France and which, to this day, continues to reflect its culture, language and tastes. I send very warm greetings to all the men and women who are listening to me and who have lived and are still living that experience, but I fully realize that a country as great as yours needs to collect all its varied components to stand up and act.

The ideals which I have tried to define are in line with those expressed by the Prime Minister and make up our heritage—and when I say our heritage, I mean yours and mine.

Let us be proud of this heritage. Let us not try to impose it, but let us try to convince. If Canada and France are seen by the world to be taking together simple but necessary action, as they did in the past and as they will even more in the future, along the path which we have chosen, then a visit such as this will have its place in our destiny, one which our conscience dictates, one where friendship and brotherhood prevail, one which will see Canada and France as two countries and nations increasingly associated in their daily progression and able to propose to the world a few remedies to the ills of the world, a world which is concerned and dying, but also a world which is born in each of your regions, provinces, states, everywhere from East to West, and from North to South, a huge country where the future is being born. There are, at times, a few men and women lost in the immensity . . . but there are cities, large centres, an industry, a growing agriculture, there is hope everywhere and a capacity to overcome obstacles. Yes, you have a lot going for you, ladies and gentlemen. Let me tell you simply this, without trying to lecture anyone: Know how to harvest your grain and make your flour.

A country like France, an older country, which has suffered a lot and will suffer again, has also unlimited potential and opportunities, because everything remains to be done for the coming century. That is why I often ask my fellow citizens to unite, not to ignore their own differences—everyone is entitled to his or her preferences, and I have mine—but to unite every time it is necessary to stand for the country or for mankind.

● (1600)

Well, I said everything I wanted to tell you, ladies and gentlemen, I would have liked, not to speak much longer, but participate in a much broader exchange. I was very gratified by the warm welcome from the Prime Minister whose speech was well structured and, moreover, delivered in two languages. How pleasant it would have been, with you . . . Naturally, there is an opposition and a majority and I know both, ladies and gentlemen. I do not know which side is best. Depending on the circumstances in which I was involved, opposition or majority appeared to be better. But there is nothing worse than speaking for others. You are a sovereign country . . . How pleasant it would have been to be able to talk with you, with each of you, to become a parliamentarian again for a short while, lose probably this magnificent unanimity . . . But let us not lose it, ladies and gentlemen. I am through. Thank you for your warm welcome. Long live Canada! Long live France!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. President, Madam, we would very much have appreciated hearing more, because in this Federal chamber French is familiar to us and even customary in the legal sense of the word, but it is a very rare occasion indeed to hear in this place a voice from France that is of recognized literary value, especially if it is that of the President. We were aware of that dual capacity in which you spoke, and we were assured that the clarity and the contents of your comments would testify to it in this exclusive place where we are highly honoured by your visit. I thank you on behalf of my Senate colleagues.

We wish that your stay among us be surrounded by an atmosphere of cordiality, because our relationship with your country could not be bound in formality. Our countries are unique, but so are our bonds, and this perhaps is what makes them more delicate on occasion.

Approximately one third of Canadians are culturally linked to France. Those indestructible bonds forged in the past have unfortunately not been paralleled in the economic field for reasons history tries to explain. As you yourself often suggested, we must on both sides strive to recreate those flows between our two worlds, and the impetus at least has been given. We know very well that in the area of international trade, you must reckon with a number of partners since you succeeded in that bold Common Market experience. Of course, that did not happen without many difficult adjustments. For our part, we would also like to offer you an enlarged market of continental scope.

As you know, we are negotiating with our neighbours down South, and the outcome is still uncertain. In the event of success, our language duality would be an asset for you to gain access to a North American market.

To come back to cultural exchanges, would you allow us, Mr. Speaker, in your quest of a multimillennial past, to visit with you the Solutr  Rock in a lay pilgrimage? As I suspect that you do not miss the opportunity to enjoy the gifts of nature offered by Pouilly on the one hand and Fuiss  on the other, you could count on us to also partake in that pleasure.

With the near bicentennial of your Revolution, I would like to recognize before the statesman you are what Canada owes France.

[English]

The outbreak of the French Revolution and the fear that disturbances would spread to Canada encouraged the British Government to institute a more liberal form of government in the colony. The Constitution Act of 1791 divided Canada into two colonies, Upper and Lower Canada, and provided each with an elected legislature. Although the Constitution was cautious in the democratic powers it conferred, it represented the first step in Canada's path to nationhood and eventual independence. In those days, toasts were drunk to the French Revolution at a banquet held to celebrate the coming into effect of that Constitution.

[Translation]

Mr. President, for your 1789 Revolution, for our cultural heritage, for the example set by your Pan-European economic expansion, for your eloquence here, may we express our deep gratitude.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. President, we are especially honoured to welcome the President of the Republic of France, not only as the leader of a great nation, but as a special friend of Canada.

Your visit marks an historic moment in the life of our Parliament. It is a reflection of the lasting friendship and special relationship binding our countries.

[Translation]

France is not only the ancestral homeland of million of Canadians, it is also a sacred land where our soldiers died to make on two occasions right and freedom triumphant.

The cultural heritage left by France in Canada is an essential constituent of our nation.

Our attachment to the strength and influence of the French language and culture in the world has been clearly shown in the Francophonie whose summit is a privileged tool.

The action of parliamentarians complements government measures as could point to you our colleagues in this chamber who actively take part in the proceedings of the International French-speaking Parliamentary Association.

The Canada-France Interparliamentary Association and France/Canada friendship groups include women and men who are eager to contribute to the strenghtening of bonds in all areas of activity.

[English]

Your visit to Canada, Mr. President, provides us with an unique opportunity to celebrate the deep friendship shared between France and Canada. It also serves as a means for us to explore ways of expanding our relations, particularly with respect to economic and trade matters and to seek common ground to respond to the challenges facing our two nations.

[Translation]

On behalf of my colleagues, I wish to reiterate how pleased and honoured we are in welcoming you and Mrs. Mitterrand in this House. We ask you to convey our fraternal greetings to parliamentarians of your country and to all fellow citizens.

Thank you, Mr. President.

I now adjourn this meeting.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE ESTIMATES PRESENTED

Hon. George van Roggen, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented the following report:

Wednesday, May 27, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs has the honour to present its

SIXTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which were referred the expenditures set out in External Affairs Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, L35, L40, 45, 50 and 55 and National Defence Votes 1, 5, and 10 of the Estimates for the fiscal year ending the 31st March, 1988, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Wednesday, March 11, 1987 examined the said expenditures and now makes the following interim report.

In undertaking its review of the 1987-88 Estimates for these two departments, the Committee has chosen to focus its attention on particular areas of responsibilities of the two departments, specifically arms control and disarmament; security and sovereignty in the Arctic; and the bilateral trade negotiations.

To pursue its examination the Committee has arranged a series of hearings with officials from the two departments concerned and from the private sector.

The first two witnesses, on the subject of arms control and disarmament, were from the Department of External Affairs. Mr. David Peel, Director-General, International Security and Arms Control Bureau and Mr. Ralph Lysyshyn, Director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Division appeared before the Committee on May 12, 1987.

During the initial hearing it became evident to the Committee that verification procedures to ensure compliance with arms control agreements are becoming increasingly important factors in encouraging the confidence-building measures that are themselves critical to success in arms control and disarmament negotiations. The Department of External Affairs has been active in this field. Its Verification Research Program has a current annual budget of $1 million which provides funds, in cooperation with Canadian industries and universities, for research into techniques for verification in a number of areas. These include the modernization of a seismic array in Yellowknife to help develop a monitoring process for a comprehensive nuclear test ban; a portable kit to investigate the use of chemical or biological weapons; the investigation of techniques required to verify a space weapons agreement; and research into the technical and legal aspects relating to arms control and outer space.

Mindful of the requirement to report the Estimates before the end of May, the Committee is submitting a brief interim report at this time, a practice followed in recent years by the National Finance Committee. The intention of the Committee is to pursue its assessment of the activities of these departments in the area of arms control and disarmament as well as the several other areas of responsibility mentioned above.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE C. VAN ROGGEN
Chairman

Honourable senators, I ask that this report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator van Roggen, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

DOME PETROLEUM LIMITED

PROPOSED SALE—ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO PERMIT COVERAGE OF PUBLIC PROCEEDINGS BY ELECTRONIC MEDIA

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e) moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be empowered to permit coverage by the electronic media of its public proceedings on the study of the proposed sale of Dome Petroleum Limited, with the least possible disruption of its hearings.

Motion agreed to.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS—REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Thursday, May 28, I will move the following motion:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to the Committee of the Whole for the purposes of hearing witnesses and making a report.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Who will speak for the Liberal Party?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Wait and see. It's a cliff hanger.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN—1987 CROP YEAR—LEVEL OF PAYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I should like to follow up on the questions I asked yesterday. Now that the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations is aware of the discussions which took place at the premiers' meeting in Humboldt, Saskatchewan, yesterday, it is not necessary for me to repeat what was said by Premier Devine, Premier Getty and Premier Pawley, from the grain growing regions—and supported by the Premier of British Columbia—that they expect the federal government to respond to what they described as desperate conditions suffered by the grain growing producers in the prairie provinces.

Can the minister give us a little more specific answer so that producers may have some confidence that his government will not abandon them when they find themselves in the trough, at the bottom of the most severe difficulties they have experienced for some time? Some people have described the conditions as being worse than those in the 1930s. We can add to that the comparison of the value of the dollar then and now in order to reach that conclusion. Can the minister give us a little better answer than the one he gave yesterday, because all he said yesterday was that when it is appropriate to make an announcement, he will do so?

POSSIBILITY OF SIMULTANEOUS PRESENTATION OF REVISED OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND TEXT OF ACCORD

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week, on May 13, when I asked him when the government intended to introduce its revised policy on official languages in Canada, Senator Murray answered:

—during the present session of this Parliament.

However, today in an article in Le Devoir, under the headline:

Ottawa fears offending the rest of the country.

... reporter Michel Vastel writes:

—the new Official Languages Act which will not be tabled until this fall.

Mr. Vastel goes on to say:

The Minister of Federal-Provincial Relations, Senator Lowell Murray, blocked attempts to table the Official Languages Bill, which had been promised for January, at a recent meeting of the federal Cabinet's Priorities Committee at Meech Lake.

Could the senator confirm again today that the bill will indeed be tabled before the end of this session, as he said last week?

Could he go even further, and I am repeating a request I made previously, to let us have the text of this bill at the same time as the official texts of the Meech Lake accord?

I believe, and there are others who agree with me, that there is a very real link between the two for French Canadians living outside Quebec.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, as far as the personal comments in this article are concerned, this is hardly surprising, considering the source. I can say quite frankly that the allegation is just not true.

Last week, I repeated the government's commitment to table the bill to amend the Official Languages Act during the present session of this Parliament.

Yesterday afternoon, I advised honourable senators of the Government's intention to try to table this bill before the summer recess.

If Mr. Vastel would pay as much attention to the proceedings in the Senate as he does to his anonymous and scarcely reliable sources, he would be doing his readers a service.

Senator Corbin: I could not agree more with the last part of the statement by the Leader of the Government in the Senate. However, there is still a problem. The commitment to table the text of a bill to amend the Official Languages Act before or towards the end of the present session—Does anyone know when that will be?—is another aspect of the same question and does not satisfy me completely.

I think the senator will understand why, since we have worked together on the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages in the past, and I don't think it would be very useful to have the bill tabled at the very end of this session.

I want the Leader of the Government in the Senate to understand that I am reluctant to approve a constitutional proposal without knowing what will happen to official language minorities. The two issues are intertwined. The sooner you table this bill, the sooner I will be able to guarantee my co-operation.

Senator Murray: I accept the senator's representations. For the time being, I can only repeat the government's commitment to table the bill to amend the Official Languages Act during the present session of this Parliament, and the government's intention to do so before the summer recess. The exact moment when we will table the constitutional proposal has yet to be determined.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SENATE REFORM—
RECOMMENDATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT—SOURCE OF PROPOSAL

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Prior to the Meech Lake accord, it was common knowledge that the Province of Alberta was going to propose a Triple E Senate as a proposal for reform. It was also known that the Province of Quebec was going to make some suggestions regarding the structure of the Supreme Court. However, there had been no indications of anyone proposing that the members of the Senate henceforth be appointed by provincial governments. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether or not that proposal came from a province, or was it a federal government proposal?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can only tell the honourable senator that the federal government and the ten provinces agreed, as he knows, to an interim arrangement for the appointment of senators.

Senator Frith: He knows that.

Senator Murray: The Prime Minister will recommend to Her Excellency the appointment as senators of persons whose names are on lists submitted by the provinces and who are acceptable to them. Because I was not in the room at the time, I am not in a position to give first-hand information as to who made the precise proposal or how it evolved during the discussions at Meech Lake.

Senator Argue: Not even a rough cabinet meeting?

Senator Molgat: In view of the fact that the Leader of the Government in the Senate, in his role as Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, prior to the meeting at Meech Lake, had been charged by the Prime Minister with negotiating the advance discussions with the provinces, then obviously he would know whether any of the provinces put forward this proposal during the negotiating period. Can the Leader of the Government tell us whether or not that was the case?

Senator Murray: I can say that that precise proposal was not put forward by any of the provinces. There were various variations on that kind of interim arrangement suggested by various people in the run-up to the Meech Lake meeting up to and including the day before and the morning of that meeting.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSED ADVISORY COUNCIL—CONSULTATION ON COMPOSITION WITH JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Dalia Wood: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. After reading his reply of yesterday on official languages, there still remains an important question which I would like him to try to answer today, before it is too late for us and we are faced with a fait accompli.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I am sorry, we are faced with what?

Senator Wood: I said, before we are faced with a fait accompli, will the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages be consulted as to the make-up of this proposed advisory council?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I just do not know the answer to that question. I think it will be equally important that the government consult the various interested parties across the country as to the make-up of such an advisory council.

However, when the reform package and the amendments and regulations are brought forward, there will be ample opportunity for the honourable senator to ask those questions and have answers brought forward by the government.

ROLE OF COMMISSIONER OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Hon. Dalia Wood: I have a supplementary question on the same subject. The Secretary of State officials said yesterday that we do not really have a channel whereby input from society is relayed to government. My question is: Has that not been the role and mandate of the Commissioner of Official Languages and, if it has been, are we going to dispense with this role and give it to the advisory council?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): My honourable friend is asking whether this had not been the role of the Joint Committee on Official Languages?

Senator Wood: No, of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

Senator Murray: Not really. The commissioner's duties are outlined in the act, and that act makes him rather a watchdog over the implementation of the Official Languages Act and policy by the federal government and the agencies of the federal government. That is his principal role and, as I say, it is outlined in the legislation.

I saw a new report this morning which indicated to me that Mr. Fortier, the present incumbent, had responded rather positively to the general idea of an advisory council, as had the president of the Fédération des Francophones hors-Québec.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—ROLE OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS MINISTER

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, in answer to a question asked a moment ago by Senator Molgat, the Leader of the Government in the Senate said that he had not been in the room at Meech Lake when the agreement was made. He has been hailed in some quarters—not all—as an architect of the Meech Lake accord. To continue that metaphor, do I take it that he merely made some drawings, and was not there to actually supervise the building? Is he telling us that he was not present when any agreements were made?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I was not in the room with the First Ministers. The First Ministers were alone, save for two notetakers.

Senator Perrault: Carpenter's helpers.

• (1420)

Senator Frith: For the entire period at Meech Lake?

Senator Murray: That is correct.

Senator Frith: And at the meeting prior to that? Was there not a dinner meeting prior to the Meech Lake meeting?

Senator Murray: The meeting included a dinner, or the dinner included a meeting.

Senator Argue: The latter!

Senator Frith: These are all interesting footnotes for history, I am sure, and subjects for M.A. theses in due course, but I understood that there had been a dinner held prior to the Meech Lake meeting. Is that not so?

Senator Murray: They had lunch that day, too.

Senator Frith: So the accord was actually arrived at in one day, with a meeting starting in the morning, a break for lunch, and an afternoon session. Then the accord was arrived at and the Prime Minister announced it. During that entire period the First Ministers and these two notetakers were present, no lawyers and no ministers of state or others from any provincial governments.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the honourable senator will recall that immediately prior to the Meech Lake meeting, several letters were sent to the premiers, one from the Prime Minister and one from me, indicating what we thought the emerging consensus among the federal government and the provinces was on the various points at issue.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Frith: That is what we might call the “drafting room” part of the architecture.

Senator MacEachen: Before the deal!

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON REGULATION

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. At the end of April the Honourable Tom Hockin announced an agreement between the federal government and the Province of Ontario regarding a method of regulating the financial industry. He said at that time that he hoped that would be a basis for similar agreements with other provinces.

In view of the fact that June 30 is the target date for that significant change in financial institutions in Canada, can the leader advise us whether there has been any progress made in reaching agreements with other provinces?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): My honourable friend will be aware that on the part of at least one other province, and perhaps more, there has been some dissent as to the applicability of the agreement reached between the federal government and the Province of Ontario.

My colleague, the Minister of State (Finance), is in the process of getting in touch with all of the provinces now to see if it might be possible to hold an early meeting to resolve the matters that are at issue.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—AGENDA ITEM

Hon. Charlie Watt: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate relating to aboriginal peoples and the matter of unfinished business from the First Ministers' meeting held in March.

In relation to the Meech Lake accord, what is the position of the Government of Canada with regard to aboriginal issues that were not completely exhausted at that First Ministers' Conference? Will the government consider placing this on the agenda for the next meeting? If this is not placed on that agenda, then there is a good possibility that this will not be spoken about for another decade.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we do not exclude for a moment the possibility that we will place the matter on the agenda for the second round of constitutional talks, but we will not place it on the agenda until we have some clear indication that we can achieve success this time. We do not want another failure.

Senator Watt: If I understand the leader correctly, he is saying that if a positive move is made by the aboriginal peoples, the government has no problem placing this item on the agenda so that it will be dealt with at the same time.

Senator Murray: I am not sure what my honourable friend means by the words "at the same time." There is a meeting scheduled for June 2, which we trust will ratify the Meech Lake accord, after which we will proceed in the various legislatures to have this resolution debated and passed. The Meech Lake accord provides for an annual meeting of First Ministers on the Constitution. The agenda includes such matters as Senate reform, fisheries, and other matters.

We would be quite willing to come back to aboriginal rights in the second round, but there must be some indication of progress and that further discussions would succeed. For the moment the Government of Canada, with the support of the Governments of Ontario, the three maritime provinces and Manitoba, has left a proposition on the table; that is our proposal. There would have to be some movement both from the aboriginal side and from those provinces that did not agree to our proposal in March before we could justify the calling of another constitutional conference on aboriginal rights.

Meanwhile, we should all consider what lessons we can draw from the failure of the Constitutional Conference on Aboriginal Rights last March, and the apparent success of the First Ministers' Conference at Meech Lake. It may be that the kind of process that was successfully used in the run up to Meech Lake might serve us well in the consideration of problems relating to aboriginal rights.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HONG KONG VETERANS ASSOCIATION—CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION FROM JAPANESE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Stanley Haidasz: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate whether the federal government is aware of a claim made by the War Amputations of Canada on behalf of the Hong Kong Veterans Association asking for $13 million compensation from the Japanese government—a claim which was made today at the United Nations.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Yes, honourable senators.

Senator Haidasz: I have a supplementary question. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether the federal government is inclined in some way to support, fully or partially, this claim.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the War Amputations of Canada have made it clear that this is not a matter that the Canadian government should be involved with at present. They have been advised by authorities of the United Nations that claims of this nature can only be put forward by non-governmental organizations.

SENATE REFORM

APPOINTMENTS—SUBMISSION OF NAMES TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government whether any consideration has been given to a proposal made in the other chamber that any province which wishes to elect its list of potential senators and submit such a list to the Prime Minister should be encouraged as a step for giving this body legitimacy and making it an elected chamber.

Senator Argue: What a hope!

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators.

Senator Gigantès: Would the honourable Leader of the Government ask his experts to study the implications of this suggestion and kindly instruct us, at a time convenient to himself, as to this situation?

Senator Murray: Absolutely, honourable senators.

Senator Frith: He will get ditto on this!

Senator Argue: Ask the premiers!

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—STUDENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate regarding the Indian Post-Secondary Student Assistance Program for 1987-88. I should like to refer to a press release of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, dated May 14 of this year. I am most concerned about the policy announcement contained in this press release as are a number of the native leaders across the country with whom I have spoken. Under the heading of "Priority to Continuing Students and Deferred Approvals" two categories are outlined. Under category No. 1 it states:

● (1430)

Indian and Inuit students who were enrolled in post-secondary studies in 1986-87 and are continuing in 1987-88.

Under category No. 2 it states:

Students whose applications for assistance were deferred in 1986-87.

It goes on to state:

Applications from these two categories of students will be approved as they are submitted. Should fewer applications than anticipated be received, the excess funds will be re-directed to meet other post-secondary priorities.

The other post-secondary priorities are outlined in category No. 3 which states:

Eligible high school graduates or mature students who are enrolling in post-secondary studies for the first time.

Honourable senators, that applies to one of our best groups of young people, that is, those who have graduated from high school this year. This policy means that if there are enough funds left over, they might have an opportunity to go on to university. That is a ridiculous policy.

Honourable senators, under the former government we had what was essentially an open-ended funding policy with respect to post-secondary education for Indian and Inuit students. It was a good policy because the field of education is where progress can be made by our native peoples. I notice that Senator Watt is nodding his head in agreement. This policy stifles young people who may want to seek higher education.

Would the Leader of the Government look into this matter?

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON PROSPECTIVE NATIONAL FORUM

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate undertake to tell this house at some early date what progress is being made in the planning of the National Forum on Post-Secondary Education later this year?

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—UNDERTAKINGS OFFERED TO OBTAIN AGREEMENT BY PROVINCES

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Did Mr. Mulroney or he, on behalf of the Government of Canada, in exchange for obtaining the agreement of the Province of British Columbia to the Meech Lake accord, give a separate and private undertaking to introduce an amendment to the Constitution respecting property rights?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators, but I hasten to say that the government, through the former Minister of Justice, Mr. Crosbie, many months ago indicated that the Government of Canada would be quite receptive to a proposal for including property rights in the Canadian Constitution.

Senator Grafstein: Did the Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney, or my honourable colleague obtain from Mr. Bourassa a separate undertaking for his support for a comprehensive free-trade agreement with the United States in exchange for the federal government's initiative respecting the Meech Lake accord?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I must say quite frankly that I find the kind of imputation in those questions to be contemptible.

Senator Frith: Why?

Senator Murray: What you see is what you get. There have been no secret deals or secret bargains struck by the Prime Minister of Canada or the Government of Canada with anybody with regard to the Meech Lake accord.

The Meech Lake accord represents an honest attempt by the 11 leaders of this country to arrive at a proper consensus to govern this federation in the future, and to put behind us the confrontation and discord of years gone by. I hope the honourable senator, if he cannot accept the details of the agreement, will at least respect the good faith of those who participated.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Grafstein: I take it, in response to my questions, that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is giving assurance to this chamber that there were no similar undertakings given to the premiers of the provinces that were not expressed or not made public immediately following the Meech Lake accord, such as questions dealing with tax reform.

Senator Murray: What kind of suspicion, misunderstanding, discord and poisonous innuendo is the honourable senator trying to sow here? I have answered the question, and I ask him to respect the good faith of the Prime Minister of Canada and the ten provincial premiers who participated in arriving at the Meech Lake accord.

Senator Grafstein: I take it, laying aside the *ad hominem*s of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, that, on the substance, everything that appears on the table with respect to the Meech Lake accord and the commitments dealing with the follow-up constitutional conferences were the total package, and there were no similar, private or separate undertakings given by the Government of Canada.

Senator Murray: The honourable senator is asking whether, as a price for agreement, the Government of Canada or the government of any province was asked to make some hidden, secret commitment. I find that suggestion as contemptible as it is false.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY

Hon. Peter Stollery: Given the reply of the Leader of the Government and the point he makes about this agreement being made in good faith by the premiers and the Prime Minister, I wonder if he would like to put that good faith to the test of a more thorough going over by some form of parliamentary committee, which process would not come to an end in the month of June?

If the operation were done in such good faith, and everything is on the up and up, surely it would stand the test of a more close examination by a parliamentary committee.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): There is now a notice of motion under the name of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to refer the Meech Lake accord to a Committee of the Whole. We will be dealing with that in a day or so.

Meanwhile, I can only repeat what I said yesterday, that is, I expect the First Ministers, on June 2, will address themselves to the question of when they will, each and all of them, try to get these resolutions through their respective legislatures.

Senator Argue: It will take at least a year.

DATE OF SIGNING OF ACCORD

Hon. Peter Stollery: Honourable senators, my next question is seeking clarification, because the whole situation seems to be filled with vagueness. I understood the Leader of the Government to have made the point during preceding Question Periods in this chamber that this process will come to an end in the month of June, or at least very quickly. Can I take it from his reply that, in fact, this process may not terminate as quickly as that, and the premiers and the Prime Minister have not decided that it will be resolved in the month of June, and they may well, in fact, be looking at a longer timetable?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): That is a matter for the First Ministers to discuss on June 2.

Senator Frith: Will Parliament have a say, or will the First Ministers decide the parliamentary schedule?

Senator Argue: Mulroney wants a rubber stamp.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FUNDING FOR CULTURAL INSTITUTIONS—ABILITY OF QUEBEC TO OPT OUT

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, I have a further question on the Meech Lake accord and how it might affect federal institutions. Would the Leader of the Government in the Senate, when he pursues the other questions asked in this chamber, also add to the list this question: In the event that national cultural institutions such as the Canada Council and the National Museums come forward for additional funding from the federal government in the future, will this allow, particularly, the Province of Quebec, because of its symbolic response to the "distinct society" definition, to opt out of those federal cultural institutions and at the same time obtain the money for spending in the province of Quebec?

• (1440)

honourable senator if I can find someone to make sense of his question.

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL SYSTEM AND INSTITUTIONS

CANADA'S PARTICIPATION—REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—REQUEST FOR RESPONSE FROM DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Peter Bosa: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. On May 13, 1987, the chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs tabled a report entitled "Canada—the International Financial Institutions and the Debt Problem of the Developing Countries". I recall that the honourable gentleman was a member of that committee before he was elevated to his present position of prominence, power and prestige. In fact, it was he who suggested that the topic be studied by the committee. Would he consider asking the appropriate department to provide a response to this very worthwhile report?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I had already indicated on behalf of the government our pleasure and satisfaction with the study done by the Foreign Affairs Committee. It seems to me that it has already done part of its work in helping to sensitize and alert public opinion to the issues involved and to their importance for Canada.

I will see whether it is possible for the Department of External Affairs, or other departments, to provide a more detailed commentary in due course; but in the meantime I assure my honourable friend and all honourable senators that the government welcomes this report and has nothing but praise for the excellent work done by the committee.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—REQUEST FOR TABELING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. Earlier in a response to Senator Frith he indicated that in the process leading up to the Meech Lake accord there had been correspondence from him addressed to the premiers, and there was also such correspondence from the Prime Minister. Has that correspondence been made public?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): No, honourable senators.

Senator Molgat: In view of the many questions that have been asked and the interest in the subject, would the minister be prepared to table that correspondence?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the correspondence was of a private nature between the Prime Minister and premiers, and between me and premiers; so I would have to reflect a good deal more before consulting with the provinces as to when and whether those letters could be made public. I do note, however, and draw my honourable friend's attention to the fact that great swathes of those letters seemed to find their way into the media in the days leading up to the Meech Lake meeting.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

STATUS OF BILL TO AMEND

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I should like to come back to the question I put earlier to the Leader of the Government. He has not told us that the bill to amend the Official Languages Act was not ready. So I wish to put to him a direct question and find out if the i's of the bill have been dotted and the t's crossed. Is it ready to be served? Is it all cooked up? Or is the government waiting for more consultation with interested groups before proceeding? Is that part of the problem?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): It is not quite ready.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEPLOYMENT OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS AFFECTING CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Question No. 10 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Allan J. MacEachen

12th March, 1987—1. Is there any existing commitment by the Government of Canada to accept contingency deployment of nuclear weapons in Canada, and does the Canadian Government retain the right to refuse such deployment at all times?

2. When notification of overflight by foreign military aircrafts of Canadian territory is given to the Canadian Government (i) is the Canadian Government notified at the same time whether the military aircraft concerned carries nuclear weapons; (ii) does the Canadian Government authorize such overflights as a matter of course; (iii) if not, are there criteria; (iv) are there agreements with our Allies concerned determining the conditions for such overflights; (v) which Canadian authority authorizes overflight with nuclear weapons?

3. Is it a fact that nuclear capable naval units of NATO nuclear weapons powers enter Canadian ports without notification of nuclear weapons aboard because of the "neither confirm nor deny policy", and (i) if so, why is there a different approach for aircrafts; (ii) why is the same policy not applied to ships?

4. Does the Canadian Government support the initiatives for a North European nuclear weapons free zone and a Balkan nuclear weapons free zone, bearing in mind the statement made by the Canadian Ambassador for Disarmament to the Third Review Conference of the Non Proliferation Treaty which reiterated "Canada's strong sympathy for the concept of regional nuclear weapons free zones where these are feasible?"

5. In the light of this statement by the Canadian Ambassador for Disarmament, why is Canada not a party to the Antarctic nuclear weapons free zone?

6. Is the Canadian Government supporting the Tlatelolco Treaty and the Rarotonga Treaty, and has the Canadian Government the intention of formally recognizing the Latin American and the South Pacific nuclear weapons free zone?

Reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

1. There are no existing commitments by which the Government of Canada would be obliged to accept the deployment of nuclear weapons in Canada. Furthermore the Canadian Government has the right to accept or refuse to deploy any weapon or weapons system in time of peace or in time of crisis or war. No commitment exists that negates the government's right to protect Canadian security including the right to alter the present policy in any manner it sees fit.

2. When permission for overflights is requested, foreign aircraft must specify if they are carrying nuclear weapons. Because overflights of Canadian airspace by foreign aircraft with nuclear weapons are not permitted such requests would be denied. The Government of Canada is the only authority which can change this policy.

3. The possession of a credible nuclear deterrent, of which the sea-based component is an essential element, is considered the ultimate guarantee of Alliance security, and the Canadian Government supports the measures necessary to protect that deterrent. Accordingly, Canada endorses the policy of allies that possess a sea-based nuclear deterrent of neither confirming nor denying the presence of nuclear weapons aboard their warships. The acceptance of port visits to permit resupply and crews shore leave is a modest contribution that Canada freely makes to the Alliance's collective defence. In addition, all such port visits are, of course, subject to prior notification and approval by Canadian authorities. Regulations governing the transit of Canadian territory whether by sea or air were each arrived at independently over time and for logistic or security reasons are not interchangeable.

4. North European and Balkan NWFZ's

Consistent with Canada's long-standing commitment to containing the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the Canadian Government supports, in principle, the concept of nuclear-weapon-free zones (NWFZ) where they command the support of the countries in the area and promote regional and international stability. While the Government does not consider such zones as an alternative to adherence to the Non-Proliferation Treaty, their establishment could make a significant contribution to preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons provided that the above-mentioned conditions are met.

There are major obstacles which must be overcome before NWFZ's could be established in Northern Europe or the Balkans. The idea of a Nordic NWFZ has been under discussion for almost 30 years. The primary impediment to its establishment is that such a zone is not considered viable without the inclusion of the Baltic region and parts of the Western USSR in the geographically designated area. The USSR has provided no indication it would accept the inclusion of its territory owing to the military significance of the Kola Peninsula.

The creation of a Balkan NWFZ appears even more remote despite expressions of interest of all the Balkan states on various occasions. The major obstacle is that the removal of USA nuclear weapons from the area would create a destabilizing regional imbalance since nuclear weapons on neighbouring Soviet territory would remain untouched. The various intraregional conflicts and multilateral differences (e.g., the region includes two NATO and two Warsaw Pact members and the rest non-aligned) further complicate this issue.

5. Antarctic nuclear-weapon-free zone

The question relates to the Antarctic Treaty which inter alia prohibits all military activity, nuclear explosions and the disposal of nuclear wastes in Antarctica. Although Canada is not a party to the treaty, we do not engage in activities having the potential to violate its provisions.

6. Tlatelolco and Rarotonga Treaties

Consistent with Canada's approach to the establishment of nuclear-weapon-free zones as outlined above, the Canadian Government has supported the establishment of NWFZ's in Latin America and the South Pacific. Although Canada does not accept the concept of the explosion of nuclear devices for "peaceful purposes" as allowed under Article 18 of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, the Government has supported measures that would consolidate the establishment of a NWFZ in Latin America under the treaty. Canada also supports the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone which came into effect under the Treaty of Rarotonga in December 1986. Canada's views have been made known to the countries of the two regions and the international community. As a country outside of and without colonial ties in the regions in question, "formal recognition" of these treaties is not considered necessary.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE BILL

SECOND READING

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Doody, for the second reading of the Bill C-37, An Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Raymond J. Perrault: Honourable senators, we have before us Bill C-37 respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products. Yesterday in this chamber we were treated to a speech by the Honourable Senator Roblin. I must say that he lacked his usual enthusiasm for government legislation. His speech was somewhat lacking in rapturous terms. He kept his enthusiasm well under control, and I think it suggests that despite our political differences from time to time, he is a senator of great integrity. He used terms such as "the whole experience must be described as highly distasteful to Canadians," in addressing the idea of this softwood lumber bill. He said that it was a difficult and trying situation, but that perhaps we could console ourselves because the Americans let us keep the money. He said that the bill had shortcomings, that it had real flaws. He went on in this very lugubrious vein, and at the end of the process he asked us to support the bill as being something which was the lesser of two evils.

Out in the country, on the hustings, the supporters of the government describe this as a victory almost tantamount to the size of the victory at Waterloo. They say that this is a tribute to the skilful negotiating abilities of that wily Canadian team that went down to the United States and slipped one by the Yankees. Listen, the Canadian team was left standing in a wooden barrel after this process was over, and the Americans will try to tax that as well, if they can put their 15 per cent on it.

In terms of an historic agreement to end a bitter controversy relating to the export to the United States of Canadian forest products, it is not at all a triumph. If by the government's definition this softwood lumber agreement constitutes a triumph, then one must also accept the fiction that the farmers in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta have never had it so good, that they are not suffering at all from some sort of depression; or we would accept the myth that the maritimes and the west coast are not suffering some of the highest unemployment rates in history, despite the promises of the Prime Minister in the last election that he was going to lead us to new heights of employment. Well, he sure has done that! He also said that he was going to give new meaning to the matter of patronage. Well, he has done that as well! He has kept some promises. We are also expected to believe, I suppose, that the Brooklyn Bridge is again up for sale at a bargain price!

The fact is that we lost our negotiations with the United States because of an awkward, bumbling negotiating procedure by the Government of Canada. When it came to a shoot-out at the Okay Corral, we lost, we backed down, we blinked, and we were humiliated. As honourable senators know, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce did a pre-study on Bill C-37. I had the opportunity of working with that committee, and to visit various centres in Canada. We went to six key centres across the country, there were 55 witnesses, and numerous written submissions were received by the committee.

When that process was completed, no one on that committee hailed the agreement as a victory, historic or otherwise. Everyone felt it to be a defeat. Some felt that it was a necessary compromise; others felt it was humiliating, embarrassing and unnecessary. Not a soul on the committee hailed it as a victory, the term employed by the Minister for International Trade.

Our lumber industry, with a pitifully few exceptions, will pay and is paying 15 per cent export tax on every bit of softwood lumber going to the United States, and that is one of the most important industries in this country. It will cost our Canadian lumber industry about $600 million per year, and if this tax is converted into a timber-cutting fee or stumpage fee at the provincial level—and some provinces are now moving in to get more revenue by going to stumpage—the ultimate cost to the lumber industry may well amount to $950 million to $1 billion per year, year after year. And this is described as a victory! With this kind of victory we will not be able to withstand many more victories in Canada! The economy simply will not be able to survive. This is cause for celebration? Yes, the money will stay in Canada, an attraction for the cash-starved provincial governments, but a bullying U.S. lumber lobby insists that not one penny shall go to our forest industry. It is telling Canada and an industry faced with lay-offs and closures what we should do with our money.

● (1450)

Then we get these kinds of headings in Canadian newspapers: "U.S. Warns Canada to Speed its Tax Bill." One of the spokesmen for the United States said, "We don't understand the Canadian political system, but, by golly, if you do not get moving, you are going to get punished." We are being pushed around like that, and this government says that this agreement is a victory. A Canadian press story says:

U.S. trade officials have told Canada it will be a technical violation of the U.S.-Canada lumber agreement if legislation implementing the 15 per cent export tax is not passed by the end of February.

Threat, bullying and suggestion that we will get it even worse unless we get into line. I cannot recall any such incidents of bullying of this kind during the term in office of any previous government in Canada. We simply would not take it. We simply would not stand by and allow Canadian sovereignty to be abused in this fashion.

What about our sovereignty? In fact, our neighbours to the south have the right to set the price of our lumber exports, to set the tax against it, to review how the tax is converted into a fee, and to reach into all the documentation necessary to buttress that position. Yet, Ms Carney says that this is a victory. This was not a victory; it was a sell-out, a substantial blow to our sovereignty, one of the biggest blows in recent memory.

[Senator Perrault.]

Who has created the crisis? First, the fact is that the Canadian forest products industry, happily, is one of the most efficient in the entire world, because the industry has reinvested in plants and facilities to make it world-price competitive. It is important to all of us that this industry remain vigorous and competitive. It is well run. The workers in that industry are very productive. Since the 1950s, because of these factors, and more latterly, assisted by the status of the Canadian dollar, we have been obtaining an increasing share of the U.S. lumber market. In 1961 Canadian softwood lumber accounted for 12.7 per cent of the U.S. market. By 1977 this share had doubled to 24.3 per cent of the market. It rose to 32 per cent in 1985 as a result of Canadians in that industry who produced well, produced efficiently and cut efficiently, and provincial governments that were supportive of that industry.

The U.S. lumber producers reacted strongly against this vigorous Canadian competition. In 1962 a petition was filed with the Tariff Commission seeking relief. It was rejected because it had no merit. In October, 1982, 350 U.S. lumber producers united under the quaint banner of Coalition for Fair Canadian Imports and filed a petition with the U.S. Department of Commerce requesting countervailing duties on imports of Canadian softwood lumber, shingles and fences and shakes. November 17, 1982, the United States International Trade Commission ruled that these imports of wood products were materially injuring the U.S. industry. An investigation was launched to determine whether Canadian wood producers were being unfairly subsidized. In March, 1982, the ITA found in a preliminary ruling that Canadian stumpage practices did not constitute countervailing subsidies, and that other types of programs either conferred no subsidy at all or else the subsidy conferred was less than .5 per cent, or de minimis.

In March, 1983, the U.S. Coalition appealed the preliminary determination to the United States Court of International Trade, but the appeal was dismissed. Again, no merit, no proof. The allegations by the American lumber producers were not substantiated by fact. In May, 1983, the ITA upheld its initial decision and the case was terminated, with no countervailing duties assessed against Canadian lumber. During that entire process the then Liberal federal government provided the fullest possible support and was determined to make sure that the lumber industry in this country was not pushed around unfairly. The U.S. Coalition did not appeal the final determination of the Court of International Trade because they were caught with their facts down. That is the truth. On May 19, 1986, an organization named, ironically—they changed the name, but the cast was the same—the Coalition for Fair Lumber Impact, purporting to represent U.S. softwood lumber associations and forest products companies, filed a petition with the International Trade Association for a 27 per cent countervailing duty on lumber. The coalition argued once again, loudly, that allegedly lower Canadian stumpage fees constituted a subsidy to the Canadian industry. The facts had not changed, and again they came croppers.

But the political climate had changed. Senator Roblin referred to it yesterday. I am referring to this new protectionist mood down there. On June 26, 1986, the U.S. International Trade Commission delivered a unanimous preliminary ruling that Canadian softwood lumber exports were causing material harm to U.S. producers. This ruling triggered the next stage of the countervail process requiring an inquiry by the International Trade Administration on the question of whether Canadian lumber enjoyed a subsidy as defined under U.S. trade law. June 17, 1986—this is a sorry chronicle from here on, let me tell you—Canada, with a very strong case, took the position that the United States countervailing action was unfair, that the basic facts had not changed. Oh, the government then took the position that it was going to lead the charge and save the industry from decimation by those Americans. Let me tell you, in terms of political acrobatics on this issue the government would have won a gold medal, a ten point rating in any parliamentary Olympics in the world. They were all over the map with verbal contortionism that boggled the mind. On June 9, 1986, the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a comment which I would like to read into the record:

We have a guarantee that this court-like procedure—

He is referring to the investigation of Canadian softwood lumber exports by the U.S. Commerce Department.

—will be conducted in a court-like way. Canada's case will be judged on its merits, not on the basis of politics.

That has to rate as a line good enough for "Laugh-In". On June 17, 1986, Canada made its formal statement to GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, concerning the U.S. countervailing duty petition against Canadian softwood lumber. Canada's statement reads in part as follows:

Natural resource pricing policies, because they relate both to matters of national sovereignty as well as comparative advantage are of fundamental importance to GATT Contracting Parties.

Amen! Correct! The statement goes on:

All GATT members, be they producers or consumers, have an interest in ensuring that the sovereign right to develop natural resources and maintain the general comparative advantage of resource producing countries continue to be recognized.

Again correct! In fact, we had perfect grounds to proceed to exhaust the full potential of GATT to resolve this difference with the United States, and we opted not to. On June 26, 1986, the U.S. International Trade Commission ruled that softwood lumber imports from Canada were damaging American lumber companies. Mr. James Kelleher, Minister for International Trade, said, "We are going to fight it and we are going to win it." There was a round of enthusiastic applause by his audience.

• (1500)

On July 2, 1986, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said:

Now you watch Pat Carney go. She's got the ball and you just watch her run and hang onto your hats.

Honourable senators, we are trying to hang on to our pocket books, not our hats.

On August 13, 1986, Ms Carney charged that the American investigation of Canadian softwood lumber exports amounted to "trade harassment." She was beginning to complain; she saw the task as somewhat larger than merely catching a ball and running with it—and hanging on to her hat at the same time, which is rather difficult.

On September 8, 1986, after B.C. announced its stumpage rates, Ms Carney formally asked U.S. Commerce Secretary, Malcolm Baldrige, to please delay a preliminary ruling on softwood lumber exports. Mr. Baldrige said, "Thanks, but no thanks," and he turned the request down.

On September 10, 1986, presumably Ms Carney was still running with the ball. U.S. Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter—and he is a colourful individual—stated that the decision to review stumpage fees amounted to a recognition that the dispute was serious, and is "not a charade of any kind and the concerns on the part of the United States are valid ones." He also said, "We're obviously pleased," with the way things are going. That is somewhat ominous!

On September 30, 1986, the Minister of International Trade proposed increased stumpage fees and other charges to end the dispute. The proposal would increase lumber prices by approximately 10 per cent. In a release put out by the Minister of International Trade on that day the minister is quoted as saying:

"It is our only offer, it is done on a 'without prejudice' basis to our legal case, and it is not open to negotiation.

I have made it very clear that this is our only offer," Carney said. "There will be no further offers."

That is the way to talk to those Yankee traders.

On October 2, 1986, the U.S. lumber industry rejected the offer as too low, but they said they were willing to talk. On October 3, 1986, Ms Carney said this:

We made our only offer to the Americans and, as expected, that only offer has been rejected in part by the American producers. At the same time they have said that they wish further information.

That is a sign of hope. In a newspaper article the minister was quoted as follows:

We are expecting a lot of outrageous statements from the U.S. industry to make us move.

She said this in a telephone interview from her Ottawa office. She then continued:

But we'd look like bloody fools if we kept upping the ante. It's not an unlimited pot of money.

On October 8, 1986, the October 9 deadline for a decision by the U.S. Commerce Department was postponed. Earlier in the week the minister stated:

A negative countervail decision would create such an adverse reaction in Canada, I think the free-trade talks would be imperilled.

She then added:

Canadians feel any time you do anything helpful to the United States, they turn around and kick you in the face.

That is hardly the way to talk about a neighbour.

Honourable senators, this is taking a little more time than I wish to take, but I think these things should be on the record.

On October 9, 1986, Ms Carney was quoted as threatening retaliation if there was a negative decision. Honourable senators, this whole business reminds me of Teddy Roosevelt. It is said of Teddy Roosevelt that he talked softly and carried a big stick. In this entire lumber negotiation we have talked loudly and carried a small stick!

Senator Frith: A rubber one.

Senator Perrault: Yes, it is made of foam rubber, probably. On that day Ms Carney was quoted as threatening retaliation if there were a negative decision, and she said the following:

I think you can expect a strong response, but I'm not going to tell you what it is.

People said: "Come on, tell us, Miss Minister," and she said, "No, I am not telling." She continued, "I've got something up my sleeve."

On October 16, 1986, the U.S. Department of Commerce announced a preliminary subsidy determination of 15 per cent. Ms Carney made a statement in the other place as follows:

I deplore the measures taken today by the United States. We believe it was not the right decision to make . . . This decision cannot be justified either under U.S. law or GATT rules.

Honourable senators, why did we not take it to the U.S. courts and fight it? We had the facts on our side. Why did we not take it to GATT and fight it? Ms Carney herself said that it was not justified under those rules. She added:

We are going to fight this all the way.

And the Tories in the House of Commons pounded their desks to splinters. Then she added:

We will pursue all avenues available to us to argue against this determination.

And another gale of enthusiasm swept the other place. She was also quoted as saying:

The issue here is that the U.S. is telling us how to run our forests, and that's what we have to fight.

Honourable senators, look at the agreement that we have in front of us today. The Americans are, in effect, in our books, in our forests, and determining just exactly whether or not we are collecting the 15 per cent, according to their stance. Are we not being told how to run our forests?

Ms Carney claimed that the decision was based on reasons she described as "contrived and ludicrous." The Prime Minister also vowed to fight. He had not been heard from for some while on this issue. However, on October 17, 1986, he said:

We have an excellent case and we will put it forward and ultimately I'm satisfied that we'll persevere.

That is very Churchillian, actually. He then continued:

[Senator Perrault.]

We'll persevere without stridency, without juvenile conduct, but with determination, vigour and forcefulness.

In effect, he was saying: "I have nothing to offer but blood, sweat and tears."

The Prime Minister also promised "strong vigorous action," though he declined to become specific.

On October 21, 1986, after meetings with lumber industry officials and her provincial counterparts, Ms Carney stated:

We've all agreed that the ruling is deplorable, artificial and contrived and does not stand up to objective analysis . . . We are determined to fight this decision with a view to having it changed when the final decision is made on December 30. This decision, we feel, strikes directly at the sovereign right of governments to manage their own natural resources for the benefit of our own people.

That is exactly bang on, and one of the accurate statements she made in that historic year of 1986.

On October 22, 1986, in a speech in Boston, Ms Carney said:

The tariff decision shocked us . . . We view it as an unacceptable attempt to impose U.S. views on how other governments should manage their natural resources.

She also said:

The decision raises questions in the minds of Canadians about the feasibility of seeking better relations with the United States.

On November 5, 1986, the U.S. lumber industry formally requested the Commerce Department to increase the duty from 15 per cent to 23.2 per cent. On November 20, 1986, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said:

The Canadian and U.S. governments have reached a tentative agreement to settle the controversial softwoods lumber dispute . . .

As we all now know, no agreement was in fact reached. However, negotiations continued as the government desperately sought a deal.

On November 21, 1986, as word leaked out that the government was considering appeasement by raising the export price of lumber instead of contesting the American action as promised, the Canadian lumber industry reacted angrily. Adam Zimmerman, Chairman of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. and of the Canadian Forest Industries Council, expressed his shock at the 180 degree turn that the government had taken and stated that if actually carried out, it would be

. . . probably the most serious thing that has happened in the economic affairs of this country for a very long time.

Dan Smith of Gillies Inc., a subsidiary of Consolidated-Bathurst Inc., said:

I find it completely unbelievable that the Minister of International Trade could consider this a good deal for the industry . . . It is completely wrong. It looks like the politicians have really bungled it this time.

On November 25, 1986, there was a statement by Mr. Clark. Remember Mr. Clark's first statement? He said that Canada's case will be judged on its merits and not on the basis of politics. The procedure will be conducted in a court-like way. On November 25, 1986, he said:

We think it is an illegal proposal.

Of course, he did not go to court with it.

We think we would prevail upon the process. We think there is a risk, given the nature of the process, that we might not. During the long period of risk there would be a draining away of hundreds of millions of dollars from Canada. We think it is better to keep the money in Canada, to keep security in Canada, and to try to bring a sense of stability back to the Canadian softwood industry.

Honourable senators, he was preparing Canadians for the big let-down.

On November 27, 1986, Premiers Vander Zalm and Peterson expressed opposition to any export tax and said they would oppose it. After a private meeting, Peterson and Vander Zalm told reporters that such a tax sets a dangerous precedent for the resource-pricing policies of all provinces, and would be one of the least attractive options to provincial governments, and Premier Vander Zalm of B.C. said:

It's a bad precedent.

However, he went on to say that the provinces may have to reluctantly accept some sort of export tax, because it is being forced upon the federal government by the United States. He stated:

It appears as though the Americans are again perhaps dictating what it is we might have to do.

On December 4, 1986, Mr. Zimmerman again talked about the Canadian government botching the case. On December 5, 1986, the Prime Minister said this:

This is no place for juvenile delinquents. This is no place for facile slogans and easy "my father is bigger than your father" kind of talk. This is serious business, and we are conducting ourselves in that kind of light, and I hope eventually we shall prevail.

We believe it's the right way to go—it's a reasonable, thoughtful approach to a very difficult problem. We hope reason and reasonableness will prevail, and we think it should.

Well, it did not. So, we go on, and on, and on.

● (1510)

On December 30, 1986, the Honourable Gerald S. Merrihew, Minister of State (Forestry and Mines), and the Honourable Robert de Cotret, President of the Treasury Board, admitted that jobs would be lost. Adam Zimmerman said the deal "at one step creates an industrial paraplegic out of the lumber industry." What does this add up to, honourable senators? It adds up to the fact that the Memorandum of Understanding of December 30 was the result of panic on the part of our government. We backed off from GATT, our legal access to the courts, despite the fact that the facts supported our position. We were bullied and harassed into surrender, and the Minister of International Trade describes it still as a victory, a victory like Chamberlain's at Munich, when he bleated the words, "Peace in our time."

Then there were more headlines. One such headline was, "Canada violating tax deal, U.S. lobby says." The article below that headline states:

The U.S. Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports has accused Canada of violating terms of the lumber agreement on four fronts.

In a resolution passed in Washington Tuesday—

And this is within the past 30 days:

—the coalition said lumber tax revenue in Canada is "substantially below" what it should be, and the tax is not being collected on some lumber products that are covered in the agreement.

The fact is that there is a whole sector of the lumber industry which is being treated terribly unfairly, such as the remanufacturing sector which was referred to yesterday by Senator Roblin.

Incidentally, honourable senators, the Americans demanded that the moneys be collected before the legislation had been passed by the Senate. They said that they did not understand the Canadian political system, but that they wanted the money on the line, and we complied with that request. So, the Government of Canada has been collecting moneys since the first of the year, notwithstanding the fact that the legislation has not yet been passed.

There are many sectors of the lumber industry which, by the government's own admission, and by the admission of Senator Roblin yesterday, are being harshly dealt with as a result of the way this agreement was slapped together. Other demands are following from the Americans. This is the kind of mistake, this is the kind of blink, the kind of backing down that could cost the Canadian forest industry almost a billion dollars a year if it goes to the stumpage alternative, certainly a minimum of $300 million a year in my home province of British Columbia.

The senators who attended the committee hearings learned of an incredible breakdown in communications between the lumber industry and the government. At a time when all consultation between industry and government was essential in the effort to negotiate the problems confronting $4 billion in annual exports, we heard horror stories of Canadian forest industry representatives being ignored—absolutely locked out of the meetings—and kept out of the critical phases of the negotiation process while representatives of the high-powered U.S. lobby group, the Coalition for Fair Lumber Imports, were present as the U.S. government negotiated.

Why was Jack Munro of the IWA not there? Why was Adam Zimmerman not there? Why were representatives of the Canadian forest industries from the provinces of Canada not there? Why could they not have played the same role in assisting the Canadian negotiating team as the American coalition played for the United States team?

The result of this tragic failure in communications is a second-best, badly-flawed deal, a deal which sees real problems with respect to the completeness of the list of Canadian remanufactured products and possibly the application of the tax on lumber products made from U.S. logs or lumber, or from a number of other categories which are too detailed to go into at this time. These and other problems would have been avoided had the government consulted the industry. What happened to all of the talk of team play?

Well, we recall the overblown oratory of the last federal election campaign and the promises to consult with every sector in every province. Where was consultation when the fate of a critical Canadian industry was at stake?

The flaws in the agreement, admitted to by the government itself and by its spokesman in the Senate, must now be removed with Canada placed in an impossibly weak bargaining position. Since this bill is based upon the Memorandum of Understanding, it cannot be amended in the view of the committee, and I concur with that view, in any matter of substance without breaching the terms of the agreement itself. Any changes must be the result, unfortunately, of a generosity of spirit on the part of the United States, which has not been evident up to now. We are depending on U.S. mercy, Yankee compassion. How far are we going to get in our efforts to help the firms being unfairly taxed at the present time?

The Memorandum of Understanding is flawed in many respects, but I do not believe—and I think this is the view of other senators who attended the committee meetings—that it would be sound in this case for the Senate to seek to abrogate an agreement reached between two sovereign nations. Perhaps we can learn something from this experience—that is, that we must not permit ourselves to be out-negotiated again. We should seek to proceed with the passage of this bill, in my view. We have learned our lesson painfully. We should not proceed to amend the bill but attempt to amend the Memorandum of Understanding to remove the anomalies and inequities.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Roblin speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing debate on the motion for second reading of this bill.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, in closing the debate I must inform my honourable friend that he presented me with no real reasons to change my mind. I was waiting for the conclusion that my honourable friend was going to present to us when he finished his remarks, because judging from the force and vigour of the criticism that he has of this piece of legislation, I wondered how he could possibly bring himself to vote for it.

Senator Frith: We just hold our noses.

Senator Roblin: Then he must have a large nose.

Senator Frith: You need one for this bill!

Senator Roblin: Well, you have one. Honourable senators, I had better not get into personalities. Personalities are never a becoming subject for discourse in this chamber. I certainly do not intend to get into that, if I can possibly help it.

I enjoy my honourable friend's rhetoric. I enjoy the interest he takes in prefacing his attack on the bill as a whole by bringing into consideration all of the subjects at issue between the government and the opposition these days, to rehash the election campaign of 1984, and other interesting little deviations from the task of criticizing the bill.

When my honourable friend came to criticize the bill, what were the things he had to say? Well, he had a lot to say. I cannot deal with all of what he said, I am sure, but there are one or two points I should like to dwell upon for a moment.

His first point is that the government lacked the courage, the integrity, the common sense to pursue this matter in the way in which it should have been pursued, namely, by following through on the American trade adjustment procedures and taking our chances in their adjudication system. That is what he wanted us to do. That is what he says we should have done. He says we should have been stronger, and any time the minister in charge, Ms Carney, or whoever was dealing with the particular subject, made a statement which stood up for Canadian rights, my honourable friend quoted it with contempt, with scorn, saying that they should never have said that.

Senator Perrault: I did not say that at all.

Senator Roblin: In that case, I take it back. If he did not say that at all—

Senator Perrault: She should not have said it if she did not mean it.

Senator Roblin: What is the difference? She meant it. Of course she meant it. She was in the course of international negotiations, some of which, unfortunately, had to be conducted through the newspapers. Of course she meant it. But my honourable friend comes to the conclusion that if she meant it, she should never have changed her mind or altered course. I think that is a fair conclusion to draw from his remarks.

I defend the minister. I say that her activities and the activities of other ministers who put forward the Canadian case with as much emphasis and vigour as they could were proper activities. The fact that they did not make their points is another matter altogether, and we will come to that in due course.

Why did they fail? It seems to me the root of the problem was that there had been a sea change made in the whole of this discussion. My friend went to great lengths to go through the whole procedure over the past 20 years or so, until he came to 1986. But did he tell us what happened in 1986 that made it so different, and why it was so difficult for Canadian ministers to deal with this matter? And this was after Mr. Clark spoke, by the way.

What happened was that the Americans changed the rules of the game. They brought in a new definition of what constituted unfair trading practices on the part of countries like ours. That is what happened. They changed the rules of the game; everybody knows that. That is why we were unable to succeed in 1986 as we have succeeded on previous occasions—because they changed the rules of the game. Not only that but then the sea changed in the general approach of American industry to international trading problems.

• (1520)

The zeal with which protectionism is pursued in the United States today is something that we have not seen since 1930. The change that has taken place in their attitude toward international trade is something that none of us ever expected to see. Certainly, one never expected to see it in its present virulent form; in a form in which, if Congress is to be believed, they will pass new protectionist legislation which will make the things that they have done so far look pretty mild. Will my honourable friend blame the Canadian ministers for that? I suppose he will. He forgets that there are two sovereign nations here: ours and theirs. We can have our say and we can take our righteous stands as much as we like—and we may be right, as I still believe that we were right in this issue—yet, when you are dealing with another sovereign nation, you have to decide how to handle the matter. If we had wanted to go through their courts, that position was open to us. We could have done it, but we did not, because, on a judgment call, it was considered that the odds were not favourable. As I said yesterday, I believed that to be the case, and that we did the right thing, compelled by the force of events—let us be frank about it—to seek negotiations, which is a more productive line of approach to this problem than the way in which the industry suggested that we should proceed and the way in which my honourable friend apparently thought that we should proceed as well.

What happens when we get to GATT? We can get to GATT all right. We can get a nice ringing declaration in our favour without much trouble, perhaps. But what happens then? Does the United States have to pay any attention to GATT? Is there an enforcement procedure there that we can rely on that would help us? A moral force, perhaps, but not much more than that.

You are faced with this situation, senators. Either you go for negotiation, as the government did, or you follow the course through the American trade adjustment system and through GATT. It is a judgment call. My friend is perfectly justified to express his opinion. I respect him for it; I believe he means it. But I say on my part that I think it would have been a mistake if we had taken that advice. We did better going the way that we did. There are important questions in this whole issue: What was the Canadian government facing? How did it react to the problem that it was faced with? And was that reaction reasonable in the circumstances—indeed, was it appropriate in the circumstances? When one considers all of those things, the answer must be yes.

I want to deal with another rather touchy matter, because it concerned me, too, and that is this communication between the government and industry. There was good communication between government and industry up until the last moment, let us say; that was made clear in the evidence given to the committee. The question arises: Whose fault is it that this communication was not as complete all the way through as I for one would like to have seen it? Is it the fault of the government alone? Was it the fault of the industry? Were they not as forthcoming as they should have been in the latter stages? When one considers the hidden undercurrent of the feelings between the gentleman who has been mentioned, Mr. Zimmerman, and the minister, obviously personalities were involved, and obviously Mr. Zimmerman was, in my opinion, open to the same criticism that he wants to attach to the minister. Where was he when cooperation was required? Well, he may have been there. I was not there; I cannot tell. I can only give the impressions that came to me when I heard the evidence before the committee, such of it as I heard—and I did not hear it all. I do not wish to be too dogmatic, nor do I wish to be too critical. I admit that it is not a question of judgment. It is a statement that communication could and should have been better toward the end. I am not inclined to say, however, that the fault is exclusively that of the government, as has been intimated in the statement that we have heard here this afternoon. Mr. Zimmerman is not an infallible prophet; he is the author of the statement that the industry would be an industrial—what was it—a basket case?

Senator Perrault: Industrial paraplegic.

Senator Roblin: An industrial paraplegic, he stated last January. Well, it is not. Some paraplegic! It is still going strong; the stocks of those companies are doing rather well, including Mr. Zimmerman's. The "unemployment boogie" that was waved around is not to be dismissed, but it certainly has not reached the size or proportion that some alarmists would have had us believe at that time. The trade with the United States has not been destroyed. It has been severely handicapped. I do not like it and I do not want it; but I would much rather have that 15 per cent, or $600 million, collected by governments in Canada rather than by governments in the United States. But the trade has not been destroyed.

When we come down to it, I am guilty of tedious repetition, because I come back to the same point that I tried to deal with in my speech of yesterday, namely, that—as I have been candid to say—I do not like this agreement; I wish it had never been necessary, but things being what they are, and forces and powers and influence and sovereignty being what they are, we have to make the best deal we can to protect our people in the circumstances.

The facts speak for themselves. We have secured the money, $600 million, in the form of an export tax by Canadians, which is much better than an import tax by Americans; we have resisted the insistence of the American industry, in spite of what my friend says, to have an open door into the books and accounts and records of Canadian companies. And there is no loss of sovereignty—unless you say that every time you make a trade agreement you lose sovereignty, because somebody has to give something up, which both sides do, as a rule, in these issues.

Could it be described as a victory? I would not call it that—that goes too far—but it is the best solution that can be obtained in the circumstances. I think that is the case. So much do I think so that I feel that this house should follow the advice of the committee and, indeed, the advice of my honourable friend—whether you hold your nose or not—that this bill should be supported in the best interests of Canada. While the conduct of nobody on either side of the border can be described as perfect, we can say that our administration, dealing with facts as they developed, performed in a credible manner and made what I think is the best possible deal that could be made under the circumstances in a trying situation for an important Canadian industry.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Roblin, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE COMMUNIQUÉ—AGENDA FOR SENATE REFORM— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C.

That it is timely for the Senate of Canada to take into consideration the agenda set out in the Meech Lake communiqué on the subject of Senate Reform including the following:

- the functions and role of the Senate;
- the powers of the Senate;
- the method of selection of Senators, and
- the distribution of Senate seats.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Olson.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to make a suggestion along with those suggestions made by Senator Roblin when he introduced the motion that is contained in Order No. 6, where he stated:

That it is timely for the Senate of Canada to take into consideration the agenda set out in the Meech Lake communiqué on the subject of Senate Reform including the following:—

He then lists a number of things, including the functions and role of the Senate; the powers of the Senate; the method of selection of senators; and the distribution of seats.

Honourable senators, in my province of Alberta the matter of Senate reform has risen significantly in profile and in terms of the expectations of what can be achieved and accomplished to deal with the feelings of frustration and alienation felt by many Albertans.

• (1530)

I think it is fair to say that for the last four or five elections the people of Alberta have elected the Progressive Conservatives, but when a Progressive Conservative government was elected, it was only a few months before they felt betrayed by that government in that it did not stand up for their interests in the fields of agriculture and, particularly, energy.

[Senator Roblin.]

As a consequence, there is a renewed feeling that the political structures in Canada are working against western Canada. I have heard that there are other places, such as the Atlantic provinces, where there is a feeling that something is wrong with the structure of the federal institutions. Therefore, in western Canada the profile of the subject of Senate reform has risen tremendously.

We hear of such things as a Triple E Senate. One of the unfortunate aspects of that is that very capable and articulate people, who have voiced the frustrations of farmers and of the energy sector, are now holding up a Triple E Senate as a panacea which will solve all of their problems.

Senator Roblin: It is not a panacea.

Senator Olson: Is that the right word?

Senator Roblin: It is the right word, but it is not a panacea.

Senator Olson: I agree, but I know that some people in Alberta are holding up the Triple E Senate as being a means of solving all of their problems.

Senator Roblin: They will be disappointed.

Senator Olson: I agree with Senator Roblin. He did not make that claim in his speech, but he did claim that an elected Senate would add some legitimacy to our present structure. He seemed rather concerned about legitimacy. Honourable senators, I do not feel illegitimate. Legitimacy was the main concern running through Senator Roblin's speech, and he put forward the concept that the only way to solve that was to have an elected Senate, one which would be elected by proportional representation. Honourable senators, I will deal with that later in my speech.

At the outset, I want to deal with this concept of a Triple E Senate which would be equal, elected and effective. That is what the three E's stand for.

I will deal first with the word "equal". I may be right in suggesting that there is a 100 to 1 difference—or perhaps it is only 85 to 1—between the smallest province and the largest province. That argument is sometimes put forward, because that is how it was done in the United States.

Senator Doody: Not to that degree.

Senator Olson: I doubt if they would have done that in the United States if they had foreseen the consequences.

Senator Frith: Or in Australia?

Senator Olson: For that matter, my comment also applies to Australia.

Honourable senators, if we do go beyond that, then we would come to the next stage, which means an elected Senate. Honourable senators, let us look at this squarely. Do you really believe that the Government of Canada and the House of Commons are going to vote for an elected Senate? Think of the enormous transfer of power, that is, real power from the House of Commons and from the cabinet to the Senate. You cannot avoid it.

When this was done in the United States in 1913, there was no anticipation of how the Senate in the United States would be acting today. They have all that power, residual power, with only limited responsibility for administration.

Since I came to Ottawa some 29 years ago I have been involved in a number of discussions where many people have said that they are in favour of an elected Senate. The most important reason I see for saying that is that the idea is a popular one. It sounds good. However, when they are asked to consider the practical application of that idea, and the transfer of power that I am talking about, they back away from it very rapidly.

I now turn to the third E which stands for "effective". In western Canada I know that, for example, Jim Gray from Calgary is running around all over Canada, but mostly western Canada, talking about what a great thing it would be if we had an effective Senate that could stand over the House of Commons and the government, and if they did not do all of the things that were perceived to be fair and reasonable and in western Canada's interests, then this effective Senate could bring the government and the House of Commons into line. I was going to say, "to heel." The view is that we would superimpose the view of the Senate, in terms of western Canada's interests, on an elected House of Commons and cabinet. Honourable senators, if anyone believes that that is what an effective Senate will do, it is so preposterous that it is hard to even carry on a discussion. Yet, that is what Jim Gray is saying is going to happen. He is saying that it is going to be a watchdog, and that it is going to have enough power to do that. He is saying that it is going to be elected, and that it will exercise that power in such a way that people can be re-elected to the Senate. When we suggest that it is going to be effective enough to stand over the other institutions, namely, the House of Commons and the cabinet, and to keep them in line in the regions' interests, it is really difficult to believe that anyone can carry that argument very far. But they are trying to do that, and I think that we should at least try to answer some of the questions which arise.

This subject does have a high profile. The Premier of Alberta is promoting a Triple E Senate. When he arrived at Meech Lake, he announced before the meeting started that he was there to get an agreement from the federal government that Senate reform would be put at the top of an agenda for the next and subsequent constitutional conferences until it was done.

He came back to Alberta after the "love in" at Meech Lake, which is now coming apart—at least, there were a couple of days when everyone agreed that there was a great victory—and said that the Prime Minister had agreed that it would be at the top of the agenda until it was achieved. What he led them to believe was that it would be at the top of the agenda until a Triple E Senate is achieved, not just Senate reform, because, as you know, there are many degrees of Senate reform.

Honourable senators, I have a suggestion to make today. However, at the outset, I want to say that I listened to Senator Roblin's speech on May 13. He worried about legitimacy, talked about an elected Senate being the only way to solve the legitimacy problem, and then he went on to the discussion of proportional representation with a single transferable vote, and all of that. I would like to make one other suggestion to go along with the proposals that everyone is making. That is that perhaps the senators themselves could do what the Senate was designed to do, which is to have as its highest priority the interests of the regions, so that the "rep by pop" concept that the Fathers of Confederation knew was going to turn out could be offset by a Senate that would look after those interests. But that has never happened in the Senate. Oh, we give some lip service to it once in a while. I am really pleased to see the table sitting in the aisle that was put there especially to enable people to appear before the Senate when the Atlantic provinces had a regional problem that was serious. We should be doing that all the time. Why are we not doing that with respect to the agriculture sector in western Canada today? I will explain why we do not do it. It is because we are not structured to do it properly. We need to restructure ourselves in such a way that we can. I know that it is going to be difficult, and that some senators will shake their heads.

● (1540)

Senator Doody: Are you saying it was not done properly?

Senator Olson: You will, too. I used to sit where you are sitting now. I know exactly what is going on. It is your responsibility to get the government's program through.

Senator Doody: The implication is that this was not done properly.

Senator Olson: It was, but we have not followed it up. The government, including the deputy leader, has been dragged, kicking and screaming all the way, and resisted the motion for the Senate to take up the question—and unless there was a demonstration of numbers to show that we were going to go to the defence of the Atlantic provinces respecting fisheries—

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, on a point of order, I would like the record to show that I did not oppose, nor did the government oppose, the examination of the Atlantic fish problem a few months ago. What we advocated was that the proper place to deal with that particular issue was in the Fisheries Committee. I said so then and I still feel that that was the right way to do it.

Senator Olson: You can think that if you like, and you know very well what would have happened. We on this side believe that the problem was so severe, that the magnitude and interest was such that the whole Senate should get into it—and you resisted that. I have not the time now, but I could go back in the record and show that the Deputy Leader of the Government resisted doing what we did with respect to that. But I do not want to be diverted from the suggestion I want to make, which is that we should restructure ourselves along regional lines.

I enjoy working with Senator Barootes, but he gets tangled up in his highest priority to the political party that he supports once in a while, and it gets in the way of his being as enthusiastic in supporting things that we should do for the prairie region.

Senator Roblin: You sure ought to know. You are the best party man that I can see.

Senator Olson: I sat right next to where Senator Doody is now sitting. I had a job to do—I do not deny that for a moment—and Senator Roblin had that job, too. When he was Leader of the Government in this place, his primary job was to get the government's legislative program through the Senate. Will he now deny that?

Senator Roblin: No, and a very good job I did of it, too.

Senator Olson: He probably did a good job in doing what he did, but the consequences of it were probably not all that great. Anyway, I also had that job, and I too had a degree of success in getting the program through. Never mind how good the program was; with regard to the actual process of getting it through the Senate, we both probably did equally well, because I believe that both of us got the entire program through all the time.

Senator Roblin: But I believed in my program. I wonder about you.

Senator Frith: What a confession to make!

Senator Olson: Anyway, I think that we should restructure the Senate along the lines of the intent of the Fathers of Confederation to look after the regions. As a matter of fact, I believe that Senator Roblin made that point at page 1045 of Debates of the Senate. He said:

but if we want a Senate that effectively is going to perform the tasks which the Fathers of Confederation gave it, and which some people in this country are demanding today,

That is important, because the Triple E fad that is running across western Canada has got into Manitoba. I will continue:

—then one must proceed with the principle of election.

Well, I disagree. The reason I have quoted that is because there are people in this country who are demanding that the Senate do what it was designed to do, which is to stand up for the regions and regional interests on economic matters. I do not suppose that in the past 50 years we have had a more severe problem in the three prairie provinces in both agriculture and energy than those which we have had in the last 12 to 16 months. What has the Senate done about it? I admit that the government has done a few things, the most important being to claim credit for the programs that were put in by the previous government, such as the crop insurance, the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, and so on. On top of that—

Senator Barootes: Be partisan!

Senator Doody: Put party stuff behind you and get regional!

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Olson: They came along with another $1 billion. They have not paid it yet—at least, I do not think it has been paid, unless it was paid in the last few days. But they have been promising it ever since last November. So far they have paid 30 per cent of it.

Senator Doody: All part of the restructuring.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I was going to make a very brief speech, because I just wanted to make a proposal that we do what the Fathers of Confederation recommended; and Senator Roblin agrees with me that we should get on with doing what people today are demanding we should do. That means that we have to restructure. Senator Barootes would agree that we have to be a little less partisan in doing that. We need caucuses from the regions. We should get together so that we can make the point to define the problem, to articulate it, and then make the representation—to use our power to make sure that happens.

I notice that we have a number of committees sitting. We have 12 standing committees and a number of special committees. Some of the committee work is useful, but it leads me to think that we do everything but look after the regional interests. We have committees on agriculture, banking, energy, fisheries, and so on.

An Hon. Senator: And Bill C-22.

Senator Olson: Yes; but we should have as our highest priority the defence against discrimination in the regions, because they expect that of us.

Senator Roblin said one or two other things which were fairly interesting. At one place he said that we need to have the power that we have now to carry out that responsibility. I hope that it also means that having a suspensive veto, or the power given to the Senate under the Constitution in the first place, is not to be taken away. I am not willing to give up the power that the Senate has to defend the regions. I know that Senator Godfrey, if he was present in the chamber, would argue with me—but he is wrong and I am right in this—that somehow we would use our power more if there were a suspensive veto.

Senator Roblin: Who said that?

Senator Olson: That is the argument that I hear all the time, and I do not buy it at all.

Senator Roblin: That is not my argument.

Senator Olson: No. You made the argument that the Senate needs the powers that it now has if it is going to perform its tasks. I agree with that.

• (1550)

Senator Roblin: Be careful now!

Senator Olson: I do not really need to be very careful, because the way in which the honourable senator describes the election of senators is so preposterous. We tried the system he describes, the single transferable vote, in Alberta for a while. It will never happen anyway.

Senator Roblin: We will send him to Australia.

Senator Olson: There is a simple way of defeating that system, which is what they did in Alberta. All you need to do is mark the ballot once and the whole proposition is dead, because there are no ballots to transfer.

Senator Roblin: There is an answer to that.

Senator Olson: There is an answer, but I can tell you that in Alberta what I described is exactly the way the political parties went about promoting the defeat of the proportional representation vote, and it worked—just mark one of the choices on the ballot and no more. In that way there are no more ballots to transfer. Then what do you have? If there are six names on the list, you would have people being elected with 15 per cent or 16 per cent of the vote. Anyway, why you would have that procedure is not really important.

Senator Roblin then goes on to say, as he is reported at page 1046 of Hansard:

So the concept that the Senate would be a non-party body is, in my opinion, a non-starter from the very word go.

I agree that you could not have an election of senators without the political parties becoming involved. Sure they would. What we would really have is a duplicate copy of the House of Commons, and the resulting body would not perform its function in defending regional interests.

I did not hear the comments over there.

Senator Roblin: They were sotto voce comments not intended for your ears.

Senator Olson: Okay. I think that the people in many parts of Canada, particularly in the part of the country from which I come, are frustrated with the federal government. They gave their confidence to the Tories for so long, and when the Tories got into office they betrayed them, or at least the people feel betrayed.

Senator Doody: Non-partisan, now! Non-partisan, now!

Senator Asselin: Would you repeat that?

Senator Olson: I am just giving a factual review of what is happening. On May 29 there will be a meeting to set up a new party in western Canada.

Senator Doody: Are you ready?

Senator Olson: I am not sure that they have a name for it, but I should tell Senator Barootes that a lot of people who used to support the Social Credit Party are involved in the meeting, as are a lot of Tories. Most of these people are to the right of centre on the spectrum. Of course, people on the left support the NDP. It is a serious matter, because it could be the beginning of another long period when the main support of the population of western Canada will not be for either the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party. This will have some unfortunate consequences for Canadian unity.

In conclusion—and this speech has gone on for far too long—

Senator Doody: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson:—I think that senators should give this matter serious consideration. People expect us to do our job. That job is to look after regional interests. If we are going to do our job, we must restructure ourselves in such a way that that can happen. At the present time this is not the case. I think we can probably go all the way back to the first Prime Minister, when all those great things about the Senate being the defender of regional interests were said, to determine when the Senate began to be used for some of the things that it is being accused of today, one being to support the political party that is in office in the House of Commons. I do not think that that is what the Senate was intended to do. I think there is a legitimate concern out there to which we ought to respond. I must say that I do not believe that there is a ghost of a chance that there will be any significant Senate reform through the constitutional process after we get into the straitjacket of unanimity that is required in the amending formula. So, it is really up to senators themselves. I hope that all my colleagues will give some serious consideration to doing things properly.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSIDERATION OF FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Muir, for the adoption of the First Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence (hiring of staff and power to travel for the purpose of its examination of Canada's land forces) presented in the Senate on 13th May, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, when Senator Lafond proposed this motion he pointed out that the money was for his committee to travel to the west for one week.

Senator Marshall: From June 1 to June 5.

Senator Frith: That is next week. He indicated that he did not plan to travel any more than that until the fall. At page 1023 of Hansard he is reported to have said the following:

—our objective is to undertake that one week's trip in the first week of June in order to have all members of the committee back in the Senate by the second week of June.

When I adjourned the debate I mentioned that I wanted to consult with the whip and with my colleagues. I felt that there would be a need for the presence of most senators during the period from the second week of June until we adjourn for the summer. He mentioned the concern of the whips when he made the motion. On that understanding, and I have checked with him, I believe that we should approve this motion, although we do not have the approval of the proposed budget by the main Committee of Internal Economy. That committee will be meeting tomorrow. At least, I do not think we have that approval. If we do, we should pass the motion today. If we do not, I think we should pass it tomorrow.

Senator Doody: Are you moving it or half moving it?

Senator Frith: I have to have that information. What I am saying will have the effect of saving time tomorrow, because I intend to move the adjournment of the debate, and if we have that information, it will be a matter of a few seconds to approve the motion.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I wonder whether Senator Corbin would know if the Defence Committee budget went before the subcommittee on budgets.

Senator Frith: It went before the subcommittee.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: I believe that the subcommittee has reviewed the budget, but I do not believe that the full Internal Economy Committee has had a look at it.

Senator Frith: I am not sure.

Senator Corbin: I am not sure either, but I think that that is where it is now.

Senator Frith: Anyway, there will be no difficulty in getting approval in time for the one trip.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (post-secondary education) tabled in the Senate on 25th March, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to reiterate that I am merely holding this order for someone who might wish to speak to it before the debate is closed. I do not intend to speak on it.

Order stands.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Everett calling the attention of the Senate to the free trade negotiations with the United States.—(Honourable Senator Gigantès)

Hon. Philippe Deane Gigantès: Honourable senators, we heard Senator Everett the other day telling us about the virtues of free trade with the United States. One of my colleagues in the other chamber said on free trade that there are four categories of opinions: those who are unconditionally opposed; those who are conditionally in favour; then those who say, "Yes, but"; and those who say, "No, unless". I belong to the "yes, but" category, and I am alarmed by many of the possible consequences. In particular, I am alarmed at the fact that the public is not really being told the truth as to what the issue is. We are being sold free trade with all kinds of arguments that do not stand, and I would like to review some of them. Some of these arguments are advanced and a conclusion is drawn from them which, in my view, is the opposite to the conclusion that should be drawn.

● (1600)

I will take Senator Everett's speech point by point. He said that 30 per cent of our gross domestic product is in exports, and about 80 per cent of that goes to the U.S. Honourable senators, it seems to me that what this should say to us is that we should make every possible effort to diversify, and not continue this enormous dependence that we have on the United States. He then says that we are the only industrialized country without automatic access to a market of more than 100 million people. But we did, in fact, have such an access. We do, indeed; our exports have been rising, and to the United States. Now, however, as Senator Roblin told us, the U.S. is changing the rules on us, so that is a point that should be made clear. We were not on the wrong track in trade. The Americans have derailed a proper, good and rapid evolution of our trading relationship, and we should keep that in mind. This is not being anti-American; this is being realistic.

We are told that trade will increase jobs. Honourable senators, here I would like the permission of the Senate to print as an appendix eight graphs and one table that illustrate my point. Honourable senators, trade will not increase jobs. During the hearings of a certain committee, I travelled around the country and I asked all of the economists I could find—and I am talking of conservative economists, as economists are divided—whether trade increases jobs. They all said no, because for every job you win on exports you lose one on imports, and you absolutely cannot avoid this equilibrium. If you do not import as much as you export, then the value of your currency rises so much that your exports become prohibitively expensive and your exports fall. You are therefore forced eventually—as Japan is now forced—to export money into other countries and invest it so that they have Japanese yen to buy Japanese exports. What happens then, of course, is that you do not invest your funds in your own country to create jobs; you export jobs when you do that.

There is an interesting publication by Statistics Canada which shows exactly what I said, that while our exports increased, so did our imports, and they increased absolutely in tandem. From 1966 to 1980 imports went up from 20 per cent of GNP to 30 per cent; exports went up from 21 per cent to 32 per cent. The difference is practically immaterial. This is in dollar values. If you look at the series of graphs that I have mentioned, you will see that in eight countries, including ours—and you can make similar graphs for every other country—exports go up; imports go up, and the rate of change in jobs is absolutely zilch.

Senator Barootes: Is it the same in Japan?

Senator Gigantès: It is the same in Japan. I will be delighted to show you this graph, sir. In fact, it is the flattest of all graphs. I have it here. The line at the bottom is a perfectly straight line. Nothing happens to jobs. As you can see, exports and imports go up and down, but jobs stay the same.

Honourable senators, I am not saying that we should not be competitive, that we should not export and that we should not import. All I am objecting to is that we are being sold the free trade deal with an argument that is not supported by the facts. The other argument is that free trade with the U.S. will greatly increase jobs in the under-developed regions of the country. Honourable senators, this has not happened in Europe, where they have more than free trade; they have a common market. It has not happened to the underdeveloped regions of any member of that common market. The rich regions got richer, but the poor regions stayed poor. There are other reasons for poor regions remaining poor, and I think it is a cruel hoax to say to the underdeveloped parts of this country that free trade will suddenly bring them jobs, jobs, jobs.

In Senator Everett's speech there is a section on definitions that is useful. The difference between a free trade area and a common market, says Senator Everett, is that free trade capital is free to move; goods and services are free to move, but not people. The Common Market looked at this situation and asked: "What happens if capital and investment moves to another country instead of staying in its country of origin? That country is exporting jobs. Therefore, we should also have freedom of movement of people." That was the logical thing to do. What we are proposing to do might very well produce a situation where Senator Marshall takes me as a partner in Newfoundland and we buy one of those large freezer trawlers.

Senator Marshall: I will be the senior partner.

Senator Gigantès: I agree. You know more about the business than I do. We then go out and fill it with fish, and our freezer trawler is such that we can process the fish while at sea. The question is: Where are we going to land it? In St. John's, Newfoundland, or in our largest market, which will be somewhere between Boston and Baltimore, the megalopolis in the United States? That is where it will be to our advantage to land it.

I have another example. Supposing Senator Tremblay and I own a little factory in Quebec, and we are efficient and well positioned to serve the Canadian market.

Senator Tremblay: It would have to be a very small factory.

Senator Gigantès: Supposing we combine his administrative capacities and my capacities as an advertiser. We then decide that we want to expand, because we have this new American market and we want to build a new factory that will have ten times the production we now have. The question is: Are we going to build that factory in Quebec, or are we going to move to Georgia where the friendly sheriff will prevent a union from organizing our workers; where we do not have to pay the employer's part of medical insurance; where unemployment insurance only covers 40 per cent and, in some jurisdictions in Georgia, the employer does not have to pay at all. Honourable senators, we run the danger that more of our capitalists will invest in the U.S. We are not being told about that danger. We are told that it will be an agreement that will produce jobs, jobs, jobs. In support of that statement they trot out a study by the Economic Council of Canada which says that between now and 1995, 370,000 jobs will be produced which would not otherwise be produced without a free trade agreement.

For those of you who care to use a pencil and a piece of paper, I would like to dictate a formula: $A = C(1+i)^t$. That means that in the final result the total number of jobs is equal to the number of jobs you now have, multiplied by one, plus the rate of increase to the number of years. And 370,000 new jobs implies a three-tenths of 1 per cent increase in jobs, or 3,000 extra jobs created per month. I will not even go into the assumptions that produced the 370,000, because econometric models such as the one used by the Canada Council in good faith depend entirely on the assumptions put into them, and if the assumptions turn out to be wrong, the results are also wrong.

We are not only prisoners of the United States in terms of the fact that they can do terrible things to us because we have neglected the necessity to diversify our trade but we are facing a United States which, right now, has embarked upon a radical change in policy, a United States which is doing the wrong thing for itself, not just for us.

I have in my hand an article from the Herald Tribune. I refer to the article because it is representative of serious economic literature in the United States. Robert Heilbroner, a great economist in the United States, said in an article in the New York Times in August of 1982 that the United States cannot continue exporting jobs, and that it is going to have to protect not only its consumers but its producers, and that the concept of a global economy is going to have to disappear as laissez-faire disappeared in the past. What we are seeing now in legislation before the U.S. Congress is exactly that. They are saying, "Forget the global economy, we have to protect ourselves." Perhaps we cannot avoid being sucked into that, but let us not pretend it is anything but what Senator Roblin has said—it is highly distasteful. Let us tell the truth to our people.

Lester C. Thurow, in his book the The Zero-Sum Solution: Building a World-Class American Economy, says that the United States is not being defeated by economies that believe in the myth of the lone cowboy entrepreneur, the great individualist, but that it is being defeated by economies that are highly disciplined and have a high sense of social cohesion, and not at all the attitude towards organizing production that the United States has. All of those other economies—and this comes up again in the article in the Herald Tribune—are working in terms of state capitalism. They have found that it is an efficient way of doing things. They organize all their resources together. They do not work, as the Harvard School of Business does, "on this year's bottom line." They do not allow the disappearance and destruction of certain industries.

They are much more rigid in the way they manage their economies, and they are highly successful and are beating the United States to the draw on every single issue, yet we are going to make ourselves even more dependent on the Americans than we already are. Maybe we cannot avoid that, but let us not say that this is something that we are doing with joy in our hearts, and I hope the government does not believe that it is something we are doing with joy in our hearts. We may have been led into a shotgun marriage, but we do not like it.

Senator Everett also brought up the issue of the purchase of newspapers by the Thompson organization in the United States—lots of newspapers. He said, "What's wrong with Americans buying newspapers here? We are only protecting an economic interest."

Well, we are very small and they are very large. If an American newspaper chain or an American television network comes here and buys many of our outlets, and we try to impose Canadian content or any other conditions on them, the Americans would growl and show their teeth. That would be an awfully frightening thing for us. We might be very hard put to resist that, whereas if the Americans want to bully the Thompson organization in the United States, they can do so, and there is nothing we can do in its defence. We can growl all we like, but they would laugh, they would not be interested.

There were few barriers to speak of in the past. The Americans are imposing new ones now. We negotiated in GATT in good faith. We impose barriers as they do, but the Americans have the clout and the strength to beat us to the punch every time, and to dominate us and make us dance to their tune.

Everyone here is old enough to remember that at one time we thought of selling trucks to Cuba. The Americans said that because those trucks were manufactured in Canada by American subsidiaries the American subsidiaries were acting illegally. They were not acting illegally according to Canadian law, and they were Canadian companies, but they were being controlled by the United States.

I do not forget, and many honourable senators must remember, that during the energy crisis oil carriers going to the east coast of Canada were diverted. The American parent of Esso Resources Canada Limited diverted those carriers to the United States. We had to do without. The mother company told them what to do. This is the situation of vassalage in which we find ourselves. We may have to lump it, but I do object to being raped and having to pay for the motel room, having to pay for the vaseline, and having to pay for the cleaning and the tip, and then being asked to smile instead of screaming.

I feel uneasy about negotiating in the face of U.S. unfairness and in the face of their current obsession with protectionism instead of becoming more competitive, as they could become. This government is engaged in a game of strip poker, and it started giving its shirt away before the cards were dealt. It abolished the National Energy Policy without making the Americans pay anything for it. It turned FIRA into a neutered pussycat without making the Americans pay anything for it, and we now have the drug legislation. We are being asked to allow the American-based multinationals plus others to gouge our provincial health services for all the market can bear, yet we cannot do anything because the Americans are too strong and we are too weak.

Should we not, instead, try to diversify our trade? The figures are absolutely disastrous. Over the past two years our trade with world markets outside of the United States has deteriorated tremendously, because everybody got excited about free trade, because for our industry it is simpler and easier to think that we will trade with a country that speaks the same language as we do, which seems to have the same habits, the same tastes, the same forms of advertising, and because we do not have to make an effort if we are selling into the U.S., because we are fairly competitive when it comes to the Americans. We cannot compete with others, but maybe we can compete with the United States. But we are absolutely disregarding the fact that with the Pacific Rim countries we went from a deficit of $734 million a year in the past two years to a deficit of $4.6 billion. Our trade balance with Malaysia alone has gone from plus $12 million to minus $46 million, and the same applies to other countries. We are putting all of our eggs into the United States basket. It seems to me that that is highly dangerous and very foolish.

● (1620)

Are they really going to alter their "buy American" policies to let us have some of the cake of their military procurement? Will they really be that fair? They will say that for security reasons they will not allow "us foreigners" to bid on their secret, hi-tech needs for their defence.

Natural resources are a matter of provincial jurisdiction. Suppose that the people of one Canadian province elect a provincial government that wants to increase its tax take on American-owned resource companies in Canada. We have seen the threats; they were mentioned before. Senator Roblin did not like them; he said that they were distasteful. Should we be getting even deeper into trade with the United States, considering how vulnerable we are?

I was in Europe this summer. I asked the Austrians how they managed a fairly similar relationship. They are next to a giant, for them, relatively—West Germany—which is about ten times their size—as the U.S. is ten times our size. How do they manage when Germany is their major trading partner? They told me that the Federal Republic of Germany does not own 59 per cent of their manufacturing but only 10 per cent; that foreigners, as a whole, only own 20 per cent of Austrian manufacturing—with us it is about 70 per cent. They have not allowed Germany to get a stranglehold on them. This is not being anti-American. This is saying that the Americans will do to us what we would do to them if we were that size.

If you are sleeping next to an elephant, and you are a mouse, it is useful to have one of those beds with big nails sticking out of it in the middle between the two so that if the elephant is rolling over, he will feel a few pricks on his skin—and I am not being sexual, these are nails that I am talking about. We need some restraints when we are dealing with this giant, yet here we are not thinking of alternatives. This government, in the past two years, has abandoned efforts to diversify our trade.

This government, because of its private market philosophy, is forgetting that one of the things that we should encourage is what the great Jane Jacobs talks about in Cities and the Wealth of Nations: Principles of Economic Life. Jane Jacobs is an economist, who is an American and now lives in Toronto. She wrote this remarkable, illuminating book in which she says that wealth is generally created through import substitution—not necessarily import from another country but import into a certain region from another region within the same country. What does that do? I will not go the NDP route of saying that we should turn all of our wheat into cookies before we export it, or that we should take our coal and extract the methane before we export it as coke to the Japanese, but there should be policies that encourage the development of indigenous industries here.

We have a history of helping business do all kinds of things which have helped it put us in the situation in which we are, and we have not taken the proper steps to ensure that we behave at least like Switzerland. They are a free enterprise country, but they have highly developed and world class firms in chemicals and automated tools.

In Drummondville, Quebec, there is a spinning mill that belongs to Dionne Textiles. That spinning mill is totally robotic. The truck backs in at one end, robot arms unload it, and the truck goes to the other end where robot arms load it with the production of the last few hours. There is not a human sole on the floor of the factory. There are six persons per eight-hour shift sitting in a kind of "Spaceship Enterprise" salon, where they play three dimensional chess or work on their post-doctoral thesis, waiting for a bell to tell them that something is broken, and when that happens they go and fix it. That factory was made in Switzerland. Why do we not try to encourage Canadian business, which is obsessed with the U.S. market and tries to imitate it, to develop as others do, and not become even more of, a branch plant economy? Why do we not try to save ourselves from domination?

It may not be avoidable, but I do not want us to be told that we are going into this because it will create jobs—it will not. I do not want us to be told that we can, at any time, be sure that any agreement that we make with the Americans will stand up to their electoral needs every two years during an election. Our only salvation is to try to find other outlets for the energies, capacities and skills of our people, and not to go for bills like the drug bill, which will increase the dominance of American companies in that particular sector of the Canadian economy. This is not the only sector; already they own us lock, stock and barrel.

I have heard Charlie Lynch, for instance, say, "I am all for it. Let them come, let them invest here; then we control them." That is what small countries say in Europe. If the Swiss invest in Belgium, the Belgians control it, sure. If the Swiss do not like the degree of control imposed upon their branch plant by the Belgians, the Swiss can do nothing at all. But considering the degree of dominance in our economy by the Americans, we will not be able to say, "Let them invest here, because as long as they are here we can control them." We cannot. We have seen in the past year what damage the Americans can wreak breaking promises, breaking agreements, ignoring GATT, and treating us as if we were an enemy, which we are not.

Maybe we will be forced, reluctantly, to enter into this, but, please, let us tell ourselves and the Canadian public the truth: No, there will be no more jobs. We are only doing it because the Americans have turned mean and are scaring us, and we are trying to restrict the damage. That is the truth! It is not a glorious situation, it is a humiliating one into which we got ourselves by concentrating on our business people and by concentrating on trade with the Americans and nothing else. Let us try to wake up to this danger and save the country.

• (1630)

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: I want to thank Senator Gigantès for his interesting discourse. In the early part of his comments he referred to the fact that exports do not create additional jobs, that they even out with imports. I should like to ask him: Is it not possible that there is a higher value job that can be created through exports if there is a concentration of high technical types of industries, for example? I wonder if the charts with which he will supply us would show any of that, that is, the difference in the value of jobs as against, simply, the number of jobs.

Senator Gigantès: The Statistics Canada publication I referred to, which is a study of just this issue, shows that those sectors of our economy where we have been most successful in exporting are not related to raw materials but are, in fact, related to manufacturing. I talked about a firm in Drummondville. The owner of that firm has a smaller firm with relatively antiquated machinery in St-Georges de Beauce, where they have 123 employees, not 18. He will close that firm. Peter Drucker, the famous Peter Drucker, says that if you want to compete in international trade, forget about protecting your blue collar and your high technicity jobs; you will have to have wall-to-wall robots.

As a very recent study of the Ontario government shows, the service sector is where nearly all of the new jobs will be created. It is not true that every time you buy robots you need people making robots. There are robots making robots! High technicity jobs are not going to be of an equal number with the former aristocracy of the working class, the steel workers, and so on. Those "labour aristocracy" jobs are shrinking. Unless we start replacing imports by producing some of those imports in this country efficiently, at a cost competitive with imports, what we are facing is more and more service jobs at lower and lower pay.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's international relations.—(Honourable Senator Doyle).

Hon. Richard J. Doyle: Honourable senators, members on both sides of this house were grateful some weeks ago when the Honourable Leader of the Opposition declared that he would have something to say to us about Canada-United States relations. Certainly the time was propitious. Many issues of significance to both countries were being examined by the two governments, and the President of the United States had just paid a visit to this building where the warmth of the reception given him all but obscured the frantic heckling of members of the New Democratic Party.

The Honourable Allan J. MacEachen, as we all recall, was for a time Canada's Secretary of State for External Affairs, and we could expect him to draw upon that experience to counsel us, probably in a critical way, on the risks and rewards of nurturing our association with the Republic, an association that has been paramount in our international adventuring as we have distanced ourselves from our colonial past.

We might have expected the honourable senator to have reminded us of Lester Pearson's thoughts on the relationship. After all, Mr. Pearson came to the Prime Minister's office with more experience in the diplomatic field than any of his predecessors. In 1932 Mr. Pearson wrote this:

It may be expected that the relations between the two states will become increasingly important and that the problems arising therefrom will grow in number and in magnitude. The very similarities of the two people and the intimacy of their contacts will promote such problems, while making easier, it is to be hoped, their peaceful solution.

In 1943, in a New York radio broadcast, Mr. Pearson said:

We are all mixed up together . . . this increasingly close relationship will be of increasing mutual benefit if it is based on sound principles.

Mr. Pearson and John F. Kennedy, in a communiqué issued after their famous meeting at Hyannis Port, said that the two leaders "are arranging for more frequent consultation at all levels in order that the intentions of each government may be fully appreciated by the other and misunderstandings may be avoided."

In his memoirs the former Prime Minister wrote:

We need to receive the kind of special treatment that we have enjoyed in Washington, while making it clear to our American friends that this is not a matter of grace and favour but something to which we are entitled by the nature of our trade and financial relations with them and from which both countries benefit.

Mr. Pearson acknowledged that his principal preoccupation in foreign affairs was with our bilateral relations with the United States. He worked at it knowing that without constant attention and effort, good intentions would go for naught. Once, when he was able to accommodate an urgent request from President Lyndon Johnson, Pearson noted he had "some credit in the bank."

As it turned out, however, Senator MacEachen in his early April speech was not interested in recalling history's lessons. He was disturbed by "current events." Just as he did in the Throne Speech debate, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate went after the "Angel Pasta" of Canada-U.S. relations; flailing away at the cost of "that little extravaganza," the Shamrock Summit; raising his blood pressure with his denunciation of an External Affairs booklet distributed in Washington with the distasteful words that the Prime Minister of Canada was "committed to rebuilding Canada's image as a free, tolerant and independent nation." Shocking!

His steam up, he went after the wording of communiqués and statements that spoke of "commitments" or the "pursuit of resolutions." He had special disdain for what he called "allegedly resolved" irritants. What the Prime Minister's intention or the President's intention might be was to him that day of no importance. Senator MacEachen was weary of words wasted on work in progress, which surely is the whole patient business of creating a climate for agreement.

Mr. Pearson understood that despite difficulties and setbacks, such a process was indispensable. Once he outlined a proposed Canadian initiative to President Kennedy. He got no response. Later he wrote:

We had not worked out adequately in advance the details of its operation nor had we consulted the provinces. Further, there was basic disagreement in cabinet over the whole idea.

Honourable senators, there is purpose and there is process—well defined purpose and painstaking process—in this government's relationship with the United States. Mr. Pearson might have longed for it.

The Right Honourable the Prime Minister and the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for External Affairs have insisted from the beginning of their mandate that Parliament and the public be aware of and involved in the evolution of the relationship and the understanding of its impact on global affairs. No government before has concentrated such attention on purpose and process.

• (1640)

It was my very great privilege for one year to be a member of the Special Joint Committee on Canada's International Relations. Honourable senators will recall that Tom Hockin was the committee's chairman and, in turn, Senators Jacques Flynn and Jean-Maurice Simard were co-chairmen. Senators Gigantès, Grafstein and Stollery were members of the committee, and Senators Asselin, Balfour, Baroote, Frith, Haidasz, Hébert, Kelly, Nurgitz and Perrault participated. Twelve members from the other place were members of the committee and six others took part. Much of the committee's time was devoted to two particularly important matters: the invitation of the U.S. President to participate in the research on the American Strategic Defense Initiative, and the instruction of the communiqué issued at the Quebec Summit to begin a study of ways and means to reduce and eliminate existing barriers and irritants to bilateral trade.

With instructions to hear the views of concerned Canadians and to report back within two months, the committee called meetings in Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg and Halifax, where 300 witnesses gave us their views on Star Wars and bilateral trade. As the report of August 23 said, "The debates went on vigorously, intelligently and sometimes emotionally."

Briefs by the score were presented and carefully stored in the committee's luggage. Newspapers gave the travellers a great deal of space. Television was omnipresent, and hours of taped interviews were recorded for radio.

In its interim report the committee recommended that the government not take a decision on Star Wars without additional information on strategic financial and economic implications. At the same time it advised "that there be immediate bilateral trade discussions with the U.S."

The New Democratic Party dissented. It found "no national consensus in favour of a grand bilateral freer trade initiative".

The Minister of External Affairs responded in Parliament, and said:

The government will continue . . . to resist vigorously U.S. trade protectionist actions. Recently there have been many of these . . . The government has made it clear that there will be no bilateral trade agreement unless it is as good for Canada as it is for the United States. Above all, it must leave intact every means necessary for Canada to continue to shape its own destiny.

The committee's work went on as matters related to other countries and other enterprises were ventilated. By June 1986 the committee, the first of its kind ever appointed by a Canadian government, had received 568 briefs from organizations and businesses, and oral presentations from 630 individuals.

When its final report was presented, it was frankly stated that the government could not yet finance every worthy endeavour proposed or accept every answer to a problem as the best solution. But the great majority of the committee's 121 recommendations were accepted. As the minister said:

This is the beginning, rather than the end, of what the government hopes will become a fuller collaboration between it and the public on foreign policy issues. Through Parliament, and in other ways, the government will seek to ensure a better dialogue with the citizens of this country—and indeed draw on their expertise—in the conduct of Canada's international relations.

The minister spoke of collaboration with the public on foreign affairs. He can rightly boast that on 14 occasions in the first two and a half years of this government he and his colleagues have provided opportunities for discussion in the Commons of international issues, and more often than not those ministerial statements have prompted questions and responses in the Senate. In the four previous years not one such statement was forthcoming from the ministry.

Collaboration with the public "in other ways" has been sought on scores of public platforms—not the least of them the podium provided at the United Nations to our ambassador, Mr. Stephen Lewis. Senator MacEachen concurred with a criticism that Mr. Lewis made of the government before his appointment. The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate noted that Mr. Lewis had written that Canada is "cementing a partnership of deference" with the United States. Does the senator really believe that the ambassador is instructed to crook a knee to the Americans in the difficult duties he performs today?

Mr. Lewis has been forthright and even-handed in representing this country, and has won the confidence of colleagues in the United Nations who may be either pro- or anti-American in their attitudes. Not only ambassadors speak for Canadian independence of thought. The American Vice President could speak to that after his meeting in Ottawa with the Prime Minister. The delegates to the most recent Commonwealth Conference could speak to that after Mr. Mulroney's exhortation on response to apartheid in South Africa. Do we genuflect in GATT or in NATO? Did Senator Roblin, in this chamber yesterday, hesitate to say what this government thinks of U.S. protectionism as it affected Canada in the softwood lumber situation?

Surely Prime Minister Mulroney spoke for all of us last Saturday when he addressed the North Atlantic Assembly in Quebec City, and said:

The Government of Canada has consistently expressed the view that the SALT agreements and the ABM treaty should be adhered to by both sides . . . Extreme care must be taken to ensure that defences are not integrated with existing forces in such a way as to create fears of a first strike . . . We cannot allow strategic defences to undermine the arms control process and existing agreements: the transition should be mutually agreed upon. Without such mutuality, chaos would follow and stability could crumble. Clearly U.S./Soviet consensus on strategic defences will be necessary if the logjam of strategic arms control is to be broken at Geneva.

Perhaps senators opposite did not receive copies of an April speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Vancouver. The subject was sovereignty, and Mr. Clark reminded his audience of the 1985 voyage of the U.S. ice-breaker "Polar Sea". He said it was a shock to all Canadians not because the transit occurred but because we had so few means to assert our claim of control.

He said:

The Arctic has a very special place in the Canadian sense of nationhood and any threats against our sovereign control justifiably provoke the most intense concern. In our response to the Special Joint Parliamentary Committee on Canada's International Relations, we have stated four clear goals for our north: affirming Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic; preparing for commercial use of the Northwest Passage; promoting more co-operation with other northern countries; and modernizing Canada's northern defences.

There is nothing anti-American in the minister's position, but there is certainly nothing deferential.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

• (1650)

Senator Doyle: What is important is that our friendly neighbour understands and accepts our position. Our purpose and our process must be seen to be reasonable if we are not to sink in a sea tossed by adversarial storms. That is why the President and the Prime Minister meet annually, that is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs meets quarterly with the U.S. Secretary of State. That is why trade issues which are so important to both countries are reviewed at First Ministers' Conferences and, of course, why federal and provincial trade ministers meet regularly, as do the International Trade Advisory Committee and the sectoral advisory groups on international trade. And all this interchange of ideas in domestic and bilateral conclave is buttressed by our vigorous presence in the Commonwealth, at the U.N., in GATT, and especially now in Francophonie where global consequences of the U.S.-Canadian relationship have dimensions of their own.

Would it be some kind of confession, in these circumstances, to express the hope that all our partners on this planet would not consider it a weakness to give us the benefit of the doubt when we advocate a position or enlist in a cause? If we are ill-advised or wrong-headed, we will not win, but we hope we will get a fair hearing. That, as Senator MacEachen has reminded us, is the benefit of the doubt we have pledged to the United States. The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate gave us these words of advice: "The national interest is best advanced by making a rational appraisal of the situation and then looking to our own best interests." He might have added, "And keep our powder dry."

Honourable senators, I shall close these remarks with words borrowed from another observer of our relationship with the United States. His subject was freer trade. He said:

I shall leave aside many frivolous criticisms that have been made by political partisans. Because a commercial treaty is very advantageous for one party, it does not follow that it may not be equally good for the other. It must be borne in mind that when two parties sit down to make a bargain, the result arrived at cannot be what each desires to obtain, but what both will consent to.

We are all alike concerned in the prosperity of our foreign commerce and in seeking good relations with our powerful neighbour and to those ends we should all heartily contribute, whatever party may be in power . . .

[Senator Doyle.]

The government opened negotiations, not with hat in hand, but in the frank, independent attitude of men who ask no favours, but believed they had ample equivalents to offer for all they sought to obtain.

The words were spoken in our chamber 112 years ago by a Liberal trade negotiator, the Honourable George Brown, a father of Confederation who served the Senate with distinction.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate, again in the name of Senator MacEachen. It is actually an inquiry, so, of course, if he speaks it will close the debate. I am not attempting to close the debate by adjourning it in his name. I am sure that the honourable senator would yield to someone else who wished to speak.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

MOTION TO REFER REPORT ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS" BACK TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Jack Marshall, rose pursuant to notice of Friday, December 19, 1986:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the motion adopted by the Senate on May 28, 1986, and passed by a vote of 28 for and 17 against, that the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986, be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop; and further, that consideration be given to the apparent disregard by National Film Board officials to their commitments to the Senate Sub-committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of evidence before the Sub-committee.

He said: Honourable senators, I finally rise to address an inquiry which I introduced on December 19, 1986, just prior to the Christmas recess. It has to do with the production and distribution of the National Film Board film entitled, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". The inquiry is worded in a similar fashion to a motion introduced by my colleague, Senator Molson, on May 13, 1986, which was adopted in the chamber by a vote of 28 to 17, to refer the report to the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs back to the main Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology with instructions to consider and report on the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute:

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop."

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop; and

I added to the motion the following:

Further, that consideration be given to the apparent disregard by National Film Board officials of their commitments to the Senate Sub-Committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of evidence before the Sub-committee.

Honourable senators, I should inform you that I intend to address my inquiry in three parts. I shall do the first part today. I hope to continue with the other parts as time permits.

Honourable senators will recall that included in Senator Molson's motion was a recommendation No. 3, which stated:

That a copy of this report as it stands or may be amended, be formally submitted to the Honourable Minister of Communications, with the request that it be transmitted to the National Film Board along with the Minister's specific instructions of action required of the board to correct the wrong that has been done to the factual record of the late Air Marshall, William Avery Bishop, V.C.

Honourable senators will also recall that on a motion in amendment thereto by the Honourable Senator Flynn, recommendation No. 3 was deleted with the concurrence of the Senate. I think that the speech made by Senator Flynn is worthy of note, and I want to put some of the pertinent points he made on record. He said in part:

—I believe that the Senate has every reason to censure the National Film Board and indicate to it in some way that this type of production is unacceptable in terms of the legislation by which the board is governed.

I examined the original legislation which goes back to 1939. It has been changed somewhat since then but has remained substantially the same with regard to the purpose of the NFB.

He went on to say:

It is clear, even when we look at other sections of the act, that the work of the National Film Board is essentially technical. It is supposed to promote the production and distribution of films and represent the government in its relations with other agencies with the same avocation. However, the NFB has no mandate that can be said to be ideological.

None of the provisions of that act gives the National Film Board free rein to indulge in an ideological controversy. I make a distinction between production and creation. In this case we have someone who created a scenario, and then produced the film. But the creation of the scenario does not really come under the responsibilities of the National Film Board. Its duty is not to promote the careers of scenario writers but only to produce films. Production is a technical element which ensures the progress of cinema. Cinema is a medium which is becoming ever more powerful, challenging and entertaining.

The National Film Board should not express its ideological or political opinion. The National Film Board is not in a position to lecture us about war, about the merit or demerit of Billy Bishop, or about this or that. In my opinion, such a production is definitely outside its jurisdiction.

Honourable senators, speaking of jurisdictions, here is what John Grierson, the founding commissioner of the National Film Board, had to say at a National Film Board anniversary in 1964—23 years ago. He said to his audience:

● (1700)

I have come to remind you that you are all employees of the Government of Canada. You are all civil servants using tax money and working for the benefit of the people of Canada. This is not a playground.

It has come to my attention recently that the Film Board more and more is becoming infiltrated with... types who intend to use the facilities which it offers for their own private purposes. There will come a time, and mark my words it will come, when the limit of public tolerance will be transgressed and the activities of the board will be severely curtailed.

Honourable senators, in my opinion John Grierson was prophesying in 1964 exactly what Paul Cowan did in 1981, and here I am not referring to the excellent record that the NFB has in other aspects. Paul Cowan used the facilities of the National Film Board for his own private purposes: To present his own version of Billy Bishop in a film that is both anti-hero and anti-war. In my opinion also, the limit of public tolerance has been transgressed by Cowan's action.

After Senator Flynn's amendment, the motion was dealt with by the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology, which resulted, in turn, in a reference back to the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs. Unfortunately, then, as a result of the prorogation of Parliament, all matters relating to the Billy Bishop inquiry were deemed to have expired. Therefore, honourable senators, my inquiry today is intended to revive the motion to refer it back again, if that is the pleasure of the Senate.

My reason for re-introducing the inquiry, honourable senators, is the fact that certain events which followed the tabling of the report prompt rebuttal. I do so in order to place on the record not only an obvious disregard by the National Film Board officials of their commitment to the Senate subcommittee but also a series of conflicting statements and inconsistencies made by the National Film Board officials who appeared before the committee which contradicted their commitments.

The first conflict which should be addressed is the disregard by two of the witnesses—the producer, Paul Cowan, and the executive producer, Adam Symansky—over what surely was a reasonable disclaimer contained in recommendation No. 1. Most senators said that that recommendation did not go far enough. Not only was that recommendation disregarded but, immediately after the tabling of the report, Mr. Cowan stated publicly his own rejection of the Senate's disclaimer. At that time Mr. Cowan stated that they would insert their own disclaimer, because he said he felt it was more accurate. Obviously he took it upon himself to speak for the National Film Board, and perhaps the question should be asked as to whether he is the director and, if not, who he is speaking for. His version was as follows:

It is (the film) a perspective of the nature of heroism and the legend of Billy Bishop. It contains both factual (documentary) footage . . .

And I repeat, honourable senators, “(documentary) footage”—

. . . and dramatized segments.

Honourable senators, this was reported in the Ottawa Citizen on April 16, 1986, the day after the report was tabled.

It is worth while noting that in the same article it was stated that the Film Board began relabelling the film a docu-drama, instead of a documentary, about one month after Mr. Cowan's first appearance before the committee. Mr. Cowan appeared before the committee on two occasions, on November 28, 1985, with his commissioner, Mr. Macerola, and on December 10, 1985, with Mr. Symansky. At the same time the executive producer, Adam Symansky, said in an interview reported in the same newspaper that he would not approve of any wording which labelled the film, or parts thereof, fiction. Evidently he, too, was speaking on behalf of the National Film Board. Then Mr. Symansky went on to say, and I quote:

Not that there aren't fictionalized parts . . . we used some shots from Hollywood feature films, the dog-fight and so on. There are obviously fictional elements, but the point we want to maintain is that everything that's in there, any of the factual content in there, we're willing to stand behind. And it was not made up.

The following is also reported from the same day's newspaper article, and I quote:

Symansky and the film's producer, Paul Cowan, agreed after testifying before the openly hostile senators last fall to re-label the film a docudrama. Symansky said Monday . . .

Which was two days previously—

. . . a disclaimer was included about a month after the hearings, but he could not give the exact wording. He and Cowan were not available for comment Tuesday, and the film board's communications department said the board would have no official comment on the report until it receives a copy.

It is interesting to note here, honourable senators, that although Mr. Cowan put on the record his or the NFB's own disclaimer—and not Mr. Macerola's disclaimer—Mr. Symansky was not aware of the wording. Keep in mind also that Mr. Macerola in his evidence before the committee stated that effective that day—which was November 28, 1985—every print of “The Kid Who Couldn't Miss” was being amended immediately by the insertion of a statement as follows:

. . . that it (the film) is a docudrama presenting a perspective on the nature of heroism and the legend of Billy Bishop.

Mr. Macerola further indicated that the decision had been taken two weeks earlier, presumably meaning approximately November 14, 1985. That was two weeks after the hearings began.

As chairman of the committee, at that moment I asked Mr. Macerola if he made the decision to re-classify the film just to please the committee. He replied, “Absolutely not.” He said he had made a speech a year before describing the film as a docu-drama. Honourable senators, that would take us back to November 1984. Therefore, if he had made the statement back at that stage, why did he not tell the other organizations such as the RCAF and others who protested against the film, and why did he not tell the Senate committee when we invited him to appear? Why did he not advise the Legion and the Airforce Association and all of those veterans' agencies which had been objecting to the “documentary” film?

Honourable senators, I think it is important to note here that Mr. Cowan, at that very moment, interrupted his commissioner to comment:

I think it is clear that to most people, this is not a straight documentary. Whether we called it something else or not, I think is irrelevant.

By calling it a docudrama, I personally am not in any way saying that what the film says is not true. I think that what you are trying to do . . .

And by that, I think he meant the subcommittee—

... by calling it a docudrama is that you are somehow trying to make it less true. I do not believe that.

Honourable senators, how can you make something that is true less true? I repeat that Cowan's view is that:

Whether we call it a docudrama or not is immaterial to me.

Therefore, in summary, honourable senators, here is the contradicting series of statements. On November 28, 1985, Macerola states in evidence before the committee that effective that day all copies of the film were being amended by insertion of a statement that: "It is a docudrama presenting a perspective on the nature of heroism and the legend of Billy Bishop." Cowan was in attendance with Macerola, heard what was said, and contradicted it.

On April 15, 1986, the report was tabled. Cowan told the press that he was ignoring the recommendation of the committee and inserting his own disclaimer—not Macerola's disclaimer; not the National Film Board's disclaimer—which he claimed was much more accurate.

On April 16, 1986, Symansky said he would not approve wording which labelled the film fiction, but admits at the same time that there are fictionalized parts and elements in it. He also could not remember the exact words in his version of the disclaimer. In that same interview he also said that he had not seen a copy of the report on that date.

Honourable senators, incidentally, as I hope to point out later, Mr. Macerola, who appeared before the Communications Committee in the other place on April 17, 1986, stated that he was in Halifax and was questioned by reporters, who all had a copy of the report and he did not. I can state emphatically that the National Film Board did have a copy of the report prior to its having been tabled, and if Mr. Symansky did not have a copy of it in Halifax, it was due to the inefficiency of his own communications department who, although they stated to reporters on April 16—the day after the report was tabled—that they would not comment until receiving a copy of the report, were not stating the facts.

Honourable senators, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs, I happen to know that the NFB did have a copy of the report on April 14, the day before the report was tabled. They need only ask one of their officials, Ms. Parent.

● (1710)

Dealing again with the insertion of the disclaimer, the National Film Board did not act as it indicated it would both to the subcommittee and to the press, despite the fact that Macerola stated in his evidence on November 28, 1985, that effective that day every print would be shown with the statement which I previously referred to, that "the film is a docudrama presenting a perspective on the nature of heroism and the legend of Billy Bishop".

Five months later, on April 23, 1986, I was advised—

Senator Frith: Was there not a paragraph to the effect that it contained some dramatization?

Senator Marshall: Yes.

As I said, five months later, on April 23, I was advised that at a screening in Ottawa's Public Archives there was no such disclaimer shown with the film, although there was an announcement prior to the screening, which announcement was worded much as the NFB disclaimer was later presented. Then, nine months later, the film was shown in September 1986 on Detroit's Public Broadcasting System, WTVS, Channel 56. No explanatory statement was shown in connection with the film, nor was any voice-over disclaimer presented.

How could this happen? It happened simply because the National Film Board did not withdraw the film for head office insertion of the disclaimer but, rather, permitted the disclaimer to be added in the field. Further, the National Film Board did not specify that the disclaimer be added after the titles, as we had requested, so that field offices would tack it on the front of the film even before the NFB logo appears on the film. It is obvious that field officials did not know or did not care about the significance of the disclaimer. The end result is that, in practice, the film is probably often presented as beginning at a point after the disclaimer has been run through and the NFB logo first appears. In other words, probably many viewers do not see the disclaimer, because the projectionist considers it not to be part of the production itself.

Strangely enough, honourable senators, after a year I am still receiving notices that the film does not have the disclaimer. This problem will not die. This problem will not go away. It has now been a year since we voted in this chamber to request the National Film Board to take corrective action on the film by issuing a disclaimer. Evidently that has been to little or no avail until now, and the film still receives wide distribution. It is now available on video cassette tapes to better allow the NFB to circulate its anti-war hero message.

Unfortunately, honourable senators, the effects of the film have seeped into the minds of our youth, and here is a current example. Several weeks ago a grade nine student from the Kingston area visited Owen Sound, the home of Billy Bishop. When she was reminded that she was in Bishop's home town, she said simply that "We saw a film in school about Billy Bishop and he was a fake."

That is what Paul Cowan has accomplished with his production, and, unfortunately, countless other children will be infested with the same erroneous blight on their young minds. I hope that we, as parliamentarians, may find within us the will to protect Billy Bishop's record, rather than what appears to be hiding behind words which describe the film.

Honourable senators, I wish to adjourn the debate until the next sitting, at which time I will bring into focus other aspects of the events for consideration by the Senate.

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, before the motion to adjourn the debate is put, I wonder if the honourable senator could answer a question.

We have been told that the National Film Board has not taken the necessary steps to assure that the proposed disclaimer added to the copies of the film in circulation in such a way that the disclaimer is brought to the attention of those seeing the film.

I wonder if the honourable senator knows that this matter was raised recently by two honourable senators at a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance. More pointedly, my question is: Does the honourable senator know if the proposed recommendations which he read today were brought to the attention of the minister to the end that the government might take appropriate action when preparing the spending estimates for the National Film Board for the fiscal year 1987-88?

I could go on and ask if it is the honourable senator's intention to propose a reduction in that vote at the appropriate time.

Senator Marshall: I was advised by Senator Molson that he and Senator Everett made reference to this at the committee meeting to which you refer.

The Minister of Communications is aware of what has gone on in the debate, but has not taken any action. As a matter of fact, in my next segment I hope to be able to refer to letters which were sent to the previous ministers and the present minister which will indicate their version of the fact that they do not want to do anything because of the arm's-length provision, and other factors.

I can also say that the matter was referred back to the main committee, and then prorogation came along and we did not get any further.

Senator Stewart: I understand that. That is why I said the "proposed recommendations" rather than the "recommendations."

May I ask if the honourable senator is considering requesting a reduction in that vote at the appropriate time?

Senator Marshall: I have been thinking of various approaches. I had not thought of that approach, but the fact that Senator Stewart raises it, and the fact that Senator Molson and Senator Everett raised the matter at the National Finance Committee meeting, allows me to consider that. I have not completed my intervention yet. In the next two or three days, depending on the time and when I can get on again, I will have a motion prepared.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, does Senator Marshall mean to underline what seems to me to be the inadequacy of the second part of the disclaimer, the disclaimer that said, "There are some portions that are dramatized"? That is not an admission that the portion that was dramatized is fiction. They are really not saying that this is partly documentary footage, partly historically-researched footage and partly fiction when they say, "Part is dramatized," because one can dramatize the truth.

Our suggestion for a disclaimer was much more solid than the one they have suggested.

Senator Marshall: What I hope to point out more strongly are the inconsistencies. The officials gave evidence at the committee that they were going to do certain things, and yet they have not done those things. I did not realize that we did not have the power to insist that they do that, but they did make commitments to meet our objections, and after that they completely contradicted themselves.

As a matter of fact, one of the stronger points I hope to raise is what happened when Mr. Macerola appeared before the Communications and Culture Committee of the other place when he contradicted what he said to the Senate committee or rather in exchanged correspondence. I hope to be able to clear that up later.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Earl A. Hastings, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources have power to sit at four o'clock in the afternoon Wednesday, the 10th June, 1987, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I would like to have a word on this item. I chatted with Senator Hastings earlier today on the problem of committees sitting while the Senate is sitting. I suspect that the rule saying that this should not happen was put there for a very real purpose, and that is to encourage as many senators as possible to attend the sittings when the Senate is in session.

It seems to me that we are going beyond the emergency conditions that allow committees to sit while the Senate is sitting. Yesterday we were faced with four committees asking permission to sit while the Senate was sitting. Some of us who are members of those committees would like to have participated in certain discussions and decisions that were made at those meetings yesterday. I am thinking personally of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, where certain decisions were made that I would have liked to participate in. Other members of the committee were also precluded from attending because of their duties here in the chamber.

While it is not my intention or desire to try to impede in any way the progress of the work of the committees, I think that the work of this chamber comes first.

Honourable senators, we have a fairly short weekly schedule here in the chamber when we sit, and I think that there is plenty of space on both sides of the sitting days to accommodate a reasonably-scheduled set of committee meetings. We have evenings and we have some mornings that are available for committee sessions. I realize that there is a shortage of rooms and that we have a shortage of staff, but I do not think we have a shortage of days. We have Mondays and Fridays, and I think that under normal circumstances, when you are planning as far ahead as June 10, a way could be found to have a committee sit on one of the days on which the Senate is not sitting.

Honourable senators, I simply want to say that although I am reluctant to deny leave in this particular instance, I have to go on record as saying that, for myself—and I certainly do not purport to speak for everyone on this side of the house—in the future I intend to look very carefully at any requests for a committee to sit while the Senate is sitting. As far as I am concerned, there will need to be a pretty good reason given for setting aside the rules of the chamber.

Senator Hastings: Honourable senators, I appreciate the remarks of the deputy leader and I appreciate the consideration that he has given to my request in this regard. However, I do not think that anyone could say that the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has asked very often for this consideration. On that particular day we do have witnesses coming from Calgary and Toronto. We felt it appropriate to have the committee meet at a specific hour in order to facilitate the witnesses' presence on that day.

Honourable senators, the committee is meeting on Fridays and Mondays in an attempt to take the pressure off Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays. However, we would be grateful if favourable consideration were given to this request.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

Senator Doody: I agree with that completely, but I failed to make one point, a selfish one, and that is that I am a member of the Senate Committee on Energy. I have a great interest in its meetings. When that committee sits at the same time as the Senate sits, I cannot attend the meeting because I must remain in the chamber.

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I should like to take part in this discussion. I expressed my views on this issue forcefully yesterday or the day before, when four committees of the Senate were scheduled to meet at the same time as the Senate was scheduled to sit. I am a member of all four of those committees, so I repeat what I said about my unhappiness with that particular situation. Imagine my irritation, let us say, when I found that on the following day—this morning—there were no committee meetings.

Senator Frith: I attended two meetings this morning.

Senator Roblin: I refer to the four committees of which I am a member. Those four committees all sat at the same time the other day while none met this morning.

Senator Frith: There were three committee meetings held this morning, the first at 8.30.

Senator Roblin: I do not approve of this motion. I realize the difficulty of getting witnesses here, but I think that the work of the Senate comes first. I would be happier if my friend asked that the committee have permission to sit when the Senate rises. That would be a practical way of dealing with the situation.

I am not going to repeat my position, except to say that I do not approve of the motion.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, we have underlined various aspects of the position taken by the Deputy Leader of the Government. I think we all agree that it is very desirable to have no committees sitting while the Senate is sitting.

While we are underlining elements of the discussion that has just taken place, I think we should also underline what Senator Hastings has said—that is, his committee, in this case, is asking permission to sit when the Senate is sitting, but it normally schedules other meetings for Fridays and Mondays, as we are encouraging committees to do.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I point out that we have been following a fairly successful method for scheduling committee meetings by having the chairmen of the committees approach the whips. I for one was not approached on this occasion. I would hate to see the system break down. I think there should have been some consultation with the whips.

I also point out that the Scroll contains a motion to establish a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake accord. The Committee of the Whole may meet to consider the Meech Lake agreement on the day in question, which makes it very difficult for senators who want to follow the Committee of the Whole proceedings as well as the Energy Committee proceedings.

Perhaps the Honourable Senator Hastings is not interested in the Meech Lake agreement, but I am sure that if he looks to his leader he will find that he has an interest in the Committee of the Whole proceedings and would rather have it receive priority over the Dome Petroleum arrangement.

I ask Senator Hastings to have a little respect for his leader and the motion he has on the order paper.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to, on division.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

● (1410)

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 2, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE, JUNE 2, 1987—TABLING OF AGREED TEXTS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government could tell us when, following the meeting on Tuesday next, June 2, he will be able to table in the Senate any texts that may have been agreed upon at that meeting.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, no decision on that matter has been made, but I see no reason for delaying the tabling of such resolutions in this place.

Senator MacEachen: Would it be a fair conclusion that if everything goes according to the prescribed plan of the Leader of the Government on Tuesday, he would be able to table the documents in the Senate on the following day?

Senator Murray: I would do my best to do so, honourable senators. I cannot foresee any circumstance at the moment that would prevent my doing so. But subject to some unforeseen circumstance arising, I will do my best to table on the next sitting day such resolutions as will have been agreed on.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—UNDERTAKINGS OFFERED TO OBTAIN AGREEMENT BY PROVINCES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday during Question Period the Leader of the Government in the Senate explained to us that he was not present on April 30, the day of the meeting at Meech Lake, and that only the 11 First Ministers were there, plus 2 people taking some notes. He was later asked about any deals that were made to attain the Meech Lake accord.

I think I know what his answer will be to this, but I want to give him an opportunity to explain it, in view of what he said yesterday in answer to questions by Senator Grafstein.

One of those 11 ministers, Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island, says that without the two agenda deals—that is, for Senate reform and fisheries—the agreement would not have been reached and, in fact, was only reached in the last few minutes in exchange for the Prime Minister's agreeing to those two issues. Otherwise, according to Mr. Ghiz, there would not have been a Meech Lake accord.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, there is a big difference between a secret under-the-table deal, as was suggested yesterday by Senator Grafstein—

Senator Olson: That was your interpretation of it, not his.

Senator Murray:—and a public agreement by the 11 First Ministers. What Premier Ghiz was referring to, if I read him correctly, is the fact that the 11 First Ministers agreed that a second round of constitutional negotiations would take place after Quebec had “come on board,” as it were, and that the agenda for that second round would include, among other matters, Senate reform, fisheries, and so forth.

Senator Frith: That is the problem that arises in the interpretation of “secret.” I do not remember Senator Grafstein talking about “under the table” or “underhanded.” He just asked if there were any agreements or deals made between the Prime Minister of Canada and individual premiers present at the meeting. Those discussions all took place in secret.

Senator Nurgitz: Senator Grafstein asked about a “separate and private undertaking.”

Senator Frith: They were separate and they were private, but they were later made public. They were private at the time.

In any event, if I understand the Leader of the Government's answer, he is saying that they were eventually made public, and there were no other undertakings or agreements. These were made secretly, that is, in private, but they were eventually made public. I take it he is saying that there were no other such agreements that have not been made public.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the discussions during the so-called “Quebec round” were based on the five conditions set out by the Province of Quebec, initially in the Liberal Party's election manifesto in 1985, and then in a speech by Mr. Rémillard, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, a year ago at Mont-Gabriel. The five conditions that were being discussed were and are a matter of public knowledge and are very well known.

There was, if I might describe it that way, a sixth matter which was also very well known, and that is that First Ministers would commit themselves to a second round of constitutional negotiations, and that it would probably be necessary to agree during the first round to some of the agenda items for the second round. I made this very point in answer to a question some months ago here in the Senate. That is what Premier Getty was referring to.

As to the question that the Deputy Leader of the Opposition puts about other agreements or other undertakings, my answer to him is the same as the answer I gave yesterday to Senator Grafstein.

Senator Frith: That is, that there were none. In order to understand all of that series of questioning yesterday and today, we do have to remember that the Leader of the Government was not present at the meeting, so we have his assurance that he is confident that although he was not present at the time, no such agreements were made.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I dislike engaging in the kind of rhetoric that I was obliged to engage in yesterday, justified though it was, but I am sorely tempted to repeat what I had to say yesterday. I do not know whether my honourable friends opposite are paranoid or just poisonous in their attitudes.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh! Shame!

Senator Argue: They are just politicians, like you.

Senator Frith: Unlike the Leader of the Government in the matter of the meetings at Meech Lake, I have been present at all meetings among my colleagues, and they are neither paranoid nor poisonous.

Incidentally, we did not quite finish that discussion, because I am sure the Leader of the Government realizes that I do not ask questions either to please or to displease him, but only to get information.

However, we do take it that although the Leader of the Government was not present, he is satisfied that no such agreements were made.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—LEGAL ACTION BY TERRITORIES

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I should like to ask some more questions about the Meech Lake accord, but not on that branch of it.

Apparently the Territories have launched a court action designed to bring about a major change to the Meech Lake accord. What is the position of the federal government with reference to those actions?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): The position of the federal government is that the matter is in the hands of our legal advisers.

[Senator Murray.]

Senator Frith: Therefore, am I to understand that we cannot get any information on it because it is sub judice?

● (1420)

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it is not the intention of ministers to comment on the merits, or otherwise, of the case at the moment. As I understand it, it is going through the courts.

Senator Frith: That means, I take it, that we cannot pursue the matter with the government in Parliament. Does it mean that the Meech Lake proceedings will also be stopped, or that the discussions with the First Ministers will be delayed while we await legal opinions and the outcome of the court case?

Senator Murray: Of course not, honourable senators. There is a lawsuit, to which the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has referred, that has been launched by the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. That matter is in the hands of our legal advisers, and ministers will not be commenting upon it for the moment.

Senator Frith: But I am not asking the Leader of the Government to comment on the merits of the case. I agree that we must await legal opinion, and it is a matter that might be privileged after it is dealt with. I am simply asking what effect it will have on the follow-up to the Meech Lake accord.

Senator Murray: None, honourable senators.

Senator Frith: So much for the Territories!

ECONOMIC SUMMIT

VENICE, ITALY—AGRICULTURE AS AGENDA ITEM

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, could the Leader of the Government tell us whether the Minister for International Trade or the Prime Minister's Office has been successful in putting on the agenda for the summit meeting in Venice the problems that we have in agriculture that were discussed here in Ottawa only a few days ago?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Prime Minister Mulroney was successful in putting the matter of the international agricultural problems on the agenda of the Tokyo meeting last year and he will have it on the agenda for Venice this year.

Senator Olson: I am glad to hear that. There was some speculation yesterday that while Prime Minister Mulroney had tried to get the matter on the agenda, thus far he had not succeeded in doing so. If the minister is telling us that there is confirmation of its being on the agenda at a sufficiently high level that it will be discussed, that is comforting. But I wonder if he would check and make sure that that has happened.

Senator Murray: I think I can assure my friend that as the Prime Minister was successful in getting it on the agenda for Tokyo last year, he will be successful in getting it on the agenda for Venice this year.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, although this matter was on the agenda at Tokyo, nothing useful came of it. Grain prices, and so on, are worse than they ever were. To say that because the Prime Minister was successful in getting the matter on the agenda of the Tokyo meeting he will be successful again—if that is the only basis the minister has for that positive reply—is pretty limp and weak. I want to know if the people responsible for setting up the agenda for the Venice meeting have agreed that this matter is to go on the agenda.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I am not aware that the agenda for the Venice meeting is, first, closed, and, second, in the hands of anybody other than the leaders themselves. They decide their agenda, and other world leaders, including the President of the United States, the President of France and the Prime Minister of Italy, are well aware of our intentions in that regard.

Senator Olson: They are well aware of our intentions, but have they agreed to have it on the agenda for discussion? The minister is making some kind of gesture of exasperation. I say that because we have to describe these things so that they can appear in the record. I am asking him whether he knows if the matter is on the agenda and whether the other leaders or their officials have agreed to put it there. There is speculation that they have not agreed to have it on the agenda.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, the Prime Minister placed agriculture on the agenda of last year's Tokyo Summit and will do so again at Venice next month.

CN MAINTENANCE SHOPS, MELVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN— PROPOSED LAYOFFS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government. First, I will give him some information and ask him to comment on it. I am informed by citizens, and particularly by the Mayor of Melville, Saskatchewan, that CN is scheduling a major lay-off of maintenance workers in that city for June 22.

The community of Melville is most upset not only because a number of CN employees will be losing their jobs in Melville but because it is happening at a period when the agriculture industry is experiencing very difficult times, and business conditions in Melville are becoming very difficult.

I ask the minister if he is aware of the policy of CN with regard to lay-offs in terminals such as Melville, and whether he would be prepared to make strong representations to the Minister of Transport in the hope that the announcement will be withdrawn and those maintenance workers will continue to be employed in those shops.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I shall convey my friend's representations to Mr. Crosbie, the Minister of Transport.

Senator Argue: I have one or two other questions on this subject. The people of Melville are so upset that they are holding—and this is something that is pretty well unheard of in Saskatchewan—a street demonstration, led by the mayor of the city, because they feel very frustrated. I do not know whether or not they have concrete evidence, but they are under the impression that some way or another the government—not CN necessarily, but the government—has set down guidelines for CN to cut back or to rationalize its maintenance service.

Is the minister aware of whether or not the cabinet or the Minister of Transport has taken a governmental position with regard to what guidelines CN should follow with regard to—I know of no better term—rationalizing its maintenance facility?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, those are basically management prerogatives and management decisions. However, I will convey the honourable senator's comments to the Minister of Transport, who reports to Parliament for CN.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I have a further question for the Leader of the Government which he might look into. From my reading of Hansard and from statements that are being made in the Commons, it would seem that there is at least a major possibility of there being an increased number of maintenance jobs in CN's shops in Winnipeg. My question is: Is the move in Melville a move to centralize operations or maintenance work in Winnipeg, and will the Leader of the Government convey to the Minister of Transport my recommendation and hope that those maintenance workers will be maintained in Melville rather than having the Melville work centralized in Winnipeg, particularly since extra consideration appears to be given to the very large city of Winnipeg?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I will convey those representations also to Mr. Crosbie.

Senator Argue: Just kill Melville!

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—BUDGET FOR GOVERNMENT PUBLICITY

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Government Leader in the Senate. The government will be spending millions of dollars to enlighten Canadians on the merits of free trade. With a view to enlightening Canadians on the drawbacks of free trade, if any, does the government intend to use some of those millions, again to keep Canadians adequately informed?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, government policy in support of a free trade system with the United States is very well known. We do not agree that the drawbacks will be so numerous as to weigh very heavily on the country. Finally, I leave it to the various interests in our society, including the political parties and the various organizations that are opposed to free trade, to make their views known to the people.

Senator Denis: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question. Can these associations spend as many millions as the government to respond to enquiries concerning the drawbacks? Those who are against do not know why, any more than those who are for. Your publicity refers only to the merits, but not to the drawbacks. Therefore Canadians are badly informed by this government.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I simply cannot accept the thesis of our colleague. All I can say is that the Minister for International Trade has a very small budget for publicity.

Senator Denis: It has been said that $26 million would be earmarked for promoting the benefits of free trade. Perhaps the benefits are not all that significant if they require millions of dollars for publicity.

Senator Murray: I would remind Senator Denis that a free trade debate is on the order paper. He will have an opportunity to express his opposition to our policies during that debate.

Senator Denis: But there is not enough room for all Canadians in our galleries.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—INTERPRETATION OF TEXT RE AGENDA FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCES

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I want to go back to the line of questioning we engaged in earlier with regard to the Meech Lake accord. First, I have a question concerning how one should read the document that was made public on May 1. I am referring to the passage concerning the second round. We are told that there will be a requirement that a First Ministers' Conference be held not less than once per year, and that the first conference shall be held within 12 months of the proclamation of this amendment. Then the document goes on to say, "entrench in the Constitution the following items on the agenda." My question is: Is that a continuing agenda, or is that the agenda for only the first of the conferences? In other words, is there to be a continuing agenda for First Ministers' conferences, or is this the agenda for the first of those continuing conferences?

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FISHERIES ROLES AND RESPONSIBILITIES—JURISDICTION OVER ATLANTIC PROVINCES FISHERIES

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, my other question is somewhat different, but it relates to the same matter. Yesterday there appeared in the Toronto Star a story about a conversation a reporter had with the Premier of Prince Edward Island. That article said, in part:

After Getty got his concession, Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford pushed fish, his "big issue," following this winter's Canada-France cod dispute in the waters around the French islands of St. Pierre-Miquelon, Ghiz said.

Peckford was so "insistent" over it that, according to Ghiz's perception, "if I don't get fish in there, Prime Minister, I don't think I will go along with this Meech Lake accord."

Senator Haidasz: What a trade-off.

Senator Frith: A pretty fishy deal.

Senator Haidasz: It smells.

Senator Stewart: I wanted to know how big Premier Peckford's gain was, and just what he got. Therefore, I turned to the document and I found that there is to be entrenched on the agenda "fisheries roles and responsibilities." My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Does the inclusion of "fisheries roles and responsibilities" mean that the government envisions the possibility that a change may be made with regard to jurisdiction over the fisheries in the waters adjacent to the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the government envisions the possibility of discussing fisheries roles and responsibilities during the second round of constitutional negotiations. There is nothing new about the fact that Newfoundland wants to discuss fish at constitutional negotiations. My honourable friend will be aware that the Government of Newfoundland and the other governments present discussed these matters in the 1980, 1981 and 1982—

Senator Doody: And in 1971.

Senator Murray: —and, indeed, I am reminded by the Deputy Leader of the Government, in the 1971 rounds. There was the best efforts draft which was arrived at by the federal government and some of the provinces on this matter. So it is not a new subject, and it should come as no surprise to anybody that it is on the agenda for the second round. I myself alluded to the strong possibility that we would have to agree on an agenda that would probably include such matters as Senate reform and fish.

Senator McElman: They go together.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, that is a helpful answer. It suggests that Premier Peckford got little or nothing, that this is a topic which has been discussed before, and that they are going to discuss it again and, presumably, reach much the same conclusion. So, I turn the coin over and come to the conclusion that the government does not envision the possibility of a change with regard to jurisdiction over the fisheries off the Atlantic provinces. Is that correct?

Senator Murray: The honourable senator has made two or three statements, in preface to his question, that are quite without foundation and, indeed, are wrong and inaccurate. The first is that, as he puts it, Premier Peckford got nothing. The fact of the matter is that Premier Peckford got what he wanted, which was to put fisheries roles and responsibilities on the agenda for the second round of constitutional negotiations.

Senator Olson: Is that all?

Senator Murray: I might also say that some of the other things that were decided at Meech Lake are of some importance to Premier Peckford and other premiers, including the doctrine of the acceptance of the principle of the equality of the provinces, one which, I note, was rejected by the Liberal Party today. The honourable senator can assume what he likes. The facts are there. The second round of constitutional negotiations will include as an agenda item fisheries roles and responsibilities, as requested during the meetings at Meech Lake by Premier Peckford of Newfoundland.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, while we are on this roll, so to speak—

Senator MacEachen: It is hardly a roll.

Senator Olson: It is not a roll, because they are stuck.

Senator Frith: We are talking about roles, r-o-l-e-s, not the ones that occur occasionally at the Press Gallery dinner.

Senator MacEachen: The ones Eric got.

Senator Frith: What does "roles" mean in this sense, roles of what?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, since it is a discussion among governments, I presume that it would refer to the respective roles and responsibilities among governments. But if the honourable senator wants further precision, I shall see whether I need to bring in a prepared reply.

Senator Frith: Your understanding of it would do.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government has said that I made several inaccurate statements. I was quoting what ostensibly is a direct quotation from the Premier of Prince Edward Island. The leader then went on to say that the Premier of Newfoundland got what he wanted. That may be true. My question is: How much was he asking for? If all he got is what the Leader of the Government in the Senate today says he got, namely that they will go around the fisheries question once again, as they have in the past, then I conclude, to use his interpretation, that the Premier of Newfoundland was asking for very little, and he got very little. Is that correct?

• (1440)

Senator Olson: That is what he got.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I think it is of considerable importance to the province of Newfoundland, and obviously to the Government of Newfoundland, that they have the opportunity to discuss and put forward their position on roles and responsibilities relating to the fisheries at a second round of constitutional negotiations. Premier Peckford specifically asked to have that undertaking, and he received it. In fact, Newfoundland, along with other provinces and the federation as a whole, gained greatly from the Meech Lake agreement in a number of other respects.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

WORLD WAR I FLYERS

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, may I bring to your attention the presence in the gallery of members of the World War I Flyers group, who honour us by attending today's sitting.

These distinguished gentlemen and veterans are in Ottawa to hold their last reunion. They all saw service with the Royal Flying Corps or with the Royal Naval Air Service during the First World War. I am sure all senators join me in saluting their gallantry and in wishing them continued health and happiness.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS— PRIORITY AGENDA ITEM

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. One of the most glaring omissions from the so-called Meech Lake accord was the absence of reference to aboriginal issues as being a continuing topic of constitutional discussion.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government in the Senate could assure this house that he will ask the Prime Minister—who, after all, must be the advocate for the aboriginal peoples of Canada—to ensure during the discussions next week that the issues involving the aboriginal people and their self-government concerns be made a continuing priority of constitutional agendas until a solution is reached.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, this matter has come up on two previous occasions since the Meech Lake accord was signed. Let me repeat that we would be only too happy to have the question of aboriginal rights and aboriginal self-government on the agenda during the second round of constitutional negotiations on condition that there be some indication that we can achieve success.

As I said yesterday, the situation at the moment is that the Government of Canada, supported by Ontario, the three maritime provinces and Manitoba, has a proposal on the table. As of now there would have to be some movement on the part of the aboriginal groups and the dissenting provinces—if I may refer to them in that way—in order to justify putting aboriginal rights on the agenda for a constitutional conference again.

Meanwhile, we move ahead in cooperation with the aboriginal groups and the provinces in the development of self-government institutions; perhaps creating models that will make it rather less difficult to entrench aboriginal governments in the Constitution.

Finally, as I said yesterday, I think all of us should reflect on the failure of the aboriginal conference here in March and the apparent success of the Meech Lake process to see whether there are some lessons to be drawn from the latter that could usefully be applied to the problem of aboriginal rights.

I simply say that the whole issue remains a matter of the highest priority with the government. However, timing on this matter is critical, and there is no point in calling another conference or putting the matter on the agenda unless and until there is some reasonable prospect of success.

Senator Fairbairn: Does the Leader of the Government in the Senate not believe that by having this item as a continuing item on the agenda of constitutional conferences that in itself will promote the movement that he desires towards a solution?

Senator Murray: I very much regret to say that the experience of the past few years on this matter proves the contrary.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—TERMINOLOGY OF TEXT—DANGER OF CLASSIFYING FRENCH CANADIANS UNDER TWO CATEGORIES

Hon. Pierre de Bané: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. We all know the very important role played by the Leader of the Government in this constitutional review.

It seems to me that the sections dealing with Canada's fundamental characteristics imply that French Canadian society or French Canadians in this country fall into two groups, one first-class group located in Quebec and one second-class group spread over the other provinces.

This impression or conclusion came to me after reading the sections concerning the fundamental characteristics of this country, where Quebec is assigned the role of promoting a distinct society while the role of the other provinces is to preserve an existing situation.

I wonder whether we should not have the word "promote" appear in both paragraphs instead of using "preserve" in one and "promote" in the other. Shouldn't we establish a parallel between the two?

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I rise on a question of privilege. Senator de Bané, in putting a question to the Leader of the Government, referred to two classes of French Canadians, those living in Quebec and those living outside Quebec.

I am not sure I fully understood the meaning of his question. However, if it means that we have a group of first class citizens living in Quebec and an inferior class living elsewhere in Canada, I object, and I would ask Senator de Bané to carefully reconsider his question.

Senator de Bané: Honourable senators, with pleasure. I would like to inform Senator Corbin that I share his concern. What I was asking the Leader of the Government in the Senate to do is to be very careful that this constitutional review does not give us two classes of French Canadians, one in Quebec which would be first class and the other that would be the exact opposite. Perhaps I should have added that I am, of course, entirely opposed to such a distinction.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, in the context provided by Senator de Bané, I think his concern is quite understandable, and I must say that I share it.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PLAN—STATUS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, my question is for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and it relates to the Sydney Steel Corporation. I will give the leader an opportunity to collect his thoughts and anticipate the question that I intend to ask him with respect to an update by pointing out that among the distinguished flyers from World War I present in the gallery today is an old friend—indeed, the only living founding member of Liberal International, 40 years ago in Oxford, England—one Huntly Sinclair. He is the real inspiration behind a very important international conference on human rights to be held in Ottawa next September.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Graham: Having said that, my question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate—who is aware that several announcements have been made since the fall of 1984 relating to the second phase of the modernization plan for the Sydney Steel Corporation—is: Could he give us an update on that particular matter?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I can tell the Senate that a further decision on that matter is imminent.

Senator Graham: Has the question been presented to Treasury Board yet?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I cannot answer that question. I can say that the matter is now under intensive consideration by the government.

Senator Graham: Would the Leader of the Government anticipate giving us an answer within a week?

Senator Murray: I will certainly try to bring in the update my honourable friend has asked for within that period of time, yes.

Senator Frith: "Imminent" is better than "in due course," is it?

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—CONSULTATIONS WITH TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations. In the period leading up to the Meech Lake meeting, the minister visited, I believe, with all of the provincial premiers and conducted some pre-negotiations. Did the minister also visit with the two leaders of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory? Were there discussions held with those two leaders?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I met on a number of occasions with the provincial premiers or attorneys general or provincial ministers of inter-governmental affairs or ministers designated to deal with constitutional matters.

I did not meet with the leaders of the governments of the Territories. The governments of the Territories are not, of course, involved in the amending process.

Senator Molgat: So there were no consultations at all with the elected representatives of the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, my answer was and is that I did not meet with the representatives of those two governments in the run up to the Meech Lake meeting.

Senator Molgat: Was there any advice or warning given to those two properly elected governments that the Government of Canada was thinking of changing the procedure under which they could eventually become provinces? Were they warned in advance?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, it was a matter of public knowledge that the amending formula was under consideration by the First Ministers.

So far as I am aware, and so far as I was directly involved, I made no such communication to the governments of the Territories.

Senator Molgat: The proposal to change the possible formation of provinces, which is very important to those people, was that a federal government proposal or did my honourable friend find that proposal coming from the provinces as he discussed this matter with them?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, various formulations were discussed over the months, and it would be difficult, if not impossible, for me today to identify the source of one particular proposal or another.

The agreement that was eventually reached was as a result of a consensus at Meech Lake among 11 First Ministers.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—PRIORITY AGENDA ITEM

Hon. Len Marchand: Honourable senators, I am a little uncomfortable with the answers that have been given by the Leader of the Government relating to aboriginal issues and the Constitution, and having them placed on the agenda. The leader's usual affable manner seems to be turning into stonewalling. I hope that is not the case. I hope there is no stonewalling on the part of the government on this issue because it is so important. We should make progress. It is important that we keep the momentum going.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): What momentum?

Senator Marchand: I am wondering how we can keep the collective momentum of the aboriginal peoples going when it appears that there is a lack of the necessary political will on the part of the Government of Canada.

Senator Murray: I disagree with my honourable friend that there is any momentum at all. The process failed. We have to find a new process to achieve the objective that he and I and an enormous number of other Canadians desire. The process that we were engaged in failed. Without assigning blame for that, it seems pointless at the moment to try to resume that process in the absence of any indication that it would succeed.

I have tried to be completely frank with the Senate on this question. I am not stonewalling; I am stating very fully the position of the Government of Canada on the matter.

CN MAINTENANCE SHOPS, MELVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED LAYOFFS

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I should like to add to the questions I have already asked the Leader of the Government today relating to the CN shops in Melville, Saskatchewan. Since I raised this matter my office has received information from Brian Turchak, who is a leader of the CN employees in Melville. He says that he knows of an internal CN report concerning the rationalization program, and that the report states as follows:

With the challenges of deregulation and free trade on the horizon, and the already tough times we are facing, we are forced to cut costs to a minimum and to be as productive as possible.

I wonder whether the leader could determine whether that in fact is in the report.

We are being led to believe that free trade is going to make it easier for everybody, and here, apparently in advance of any possibility of free trade—and I suppose CN knows it is coming, and perhaps others do not know it is coming—CN is cutting jobs in Melville. What is the connection? Are they afraid of running rights for American railways, and that they will take all of the passengers away so they will have to close up the shops, or what is the point?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with or without free trade with the United States, Canadian National Railways is a transportation company in an extraordinarily competitive environment, and it is called upon by my honourable friend's region and by other regions of the country to provide first-class transportation services.

He seems to be scandalized by the quotation he attributes to an internal CN report. I am not scandalized by it at all. I am encouraged to see that CN, as a very important business in this country, is paying the utmost attention to productivity and service and the need to be competitive.

Senator Argue: I am scandalized by that answer. To say that the minister would stand behind an allegation by CN that free trade is a sufficient reason in the name of efficiency to cut these jobs in Melville—well, I can see no connection between cutting those jobs and the free trade issue. I cannot see any connection whatsoever. I am surprised that a minister of the government would come down on the side of CN in this kind of economic butchery that is taking place in Melville.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I must inform honourable senators that I neglected to provide two delayed answers to questions at the appropriate time today. The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—RECOGNITION OF QUEBEC AS DISTINCT SOCIETY—INTERNATIONAL RAMIFICATIONS

(The answer follows:)

The Meech Lake agreement will in no way alter the fact that the federal government alone exercises the international personality of Canada and it alone can sign treaties, declare war or make peace. This will continue to be the case.

However, the recognition of a fundamental characteristic of Canada and Quebec's distinct character are clearly intended to guide the federal government in the exercise of its powers both domestically and internationally.

Canada's foreign policy already takes note of the fundamental characteristic which is to be recognized in the Constitution: that is why Canada participates vigorously in both the Commonwealth and the Francophonie.

[Senator Murray.]

Over the past twenty-five years, techniques have been developed by Canada to allow Quebec to pursue legitimate interests abroad:

- treaties have been signed with foreign countries that allow for agreements between Quebec and the foreign countries under the terms of the treaty (accord-cadre);
- agreements with Quebec allow that province to station immigration officers in certain Canadian embassies abroad.

These arrangements do not alter the distribution of powers and the recognition of Quebec's distinct society will not do so either.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—FEDERAL SPENDING POWER—OPTING-OUT PROVISIONS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the second answer is in response to another question asked in the Senate on May 26 by Senator Grafstein regarding The Constitution—First Ministers' Accord—Federal Spending Power—Opting-out Provisions.

(The answer follows:)

The government's position was set out unequivocally by the Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, on May 11, 1987 in the House of Commons:

We agreed that reasonable compensation would be made available to provinces that do not participate in future national shared cost programs, provided they operate a provincial program or initiative compatible with national objectives.

Medicare could very much have been created under this arrangement. The 10 provincial medical programs today vary in a number of respects related to financing of the range of services, but they all meet the national objectives of providing high quality health care to Canadians within a framework of portability, universality and accessibility.

There is every reason to believe that child care can be achieved through the new spending provision. As Premier Peterson noted in his Canadian Club address last week, this provision in no way inhibits the federal Government from introducing new national programs. The Parliament and the Government of Canada retain the right to act swiftly and strongly in the national interest on behalf of Canadians.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Duff Roblin moved the third reading of Bill C-37, respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Efsthios William Barootes moved the second reading of Bill C-57, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak today in support of Bill C-57 on second reading. Perhaps honourable senators will not be too disappointed if my remarks are brief—

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear!

Senator Barootes:—since this bill is an amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act, which is totally noncontroversial. It has passed all three readings in the other place in one day with the support of all parties, having been formulated, as it was, with the full cooperation and advice from all segments of the steel industry of Canada, the unions, the steel mills, the fabricators, the brokers, the manufacturers, the pipe and tube producers, the wire, wire rope and rail producers, the steel service industry and the steel construction industry.

This bill makes provision for the Governor in Council to add steel and certain products made of steel to the import or export control lists for the purposes of gathering information on a current and up-to-date basis. By this bill, this can only be done when, in the opinion of the minister, such products are traded in world markets, in circumstances of surplus supply and depressed prices, and also where a significant proportion of world trade in that type of steel is subject to control through the use of non-tariff measures.

Presently, honourable senators, Canada and two other countries—Sweden and Taiwan—have an open border to shipping steel into the United States, and 19 other steel producing countries are bound in their exports of steel to the United States by voluntary restraint quotas. Canada was not included in the voluntary restraint group on the understanding that our steel industry would stay at or near its traditional level of around 3 per cent, as measured by our American friends.

Since voluntary restraints were applied to these other countries, our share of the American market has risen temporarily. There are reasons for this, and they are multiple, but they include a protracted strike in major steel-making plants last year, particularly at USS. I believe that this strike was settled only at the beginning of this year.

Another factor was that many of these offshore steel producers have shipped their steel into Canada through our open borders. Much of that offshore product was destined for and ultimately found its way into American markets through our open access to the American steel market. This ingenuity of foreign steel makers and some Canadian steel merchants meant that this foreign-produced steel was accounted for in the United States as Canadian steel. Therefore the rise in our percentage of their market in the last while.

Honourable senators are, I am sure, aware of the continuing pressures in the United States for Canada to reduce its share of the U.S. steel market. It is our government's view that Canadian steel is fairly traded, and that restrictive measures against Canadian exports are not warranted.

This government and, indeed, the steel industry and its workers in Canada place considerable importance on maintaining open access to the United States steel market. A major element of maintaining that open access is to ensure that we have more accurate and current data on both exports and imports of steel, and that Canada is not used as a "back-door" or as a portal of entry to the United States steel market by offshore steel suppliers.

With Bill C-57, monitoring through the collection of accurate data will provide a better appreciation of the complexities of our steel trade not only with the United States but also with other countries. The amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act will allow the monitoring program to be put in place. Such a program will be useful for both the government and the industry in resisting pressures from the United States for restrictions against our steel imports to that country.

Honourable senators should know that Canada has no restrictions on imports of steel from the United States or, for that matter, from other countries. In fact, steel imports from the United States hold about 5 per cent of our market, and our steel imports in this country represent approximately 25 per cent of our steel—and the United States has about a quarter of that. Further, Canadian primary steel producers import from the United States about $1.30 worth of equipment and materials for every dollar of our steel exports that we send to the United States.

Carbon steel is currently being monitored under the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act. This arrangement was implemented on the basis of a recommendation from the Canadian Import Tribunal in 1986. The program has provided useful information in a timely manner on carbon steel imports into Canada, but not on exports. There is currently no provision in the Export and Import Permits Act that would allow our government to introduce a similar type of program on exports. The amendment which you are considering today will overcome this problem. Furthermore, to ensure that we have a comprehensive program in place for both imports and exports of all steel, the amendment will also enable the government to monitor specialty steels. Those are, as you know, certain sophisticated types of tensile steel such as that used in the production of chrome.

● (1510)

The amendment provides for the collection of information for a period of up to three years. It covers only steel, and does not affect any other products, nor does it alter the existing criteria under which any other goods may be placed under import or export controls. Both import and export permits will be issued freely under this arrangement. Honourable senators should recognize that this is not a measure to introduce controls.

Provision is made for submitting a statistical summary of information collected during the year as soon as possible after the end of the calendar year to both houses of Parliament. In addition, the government will publish regular monthly reports for the industry. These will normally be issued within a matter of days following the end of each month.

Once the program is in place and the data on trade flows is available, it will provide an accurate, precise and up-to-date picture of our trade in steel products with the United States and with all other countries. This, we believe, will help to ensure that Canadian access to the U.S. market will remain unimpeded, and will dispel any misunderstandings which arise with respect to the nature of Canadian steel products.

Honourable senators, as I mentioned earlier, extensive consultations have been held with all segments of the steel industry to apprise them of the general thrust of this monitoring program, and the government has been assured of the full support of the industry in this endeavour. In fact, administrative arrangements for the implementation of these amendments have been worked out with the industry as it concerns both imports and exports, and advance notices have been prepared and are being sent to the 5,000 companies involved so that they will be apprised of how to comply with the new reporting situation, with the expectation that this new regime will be in effect on June 1, 1987.

With this short summary of the objects of, and explanation of the background of, Bill C-57, I commend it to you for your support.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Charles McElman: Honourable senators, I congratulate Senator Barootes on the fine, detailed explanation he has given of the bill and its purposes. Perhaps I can elaborate just briefly on what appears to be the heart of the problem as it has so far developed.

The recently formed organization of the Canadian Steel Producers' Association represents the 14 majors in the industry in Canada. They are, indeed, in full support of this legislation.

[Senator Barootes.]

According to American statistics, there has been an extraordinary increase in the number of companies in Canada who are exporting steel to the U.S. Both Canada and the U.S. believe that this is the source of the problem now facing both nations; that many of these companies, some of which, incidentally, are U.S. owned, are using the fact that Canada has not been made subject to quota as the "back door" approach to avoid U.S. law. It is, in fact, in some instances, a case of U.S. corporations avoiding the law of their own nation.

Both nations believe that while it is not imperative, it is highly useful to be able to examine and identify the problems relating to this whole matter and to see how serious it is. One indication of its seriousness is that according to U.S. statistics, in 1985 there were approximately 350 such Canadian companies exporting to the U.S. Last year, one year later, that number mushroomed to some 670. That is an increase of almost 100 per cent in the number of those companies. Clearly, there is a problem.

When you have such a situation which threatens trade relations between two countries such as ours, it is imperative that you do something about it. This bill represents the beginning of an attempt to do something about it. It is to be hoped that it will be successful. Perhaps one could refer to it, in terms of Senator Barootes' profession, as a bit of preventive medicine.

Down the road we know that unless economic conditions improve, and improve substantially, the problems between Canada and the United States on trade in steel will become increasingly difficult.

Some of the producing majors in the U.S. have done very little to upgrade the facilities of their mills, or to take advantage of the new technology that is available. Consequently, they are less productive and they are less competitive. The lobby brings more and more pressure upon the U.S. Congress to take action which would relieve them of a problem of their own making.

The situation has become quite ridiculous with respect to several of those companies in that they have failed to upgrade their own plants, but, in the name of diversification, have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in moving into other sectors such as oil energy, and have allowed their mills to become run down.

The pressures will continue. The competitive advantage we have had on exchange rates is diminishing. I am not one to talk in terms of doom and gloom, but I do suggest that although this is a first step, in the years immediately ahead of us we are going to have further problems in our trade in steel between our two countries. We are, in steel, each other's best customers. It is not a happy outlook in that sense. However, as I say, this will help to relieve some of the tensions that are developing.

Honourable senators, in the sense that it is an improvement both for Canada and the U.S. to have this legislation in place, it will enable the U.S., on the basis of solid information—not the rhetorical aspect of the discussion that has been going on in Congress but substantial information that we can provide—to take decisions at their borders to enforce their own law, and it will not rest upon us Canadians to enforce their law for them. I believe it to be a good piece of legislation, and I believe that it deserves the support of the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I move that the bill be referred to Committee of the Whole, and that the Senate do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole for that purpose.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin, P.C., that this bill be now referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I think that each time we go into Committee of the Whole, since it does not constitute a permanent committee, we should elect a chairman. I am happy to move that Senator Bélisle act as chairman of this Committee of the Whole.

Senator Murray: I take pleasure in seconding that motion.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., that Senator Rhéal Bélisle act as chairman of this Committee of the Whole. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Rhéal Bélisle in the Chair.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, according to the latest telephone call, I understand that the minister has been delayed by traffic for approximately another five to seven minutes. I suggest that we adjourn for approximately ten minutes to give him a chance to arrive.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, may I make an alternative suggestion?

Senator Phillips: Let us hear it.

Senator Frith: When I consider the debate that we have heard and the explanation given of this bill, I feel that there is little reason to believe that we have to have the minister here. When we give a bill three readings in one sitting, then we should normally do so; but in some cases I think that we can do it without going into Committee of the Whole. However, I see that the parliamentary secretary has arrived, so let us proceed.

With leave, Mr. John McDermid, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade; Mr. E. W. Weybrecht, Director, Import Controls Division II, Special Trade Relations Bureau, Department of External Affairs; and Mr. M. Robertson, U.S. Trade and Economic Relations, Department of External Affairs, were escorted to seats in the Senate chamber.

Senator Murray: Mr. Chairman, I apologize for the delay. I had not realized that our witness was en route back from Montreal, where he was making a speech today. He arrived at the Senate only a moment ago. I will give him a moment to catch his breath while I introduce him. He is, as I think honourable senators and members of the committee are aware, Mr. John McDermid, who has been the member of Parliament for Brampton-Georgetown in Ontario since 1979. He has been Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and is presently the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade. Mr. McDermid is accompanied by two officials: Mr. E. W. Weybrecht, the Director, Import Controls Division II, Special Trade Relations Bureau of the Department of External Affairs, and Mr. M. Robertson of the U.S. Trade and Economic Relations in the Department of External Affairs.

The parliamentary secretary does not, I believe, have an opening statement, but is here to answer questions about this bill, and I presume that honourable senators will grant him the indulgence of referring questions from time to time, when necessary, to his officials.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, before I call on Mr. McDermid, I should like to thank Senator Frith and Senator Murray for having moved and seconded the motion to elect me chairman of this Committee of the Whole. Mr. McDermid, do you wish to proceed, or would you prefer to wait?

Mr. John McDermid, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade: Mr. Chairman and honourable senators, I have just returned from a flying trip to Montreal, so I do apologize for being late. I do not have an opening statement, but I would be prepared, together with my officials, to answer any questions which honourable senators may have on what we consider a small but very important piece of legislation dealing with international trade.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is the intention of the Chair to recognize those who wish to ask questions. Please so signal, and the Chair will grant honourable senators proper recognition at the proper time.

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, through you to the parliamentary secretary I welcome the witnesses and thank them for coming. I have a brief opening statement before I ask a question, which is to tell Mr. McDermid that while he was on his way from Montreal, two of our colleagues gave an excellent explanation of this bill. Senator Barootes of Saskatchewan is its sponsor and Senator McElman of New Brunswick is spokesman for the opposition. Their two speeches taken together left us very little room for questions. So, I am sorry if it may appear that we have brought you here unnecessarily.

However, we do understand the importance of the bill and its connection to our trade with the United States, particularly having regard to the sensitivity of the United States to the import of steel from Canada, and the unfairness of having steel which does not have its origin in Canadian mills treated as part of our exports and therefore exacerbating this sensitivity of the United States Administration and Congress.

Senator McElman, at the close of his comments, underlined how important we are to each other on this question of steel, and pointed out that this was clearly a first step and one to be encouraged, but he hoped that it was part of other programs leading to the same end. Is that true, and, if so, can you give us some encouragement about that?

Mr. McDermid: Honourable senators, I may ask my colleague from the department to step in. You ask whether it is part of a larger program. I think it would be fair to say that the trade negotiations which are going on at the present time with our largest trading partner, the United States, will, in fact, play a very large part in the trade relationship between our two countries. As you know, there have been many products which have come under attack—and I use that word advisedly—from special interests in the United States; and, of course, with the current enormous trade deficit in the United States, the various sectors there are looking at everyone to see if they cannot raise their protectionist shield to those specific products—and steel is one of them.

We feel that there have been some influences on the steel industry, such as a strike in the United States, which have distorted imports into the United States. We are fair traders in steel, and we believe that with the type of monitoring that we are now proposing, we will be able to show graphically to the United States that, in fact, we are fair traders.

I believe that the trade negotiations that are now going on will have a very large influence on the way in which the trade is handled between our two countries, and I assume that steel would come under that. We are hoping that we can show to the United States that, in fact, we are fair traders in steel, and that programs other than the trade negotiations which are going on now may not be necessary—for example, restraint programs, or whatever they may be.

The steel industry in Canada is, I feel, a very responsible industry, understands the sensitivity of trade between our two countries, and is doing an excellent job of—if I can use the term—policing itself. We have not seen any major evidence of that responsibility cracking. The industry is maintaining its responsibility vis-à-vis the United States and our trade in steel.

Senator Frith: Are there any other industries which could be helped in terms of anti-trade attacks, to paraphrase your words, by this kind of device?

[Senator Frith.]

Mr. McDermid: There has been a great deal of dispute between the United States and Canada as to whose figures are right in the trade.

Senator Frith: About trade in general?

Mr. McDermid: Yes, about trade in general. What we are finding is that when they come out with their trade announcement, it is highly inflated; and, of course, that is the one that everyone latches on to and that is the one that all of a sudden becomes used in all of the debates. It tends to exaggerate the problem of the deficit. And when the actual figures come in we find that they are much lower. Fortunately, Statistics Canada and their counterpart in the United States have now reached agreement on how they are going to handle the statistics. I think the United States will find that the trade deficit they have with Canada is not quite as large as they think it is. But to date, and the officials can correct me if I am wrong, there are no other areas where we feel this type of monitoring is necessary.

● (1540)

Senator Frith: Are the two statistical bureaux able to control the data sufficiently without a separate monitoring establishment?

Mr. McDermid: The complaint here is a unique one, because we feel that steel is being routed through Canada into the United States. This is not a problem with potash. With softwood lumber and shakes and shingles it was not a problem. It was not a problem with hogs, just to name a few of the items with which we have been dealing.

Senator Frith: And it is not a problem with automobiles?

Mr. McDermid: There is no argument for a separate monitoring system on automobiles.

Senator Frith: I suppose the Auto Pact takes care of that.

Senator McElman: The statistics gathered by Statistics Canada will be published in this country and will be laid on the tables of the two houses of Parliament. As I understand it, this information will be provided on a continuing basis to the United States as well?

Mr. McDermid: Yes.

Senator McElman: I appreciate that this bill gives ministerial authority to amend, withdraw or cancel permits or licences. Is it the intention that we will police legislation for the United States? Is it not more accurate to say that we will provide them with information so that they can police their own law?

Mr. McDermid: That is very accurate, sir.

Senator McElman: And we are not in any sense getting into that act, except in the provision of information?

Mr. McDermid: That is correct. There is close cooperation between the customs people in the United States and Canada on the exchange of information.

Senator McElman: My basic question is: Will the United States give effect to its own law, without our assisting them in doing it?

Mr. McDermid: That is correct.

Senator Barootes: I would like to reinforce some of the things that have been said, and particularly I would like to thank Senator McElman publicly for the cogent explanation he gave. I want to reinforce what the parliamentary secretary has brought to our attention, that we are a responsible and fair trader with the United States. It has been brought to my attention that in order to keep ourselves down to the, what should I say, understanding that we will stay within traditional limits, some steel-making companies in Canada have turned down requests for steel. For example, one particular company in Hamilton, I am told, has turned down three out of four of the requests they received for Canadian steel. That is the kind of responsibility our Canadian steel-makers have shown, and it reinforces what Mr. McDermid has been saying.

The Chairman: Are there any other honourable senators who would like to participate in the questioning?

Senator Frith: Mr. Chairman, I hope the parliamentary secretary understands that because of the good job done by our colleagues, we do not have too many questions for him. I take it from his reaction to my earlier comments to the same effect that he does not resent the lack of questions at all, and is quite glad that they did so well, and, I suppose, that his department briefed them so well.

Mr. McDermid: I have found in my eight years in Ottawa that honourable senators have been most supportive of me, and I appreciate it very much.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-57, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Shall discussion on the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, on your behalf I should like to thank the parliamentary secretary and his officials for their presentation this afternoon.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, the sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-57, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, has examined the said bill and has directed me to report the same to the Senate without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Efstathios William Barootes: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA

28 May 1987

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 28th day of May, 1987, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ADOPTED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lafond, seconded by the Honourable Senator Muir, for the adoption of the First Report of the Special Committee of the Senate on National Defence (hiring of staff and power to travel for the purpose of its examination of Canada's land forces) presented in the Senate on 13th May, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the committee's budget with reference to this travel has been approved by the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. Pursuant to the order adopted by the Senate in March, the committee was authorized to release three twelfths of the funds requested. Senator Lafond has indicated that the three twelfths is sufficient for the trip, so he is only seeking authority to travel and to hire staff to that extent. Of course, that authority will continue later for the budget. However, he only intends to take this one trip next week, and the three twelfths released is adequate for that purpose. Therefore, I recommend that this report be adopted.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

MOTION TO REFER REPORT ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS" BACK TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the motion adopted by the Senate on May 28, 1986, and passed by a vote of 28 for and 17 against, that the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986, be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop; and further, that consideration be given to the apparent disregard by National Film Board officials to their commitments to the Senate Sub-committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of evidence before the Sub-committee.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, today I want to place on the record some of the history of the reaction to the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" from its release in 1983. I will refer to the immediate response of veterans of the Royal Canadian Air Force Association as well as other associations, and then I will carry on with some of the events that followed. The best way I know of doing this is to use the words of Mr. Dave McIntosh, a prominent Canadian writer, in an article he wrote in the Legion magazine in March 1986. He said:

Billed a documentary, which the Concise Oxford Dictionary defines as 'factual, based on real events', the film contained fiction disparaging the honesty and reputation of the famed Canadian fighter pilot, prompting a public outcry that included 3,000 protest letters.

Nevertheless, the NFB did not accede to requests that the film be revised or canned. Darting quickly behind the broad skirts of artistic licence and freedom of expression, the federal agency... and two successive ministers charged with speaking for it... tried to duck the issue.

By the way, honourable senators, even the current Minister of Communications has repeated the standard line that because of the structure:

Program and administrative decisions which must be made on a daily basis are the prerogative of the agency (the NFB) itself.

I will refer later to a letter from the current Minister of Communications.

Honourable senators, this is not a program or administrative decision of the National Film Board that is under examination. It is a policy problem. "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" was financed with $400,000 of taxpayers' money, and the film is seen by those taxpayers as a deliberate attempt to malign Billy Bishop. Surely the policy that permits a government employee to embark almost single-handedly on an anti-hero crusade is a policy that has to be justified to the protesting public.

On May 14, 1984, Liberal Communications Minister Francis Fox told the Royal Canadian Air Force Association, in part:

I must reiterate that it would be inappropriate for me to intervene in the internal affairs of the NFB. This is not to say that I do not regard your complaints as meriting serious consideration.

Again, on November 16, 1984, Conservative minister Marcel Masse told the same association:

I must also state that it would be inappropriate for me to intervene in the internal matters of the NFB... I must also decline your request for a meeting between you, Mr. (NFB Commissioner François) Macerola (or his representative) and myself as I feel it would unduly question the integrity of the NFB, and the appropriateness of their decision not to change the content of the film.

Macerola refused to talk to protesters and did not even acknowledge some requests for meetings. Prof. A.R. Kear, President of the Manitoba Branch of the Royal Military College Club, which did an exhaustive study of the film's inaccuracies . . .

And outlined in an article called "Flak for the NFB", November 1984:

. . . received no reply to his 1985 letters of May 27, June 22 and Sept. 11.

Honourable senators, I want to insert here that on February 15, 1984, prior to the Honourable Francis Fox's letter to the RCAF, a letter was written by the Honourable Erik Nielsen, of whom we are all aware, a World War II flying hero, who wrote, in part, to Mr. Fox as follows:

For the Canadian government to put its imprimatur on a film that sneers at the courage and accomplishments of these men from the security of a film studio is mean-spirited and hollow. It is a narrow-minded and ugly way of registering disapproval of all they stood for. Regrettably it is a spirit that permeates the present government and does not in any way reflect the feelings of the majority of Canadians.

Honourable senators, I was aware of all of this correspondence, but refrained from using it until now. In the case of Mr. Nielsen's letter, it was public and was quoted in the Toronto Star, along with those of the other two ministers.

I wrote to Mr. Nielsen, when he was Deputy Prime Minister, on April 9, 1986, a week prior to the tabling of the report. I quote, in part, from that letter:

I have a copy of your letter of 15 February, 1984 to the Hon. Francis Fox, P.C., M.P. outlining your comments which are strongly critical of the film.

Since you made the letter public (copy enclosed for your easier reference) I presume that I am free to use the letter to outline the feeling of prominent individuals.

I write as a colleague to advise you, however, of what is taking place, and in view of the interest you displayed.

His reply to me was dated April 17, and he simply stated:

My feelings on that film remain unchanged. Please feel free to use the letter in any way you wish.

Honourable senators, I would remind you that this was from the then Deputy Prime Minister.

Throughout this lengthy period of public objection to the film, including the 3,000 letters of protest, the National Film Board reaction was one of stonewalling; their "documentary" would not be changed.

Returning to the 1986 Dave McIntosh article, honourable senators, dealing with the persistence of the RCAF Association and the action of critics, Mr. McIntosh went on to write:

The Senate's revived Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs agreed to examine the matter, which prompted Macerola to write Kear Oct. 22 that he couldn't meet with club representatives because the film was a "subject of deliberations" by the committee. The film's director, Paul Cowan, had already refused to meet club members, saying on April 15, 1985, that "enough is enough".

When the subcommittee requested the appearance of Macerola and Cowan, NFB lawyers telephoned Parliament's lawyers to try to beg off, but found that the pair could be subpoenaed if they did not appear willingly. This went unreported by the media, whose coverage of the affair up until that time left much to be desired.

The NFB duo appeared before the subcommittee Nov. 28. The central issue was the accuracy of a suggestion the film attributed to Walter Bourne, Bishop's long-dead mechanic, that the WWI ace shot holes in his own plane to fake the raid.

The subcommittee transcript reads:

Senator D.D. Everett: And you would agree that Bourne never made those statements?

Cowan: Yes.

Everett: They were statements that were put into his mouth?

Cowan: Yes.

The media missed this crucial exchange. Reporters centred on the process, making the senators look like old fuddy-duddies out to censor the NFB, which none of them set out to do. Not until the new year was Cowan's tampering with fact and chronology prominently reported by any national media.

Almost lost in the kerfuffle was the premise on which Cowan made the film: War heroes tend to make war seem less horrible than it is. 'Heroes have that effect,' he told the senators. 'That is one of the reasons they were created. They are a simplification and, in general, a glorification of war.'

I think, when it comes to war heroes, we should look at them with a certain degree of skepticism.'

● (1600)

None of the senators quarrelled with that. But Senator Molson held that Cowan could have met his objective without charging Bishop with cheating on three of his World War I kills.

Macerola conceded the film contained some errors and was labelled a documentary, though conceived, shot and produced as a docu-drama. He said:

We were sure that the public would realize that this film was a docu-drama even if we issued a press release saying it was a documentary.

According to the McIntosh story, and as stated at the hearings, that is what the Government Film Commissioner said:

We were sure that the public would realize that this film was a docu-drama even if we issued a press release saying it was a documentary.

Misrepresentation of the film and the NFB's intransigence in redressing it are the nub of this whole affair.

Still quoting Dave McIntosh, he went on to say:

Pioneered and used extensively by the NFB, the docu-drama is, in layman's terms, a form of film-making that is based on truth but can employ such dramatic devices as composite characters, compression of time, altered chronology and creation of unverifiable dialogue.

Macerola's descriptions were less explicit and heavy on bureaucratise. He said:

The documentary film is the creative interpretations of reality.

He went on to say:

Currently—and I think this is the NFB's role at present—we're inventing new ways of describing reality. In dramas we're trying to describe new ways of defining our collective imagination.

The docu-drama is one of the techniques which finds its place in non-fiction film-making, while pushing the frontiers of both fictional and non-fictional form.

Dave McIntosh's article was widely read and often quoted. The definitions of docu-drama are certainly varied, honourable senators. The Reader's Digest has the following heading in an extensive article, "Docu-dramas are a license to lie".

Renowned National Film Board filmmaker Donald Brittain probably put it in the simplest and most honest terms when he told Peter Gzowski on the CBC program "Morningside", in reference to the methodology of docu-drama:

I don't mind tricking you any old time.

The National Film Board apparently saw no inconsistency in the fact that the film won a prize as a documentary at a Chicago film festival, another as a work of fiction at a festival in Switzerland, and yet another prize as a dramatic work. As Senator Le Moynes said at the hearing, the film is "all things to all men."

It is important to remember that while all this prize winning by "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" is going on internationally, and while Billy Bishop is standing on the world stage accused by an agency of his own government, other Canadian institutions are having nothing to do with the film. CBC, I was surprised to learn, has not carried the film, nor has CTV, nor has Global television. Only Pay Television, as well as the Public Broadcasting System in the United States, have presented "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss".

As I indicated yesterday, I would like now to bring to the attention of honourable senators another phase of events that arose out of our inquiry, and I refer to issue No. 48 of the proceedings of the House of Commons Committee on Communications and Culture dated April 17, 1986, to place on the record what I consider another disregard of the facts and which constituted the basis of a question of privilege at that time, but which I refrained from presenting.

In questioning the Government Film Commissioner, Mr. François Macerola of the National Film Board, a member of the committee, said about Macerola's appearance before our Subcommittee on Veterans' Affairs:

[Senator Marshall.]

I want to know why you had Mr. Cowan appear, and if Mr. Cowan was to appear, should you not have had legal counsel there so that he and you, and your rights as a Canadian, would not have been trampled on in the badgering that went on with the complicity of the subcommittee chairman?

In response to this Mr. Macerola claimed that he had sought to have one legal adviser appear with him, and had been refused. I did not refuse. Honourable senators, I was not asked. At the same time Mr. Macerola also claimed he sought authorization to call—a certain number of witnesses, some other film-makers involved in docu-drama, and some witnesses who were very important in trying to demonstrate what we have put on the screen—historians and people who knew the leadership at the time.

According to Mr. Macerola, I refused this authorization. I did not. To prove that, honourable senators, in a letter dated November 8, 1985, Mr. Macerola responded to my invitation that those responsible for the historical research of "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", its production and distribution appear before the subcommittee by writing, in part:

Your proposal to request Mr. Paul Cowan, producer of the film, to accompany me is an excellent one. However, may I respectfully suggest to also request the presence of Messrs. Donald Brittain, Georges Dufaux, Patrick Watson and Jacques Godbout, film directors and communicators, in order that we may all together expand the debate to include the historical independence of cultural agencies vis-à-vis the government, and the different approaches to film productions of the documentary type. At the same time we could also set the record straight on allegations which question the historical accuracy of the film with the well-known Mr. Joe Warne.

Not one of these individuals was identified as "legal counsel" to protect Mr. Cowan from "badgering" with my "complicity."

I responded to Mr. Macerola on November 15, pointing out that the meeting arranged for only provided limited time in which to question witnesses. I wrote:

Our time will, however, be limited. The subcommittee members are anxious to hear everything Mr. Paul Cowan has to say about this film. Likewise, they want to hear from those who did some of the historical research on the film. If you feel that our hearings have raised some broader issues which should be discussed with a group of filmmakers and communications specialists, I would be happy to schedule another meeting at a mutually agreeable time.

At no time, honourable senators, did Mr. Macerola indicate he wanted another meeting. The Squadron Leader, Joe Warne, referred to by Mr. Macerola resides in Great Britain. At no time did Mr. Macerola suggest that Mr. Warne was prepared to appear. Mr. Warne's testimony, an affidavit, was printed as part of the subcommittee's proceedings, but, significantly, the appendices to Squadron Leader Warne's testimony were not provided by the National Film Board. Only after I had asked the minister to request those appendices from Mr. Macerola in January of 1986 did they finally arrive in April, three months after I requested them.

Honourable senators, I would like to read the letter in which we asked for the appendices which they promised and the letter on Squadron Leader Warren. This letter was written March 9, 1987, addressed to the Honourable Jack Marshall, and reads as follows:

Thank you for your letter of January 29, 1987, in which you forward a copy of a letter from Ms. Diane Deschamps to the National Film Board (NFB) requesting the appendices to the NFB document, "The Billy Bishop Controversy As Seen By Sqn. Ldr. D. W. Warne, MRAeS, RAFRO (Appendix "VA-6-C").

I read your letter and attachments with great interest and appreciate your views on this issue. I have closely followed the deliberations of your Sub-Committee on the Billy Bishop film, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" and, like you, am anxious that this matter be satisfactorily resolved.

While I remain concerned by this issue, I must state that it would be inappropriate for me to intervene in the internal matters of the NFB. Although the NFB is one of the federal cultural agencies for which I am responsible, the program and administrative decisions which must be made on a daily basis are the prerogative of the agency itself.

The NFB has an independent Board which, together with management, is responsible for decisions related to their films. While I fully intend to respect this role, I am drawing your comments to the attention of the Government Film Commissioner, Mr. François Macerola. I understand that the NFB is in the process of preparing the missing attachments to Appendix VA-6-C. I am certain that Mr. Macerola will be able to provide you with further details regarding their actions.

I have those in my files now, and they are available for any senator who would like to see them. The letter finishes with:

Once again, thank you for representing your concerns to me.

The letter is signed by the Honourable Flora MacDonald.

Honourable senators, having given you some further examples of the inaccuracies—to put it kindly—that the Government Film Commissioner and his National Film Board personnel have put forward, having related how the successive ministers responsible for the NFB have stood aside, having indicated that there is strong general support for the rectification of the film as voted by our body a year ago, I want to stop at this point and adjourn the debate until I finalize my inquiry, honourable senators, hopefully at the next sitting.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1610)

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Deputy Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the imposition of a charge on the export of certain softwood lumber products (Bill C-37, Chapter 15, 1987)

An Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act (Bill C-57, Chapter 16, 1987)

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 2, 1987, at 2 p.m.

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL FINANCE
ELEVENTH REPORTINTERIM REPORT ON THE ESTIMATES LAID BEFORE PARLIAMENT
FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1988

THURSDAY, May 28, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on National Finance has the honour to present its

ELEVENTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which the expenditures proposed by the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 31 March, 1988 were referred, examined the said Estimates and presents, in obedience to the Order of Reference of March 10, 1987, its interim report as follows:

Undertaking this review, the Committee heard from the following thirteen witnesses:

1. April 9, 1987,

Treasury Board:
The Honourable Robert de Cotret, P.C., President;
Mr. Gérard Veilleux, Secretary;
Mr. Michael H. Rayner, Comptroller General of Canada.

2. May 6, 1987

Office of the Auditor General of Canada:
Mr. Kenneth Dye, Auditor General of Canada;
Mr. Barry Elkin, Principal, Audit Operations Branch.

Department of Finance:
Mr. Stanley Hartt, Deputy Minister.

3. May 13, 1987

Office of the Auditor General of Canada:
Mr. D. Larry Meyers, Deputy Auditor General;
Mr. Barry Elkin, Principal, Audit Operations Branch.

Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants:
Mr. John J. Kelly, Director, Public Sector Accounting and Auditing.

4. May 14, 1987

Office of the Comptroller General of Canada:
Mr. Michael H. Rayner, Comptroller General of Canada;

Mr. J.A. Macdonald, Deputy Comptroller General;
Mr. J.Q. McCrindell, Assistant Comptroller General.

FCA International Limited:
Mr. Gerald R. Stephens, Executive Vice-President.

A. THE ESTIMATES

The 1987-88 budgetary main estimates tabled on March 2, 1987 total $110.1 billion. While these estimates appear to be 2.9 per cent higher than those tabled last year, they are in fact 4.0 per cent higher because adjustment must be made for two items:

- 1) $700 million to make payments to grain farmers through a special supplementary estimate for 1987-88 tabled with the main estimates; and
- 2) $500 million expenditure reduction announced the day before the February 1986 Budget but not shown in the 1986-87 budgetary main estimates.

Of these budgetary estimates, roughly two-thirds, or $72.3 billion, represent statutory expenditures while the remaining $37.8 billion represent expenditures which Parliament is being asked to authorize.

These current estimates can be compared with the expenditure plan announced by the Minister of Finance on February 18, 1987 when he indicated that total projected budgetary expenditures for 1987-88, on a revised accounting basis, were to be $122.6 billion. These amounts include contingency funds and reserves. The former covers the cost of initiatives that could not be anticipated in time to include them in the main estimates while the latter covers financial adjustments to existing programs during the fiscal year. In all cases, Parliamentary approval is required through supplementary estimates or other legislative means for use to be made of these reserves.

The main estimates plus the reserves, on an unrevised accounting basis, bring the projected total budgetary estimates for 1987-88 to $114.0 billion. To arrive at total budgetary expenditures on a revised accounting basis, this figure must be increased by $9.5 billion due to changes in accounting policy last year, particularly the consolidation into budgetary transactions of the Unemployment Insurance Account, the Exchange Fund Account the Western Grain Stabilization Account, and loans to developing countries. In addition $180 million must be added for the annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and $1.2 billion must be subtracted as a result of the anticipated lapse of spending authorities. These data are summarized in the table on the following page.

In addition to a general examination of the estimates for 1987-88, the Committee also reviewed the recommendations it had made on tax expenditures last year in its report on the main estimates, 1986-87. The Committee also considered the accounts receivables of the Government of Canada and, to a lesser extent, comprehensive audits by the Auditor General. Finally, the Committee was asked to consider the estimates of the Department of Communications, particularly those of the National Film Board. The remainder of this report summarizes the Committee's findings in these three areas.

B. TAX EXPENDITURES

In its report on the main estimates, 1986-87 the Committee concluded with two recommendations on tax expenditures:

1) THE FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT BE AMENDED TO REQUIRE AN ANNUAL ACCOUNTING OF TAX EXPENDITURES COMPARABLE TO THE REQUIREMENTS FOR THE PREPARING AND TABLING OF THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

2) EFFECTIVENESS EVALUATIONS FOR THE TAX PROGRAMS INCLUDED IN THE PROPOSED TAX EXPENDITURE ACCOUNT BE DONE ON A REGULAR BASIS AND WERE APPROPRIATE BE PART OF THE PUBLIC RECORD.

Since that time, the Auditor General of Canada included a major chapter on this subject in his 1986 annual report. In his opening statement before this Committee on May 6, 1987 the Auditor General summarized this chapter as follows:

- We examined the risks associated with using the tax system as a vehicle for delivering programs. Our examination led us to conclude that the Income Tax Act is a high-risk statute to use for delivering programs.
- We examined the management process and reviewed two tax programs -- the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan (RHOSP) and Multiple-Unit Residential Building (MURB) programs. We concluded that because the Department of Finance does not subject tax programs to appropriate pre-implementation and post-implementation procedures, it does not adequately manage tax-delivered programs.
- We examined how certain Crown corporations have made use of the tax system. We concluded that Crown corporations that are technically defined as taxable Canadian corporations are able to bypass the normal parliamentary budgetary processes and obtain funds through the tax system.
- We examined the adequacy and quality of the information presented to Parliament. We concluded that Parliament receives inadequate information on tax expenditures to carry out its twin roles of considering proposed legislation and holding the government accountable for the use of public funds.

The Department of Finance responded to the Auditor General's comments and to this Committee's recommendations in a favourable way. Mr. Hartt, the Deputy Minister of Finance, in his appearance before the Committee on May 6, 1987, indicated that he was in the process of establishing an evaluation unit within the department with the exclusive responsibility to evaluate tax expenditures programs in consultation with other departments. He anticipated that it would be staffed with a director, seven analysts and two support members. He expected that the first task of this unit would be to examine and evaluate any tax expenditure programs that continued after tax reform.

In the Committee's view, the establishing of an effective evaluation unit within the Department of Finance will contribute significantly to reducing and eliminating many of the problems the Auditor General and this Committee raised. However, with respect to the first recommendation of this Committee, that is, the one which called for an amendment to the Financial Administration Act to require an annual accounting of tax expenditures paralleling the Public Accounts, the Department of Finance would only commit itself to publishing papers "from time to time". In the view of the Committee, the regularization of an accounting of tax expenditures is a necessary step in the process of providing basic information to Parliament and to the public on this matter. The Committee recognizes that there may be errors or gaps in information in such an accounting, but believes that it is nonetheless an essential step if the government is to be accountable for all its expenditures whether they pass through the estimates or through the tax system.

C. ACCOUNTS RECEIVABLES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

The 1986 Public Accounts of Canada (Vol. II, Part 2, Section 4) shows that the total accounts receivables for the Government of Canada is $5.79 billion. $5.1 billion is collectable. This represents about 7.2 per cent of total revenues for 1985-86 of $79.5 billion. The Comptroller General of Canada indicated to the Committee that the $5.1 billion balance is made up of four basic types of receivables:

- $2.7 billion from personal and corporate taxes and customs and excise duties;
- $900 million from the financial transactions of the Department of Finance;
- about $768 million from the recovery of prior expenditures;
- and $464 million in commercial-type trade receivables.

The category of receivables resulting from recovery of prior expenditures include $315 million of overpayments (mainly from petroleum incentives, unemployment insurance, and social benefits), $345 million related to defaulted loan guarantees (mainly student loans) and $109 million of recoverable contributions. The trade receivables of $464 million have most of the characteristics of normal commercial accounts receivables.

While disclosure of the government's outstanding accounts receivables at the year-end is provided in a memorandum account in Volume II of the Public Accounts, they are not reflected in the audited Accounts of Canada and the government's summary financial statements. These summary financial statements only recognize revenues on a cash basis, i.e., when they are received.

The government is currently giving consideration to revenue accrual accounting for all receivables in the Accounts of Canada, as suggested in the Auditor General's Federal Government Reporting Study and recommended by the Public Sector Accounting and Auditing Committee of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants (CICA).

Both groups have recommended that accruing of revenues should undertaken as a matter of principle. The CICA however, warns that this may be difficult to accomplish in areas where the value of the receivables are not known. The most common example cited is the value of self-assessed taxes such as personal and corporate income taxes. When such receivables cannot be measured practicably until the cash is received, the CICA recommend that no entry should be made into the books until that time. The Auditor General recognizes these difficulties but believes that they can be overcome.

The Comptroller General told the Committee that because 92 per cent of government revenues are from taxes, which are generally determined on a self-assessed basis, it would be difficult to arrive at a valid accounts receivables total until all corporate and personal tax returns have been filed and processed. In the case of personal income taxes, this occurs several months after the end of the government's fiscal year.

The Comptroller General also indicated in his opening statement that if accrual accounting is limited to non-tax revenues, it might be difficult to justify the cost of developing and maintaining central systems. As well, he noted that the impact on the government's financial position would be minimal; the adoption of accrual accounting would have increased the annual deficit by approximately $100 million (0.3%) in 1985-86, while the accumulated deficit would have decreased by $3,325 million (1.4%).

The Committee recognizes the difficulty raised by the witnesses in determining the value of a tax and non-tax receivables. Nevertheless it believes that in principle, all receivables should be accrued and be part of the audited financial statements of the Government of Canada. To do this, the Committee recommends that the Auditor General serve notice to government departments that the memorandum account for the receivables which appears in Volume II of the Public Accounts is to be audited. The timing for the audit would be determined by the speed at which the Comptroller General, in consultation with the Auditor General can establish procedures for departments to follow in preparing for such an audit. After such a audit, it would then be possible to determine the feasibility of entering receivables into the audited statements of the Government of Canada.

D. COMPREHENSIVE AUDITS

During the course of the hearings, particularly with the Auditor General and his staff, the Committee raised questions about the comprehensive audits and the mandate of the Auditor General to undertake such audits. The Committee learned that the Auditor General has the authority to perform comprehensive audits under Section 7(2) of the Auditor General Act.

While no specific conclusions were reached on this matter, the Committee indicated that it wishes to invite the Auditor General to return at a later date along with other witnesses to examine comprehensive audits more fully.

E. ESTIMATES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS: NATIONAL FILM BOARD

During one meeting of the Committee on the main estimates, Senators Everett and Molson made a special request that the report of this Committee contain a recommendation to reduce the authorization to the Department of Communications for the National Film Board by the amount of the cost of producing the film "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". They indicated the reason for their request was that the National Film Board had ignored the recommendation of the Senate:

That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added:

This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop.

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne.

On reviewing this matter, the Committee found that on May 28, 1986 the Senate adopted a motion to refer the report on this film back to the Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee with the instructions to consider and report upon changes to the recommendations.

Since that time the first session of Parliament prorogued. On December 19, 1986, Senator Marshall introduced a notice of inquiry on the matter of the recommendations by the Senate to refer the report on this film back to the Committee. Because this matter remains on the order paper of the Senate, this Committee does not believe it would be appropriate to consider the request by Senators Everett and Molson.

F. CONCLUSION

In this year's review of the main estimates, the Committee began a process of following-up on recommendations it had made in earlier reports. In particular, it found that on the matter of tax expenditures, only one of two of its recommendations had been acted upon. The Committee believes that such a follow-up is an important element in its deliberations. Accordingly, the Committee has decided to review all the recommendations it has made during this Parliament by holding a series of meetings with appropriate witnesses to determine the extent of the response to its recommendations. In addition, the Committee also plans to continue with the matter of comprehensive auditing which it began during the meetings in these estimates. Finally the Committee hopes to examine the Canadian budgetary process as requested by the Minister of State (Finance) and by the Standing Rules and Orders Committee.

Respectfully submitted,

FERNAND-E. LEBLANC

THE STANLEY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO EDMONTON OILERS ON WINNING
NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP

Hon. Martha P. Bielish: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the business of the day, I should like to invite honourable senators to join with me in offering our heartiest congratulations to that great Canadian hockey team, the Edmonton Oilers, on winning the Stanley Cup for the third time in four years.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

THE LATE HONOURABLE MARK ROBERT DROUIN,

TRIBUTE ON APPOINTMENT TO THE SENATE AND AS SPEAKER OF THE SENATE THIRTY YEARS AGO

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I wish to pay a special tribute to Senator Mark Drouin who was sworn in as senator and Speaker of the Senate thirty years ago.

He was Speaker of the Senate until 1962 and died in October 1963.

The reason I want to point that out is that after the death of my parents I was living at Hon. Mark Drouin's house at that time. He made me familiar with the Senate and aware of its real worth.

THE CONSTITUTION

CURRENT STATE OF NEGOTIATIONS—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I give notice that on Tuesday, June 16, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to my perception of the status of the constitutional negotiations, in view of the fact that they have reached a critical point.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Honourable Senator Doody, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a):

That the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce have power to sit at two thirty o'clock in the afternoon tomorrow, Wednesday, 3rd June, 1987, even though the Senate may then be sitting, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Who is the seconder of the motion? I did not hear the name of the seconder.

An Hon. Senator: I thought it was Senator Roblin!

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the mover of the motion? I pointed out last week that the system of dealing with the whips in these matters seems to be breaking down. There should have been some consultation with the whips, and there certainly was not in this case. I would like to ask why that did not occur, and why it is necessary for the committee to meet at 2.30. There may be a valid reason, but since there has been no consultation, if there is one, I am not aware of it. I would also like to point out to the deputy chairman that last week a proposal was made that the Senate adjourn this week to allow committees to meet to proceed with their work. That proposal was not acceptable to the majority of the senators as they felt that we had to meet this week. Now, the first item we are asked to deal with in the sitting is a motion for committees to meet while the Senate is sitting. You cannot have it both ways.

Senator Frith: A motion that was introduced by someone on the minority side.

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, Senator Sinclair phoned me on Friday, when I was attending a session of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, saying, in effect, that he would like the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee to meet while the Senate is sitting tomorrow. I informed him at that time of the comments that had been made in this chamber relative to requests by committee chairmen to meet while the Senate is sitting, and asked him whether he could not arrange to have his committee meet perhaps on a Monday, Friday, Wednesday night or Thursday morning, because there are so many days—

Senator Guay: Or Sunday afternoon!

Senator Doody: Or Sunday afternoon. We are all on the public payroll, and why not, if the matter is that urgent? Senator Sinclair said that he had certain witnesses who were available at this particular time. I suggested at that time that it might be appropriate if he were to discuss the matter with the whips. Apparently he did not have an opportunity to do so, but I notice that he has requested authorization to sit at 2.30 o'clock on June 3.

I made it perfectly clear a few days ago that I am not very happy with committees that meet when the Senate is sitting, unless there is some great, urgent need to do so. There are many hours available to us as senators to meet in committees when this chamber is not sitting, and I think we should take advantage of those hours. I cannot really add very much more to Senator Sinclair's reasons for this motion, other than the fact that he said that he had witnesses lined up for this particular time. It seems to me—and I wish the senator were here at this particular point—that efforts should be made to try to have witnesses attend on days that are more convenient to the chamber as a whole rather than during the relatively few hours when the Senate chamber is in session.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, tomorrow the committee will hear four witnesses, which will make a long day for us.

I would like to address a few remarks to my colleague, Senator Phillips. It was not my intention to pull a smart stunt by making this motion. I was caught slightly unawares. I am aware of his remarks of last week when he asked for more discipline. I hope he will forgive me this particular time, because my attitude toward the whip since I have been in this place has been just this side of obsequiousness.

Senator Frith: Not even notably "this side of obsequiousness."

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I do not want to disappoint my friend the whip by failing to support his appeal this afternoon for better coordination of our efforts to have committee meetings at appropriate times. I want to report for the record that we are still following our bad old ways, from my point of view, because two committees, of both of which I am a member, are meeting this afternoon at approximately the same time. So, I feel a little diffident about this particular matter. I happen to be a member of the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee. I do not know why, if that committee wants to meet on Wednesdays, it could not meet after the Senate rises rather than at 2.30. It makes things difficult when committee chairmen take the consent of this body for granted, which apparently has happened in this case, and invite witnesses to come on the assumption that the committee will have authority to meet even before the Senate has ruled on the matter.

I do not think that is good policy. I want to reinforce the plea of the whip on this side that there should be more coordination in respect of this matter, and that we should respect the rule of this house which says that committees do not meet when the Senate is sitting. The rule was put in there for a particular reason; the reason is obvious today. It seems to me that we have been ignoring it in a pretty cavalier fashion in the past few months, and I do very much hope that that will cease.

Hon. John M. Godfrey: Honourable senators, I think that these witnesses were invited to attend on the assumption that the Senate would not sit this week. That is the reason why the witnesses were called for that time. Then people changed their minds at the last minute. The committee meeting would never have been set for 2.30, except that everyone was told that the Senate would not sit this week. I was told that, in any event.

Senator Doody: I think I should set the record clear on that. I cannot remember anyone saying definitely that the Senate would not sit this week. I know some senators expressed an opinion that perhaps it would not be necessary for the Senate to do so. But others felt that it was necessary to sit, and the consensus was that we should sit this week. However, at no time did anyone that I am aware of make a statement to the effect that the Senate would not be sitting this week.

Senator Godfrey: You are quite right; no official statement was made, but everyone I was talking to, in any event, made the assumption that the Senate would not sit. Obviously, Senator Sinclair made the same assumption as I did.

Senator Frith: May I ask what the committee agenda is for this meeting? Is it to deal with government legislation?

Senator MacDonald: You are referring to the agenda for tomorrow's meeting?

Senator Frith: Yes.

Senator MacDonald: I do not have it with me. I did not expect to have to answer that question today, but I would be happy to get that information for you in a few minutes.

Hon. William J. Petten: Honourable senators, as someone who has been whip on both sides of this house, I would like to say that it makes it very difficult for the Senate to conduct its business when more than one committee sits while the Senate is sitting. Perhaps if there was a little more consultation with both Senator Phillips and myself, we might be able to resolve the issue to everyone's satisfaction.

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, everyone seems to be getting into this debate. I merely want to say that I am in exactly the same boat as Senator Roblin with the two committees that are sitting at approximately the same time this afternoon. This is the third consecutive week that that has happened, if my memory is correct. The situation has not been untangled, and I wish it could be.

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, in response to Senator Frith's earlier question, I now have the information he was requesting. The witnesses who will appear tomorrow before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce are called with regard to the subject matter of Bill C-56, to amend certain Acts relating to financial institutions. The witnesses will be from the Canadian Bankers' Association, the Trust Companies' Association of Canada and representatives from the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Frith: I would not say it is our pleasure.

Senator Roblin: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

ABSENCE OF GOVERNMENT LEADER FROM CHAMBER

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): I have to inform the Senate that Senator Murray will not be with us this afternoon. He is attending to his official duties elsewhere. However, I shall do what I can to take notice of questions and shall try to obtain answers to them at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, will the Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate tell us whether Senator Murray is sitting inside the room or outside the room this time?

Senator Doody: Today the senator is sitting outside the room. Tomorrow, we hope he will be sitting inside the room.

Senator Frith: He means the meeting room.

Senator Doody: I am sorry, I couldn't tell you, but thank you for asking.

Senator Guay: Could the Deputy Leader of the Government advise me who is in charge of sending the smoke up the chimney?

Senator Doody: Is the senator making himself available? Everyone to his own chore.

ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANADIAN ARMS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES OR NON-CANADIAN AGENCIES

Question No. 13 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Stanley Haidasz, P.C.

9th April, 1987—What is the Federal Government's policy on the sale of Canadian arms to foreign countries or non-Canadian agencies?

Reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

The attached Communiqué of September 10, 1986, outlines Canada's export control policy for military and for strategic goods.

EXPORT CONTROLS POLICY

The Right Honourable Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, today announced new guidelines following a review of export control policy undertaken by the Government.

[The Hon. the Speaker:]

Mr. Clark indicated that the review had been undertaken in response to concerns expressed by various groups, particularly persons concerned that Canadian exports might contribute to the repression of human rights in certain countries. Business and industry had also expressed concern that the export controls framework was unresponsive to changing circumstances. The results of this review have balanced industry concerns with broader foreign policy objectives, as well as streamlining and clarifying the policy.

The Minister stressed that Canada will not allow the export of military equipment to countries whose governments have a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens, unless it can be demonstrated that there is no reasonable risk that the goods might be used against the civilian population: "The new policy with respect to countries with serious human rights problems places the onus of proving "no reasonable risk" squarely on the exporter".

Mr. Clark pointed out that the previous policy had also restricted exports of civilian strategic equipment. The new policy focuses on military equipment and will restrict the export of civilian strategic equipment only to COCOM proscribed destinations—principally, the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies—and to countries where there is a risk of diversion of this equipment to those destinations (COCOM is the Coordinating Committee on Multilateral Strategic Export Controls. COCOM's membership includes NATO countries, excluding Iceland, plus Japan).

The Minister noted the importance of Canada's defence industry in meeting our obligations to our NATO allies. He said that while Canada is not an important manufacturer of offensive military equipment, it is an important producer of defensive military equipment, particularly of components and sub-assemblies of larger military systems. Canadian firms will now be authorized to export these components and assemblies to all countries with which Canada has a suitable government-to-government agreement and where there exists a bona fide joint venture arrangement between the Canadian and the foreign manufacturer. In such cases, the authorization to export the completely assembled product will now rest with the country of final manufacture.

EXPORT CONTROLS POLICY BACKGROUND PAPER

The Secretary of State for External Affairs announced new guidelines for exports of military and strategic goods.

These guidelines follow a thorough and detailed Cabinet review which took into account the views of a wide range of Canadians from many walks of life. The Government considered the position of manufacturers and exporters as well as the many Canadians who are concerned about disarmament and human rights. The new policy and guidelines represent the Government's preferred path in this complex policy area. The new policy, however, is not a radical departure from previous policies; rather, the Government is revitalizing and adapting the existing policy to current circumstances and clarifying certain elements.

The Minister indicated that there has been a continuity in export controls policy over the years. The Government believes Canadians hold strong views about the role which their country plays internationally. They want Canada to maintain a series of defence obligations, most notably in the NATO alliance and within NORAD; they want Canada to participate in peacekeeping missions; to seek the maintenance of international order and stability; and to maintain a strong stand against human rights abuses. This latter concern has been clearly expressed by a number of Canadians who are justly disturbed by the lack of respect given to human rights in certain countries. All of these elements were weighed in the process which resulted in this policy.

The Minister stated that Canada would closely control the export of military goods and technology to:

- 1) countries which pose a threat to Canada and its allies;
- 2) countries involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities; and
- 3) countries under United Nations Security Council sanctions; or
- 4) countries whose governments have a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens, unless it can be demonstrated that there is no reasonable risk that the goods might be used against the civilian population.

Mr. Clark emphasized that the wording in the first three categories follows that of the old policy, but the fourth considerably strengthens the rules respecting human rights. Previously, the denial of export permits was based on a regime being declared "wholly repugnant to Canadian values". As no regime was ever so declared, the denial of export permits was on an ad hoc basis. Through a more demonstrable statement of concern, the new policy will greatly improve the Government's ability to enforce this important consideration.

For greater certainty in the application of the policy, a register of countries falling into each category will be maintained. The register, which will be confidential, will be reviewed by Ministers regularly and changed when warranted.

In reviewing and adapting the policy for the export of military equipment, the Government recognizes the importance of the Canadian defence industry. Canada's defence industry is necessary for reasons of national security and sovereignty and has over the years made an important contribution to Canada's economic well being. It contains some 300 firms providing direct employment to some 35,000 persons. The Government also recognizes the importance of this industry to Canada's role in NATO. The continued existence of the industry depends on exports to our allies and other friendly countries. In 1985, annual sales of firms in this industry were $4.6 billion, of which $2 billion was exported.

The market for defence equipment in Canada is limited. Canadian defence sector companies produced for the most part defensive military equipment and strategic products such as transport aircraft and communications equipment. Canadian defence companies are primarily involved in the assembly or manufacture of components and sub-systems, rather than whole systems. It is not possible for our defence industry to recover the large costs of development of their products through Canadian sales alone. Therefore, these goods are exported principally to the United States and to our NATO allies, where they are integrated into large defence systems. In recognition of this fact, the Government will continue to maintain an open approach to the export of military goods and technology to our NATO allies and other friendly countries. In addition, companies will be authorized to export sub-assemblies and components of large systems where there is a bona fide joint venture between the Canadian and the foreign manufacturer and where Canada has a government-to-government research or production agreement.

Since there has been some difference of views among various groups as to what was considered to be military equipment, the Government considered it important that all participants share a common understanding of what goods are being controlled. The Government has defined military goods using the multilaterally-agreed International Munitions List (Group 7 of the current Export Control List). This List, in addition to arms and ammunition, also includes equipment "specially designed for military purposes", such as military vehicles, military range-finding equipment, and certain types of electronic equipment manufactured to military specifications.

Canadian policy will continue to prohibit the export of military and strategic goods to the Republic of South Africa. The close control of exports of military goods to areas of conflict reflects a longstanding Canadian desire not to become involved in local disputes and is consistent with the Government's objective of promoting international order and stability through the peaceful resolution of disputes.

The Government also addressed the question of our national security. One means of ensuring that Canada's obligations for mutual defence and security are met is through the denial not only of military but also of strategic goods to those countries which pose a threat to our security, or to that of our allies. To this end, Canada will continue to participate in the "Coordinating Committee on Multilateral Strategic Export Controls" (COCOM), which includes our NATO allies and Japan. This organization is at the centre of an informal coordinating arrangement whose aim is to harmonize the approach taken by its members in controlling exports of strategic and military goods. This control is exercised by means of an embargo on all equipment and technology which would enhance the military potential of possible adversaries. These countries are principally the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies. The People's Republic of China is also subject to COCOM controls.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, recognizing that the purpose of the policy is principally to control exports of military and strategic goods, reiterated that the Government encourages trade in peaceful goods with all countries. Therefore existing restrictions on trade in peaceful goods to the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies will be removed. This will be done by removing these countries from the Area Control List, thereby removing the requirement for export permits for civilian non-strategic (i.e. peaceful) goods. Controls on military and strategic equipment and technology to these countries will continue under the Export Control List.

EXPORT CONTROLS POLICY
QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q1. Why does Canada export military equipment?

A. Canada produces military equipment in order to meet our defence needs and our obligations under NATO and NORAD. We have some 300 companies and 35,000 persons involved in the manufacture of defence and civilian products. Few companies produce defence equipment exclusively and few products of the Canadian defence sector are classed as offensive military equipment. Exports to the USA and Europe are necessary to reduce overall cost and to keep our industry innovative and competitive.

Q2. How has the new policy changed from the previous one?

A. The new policy clarifies the focus of the old policy and improves certain definitions.

Under the previous policy, both military and civilian strategic goods were considered together, particularly when it came to denying exports of these goods to certain classes of countries. The new policy focuses on military equipment. This means that civilian strategic goods may be exported to a wider number of countries than before.

Military goods are designated clearly, and these goods are to be closely controlled to four groups of countries. While three of these groups are unchanged, the definition of the fourth group is considerably refined, to allow the policy to be put into effect with no doubts about its intent.

Particular arrangements are made for joint ventures, as this is an area where Canadian policy did not reflect the changes in industrial structure over the years.

Q3. Why does the definition of military equipment make no reference to the End User?

A. Our concern is with military equipment itself. In addition to military goods, armies and other para-military forces currently require a variety of non-military equipment (communications and office equipment, trucks and clothing, etc). We see no reason for Canadian companies not to supply non-military goods, since these goods can be supplied by many countries, yet they add nothing to the offensive or belligerent capacity of the military or para-military organization.

Q4. How are military goods defined?

A. International negotiations in Paris, through COCOM, lead to agreement on what items are to be included on the International Munitions List. This List is published in Canada as Group 7 of the Export Control List. It includes all weapon systems, as well as other equipment "specially designed for military purposes".

Q5. What about helicopters?

A. A limited number of items lend themselves to use for civilian as well as for military purposes. When a class of goods is not clearly and uniquely either military or civilian, there will be ministerial consultation to determine a general policy for such goods. Helicopters are an example of this. The SSEA is currently considering such a policy for helicopters, in conjunction with his colleagues, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Q6. What is the situation regarding exports to South Africa?

A. The Republic of South Africa is a special case in our policy. We in Canada have accepted to limit exports of all military goods to military end-users, in accordance with UN Security Council Resolution 418 (1977), and more recently, we decided to refuse to export strategic and military goods to all RSA departments and agencies. This is part of a measured series of actions. More may be necessary to convince the government to dismantle the apartheid system. Measures affecting imports are currently in preparation following the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in London.

Q7. How are human rights factored in?

A. Export proposals for military goods to certain countries will trigger an automatic inter- and intra-departmental consultation process. Human rights will be considered by all officials involved in the consultation process. Ministers would be made aware of the results of this process and would personally consider any exceptions to the guidelines.

Q8. What was wrong with the phrase, "wholly repugnant to Canadian values" when describing governments which abuse the human rights of their citizens?

A. Since 1978 a number of countries had been identified whose governments have records of serious human rights violations, but none could be categorized as "wholly repugnant to Canadian values". The new definition is firmly founded in demonstrable fact, and thus should permit the identification of offending regimes.

Q9. Why are strategic goods to countries with bad human rights records not controlled as they were under the old policy?

A. Cabinet has reviewed this point carefully. It has concluded that exports of strategic goods are of concern only insofar as there may be a potential for their diversion to COCOM-proscribed destinations. Strategic goods are not (by their nature) used to abuse human rights. Military goods, particularly offensive military equipment, can be so used.

Q10. Are some military exports permitted to countries with bad human rights records?

A. The Canadian Government supports the right of nations to defend themselves against external aggression. What is objectionable to us is that equipment which should be used for such a purpose is turned against civilians within the country. Therefore, we are prepared to consider export permits for military goods to such countries where there is no reasonable risk that the goods would be used against the civilian population.

Q11. Is there a list of countries to which exports of military goods will be denied?

A. Firstly, the policy speaks of "closely controlling" exports of military goods to certain categories of countries. This means that such exports would generally be refused, but there may be extraordinary circumstances under which Ministers might wish to agree to an export.

It is not our intention to publish a list of countries which are affected by this policy. Such a list will be a Cabinet confidence. The identity of some countries is self-evident; that of others will be more sensitive. The list will be reviewed regularly. It is not desirable that the presence or absence of any country on a list such as this be a matter of public controversy. Canada is a trading nation, and this Government encourages trade in peaceful goods with all nations. We would be loath to see Canadian exporters cut out of certain markets for non-military goods, as a result of our decision about a country's human rights record.

Q12. Are export permits available under Access to Information?

A. Information supplied by export permit applicants is generally considered by these applicants to be commercially confidential, and when queried about release, they have claimed exemption under Section 20(1) of the Access to Information Act. Some have even indicated that the existence of their contracts is governed by the Official Secrets Act of the signatory country. The Minister has accepted these claims and respects their need to guard the relations between client and exporter as private.

The effectiveness of the export control system relies on frank and honest disclosure by the exporter in reporting his proposed exports to this Department, on the vigilance of officials administering the policy, and on forthright enforcement of the law.

Q13. What is the Government's policy regarding Canadian origin military equipment going through the United States to areas of conflict or of human rights abuse?

A. There is no export control on most goods (including military goods) going to the USA for final use or for further manufacturing in that country. If the Canadian exporter is aware that goods are only transiting the USA, then an export permit would be required, indicating the country of final destination.

Q14. How does this policy square with Canada's efforts towards arms control and disarmament? Will it not increase East-West tensions?

A. By the limitations which it places on certain destinations for exports of Canadian origin military goods, this policy supports the Government's commitment to arms control and disarmament. Through the priority accorded to meeting our requirements for national security and our alliance obligations for collective defence, this policy contributes to the balance of strategic deterrence, which is a cornerstone of arms control in an East-West context.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANADIAN ARMS—EXPORT PERMITS ISSUED IN 1985 AND 1986

Question No. 14 on the Order Paper—By Hon. Stanley Haidasz, P.C.

9th April, 1987—How many export permits for Canadian arms sales were issued in (i) 1985 and (ii) 1986?

Reply by the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

Total Canadian export permits issued for Group 7 of Export Control List.

This item includes all military equipment, not only arms. A copy of Group 7 is attached outlining the range of equipment covered by this item.

1985: 1,030 1986: 1,099

GROUP 7—ARMS, MUNITIONS, MILITARY, NAVAL OR AIR STORES

7001 Small arms and machine guns, as follows:

- (1) rifles, carbines, revolvers, pistols, machine pistols and machine guns;
- (2) all specifically designed components and parts therefor.

7002 Large calibre armament or weapons and project as follows:

- (1) guns, howitzers, cannon, mortars, tank destroyers, rocket launchers, military flame throwers, recoilless rifles;
- (2) military smoke, gas and pyrotechnic projectors;
- (3) all specifically designed components and parts for the above.

7003 Ammunition, and all specifically designed components and parts thereof, for the weapons described in items 7001 and 7002.

7004 Bombs, torpedoes, rockets, and missiles guided or unguided, as follows:

- (1) bombs, torpedoes, grenades (including smoke grenades), smoke canisters, rockets, mines, missiles guided or unguided, depth charges, fire bombs, incendiary bombs and military demolition charges, devices and kits, pyrotechnic flare signals for military use, cartridges and simulators; and all specifically designed components and parts therefor;
- (2) apparatus and devices specifically designed for the handling control, activation, launching, laying, sweeping, discharging, detonation or detection of items enumerated in subitem (1); and all specifically designed components and parts therefor;
- (3) military fuel thickeners, including but not limited to: compounds (e.g. octal) or mixtures or such compounds (e.g. napalm) specially formulated for the purpose of producing materials that when added to petroleum products, provide a gel-type incendiary material for use in bombs, projectiles, flame throwers or other implements of war.

7005 Fire control equipment and range finders, as follows:

- (1) fire control, gun laying, night sighting, missile tracking and guidance equipment;
- (2) range, position and height finders, and spotting instruments specially designed for military purposes;
- (3) aiming devices, electronic, gyroscopic, acoustic and optical, specially designed for military purposes;
- (4) bomb sights, bombing computers, gun sights and periscopes specially designed for military purposes;
- (5) television sighting units specially designed for military use;
- (6) components, parts, accessories, and attachments specially designed for the articles described in subitems (1), (2), (3), (4) and (5).

7006 Tanks and vehicles specially designed for military purposes, as follows:

- (1) tanks and self-propelled guns;
- (2) military type armed or armoured vehicles, and vehicles fitted with mounting for arms;
- (3) armoured railway trains;
- (4) military half tracks;
- (5) military type recovery vehicles;
- (6) gun carriers and tractors specially designed for towing artillery;
- (7) trailers specially designed to carry ammunition;
- (8) amphibious and deep water fording military vehicles;
- (9) military mobile repair shops specially designed to service military equipment;
- (10) all other specially designed military vehicles;
- (11) pneumatic tire casings (excluding tractor and farm implement types) of a kind specially constructed to be bullet-proof or to run when deflated;
- (12) engines for the propulsion of the vehicles enumerated in subitems (1) to (10), specially designed or essentially modified for military use; and parts thereof;
- (13) all specially designed components and parts; except engines, for the tanks and vehicles described in this item.

7007 Toxicological agents, including tear gas, as follows:

- (1) biological, chemical and radio-active materials adapted for use in war to produce casualties in men or animals or to damage crops;
- (2) equipment specially designed and intended for the dissemination of the materials described in subitem (1);
- (3) equipment specially designed and intended for defence against the materials described in subitem (1), and for their detection and identification;
- (4) components and parts specially designed for the items described in subitems (2) and (3).

7008 Powders, explosives, propellants and fuels, as follows:

- (1) powders and liquid or solid propellants for the articles described in items 7003, 7004, and 7007, and stabilizers therefor;
- (2) military high explosives and stabilizers therefor;
- (3) chemical base high energy solid or liquid fuels, including aircraft fuels, specially formulated for military purposes.

7009 Vessels of war, and special naval equipment, as follows:

- (1) combatant vessels or vessels designed for offensive or defensive action (surface or underwater) whether or not converted to non-military use and regardless of current state of repair or operating condition and hulls or parts of hulls for such vessels;

(2) (a) diesel engines of 1,500 horsepower and over with rotary speed of 700 revolutions per minute or over, specially designed for submarines;

(b) electric motors specially designed for submarines, i.e. over 1,000 horsepower quick reversing type, liquid cooled and totally enclosed; and

(c) non-magnetic diesel engines, 50 horsepower and over specially designed for military purposes.

Note: An engine shall be presumed to be specially designed for military purposes if:

(i) it has non-magnetic parts other than crankcase, block, head, pistons, covers, end plates, valve facings, gaskets, fuel, lubrication and other supply lines; or

(ii) its non-magnetic content exceeds 75 per cent of its total weight.

(3) magnetic, pressure, and acoustic underwater detection devices specially designed for military purposes; controls and components thereof;

(4) submarine and torpedo nets;

(5) compasses and equipment therefor and ship's course indicators, specially designed for submarines;

(6) components, parts, accessories and attachments for any article described in this item, such as turrets, naval gun mounts, submarine batteries and catapults.

7010 Aircraft and helicopters, piloted or pilotless, aero-engines, and aircraft and helicopter equipment, associated equipment and components, specially designed for military purposes, as follows:

(1) combat aircraft and other aircraft and helicopters specially designed for military purposes, including military reconnaissance, assault, military training and logistic support, and all aircraft having special structural features such as multiple hatches, special doors, ramps, reinforced floors and the like, for transporting and airdropping troops, military equipment and supplies; aero-engines specially designed or adapted for use with such aircraft and helicopters; and specially designed component parts thereof;

(2) airborne equipment, including airborne refuelling equipment, specially designed for use with the aircraft and helicopters and the engines of the types of aircraft and helicopters described in subitem (1), and component parts thereof;

(3) pressure refuellers, pressure refuelling equipment, equipment specially designed to facilitate operations in confined areas and ground equipment not elsewhere specified, developed specially for aircraft and helicopters, aircraft and helicopter engines described in subitem (1);

(4) pressurized breathing equipment and partial pressure suits for use in aircraft and helicopters; anti-"G" suits; military crash helmets; parachutes used for combat personnel, cargo-dropping, and aircraft deceleration; liquid oxygen converters used for aircraft, helicopters and missiles; catapults and cartridge actuated devices utilized in emergency escape personnel from aircraft and helicopters.

7011 Electronic equipment specially designed for military use; and components and parts therefor.

7012 Photographic equipment, as follows:

(1) air reconnaissance cameras and associated equipment designed and used for military purposes;

(2) film processing and printing machines designed and used for military purposes;

(3) other cameras and other devices for recording on film specially designed and used for military purposes, and specialized equipment designed to make the recorded information militarily useful;

(4) all specially designed components and parts for the above.

7013 Special armoured equipment:

(1) armoured plate;

(2) military helmets;

Note: This subitem does not include conventional steel helmets not equipped with, modified or designed to accept any type of accessory device.

(3) body armour and flak suits;

(4) components and parts specially designed for equipment in subitem (3).

7014 Specialized military training equipment and components, parts, attachments and accessories specifically designed for such equipment.

7015 Military infra-red equipment and image intensifier equipment and specialized components therefor.

(See items 3502, 3555 and 3556)

7016 Munitions components and materials, as follows:

(1) brass and bronze fabrications for primer anvils, fabrications for bullet cups (gilding metal clad steel), cartridge links, primer caps, shell rotating bands;

(2) copper rotating bands for shells, and other copper munitions components;

(3) gilding metal clad steel;

(4) rough steel forgings, steel and alloy castings for guns and for arms.

7017 Miscellaneous equipment and materials, as follows:

(1) self-contained diving and underwater swimming apparatus, as follows:

(a) closed and semi-closed circuit (rebreathing) apparatus;

(b) specially designed components for use in the conversion of open-circuit apparatus to military use; and

- (c) articles exclusively designed for military use with self-contained diving and underwater swimming apparatus;
- (2) bayonets;
- (3) fire arms silencers (mufflers);
- (4) power controlled searchlights and control units therefor, designed for military use;
- (5) construction equipment built to military specifications, specially designed for airborne transport.

7018 Specialized machinery, equipment and gear specially designed for the examination, manufacture, testing and checking of the arms, ammunition, appliances and machines referred to in Group 7 of this List.

7019 Environmental chambers capable of pressures below 10^{-4} Torr, and specialized parts, components and ancillary equipment therefor.

7020 Cryogenic equipment, as follows:

- (1) equipment designed for maintaining an ambient temperature of -170°C (-274°F):
 - (a) designed for use in marine, airborne or space applications;
 - (b) ruggedized for mobile ground use;
- (2) electrical magnetic or electronic equipment or components and electrical conductors specially designed for operation continuously or discontinuously at ambient temperatures below -170°C (-274°F), as follows:
 - (a) superconductive metals, alloys, compounds, composites and intercalate materials, except
 - (i) superconductive wire having a filament cross-sectional area of 4.42×10^{-3} square millimetres (or 75 microns diameter) or greater,
 - (ii) superconductive niobium-titanium wire having a filament cross-sectional area of 1.26×10^{-3} square millimetres (or 40 microns diameter) or greater in a copper matrix;
 - (b) components, as follows:
 - (i) Josephson effect devices;
 - (ii) Dayem bridges;
 - (iii) proximity effect bridges;
 - (iv) super-normal-super (SNS) proximity devices;
 - (v) memory and logic devices
 - (vi) phase slip devices;
 - (c) high field-high current density superconductive magnets rated for producing magnetic fields of 30 kilogauss or greater at current densities of 10,000 amperes per square centimetre or greater and specialized components therefor, except magnets with coil outside diameter greater than 5 centimetres, and less than 50 centimetres;
 - (d) superconducting electrical equipment (rotating machines and transformers) designed for use in marine or airborne applications, and specialized components therefor;

- (3) specially designed accessories, subassemblies, parts or components for equipment described in subitems (1) and (2).

7022 Electrically triggered shutters of the carbon injection or photochromic function type having a shutter speed of less than 100 microseconds, except shutters that are an essential part of a high speed camera.

MARRIAGE (PROHIBITED DEGREES) BILL

THIRD READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Third reading of the Bill S-5, An Act to amend and consolidate the laws prohibiting marriage between related persons.—(Honourable Senator Nurgitz).

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz: Honourable senators, I request that this matter stand for at least a week. The bill is now ready for third reading, but I thought that perhaps we might have an opportunity to discuss this legislation with the Minister of Justice when we meet with him within the next week or so. In that way, we might be able to ensure that this bill, which is now ready for third reading and passage in this chamber, will not merely sit over in the other place when it gets there.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

YELLOWKNIFE ELECTRIC LTD.—SECOND READING

Hon. Nathan Nurgitz moved the second reading of Bill S-10, to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I hope to be brief. The purpose of the bill is to provide for the revival of a company known as Yellowknife Electric Ltd. Officials of that company are looking for continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

A revival is required because the corporation has carried on business notwithstanding the fact that, and unknown to its directors and officers, it was dissolved, and I will explain that in a moment. The company as well, without appreciating its legal status, entered into certain agreements for the sale of property and transacted other business matters. Obviously, these transactions cannot be proceeded with. A small example of the situation is the company's attempting to deal with the Territorial Land Titles Office when it is not a company in good standing.

Briefly, honourable senators, the company was incorporated on March 21, 1955, under what was then called the Companies Act, which was a federal statute. It also continued under what was later known as the Canada Corporations Act, and in 1966 the company, because it had failed to file what are generally called in the legal business "annual returns," was listed in the Canada Gazette of June 11, 1966, indicating that if it did not attend to the three years' filings, it would be struck off the rolls.

Indeed, the company did not comply, and subsequently, on June 14, 1967, a notice appeared in the Canada Gazette stating that pursuant to section 125(12) of the Canada Corporations Act, Yellowknife Electric Ltd. was no longer in existence.

This company had carried on business with the directors not knowing that it was no longer a legal entity, and from the information I have been furnished with by solicitors for the company, I can say that it proceeded and carried on business on a day-to-day basis in a very ordinary way, as if it were valid.

No summaries or annual returns were filed subsequent to 1963. If honourable senators examine the petition that was filed in order to bring about this bill, they will see that, in fact, none has been filed since 1963; that is, the three years leading to 1966, when the default was pointed out, the subsequent year and up to the present time.

The company has undertaken that in the event that the bill passes—and this is the only method for the company to be revived—it will file all the outstanding returns so that it would then be able to complete the transactions for which it appears it has legal obligations to the extent that a non-entity can be obliged to enter into anything, but I assume there would be other liabilities that would flow from that.

I might say as well, though, that from when it first failed to file a return in 1963 to the present time, it has paid property tax and income tax, oblivious to the fact that it was struck off. In fact, it was only recently, when it became time to proceed through the Territorial Land Titles Office, that the owner and director became aware of the fact that it was not in existence.

I conclude by saying that I have been assured by the company's solicitor that no person or corporation would be adversely affected by the passage of this bill, and in fact there are several people who would hope to benefit—that is, transactions could be completed by citizens in that part of the world who think they should be completed—and the matter could be brought to a happy conclusion that way.

I assume the principal shareholder is quite prepared to appear before a committee. At any rate, the solicitor is quite prepared to do so. I would suggest, not to pre-empt anyone who might wish to speak on the other side, that following second reading this bill could be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I can see no reason why this bill should not pass. But since we have Senator Nurgitz's assurance, although that is on the basis of what someone else assured him—I am sure that those undertakings will apply to the statement that no one will suffer from the passage of the bill—it seems to be an eminent case for a committee to get that assurance on the record so that when we give it third reading, we will have that to rely on. Otherwise, I see no reason to delay it nor do I see why it should not have second reading today. Senator Nurgitz can then make the appropriate motion.

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I have a question for Senator Nurgitz. I support the fact that this should go to committee for the reasons stated by Senator Frith. However, I am less inclined to jump to the conclusion that it should automatically be favourably considered by the chamber, because, as a matter of general principle, I find it unfortunate that Parliament should be burdened with private matters of this sort whenever it can possibly be avoided.

If this involves only a piece of land—and I simply make this observation having dealt with one of these situations in the Yukon, which is quite close to the Northwest Territories, many years ago when I was practising there—that has been neglected for 20 years, and the Land Titles Office is dealing with it, then under the law, when a company disappears like this, its assets escheat to the Crown if the Crown takes that action. The Crown can, as a generous gesture, give back property that is so escheated, which would save Parliament this trouble.

I simply suggest to honourable senators that the committee, indeed, should look at this carefully to ensure that there is no other legal mechanism that could be used to avoid Parliament's being burdened with this type of private matter.

Senator Frith: Good point!

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Nurgitz, bill referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for second reading of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, this order stands in my name, but I do not intend to speak to it. If anyone else wishes to do so, I will certainly pass the adjournment over to whoever so indicates.

Order stands.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bosa, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the second reading of the Bill S-8, An Act to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses).—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I am attempting to get some research material on this order, but, once again, if anyone else wishes to speak to it, I will certainly yield.

Order stands.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Le Moynes).

Hon. Jean Le Moynes: Honourable senators, I want to congratulate my colleague and friend, Senator Jacques Hébert, on his fair and ferocious comments on Opus Dei. His speech on May 26 was a masterful indictment of this evil agency. I must admit though that there is a certain amount of rivalry between myself and the senator, yes, in one respect, that is in our love of freedom.

Honourable senators, what Senator Hébert told us, and in fact anything we happen to read or hear about the subject—for or against, and especially for—leaves us feeling that Opus Dei is something that defies every attempt to define and label exactly what it is. We have here a pious eel, unctuous, smooth, slippery and elusive. In fact, Opus Dei is an institution that is religious but very much of this world; secular but clerical; open but veiled; public but secretive; free but autocratic; welcoming women as members but very much patriarchal; poor but rich; humble but arrogant; contemporary but reactionary... We could add indefinitely to the litany of contradictions without ever really defining its essential nature. So what is there to say about this elusive monstrosity?

Its very name, which borders on blasphemy, is not enough to make Opus Dei the work of God. This institution was conceived and organized by a man who certainly had the right qualifications to launch this kind of undertaking: the charm that goes with a certain type of person, endless energy, simple logic and easy eloquence. He also had the whole range of neurotic virulence that is essential to attract followers, including monomania, megalomania and "papimania", with strong sado-masochistic overtones.

[Senator Doody.]

[English]

His frightful success brings to mind that of sundry evangelists and self-appointed heads of churches like the late and shapely Aimée Semple MacPherson, or a Jerry Falwell, or a Jim Bakker and his doll of a wife—they are not yet down from the stage, those two—an Oral Roberts, a Hubbard or a Moon—who is currently visited with some difficulties.

They all have something in common, these "reverends." They are gifted with visions or communications from heaven, as if they constantly have the Lord on the telephone; their energy is boundless, and they are monstrous workaholics; they have a prodigious ease of elocution to the point of verbal diarrhoea, so they can talk endlessly, repeating and hammering mercilessly their message; they are entertaining for their congregations; they all mesmerize crowds; they can be first-class brainwashers and programmers of minds, especially young minds; they get high during their contacts with large audiences, like Gandhi and Nehru, who were of a different breed; they are extraordinary magnets for money, and under their spell giving becomes a compulsion; finally, they are well able to make friends and influence people at the highest summits—like Falwell, who has penetrated Reagan's White House, and particularly Balaguer, who beats them all with the blessings of no less than five popes and the prospects of canonization! In the case of the last named of those superstars, one is inclined to think that the discernment of spirits is not exactly as keen as it should be nowadays.

But how can one explain the overall success of those showbiz pros? The late Mr. Barnum would tell us: "Senators, there's a sucker born every minute."

This is fine and true, but it is not enough. There is still more to say about these false prophets, for that is what they are, including Escrivá de Balaguer. We shall come back to them later.

[Translation]

Josemaria Escrivá de Balaguer, Spanish priest, was born in 1902 and died in 1975. Year 1902 sets him in an era when stuffy religion prevailed, a time which stood witness to the apotheosis of the superstitious religiosity which was his hallmark, the same religiosity which poisoned the children of my generation and would have destroyed its adolescents had we been unable to react with timely self-preserving reflexes. Therefore I simply do not see anything original or surprising in the mentality and teachings of Monsignor Escrivá de Balaguer. On the contrary, to me they are like a recurring nightmare.

Nineteen seventy-five indicates that, as a resident of Rome since 1946, Escrivá had every opportunity indeed to benefit personally from the conciliar aggiornamento and turn certain liberating intentions to his own advantage, especially with respect to laity.

We do have plenty of files and witnesses. But he is the one we will call to the stand. Well, you will say, are you forgetting that he is dead? Balaguer dead? Not so, if I may put it this way, for he has managed to survive through his writings, awaiting his survival through his own statues on the altars of Navarre or elsewhere, should he emerge unscathed from the trial he is now undergoing in Rome, a decidedly more mind-boggling trial than the one begun by our critic. Indeed, "the Father", as Opus Dei advocates bleatingly call him, is in the process of being beatified, the first step in the long stretch to canonization.

[English]

Now, honourable senators, we are dealing with a man who, thanks to a prodigious churchwide lobby, has such a good chance of being elevated to the ranks of the blessed and the saints that I would not bet 50 cents that he is to be left with us among the lowly throngs of our cemeteries. At such prospects, imagine the ecstatic delight, and the intense and ever-hardening confidence, the holy tumescence experienced in the intimacy of the so-called "families" of Opus Dei. Again, facing such an august set-up and confronting such a display of power, are we to put on the gloves of reverence and awe? Are we to have the creeps? And are we ourselves to start creeping?

Certainly not, most emphatically not! Because we are men of our times, and because the dominant characteristic or our age is criticism. For us moderns anybody, anything stands to be criticized. It is now an irrepressible will, it has become an unconditional right for which we still pay dearly. Not only our experiences and beliefs at whatever level of existence but also their deepest historical, kerygmatic, social and psychological contexts are subject to a criticism of the most rigorous kind. Nature itself, the fluid reality of things, we cannot any more take as a given, but only as the manifold result of critical and permanent interpretation. In our age we are bound to interpret everything under the penalty of trying to reverse or stop not only history but evolution itself in their courses. We can speak here without undue exaggeration of a real mutation of human understanding, and conclude that as the essence of modernity, criticism constitutes the very legitimacy of the age. Thus is guaranteed the freedom we are now exercising.

[Translation]

I want to assure honourable senators that I will not be drawn into a religious controversy which would befit a theological venue more than these precincts. However, how could our debate be exempt from religious considerations? How could we avoid raising the issue of religion, however unpleasant it might be, however indecent it might appear to some of us?

For one thing, Opus Dei is an officially religious matter, and as such we would be quite prepared to let the ecclesiastical authority deal with it as best it can. But at the same time as we must try to be heard by the accessible elements of the said authority, we have to alert the political authority, for in any event it would have had to intervene in this case. For another thing, indeed, we are aware of the equivocal nature of Opus Dei which, I repeat, stems from religious sources; we are aware of its fanaticism, we know that its adolescent-oriented proselytism is scandalous, and we know to what extent its action hypocritically reaches into the realm of laity. Let me be more specific: the Escrivá foundation represents here a dangerous and unacceptable resurgence of the notorious "undue influence", of this clerical meddling which for years on end poisoned the political and intellectual atmosphere in French Canada, as everywhere else in Catholic English Canada.

There is no question of denying anyone's rights, for we are merely seeking to inform, and we want this case to be examined closely so that justice eventually be done, should that be required, if, in light of everything that is known, there is no other option (may God forbid!).

I would hope that other senators, expert in legal matters, will rise before Bill S-7 is adopted on second reading and referred to the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. Let us not forget that second reading means the principle of the bill is endorsed. I am among those who simply cannot bring themselves to support this principle.

I would like to draw an analogy. There is the law as seen by Creon and the law as seen by Antigone; there is the Constitution and the Charter, and there are human demands that transcend them; there is the legal aspect and the so-called political order. Sometimes we must tell the powers that be that we cannot obey. The right to say "non possumus" has lost its exclusivity and is now in the public domain. Honourable senators, having invoked the protection of Saint Antigone, I shall vote against Opus Dei.

• (1430)

[English]

Escrivá, worthy of his name, wrote a lot, but rather little has been published apart from his main book entitled The Way, which first appeared in 1934 in Spanish under the title El Camino, or Le Chemin in French.

We are, no doubt, discreetly reminded of someone else who said in John 14:6:

I am the way . . .

Escrivá's Way is made up of 999 maxims, or aphorisms, or sayings, or apophthegms, or whatever. I would rather call "notes", those short, often incoherent paragraphs. Despite their utter dreariness, The Way is a fantastic best seller, albeit a silent one, except among its peculiar public. It would probably have remained unknown to us had not Senator Bélisle consented to introduce Bill S-7. I need not explain what I mean by "us". Several million copies of The Way have been sold in some 30 languages. This is phenomenal, and we will see that such a success cannot be explained but by mediocrity, though Opusdeists have the gall to compare Escrivá's lucubrations to Thomas A Kempis' The Imitation of Christ, to Loyola's Spiritual Exercises and to the Introduction to the Devout Life of François de Sales.

Honourable senators would certainly like to know why the author had chosen to write 999 notes—no less, no more—each being carefully numbered. It was in honour of the Holy Trinity! You see, three times three equal nine and you repeat that pious operation thrice; and there you are! And there is Escrivá de Balaguer betraying magical tendencies, of which I can add right now another symptom, detected by the auscultation of note 438. The literal translation follows:

438 Fool!—you thought yourself alone in the episcopal chapel—I saw you kiss each chalice and each paten freshly consecrated: so that He could find those kisses, when, for the first time, He would descend into those sacred vases.

Well, honourable senators, blow me down!

We know that Escrivá was also a great kisser of statues, each having a special appeal and inherent virtue, even if they happened to be images of the same saint. Magic is fond of multiplication.

[Translation]

From the outset, it is clear that Escrivá is not writing for the weaker vessel, as the members of the priesthood used to designate women in the past, in this case young women, and certainly not for labourers or waiters, but for students and young professionals. His approach is that of a teacher to a disciple, a priest to a penitent or a father to some idealized and archetypal son. The instructions, advice and admonitions he dispenses produce a kind of boy scout atmosphere. One sees the eternal boy scout, a variation on the eternal adolescent. Often Escrivá, in his informal father-to-son comments, is actually speaking to the eternal adolescent in himself. Young men were a favourite target of his apostolic zeal. See for instance Note 125, which I shall quote in extenso:

125 I would love to have, you told me, a heart to heart talk with John, the young apostle, who would give me advice and help me become pure of heart.

If you really want to, tell him and he will encourage you with his advice.

Now that is encouraging to the *n*th degree. Because of some idiosyncrasy that is not unambiguous and would have been of considerable interest to Freud, the author refers again to John, the young apostle, in Note 430. Without any exegetical basis, he gushes that John was young, unmarried, a virgin, an apostle and every young man and young boy must remain pure. And to do so he must avoid "even the appearance of a special friendship", as recommended in Note 366.

At high school, we were never allowed to be alone or with only one other fellow student at recess. We had to be three. Of course, three is a minimum for a decent orgy! The young disciple's obedience must be absolute and unquestioning. He is merely a tool, a passive instrument. We are reminded of Ignatius of Loyola's famous words "perinde ac cadaver", ordering his followers to obey like a corpse. Escrivá must have tried very hard not to quote the founder of the Jesuit Order, an order he detested but whose precepts must have been a source of frequent inspiration. Obedience à la Balaguer forbids any criticism, not only of the magisterism but of any superior, and especially of the "priest", that infallible, untouchable, omnipotent and absolutely venerable personage. The following is particularly edifying:

"72 Never make the priest lose his gravity. It is a virtue he must possess, though without stiffness."

[Senator Le Moyné.]

"74 To love God and not venerate the priest... impossible!"

"75 Like Noah's good sons, spread the mantle of charity over the faults you see in your father, the priest."

By the way, the story was that Noah was as drunk as a lord. In any case, notwithstanding vehement denials by the members of Opus Dei, their clerical bias is obvious: the priest is in a position of authority, and the laity must obey. (I may refer you to the outrageous "Constitutions" of Opus Dei, secret but not so secret, and especially the fourth part which contains rules for the women members, and we see that the priests keep a very close eye on their beloved daughters.) We have been through all that. We heard it all in days gone by, a time that Opus Dei wants to bring back. I wonder if those who remember what happened under the French Restoration would care to reflect on what it would be like if we turned the clock back! We have not necessarily put an end to the degradation of slavery.

Honourable senators, I thought it was funny, but I changed my mind when I happened to read Note 911, which I shall quote to you:

"911 You write: "The ardent desire we all have to see that thing" work and develop is starting to turn to impatience. When will the "thing" explode? ... When will the world be ours?"

"And you add: "Our desire will not be useless if we use it to put pressure on our Lord: we "will have gained valuable time."

You heard it: forcing God's hand; the desire to see this thing work, to see it explode, to see the world belong at last to the members of Opus Dei, just like the Nazis wanted to conquer the world. The holy man of Opus Dei appears to us here as a totalitarian fanatic. Under the cross of Christ or the swastika, slavery is still slavery. When I first read Note 911, I could hear terrifying echos from the past:

Ein Volk!

Ein Reich!

Ein Führer!

How do we go about conquering the world for its own good and salvation? See the answer in No. 914 of the "Way":

"914 How sad it is to see all those masses—at all levels of society—who are deprived of ideals!—They no longer seem to have a soul; they are just a mass, a horde, a herd of people ... "Jesus! with the help of your merciful love we will turn the masses into cohorts, the hordes into armies ... "and we will separate from the herd, purify those who have had enough of degradation."

So there you have—in all its sickly style replete with hysterical hesitations—the charter of integral pharisaism!

"Free Sprachen? Stunk." "Liberty? Stunk", said Chaplin in The Great Dictator. Escrivá adds: "Equality? Stunk." Am I exaggerating? Listen to this note:

"46 Do you not believe that equality, as it is understood, is synonymous with injustice?"

Now then, how will power be exercised? No. 387 provides the answer:

"387 The plan of holiness which the Lord expects from us features these three points:

"Holy intransigence, holy coercion, holy effrontery."

No. 394 drives the totalitarian nail a bit deeper:

"394 Compromising is a sure sign that one does not possess truth."

Here in Canada, not so very long ago, did we not hear about this incredible thing, "the peaceful possession of truth"? We had been to the right school, had we not? Did Opus Dei proponents forget that? No way!

Here now are notes 398 and 399, and hang on:

"398 Intransigence is more than mere intransigence, it is "holy intransigence".

Let us not forget that there is "holy coercion" as well.

I continue the quotation:

"399 If we resort to force to prevent a man from committing suicide, thus saving a life and earning general plaudits, why should we hesitate to use the same coercion—holy coercion—to save the Life (capital L) of those who are bent on stupidly killing their own soul?"

● (1440)

[English]

Holy intransigence! Holy coercion! Honourable senators, what have we just heard if not a nostalgic recall of the Holy Spanish Inquisition? In 1932, aged 19, in a Catholic college of Montreal, in terms very close to those used by that excellent candidate for the sainthood, Escrivá de Balaguer, I listened horrified to a justification of the rack and the stake; that is, holy coercion. It is for our own good, and let us roast happily! But, again, do you imagine that the Opusdeists are not aware of such revolting utterances and of the dormant seeds they represent?

Back to The Way, or way back again, for three last notes. Women will be overwhelmed by them, so tightly packed are they with originality and so crushingly loaded with doctrine. Here they are, notes 26, 27 and 28 translated literally by your unhappy servant and quoted in their entirety:

26 Marriage is a sacrament, something holy. When you will come to think of receiving it, ask your director or confessor to recommend some appropriate book. So you shall be better prepared to take upon yourself the duties of a husband.

Honourable senators, it is that simple. Had I known that before, I would have read one book. Note 27 reads:

27 You laugh because I am telling you that you have "the vocation of marriage"? Well, you have it. And it is truly a call. Put yourself under the protection of Saint Raphaël, who will lead you, in chastity, to the end of the way, just like he acted as a guide for Tobias.

Now for the boner, which will stick forever to Escrivá's memory and which, as you can see, I am not quoting out of context, as so many adversaries of Opus Dei dare to do:

28 Marriage is for the privates and not for the general staff of Christ. Whereas food is a necessity for the individual, procreation is merely a necessity for the species, individuals being free to abstain.

Craving for paternity? . . . If we sacrifice the egoism of the flesh, we shall have children, many children, and leave a permanent wake of light.

This, honourable senators, was a double lulu. I would not like to read it aloud in some slums of Mexico City or in a favella of Rio.

[Translation]

A number of years later, trying to cover his sexist and clerical blunder before a newswoman, Escrivá flounders through a quagmire of clichés on the role of women in contemporary society and worsens his own case in a way which no woman can fail to appreciate. My quotation is taken from answer 87—always going by the numbers—page 154 of Conversations with Monsignor Escrivá de Balaguer:

"Development, maturity, emancipation of women, all this cannot be interpreted as a claim to equality—to uniformity—with respect to men, an imitation of masculine behaviour. This would not be tantamount to success but rather a backward step for women: not because they are more or less valuable than men, but because they are different."

Enough is enough. File documents have gradually covered my desk like weeds which grow right back after hoeing. I express one wish before concluding: alerted by our debate and overcoming their distaste before such revolting sexism, complete with service stairs and separate quarters for the convenience of the devoted distaff servants of Opus Dei gentlemen priests and big wheels, may numerous women examine the Opus from their irreplaceable vantage point. No thought nor deed can be perfectly human if women are not equally involved. This is a long-standing personal conviction which I expressed many times, particularly during Cardinal Léger's pre-Council consultations, when I strongly advocated that Mothers of the Council sit with Fathers of the Council. Well, I am sure that such an aberration as Opus Dei cannot last very long under truly adult and truly contemporary feminine scrutiny. We, men, are not really able to remove ourselves far enough from the issue to strike lethal blows.

[English]

Honourable senators, dealing with Opus Dei will remain the most hateful task I have ever undertaken since I was called to the Senate. I have been fighting the same essential obscurantism, the same spirit of regression, the same dualistic mentality for more than 40 years. And now I am sick at heart and sick at soul. I am glad that it is over for me, at least temporarily. Getting back to my neglected but bravely flowering garden, after such a long sojourn in a waste land of platitudes and falsity, will be a purification and the renewal of spring now turning into summer. There is no spring in the domain of a Balaguer, just repetition and regression. How finally can we explain the astounding progress of Opus Dei or the dazzling glitz of Oral Roberts and company? We must obviously go beyond the philosophy of the sagacious Mr. Barnum. Maybe honourable senators will find a useful hint in my parting words.

Years ago, in the country, I was attending Sunday Mass with a friend, on the porch in the company of other reluctant faithful, all men, ready to bolt for a smoke at the first inkling of a boring sermon. Nobody did anything of the kind that Sunday. When the priest, a rather unattractive but witty and truly spiritual fellow, whom we used to call "Potato" because of his bulbous nose, announced that he would speak on the theme of false prophecy, my friend gave me a nudge, whispering, "I'll be waiting for him, now." But we did not wait long, for almost immediately he had us transfixed forever with the following words:

"My dear brethren," said the Reverend Potato, "false prophecy has not much to do with loonies orating from soap boxes in Hyde Park. False prophecy is just this: the temptation of mediocrity."

On motion of Senator Corbin, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

MOTION TO REFER REPORT ON FILM ENTITLED: "THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS" BACK TO SOCIAL AFFAIRS, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Marshall calling the attention of the Senate to the motion adopted by the Senate on May 28, 1986, and passed by a vote of 28 for and 17 against, that the Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Social Affairs, Science and Technology entitled: Production and Distribution of the National Film Board Production "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss", tabled in the Senate on 15th April, 1986, be referred back to the Committee with instructions to consider and report upon the following:

Strike out page 20 and substitute

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That after the titles of the film, the following disclaimer be added: "This film is a docu-drama and combines elements of both reality and fiction. It does not pretend to be an even-handed or chronological biography of Billy Bishop."

Although a Walter Bourne did serve as Bishop's mechanic, the film director has used this character to express his own doubts and reservations about Bishop's exploits. There is no evidence that these were shared by the real Walter Bourne."

2. That the National Film Board be requested to take action to eliminate from the film the unproven allegations, charges and innuendoes against the integrity of Billy Bishop; and further, that consideration be given to the apparent disregard by National Film Board officials to their commitments to the Senate Sub-committee on Veterans Affairs arising out of evidence before the Sub-committee.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, before I continue with my third phase of the Billy Bishop affair, I want to say first of all that I will not be able to finish today. I do not want to keep honourable senators too long, but I will continue, and finish up with a motion on Thursday.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that today, June 2, is the 70th anniversary of the raid of Billy Bishop. It was brought to my attention that on this morning's CBO morning program, Bob Johnstone, who has a program "Today in History" each morning, used Billy Bishop as his topic. Honourable senators, I would like to put the text of that broadcast on the record.

Billy Bishop was the son of the Court Registrar in Owen Sound, Ontario, and that was a bit of a big deal in those days around the turn of the century. When young Bishop didn't show any inclination to go into law or to work very hard at anything, the old man was delighted to enroll him at the Royal Military College in Kingston with a view to him becoming an army officer. That was a big deal in those days, too.

Bishop was supposed to be a cavalryman but when the war started in 1914, he soon got tired of the mud and the horse manure and he asked to be made a flier. The army figured that if anyone was dumb enough to want to go up in one of those machines, he was welcome to do it.

Bishop was not a good flier, in fact he was almost taken off the job—but he was an excellent gunner. He had the instinct; he knew just where to shoot where the other plane was, or better still, where it would be by the time his bullets reached it. Everything about Bishop's career as an air ace was incredible and it still looks made up. He shot down twenty-one enemy planes within a couple of months of getting started. Most pilots spent years without doing that.

One day before the Canadians captured Vimy Ridge and changed the whole war, Bishop shot down three enemy planes over Vimy. For that one day, he was awarded the Military Cross.

Honourable senators, I intend to skip over some of the conversation between Bishop and the top British ace, Albert Ball. The text of the broadcast then continues:

In May of 1917, Ball suggested to Bishop that the two of them try something that no-one had ever done—attack an enemy airfield while the planes were still on the ground. That way, if they were lucky, they could get a half dozen planes instead of waiting until they were in the air and shooting them down one at a time. Bishop said he would think about it. But before he could talk to Ball again, Ball was killed.

So in the early morning of the 2nd of June 1917, soon after three o'clock, Bishop took off alone and headed for the nearest German airfield. It was fogged in, so he went looking for another. He wasn't even sure which one he had found but he found one with eight planes warming up. He destroyed seven of them, either on the ground or as they took to the air.

When the war was over a year-and-a-half later, Bishop had destroyed, altogether, seventy-two German planes. It seemed incredible at the time—and it still does.

Recently, the National Film Board turned out a movie called "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". It questions whether or not Bishop was really as good as the records say. Have no doubts—he was! That is what super heroism is all about—doing things that the other guys can't even think of.

Honourable senators, apart from the fact that I am recording the story, it is interesting to note that Billy Bishop's name lives on, 70 years after, and is still referred to for the feats of heroism that he performed during the First World War.

Honourable senators, when I spoke in the Billy Bishop debate following the tabling of the report on April 17, 1986, I explained that my involvement in the exercise came about not particularly because of Billy Bishop himself as a war hero—and I have come to admire him more and more as the debate evolved—and since then as other developments occurred—but primarily because of my continuing involvement and interest in the well-being of all veterans of Canada.

I have tried, as I felt it my duty, to devote a good deal of time to ensuring that Canada fulfils its commitment to all of our veterans; each and every one of them, many of whom were awarded medals of bravery. Most veterans are aware of the commitment which was made in 1917 at the same Vimy Ridge by the then Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden. I will detail that commitment in a moment. As was also referred to in my address during the debate, my involvement in the exercise arose out of the efforts of, among others, Senator Molson, who set out to defend the record and the rights of a comrade whom he admired and with whom he served.

Coincidentally, when the Subcommittee on Veterans Affairs was established through the Social Affairs, Science and Technology Committee with the consent of the Senate, it provided a natural forum to consider the motion to examine and report on the activities of the National Film Board film, "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss". It not only provided a forum, honourable senators, it provided a subject which I feel is suited to our responsibility as senators, and that is to protect individual rights.

I previously referred to a commitment which was made by Sir Robert Borden, the Prime Minister of the day. That commitment, honourable senators, is worth while repeating again, despite its having been repeated many times over and over as the years progressed after 1917. Sir Robert Borden made this statement to the Canadian troops:

The government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and your courage is brought to the notice of your people at home . . . and it will always be our endeavour . . .

—meaning the government and the people of Canada—

. . . to so guide the attitude of public opinion that the country will support the government to prove to the returned men its just and due appreciation of the inestimable value of the services rendered to the country and empire . . . and that no man . . . whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders . . . will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken faith . . . with the men . . . who won . . . and the men who died.

Honourable senators, I ask the question: Do we now have just cause with this issue? It is worth while noting here that just a few weeks ago in April—"Bloody April" as it became known at the time—and at the same Vimy Ridge, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, representing the Government of Canada, uttered these words at the Seventieth Anniversary Commemorative Ceremony, with pride in his country, I am sure, and I quote his words:

On this ridge . . . on this day, a nation was forged by men from one coast of the country to the other.

Honourable senators, our nation was not only forged by those admirable soldiers who fought in the bloody battle of Vimy Ridge during that "Bloody April" with its heavy and unnecessary loss of life, which we deplore. Steward K. Taylor, historian of the World War I Flyers, gave evidence before the committee and revealed the startling statistic that the average battle lifespan of a pilot in France was three weeks. Honourable senators, just imagine—three weeks! Another question is appropriate here: Have we forgotten?

Incidentally, it is also a startling coincidence that exactly 70 years ago today, as was referred to in Bob Johnstone's broadcast, on June 2, 1917, Billy Bishop landed his tiny shot-up aircraft after having carried out his lone raid behind enemy lines.

While I am sure that Sir Robert Borden was also referring in his address to Canadian troops to the efforts and the courage of Canadian airmen like Billy Bishop, that commitment he made on behalf of the people of Canada and his government raises some very vital questions as to the apparent silence of successive governments, who have the power to correct what is, in the kindest words I can find, a serious error by a government agency in the carrying out of its responsibility, an error admitted even by the National Film Board Commissioner himself to the committee rather than decide to hide behind such flimsy excuses as "artistic licence" and "arm's length relationships" or "censorship."

Last Thursday, in addressing the second phase of my inquiry, I alluded to an expression, "T.V. docu-drama—a licence to lie." Let me elaborate to describe some analogies to the Billy

Bishop inquiry, and I refer to an article in Reader's Digest in April 1986, which is headed with these words:

When it comes to history as entertainment, the networks motivated by ratings competition—rarely let facts interfere with fiction.

The article is written by Victor Lasky, a U.S. columnist and author of many books on public figures, including John and Robert Kennedy.

Lasky begins as follows:

On the evening of 23 June 1983, I watched in horror as a television documentary . . . portrayed me back in 1951 as having falsely accused a college professor of being a Communist. Because of that accusation, the professor purportedly lost her job and attempted suicide.

Following my vigorous denials that I had ever made such an accusation, ABC-TV broadcast a "correction" that it had been unfair to me.

Unfortunately, Billy Bishop never had a chance to deny the NFB accusations.

That program, "The American Inquisition" led me to examine what television can do to the truth. I soon discovered that the docu-drama—documentary and drama depicting real people and events, but with dramatic licence—plays havoc with history. Dialogue, scenes, even characters often are invented.

Osborn Elliot, Dean of Columbia University's Graduate School of Journalism, asserts that docu-dramas confuse audiences with their blurring of reality and entertainment.

Syndicated columnist George F. Will, one of the most respected journalists in the U.S., describes docu-dramas simply as "a license to lie."

In another example described by the author, he refers to another film as follows:

After receiving protests from people who reviewed a film, CBS agreed to run a printed advisory at the beginning which stated: "The following presentation is not a documentary, but a drama based on certain facts: some events and characters are fictionalized for dramatic purposes."

Yet Cowan and Symansky refused to accept our disclaimer and wanted to insert their own, which, incidentally, is similar to this one. So, I wonder why they kept refusing to show the disclaimer when they showed the film.

Despite this disclaimer, criticism continued. In an editorial, the New York Times suggested that the time had come to retire this art form and asked: "Does no one in charge of television care enough about either news or fiction to halt this corruption?" One who does care is former CBS President Richard Salant. He believes viewers tend to confuse docu-drama with news, thus undermining the credibility of broadcast journalism.

We in this chamber showed that we care, but what the results of our efforts will be remain to be determined.

Salant, the article explains, is not entirely opposed to docu-dramas. He considers it unfair to single out one branch of the media, since literature, theatre and motion pictures have traditionally used the form. But I say that they didn't denigrate a hero for no reason whatsoever.

Salant went on to say however:

The networks should keep reminding viewers that they're seeing part fiction—but not to refuse with disdain what they promised as the NFB are doing.

Another comment by the Washington Post reads:

A docu-drama is as offensive to journalism as the word itself is to the English language.

The docu-drama is also characterized by a magazine as a "trashy romp" laced with unprovable innuendo and raucous caricatures of public figures.

The National Film Board should use this article as required reading.

Honourable senators, while describing short extracts to point out the feeling of the powerful U.S. communicators, and also to describe the ongoing interest raised in other U.S. areas of concern, I want to read excerpts from a letter which I received January last, a letter that shows the problem will not go away, from a professor of Rutgers University's Department of History in New Jersey, in which he requested a copy of the report and proceedings of the subcommittee, and which is an example of ongoing interest. He states:

I have been interested in attempts to manipulate history—and especially those cases in which such attempts have been resisted by persons unwilling to countenance the distortions.

My subject attempted to make his mark by taking advantage of fuzzy evidence and by creating plausible scenarios to fill existing gaps in documentation—in short, by making claims which he knew would be extraordinarily difficult, if not impossible, to disprove. He also carefully cast aspersions on the characters and contrary testimony of others, often by wrapping himself in the prestigious guise of a putatively impartial historian.

It seems to me that the controversy over "The Kid Who Couldn't Miss" has parallels to my work which are well worth pursuing.

Just as anthropologists study extant societies to draw inferences about preceding ones, so too must those of us working in unusual fields of historical inquiry often seek enlightenment from possibly analogous events in our own time. It has not been easy to find such a model for my subject's pretensions but this controversy may prove to be an exceptionally useful one.

I am keeping in touch with this professor, honourable senators, and I hope to learn more. I will continue with the debate at the next sitting of the Senate.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

CANADA'S INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS
DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., calling the attention of the Senate to Canada's international relations.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator MacEachen speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on this inquiry.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, in rising on this order today, my purpose is to conclude the debate, if there are no other participants, so that this item can be cleared away. I also wish to reiterate a number of points which I made in my original speech on the subject of Canada-U.S. relations on April 8, and to make one or two comments with respect to the speech given in the Senate by Senator Doyle on May 27, 1987. In his comments he referred to my agitated presentation with such words as "getting steamed up", "flailing away" and "elevated blood pressure". I will attempt to be utterly cool and placid on this occasion—

Senator Doody: A statesman!

Senator MacEachen: —so that I will not deserve such pejorative comments.

Senator Doyle reminded us that there is purpose and process in this government's relationship with the United States. He went on to add that "no government before has concentrated such attention on purpose and process." I will not deal with that point. What I had been dealing with in my speech is what had been the result of all this "purpose and process." Of course, either inadvertently or studiously, Senator Doyle avoided that area of Canada-U.S. relations.

The main contention of my intervention, supported by many examples, is that generally the result of all of this "purpose and process" has been bad for Canada and good for the United States. In fact, I stated quite boldly that "the United States has not yielded to Canadian demands in major areas of concern. In the meantime, Canada has made major concessions in energy, investment and trade." I was hoping that a spokesman on the government side would take issue and controvert that assertion.

I called attention to the trade irritants which were to be dealt with following the Quebec Summit. I asked for information about those; none has been forthcoming. I raised the question of acid rain—more research, no remedies; the renewal of NORAD with no ABM clause; shakes and shingles; softwood lumber; the National Energy Program; the Foreign Investment Review Agency; our cultural industries, and the pharmaceutical bill. Even since I made my list of disturbing developments, the situation has become even worse with the recent American decision on Canadian gas, and subsidized American wheat sales to our traditional customers.

Senator Doyle did avoid all current questions, except my reference to the extravagant Washington summit—the spectacular dinner, and the glossy brochure published at government expense. But I would say to Senator Doyle that if he is to deal with the complexities of international affairs, he should learn to be accurate. I never beatified Italian cuisine to the point of attributing to it the creation of "Angel Pasta". I did speak of the famous "Angel Hair Pasta" dinner, and I did so for a good reason. Senator Doyle stressed that there is purpose to and there is process in the government's relations with the United States. I leave it to others, certainly not to me, to determine what purpose was being served and what process was at work on this fatuous occasion, immortalized in a no less fatuous and extravagant publication.

Honourable senators, my purpose was to draw attention to the urgency of the substantive issues in our relationship. Even if Senator Doyle had succeeded in demolishing my comments about the Washington extravaganza, I would not be disheartened, because it really was a somewhat marginal comment and ought to be regarded as such. But there was absolutely no effort to deal with the current state of our bilateral relations and the apparent inability of the government to advance in a satisfactory way so many of these issues to a satisfactory conclusion.

I was interested that the senator, in his comments, praised the present government for having made 14 ministerial statements in the House of Commons in the last two and a half years in comparison to none having been given by the preceding government in a period of four years. Senator Doyle had, I think, chided me for not learning from the lessons of history, but he might have examined the reason why the former government had virtually ceased making statements on motions. And there was a reason. It was because the opposition, on one occasion after the other, abused the process by turning the opportunities provided for serious comment on foreign affairs into political and personal attacks. That is why the practice stopped.

If any senator is interested, he could refer to a number of occasions when, for example, the Prime Minister of the day made serious statements on foreign policy only to be castigated in a personal and political way. On one occasion, when he had returned to Canada after his visits to various European capitals, the Leader of the Opposition characterized his foreign policy explanations as a "bag of fog." That was the atmosphere that prevailed in the House of Commons. Today is not the first time, honourable senators, that I have referred to this particular matter which Senator Doyle has raised in his speech.

In an address which I gave on April 30, 1984, to the Canadian Institute of International Affairs and the Canadian Study of Parliament Group I dealt with the matter of statements on motions in the House of Commons, and the fact that the practice had virtually vanished because of the partisanship that prevailed in what should have been a reasonably bipartisan discussion of foreign policy, to the extent that the Prime Minister and the foreign minister had ceased making the statements. That was made clear in the House of Commons at the time. Now the practice has been revived, and if it is now possible—and I welcome the development—for the minister and the Prime Minister to make statements on motions, it is presumably because the opposition parties are now dealing with these statements in a more serious way, and they have not developed to the point where they have become so partisan that they lost their value in a discussion of foreign policy. I just make that historical comment in approving the fact that these statements are now being made in an atmosphere that makes possible informed comment and constructive debate.

● (1520)

Honourable senators, I referred to a statement made by Ambassador Lewis in 1984, which was also referred to by Senator Doyle. I believe Senator Doyle misunderstood the purpose of my comment, because he committed what I considered to be a glaring non sequitur in referring to my interpretation of Ambassador Lewis' statement. I had been arguing from the very beginning that the Canadian government had started out on the wrong course in its dealings with the United States. In my first statement in the Senate on foreign policy more than two years ago I argued that at that time Canada was taking the wrong approach in its relations with the United States. I believe that my assertion has been proved by what we have seen up to the present time.

The reason I quoted Ambassador Lewis was because he agreed with my analysis in comments which he made prior to his appointment as Ambassador to the United Nations; an ambassador whom Senator Doyle described as forthright, even-handed and confidence winning. What better source to draw upon than Ambassador Lewis, who possesses those characteristics much appreciated by the Conservative Party, in order to prove my assertion that the course was wrong from the very beginning?

What Ambassador Lewis said in Maclean's magazine following the Prime Minister's visit to Washington in September 1984 is worth repeating, because it does support my argument. He said:

Our new fetish for America is flawed. More fundamental, perhaps, it's wrongheaded. What we're really doing... is cementing a partnership of deference. And there's no mystery about who will defer to whom.

I used that expression because I thought it described the situation quite accurately, and it must appeal to Senator Doyle since it came from such a forthright, even-handed and confidence winning individual.

Honourable senators, I will conclude by referring again to what I thought was a very important point in my original statement which was picked up by Senator Doyle. It has to do with the benefit of the doubt. I have argued that in any controversy between Canada and the United States, between Canada and the United Kingdom, or between Canada and France, it is the obligation, if not the sworn duty, of ministers of the Canadian government to give Canada the benefit of the doubt. It is my contention that there is no place to give another country the benefit of the doubt when Canadian interests are at stake. The Prime Minister had made the comment himself, and later it was surprising, in my view, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made this principle so explicit in a speech he made in San Francisco on March 20 of this year. Mr. Clark made the following statement, which I still find astonishing:

Just so there is no danger of my being misunderstood, let me remind you that one of the principal criticisms, in Canada, of our government is that we are too friendly with the United States. Before his election as Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney said that his attitude, in a controversy, would be to give the United States the benefit of the doubt. That... has been our practice as a government, and it will continue to be.

Has the government thought about what it means by "controversy"? Presumably, we are having not only a single controversy but a multiplicity of controversies with the United States in the trade negotiations. In the controversy on the trade remedy laws, when there is a stalemate, does the Canadian negotiator say, "Yes, it is Canadian policy to give the United States the benefit of the doubt"? Honourable senators, I could go on down the list.

I also find it interesting that Senator Doyle picked that up and asked the question:

Would it be some kind of confession, in these circumstances, to express the hope that all our partners on this planet would not consider it a weakness to give us the benefit of the doubt when we advocate a position or enlist in a cause?

He asks if it would be some kind of confession to express the hope that our partners would give Canada the benefit of the doubt in any controversy, presumably, when we advocate a position or enlist in a cause. I did not want to say myself: What kind of confession would it be to ask that question? I think it would be a confession of naivety in international relations to ask the question, but I expect that Senator Doyle is a sophisticated individual, and certainly he would not ask a question that would exhibit naivety.

I thought that President Mitterrand answered that question quite eloquently when he met the citizens of Saint Pierre and Miquelon after he completed his visit to Canada. Presumably, he had cordial discussions about Canada-France relations, the strong bonds between our two countries, fisheries and boundaries, and left in an aura of goodwill. But when he was confronted by the citizens of France, and when their interests and, in consequence, the interests of France were at stake, he had no difficulty in answering Senator Doyle's question. He exploded any naive hope that one might have about his reaction by saying clearly that the Canadian position on fisheries was unacceptable and unjust.

● (1530)

Senator Frith: That is hardly the benefit of the doubt.

Senator MacEachen: He was also reported to have said that no negotiations would be resumed until the Canadian ports were opened to the vessels of Saint Pierre and Miquelon. I understand that Mr. Clark said yesterday that that was not the French position. Here was the President of France clearly stating French interests, not giving Canada the benefit of the doubt when we advocate a position or enlist in the cause. Presumably, we advocated the Canadian position with him on the fisheries and on the boundaries, and he said, in effect, "No, I am not here to give you the benefit of the doubt. I am here to give the citizens of France the benefit of the doubt. I am the President of France." I am sure he would say, if he were asked to do otherwise, that it would be tantamount to asking him to be stupid, to be weak, and to betray the interests of France. I think that is how the French have earned a reputation for being hard-headed in international affairs—their interests come first, and they do not give the benefit of the doubt.

I cannot understand why the Canadian Prime Minister, the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs and now Senator Doyle—perhaps by inadvertence, or perhaps I misread him—should now say that Canada, which is ten times smaller than the United States, should give, in a controversy, the benefit of the doubt to this superpower. Honourable senators, I did not intend to raise that point again, but I was tempted to do so by Senator Doyle's references to it. I disagree fundamentally with giving the benefit of the doubt to any country in our international negotiations. Our job is to give Canada the benefit of the doubt. I can only assume that the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have not thought this through, and that Senator Doyle said what he did more out of amiable fraternity with his political colleagues than any hard-headed assessment of Canadian interests.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: If no other senator wishes to speak, this inquiry is considered debated.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

REPORT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE ON EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE ESTIMATES ADOPTED

On the Order:

Consideration of the Sixth Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs (1987-88 Estimates for External Affairs and National Defence Departments), presented in the Senate on 27th May, 1987.—(Honourable Senator van Roggen).

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, I move the adoption of this report.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION TO REFER FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition), pursuant to notice of Wednesday, May 27, 1987, moved:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

He said: Honourable senators, it was not my expectation to take advantage of your indulgence by speaking twice today, but the order paper so demands. I have moved that the Meech Lake accord, the terms of which are already available to us, and any subsequent constitutional texts that are agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for examination and report. I want to make comments in answer to two questions that will undoubtedly arise: First, why a committee? And second, why a Committee of the Whole? It may not be necessary to argue before this body the need for a detailed examination of the terms of the Meech Lake accord and the need for a better understanding of the impact of this accord upon Canada and its provinces if it becomes part of our fundamental law.

In the last week we have already seen that the examination has become more intensified outside Parliament. It is interesting and relevant that the former Prime Minister entered the debate after a silence of two and a half years on the constitutional question, that Senator Murray, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, made an extended reply on Saturday in the Globe and Mail, and that at the same time Mr. Claude Ryan also made an extended reply in La Presse. Those are only a few instances of the examination that is now going on in the country. I think it is deserved and justified. It would be entirely appropriate for a body such as the Senate to take hold of the subject matter and to examine it, to hear witnesses expressing all points of view, and then to make a report.

I understand from statements made by Premier Peterson today that he is in favour of a more extended public examination of the Meech Lake accord than had previously been anticipated. Indeed, it is suggested, possibly not by the Premier himself but by others, that it will not be possible to dispose of an inquiry in the province of Ontario and pass the necessary legislation until some time in the fall. Indeed, it has been suggested that this resolution will not be dealt with in Ontario until after the next election. I am not attributing these comments to the Premier at all, but he certainly did suggest that he was open to an extended public examination.

In my own province, the legislature has adjourned and normally would meet in the fall; and it may be that the legislature of Nova Scotia will not deal with the Meech Lake resolution—indeed, if there is a resolution—until after several months have passed.

● (1540)

I understand that in Manitoba there is an established method by which a constitutional amendment will be given public scrutiny. So we are not stepping out of line with the prevailing mood, and we are not in any way delaying—nor could we be accused of delaying—this process if we examine the accord and the text over a period of time, possibly an extended period. But that will be determined by the Senate.

Honourable senators, may I say a word about why the Committee of the Whole? I know that when it was first suggested that we examine the fisheries and boundaries treaty in Committee of the Whole, there was a certain natural resistance and reluctance. Various members of the house will have their own interpretation, but, as a beginning of a new process, it was my opinion, and it still is, that the examination of the fisheries and boundaries agreement between France and Canada proceeded rather well. There are certain improvements and refinements that could be made, but, in general, the examination in Committee of the Whole did not detract from the dignity of the chamber or the decorum of our proceedings. From the point of view of efficiency, it was possible to hear the witnesses and interrogate them in a reasonably speedy and thorough manner. That is my impression of the Committee of the Whole. It may not be shared, but I advance it as one reason why in this case I think it would be the appropriate body.

The question will be asked, "Why not participate in a joint committee with the House of Commons?" I want to deal with that from two points of view. The most recent joint committee that I looked at had to do with international relations. It was a joint committee composed of, I believe, 19 members in total, five of whom came from the Senate. Three were from the opposition and two from the government side. In the joint committee which examined the Constitution in 1982 a larger number of senators participated than did so on the committee dealing with international affairs, but clearly the majority was made up of members of the House of Commons.

At best, in a joint committee only a percentage of senators could participate in an examination of the Meech Lake accord. In Committee of the Whole any senator can participate fully in the normal way as a matter of right. He can ask questions and be heard with exactly the same right as any other member of the Committee of the Whole.

It is true that any honourable senator can go to a standing committee and be heard, but, as I understand it, he does not have the same status as a regular member of the committee. So, a hearing in Committee of the Whole has the distinct advantage in that it provides for very wide participation. Remember, honourable senators, that when we had the inquiry—which has not yet been completed—on fisheries and boundaries, the attendance was quite considerable, and the participation was considerable. We certainly had quite a number of senators in attendance even at the lowest point. I put that forward as a consideration.

There is another reason, honourable senators, why we might consider our own separate inquiry. In this particular instance our constitutional position is different from that of the House of Commons, because the Senate, with respect to a constitutional amendment, is operating under a suspensive veto. We do not operate under a suspensive veto in the examination of a bill. The provisions governing the role of the Senate in dealing with a constitutional amendment are different from those applicable to the House of Commons, and might suggest that the Senate should proceed separately and apart from the House of Commons and be in total control of its own business and activities, and should not become a subordinate party in a joint committee when the constitutional positions of the houses are different.

I will also make a final point, one which may not appeal to all. I am firmly of the view that in the controlled situation that would be provided by an examination in Committee of the Whole, it would be an appropriate time to bring the television cameras into the Senate. It would not be television for the Question Period or for all of our activities, but it would be to provide the country with an opportunity to hear from this chamber evidence from witnesses on various sides of the question, and to hear the views of senators from all parts of the country.

I think it would be a fair way of examining the applicability of television coverage and, I believe, would have the useful by-product of letting the country know that the Senate is a body that can speak, act and reason. It could help to change the image of the Senate, which is so frequently projected as a body that is incapable of acting and is generally in a state of lethargy. It would be a good occasion to show the country that that is not the Senate, that there are persons sitting in the Senate from every part of Canada, from every province, who are making a contribution, and who could make a greater contribution if the Senate, through a changing political consensus, were permitted to do so.

There is a desire on the part of honourable senators to do more, to contribute more to the country, but it appears that every time a step is taken out of the traditional mode, a hand of reproach is raised to suggest that the Senate really has no right to act or speak at all.

I hope that at least on this occasion we might consider letting the country take a look at the Senate in action. I believe it would contribute to public enlightenment, and it would contribute positively to the image of the Senate. This is one of the advantages of televising the proceedings on this question in Committee of the Whole. But for the moment, I merely raise the point. I may follow it up later.

● (1550)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Phillips: I listened to the honourable senator's remarks with great interest. I would like to ask for some clarification on his reference to a joint committee. Did I understand the honourable senator correctly in that he has now ruled out the possibility of his party joining a joint committee to study the Meech Lake accord?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, we have not been presented with a resolution from the other place to participate in a joint committee. I suppose that at that point we will make the decision. However, I noticed that Senator Murray stated that a decision as to whether there ought to be a joint committee or a separate study by each house had not yet been taken. Since the matter was open in his mind and in the mind of the government, it seemed to me to be appropriate to take advantage of that openness and to move to have a separate study by the Senate. Certainly that would be my preferred position; for the Senate to conduct its study for the reasons I have stated, and for the House to conduct its own study. As the honourable senator knows, I am not hostile to the House of Commons, but I think that the situation argues for a separate study, if only to give the Senate an opportunity to run its own operation and to promote the wide participation a Senate study could give, especially if it is conducted in Committee of the Whole. Those are my thoughts. I presume the government will take note of what is happening here in making up its mind with respect to a joint committee.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I note that the honourable senator favours a separate study in each of the two houses. I agree that no decision has been taken, but let me rephrase my question. I am asking this question in an attempt to prevent this motion from precluding the possibility of a committee such as the Special Committee on Bill C-22, which deals with amendments to the Patent Act, going across Canada to get the views of people. I am wondering whether this motion precludes the possibility of a joint committee travelling across Canada.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, if travel is the objective, one does not need to have a joint committee to travel. Each house can travel on its own. I am arguing the case for a separate study by the Senate on this particular constitutional amendment. Someone might then ask whether I would oppose a joint committee. I have not been presented with a resolution, and I would hope that if we adopted this motion we would not be asked to participate in a joint committee.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable senator for his reply. May I direct to him another question which, as he knows, is very dear to my heart. What happens to the various Senate standing committees that are meeting while the Senate is in Committee of the Whole? Do they meet at the same time?

Senator MacEachen: Come on.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I rather doubt that I will be participating in this debate, but I suspect that my leader will want to participate. Therefore, I move the adjournment of the debate in his name.

On motion of Senator Phillips, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE RIGHT HONOURABLE ERROL WALTON BARROW PRIME MINISTER OF BARBADOS

TRIBUTES

Hon. Anne C. Cools: Honourable senators, I should like to direct your minds to that recent tragedy, the untimely death of the Right Honourable Errol Walton Barrow, the late Prime Minister of Barbados.

As you know, I was born in Barbados. I feel strong kith and kin attachments to that society. It is a society which has a colonial background, born of slavery and sugar plantations. It was an especially unique colonial society in that it was founded by royalists in 1625. From 1639 on it had its own Parliament which has sat undisturbed for a few centuries.

I should like to convey to the immediate family of Mr. Barrow, his sister Dame Nita Barrow, who is the Barbados Ambassador to the U.N., members of the Legislature of Barbados, the High Commissioner to Canada, His Excellency Peter Morgan, who is with us today in the gallery, and, most important of all, the peoples of Barbados, my warmest and my most heartfelt sympathy.

The Right Honourable Errol Barrow was educated at a school in Barbados which some may recognize, Harrison's College. Mr. Barrow was what would be described in Barbados as an "island scholar," that is to say, he was a student of exceptional quality. He went to England to study economics. As a matter of fact, he had the distinction of having studied with Pierre Elliott Trudeau at the London School of Economics. In addition, he was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1949.

For those of us in this chamber who have served in the Canadian Forces, I should like to mention that Mr. Barrow was a member of the Royal Air Force and spent some time training in Canada. In regard to his political career, I should like to remind honourable senators that Mr. Barrow was elected in 1951. At that time he would have been called a "member of Colonial Parliament (M.C.P.)." As an aside for the benefit of senators here who have spent time in Barbados working on the various parliamentary associations, I should like to point out that in 1951 Mr. Barrow was the junior Member of Colonial Parliament (M.C.P.) while my uncle, the Honourable Frederik Edward Miller—the father of the Honourable Senator Billie Miller—was the senior member.

Honourable senators, my childhood was somewhat different from that of many others in this chamber in that a distinctive element in my childhood was the fact that I grew up in an era of decolonization. When I was a little girl, the concept "universal manhood suffrage" was an important and formative one. It was a term which forged my own personal experience, as it forged a society and created a new level of voters and new governments.

Mr. Barrow's passing away marks the end of an era when a particular kind and a particular quality of personality blossomed in the British West Indies. A cluster of men who are undoubtedly familiar to you were produced by that colonial society. They include Sir Grantley Adams, Mr. Michael Manley, Sir Alexander Busta-Mante and Sir Eric Williams. They represented an era. If I were to describe those men, I would have to say that they were men who travelled with Dante into the workings of the human psyche, both good and evil—they were men who were driven by a strong sense of democratic freedom and democratic expression as exemplified by a parliamentary system. They challenged old social orders and built new governments and new social orders from former colonies.

Politics is a very funny business, and those of us who are grappling right now with the constitutional amendment understand that it is business which can quickly bring participants to their knees. I would like to say in closing that Mr. Barrow was one of those persons who, as an intellectual, as an amateur cook, as a craftsman of the political process, exemplified and represented a notion articulated by Niebuhr as "Man's nature is good enough to make democracy possible, but bad enough to make democracy necessary." I think that the notion of democracy and the belief in the system are the reasons for our involvement in politics, and why Mr. Barrow served as a Prime Minister who led a colonial country into its independence. That is why we do the work that we do. I invite all honourable senators to join with me in expressing what, to me, is a personal, very personal loss, as it is for the peoples of Barbados.

Hon. Heath Macquarrie: Honourable senators, I follow the eloquent remarks of our colleague, Senator Cools, who has expressed with great sensitivity and tremendous feeling the regard which I am sure we all have for a distinguished, powerful and important statesman of the Commonwealth. Many of us here have a special feeling of fondness for that great institution, the Commonwealth, and some of us have refined that interest and appreciation even further by looking with special affection upon the group of nations which we call the Commonwealth Caribbean.

I have followed the career of the late Prime Minister Errol Barrow with interest. I met him a good many years ago. I have admired his leadership and his courage—his intellectual as well as physical courage. He was a fine military man and an outstanding statesman who, in the old scriptural expression, did not follow every wind of doctrine. He was a man of independence. As one who did not belong to the Commonwealth Caribbean, I admired always his belief in the hope that a stronger, more closely integrated Commonwealth Caribbean could and should be developed. I admired, too, the simplicity with which he chose to live, although he had walked with kings and had attained a very high position.

I suppose that some of us lay a special claim to Mr. Barrow because, as part of his military career as a distinguished airman, he spent a good deal of time in Prince Edward Island on the Summerside base, one known very well to my colleague, Senator Orville Phillips. We in Prince Edward Island feel that we have experienced a special loss in the departure of this distinguished statesman and broadminded internationalist. He was a fine administrator, and I think that Senator Cools has done the right and perceptive thing in placing him among a great quartet of Barbadian statesmen. I, on behalf of my party, join with her in extending our condolences to his family, to his sister, the distinguished Ambassador to the United Nations, and to all of those from Barbados who loved and admired him, especially my friend—and I am proud to call him my friend—the distinguished High Commissioner from Barbados to Canada, the Honourable Peter Morgan.

THE CONSTITUTION

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD TABLED

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, today, the Prime Minister of Canada tables in the House of Commons the text of the Accord approved early this morning by all First Ministers at their meeting on the Constitution. It is with great satisfaction and a tremendous sense of pride that I table this document before this chamber. Today, our country has again become an indivisible entity.

[English]

The principles embodied in the Meech Lake agreement have been transformed into constitutional language acceptable to all First Ministers. I am confident that it will also receive the firm and generous endorsement of Canadians.

[Translation]

As I did previously in this chamber, on May 5, I would like to stress the leadership shown by the Prime Minister in getting across his vision of Canada, as well as the statemanship and conviction of the provincial premiers.

All the First Ministers are to be commended for their hard work and determination. Despite the obstacles they encountered on their way, they persevered and achieved unanimity on an agreement which, I am convinced, will stand up to the test of time.

Today we have come to the end of a long and often arduous quest, which has dominated a large part of Canada's history in recent years. Today we welcome Quebec as a full partner in Confederation. Quebec's painful constitutional isolation is now a thing of the past.

We have also laid the foundations for our future together as a nation and as a people.

We have every reason to celebrate.

The long and complex negotiating process which brought the First Ministers to Meech Lake on April 30 this year and which was successfully concluded in Ottawa today, will have been instrumental in renewing and reinforcing the partnership between the federal government and the provinces.

The First Ministers met the challenge of Meech Lake and did an excellent job. We in this chamber will also be asked to do our share in the weeks to come.

Quebec now has the assurance that its legitimate aspirations are recognized and protected in the Constitution, as are those of Canada's other regions. Furthermore, both the process and the outcome of these talks have always accurately reflected the responsibilities and obligations of a national government.

[English]

Ours is a federal state in which the national government speaks firmly, but does not seek to submerge the voices of the provinces. The Government of Canada remains the guardian of the national interest, but not a taskmaster of uniformity. Our Confederation is a partnership whose members have worked and will continue to work together in a spirit of common cause.

Honourable senators, this is a time for healing. This Accord is a forceful declaration of nation-building. It acknowledges our past and shows confidence in our future. It represents the boldness of our political leadership, the diversity of our country, and the maturity of our people.

The June 3 Accord represents a touchstone in the life of a still young federation, out of which will grow a more tolerant, a more open and a more confident nation.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, the fact that what has been presented to us today is a document for constitutional change signed by the Prime Minister of Canada and all the premiers representing their provinces—and I underline “all,” because it includes Quebec—is a reason for celebration. I congratulate all the participants for the evident energy and devotion they have put into bringing about a document signed by all the provinces and by Canada. Certainly, I congratulate the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Honourable Lowell Murray, who played a large role in bringing about this event. He is entitled to share in the celebration of the fact that Quebec has signed the document.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: Honourable senators will not be surprised, if they have been attending sessions of the Senate since the original draft accord was made public, that many reservations have emerged as to the results or corollaries following from the signing of the agreement by Quebec. Those reservations have been expressed here through questions to Senator Murray, who has tried to find answers. But understandably, he also expected us to wait until we saw the actual agreement and the provisions of the constitutional text.

We have had less than an hour, though I did see a copy of the agreement before it was tabled in the Senate, to consider the textual form that is now before us. As far as amendment is concerned, I take it that the agreement will be presented to us in the form of a resolution.

In fact, the Accord specifically provides for this process. We find, too, that the signatories, or at least some of them, foresee a long and careful—perhaps I should put the adjectives in the other order—a careful and, if necessary, long study of this document, with full participation by the people of Canada, by the legislatures of the provinces and by the Parliament of Canada. If it takes time to do so, apparently the signatories are prepared to let it take that time. Premier Peterson has said that the signatories to this agreement are prepared to listen and to take advice. In fact, Premier Peterson has suggested that the process could take up to three years.

Senator Murray: Not quite.

Senator Frith: So, honourable senators, I repeat that we should, to borrow the word used by the Leader of the Government, rejoice that we have a document signed by all 11 First Ministers. We now have to get down to work and engage in the process that all the signatories apparently want to take place to study what it means for the country. Of course, we in this chamber have a particular responsibility to participate in the amending process. We already have before us a motion that the text and the agreement be referred to Committee of the Whole Senate for study, where each senator will have an opportunity to play an individual role in this very important process.

Honourable senators, I do hope that that motion will be brought to a vote soon so that we can get down to work and see the extent to which the reservations that any of us here had, or the reservations about the Accord that were made public otherwise, can be examined in the context of detailed evidence and study.

Honourable senators, I do not want to end on a negative note, so I will again congratulate the Leader of the Government in the Senate and congratulate all of the other participants on their efforts. However, I must say that on my first read-through the many reservations I had and still have have not been assuaged. So let us get to work and find out about that through our committee. Perhaps we can be convinced.

[The Hon. the Speaker.]

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Hon. B. Alasdair Graham: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It relates to a couple of written questions I placed on the order paper on February 3. As this happens to be the fourth anniversary in terms of months for these questions, I am wondering when I might expect some answers.

The first question I asked on February 3, honourable senators, concerns the LaPrade Fund. Among other things, I asked how much money is currently in the fund; whether spending for the fund is restricted to a particular area of Canada, and, if so, what are the boundaries of the area and how are such boundaries determined? As is the case with the other questions I asked, I do not think those questions should be too difficult to answer.

The other question I asked on February 3 concerns Enterprise Cape Breton. My question was:

Of the 511 offers of assistance made to industry by Enterprise Cape Breton as of October 7th, 1986, (i) how many of these offers have been accepted; (ii) what sums of money have been paid out to each individual enterprise; (iii) how many jobs are currently in place in each of such individual enterprises and (iv) what plants and how many jobs are now in place in Cape Breton as a result of the Cape Breton tax credit?

I know that Enterprise Cape Breton is very near and dear to the heart of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. I am wondering when we might anticipate answers to those questions, since they are now four months old.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I take some pride—which I believe is justified by the record—in the alacrity with which the government has brought in answers to most questions asked in this house. I must say that I am all the more dismayed to find that several of Senator Graham's questions have been hanging fire since early February. I thank him for drawing them again to my attention, and I will have inquiries made immediately and try to bring in replies to those questions.

THE CONSTITUTION

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—FRANCOPHONE MINORITIES OUTSIDE QUEBEC

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate, whom I refer to section 2, paragraph (2) of the Schedule to the Constitution amendment, which says:

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

Whereas paragraph (3) says:

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

Of course, paragraph (1)(b) alludes to the fact that the majority of French Canadians are concentrated in Quebec.

Here is my question: Why is it that the Government of Canada did not receive from the provinces the right to promote the French language within the federal jurisdiction and did not have that right included in the constitutional amendment?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, we intend to present the constitutional resolutions in this house and in the other place within a few days.

Then, you will have every opportunity, during debates and in committee, to talk about these issues, but not today.

Senator Corbin: Honourable senators, I think that up to now I have shown exemplary patience, if I dare say so myself, regarding the interpretation of these documents.

It seems to me, upon reading the document we now have and on which reviewing committees will work at a later date, it is quite obvious that the federal government does not intend to treat its French-speaking minority with the same generosity that Quebec will treat its French-speaking majority.

I could wait for a committee to study the matter, or wait for others to ask questions and provide answers, but I am not inclined to do so. I feel I waited long enough and that French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec have shown much patience. It seems to me that French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec should have answers right now, to be able to rejoice to the same degree as Quebecers.

However, up to that point, I do not think they can.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, what is quite obvious, to borrow my colleague's expression, is the fact that for the first time, in one of its interpretative clauses, our Constitution gives explicit recognition to the linguistic duality of our country and to the fact that Quebec constitutes a distinct society within Canada. Until now, that recognition had not been included in our Constitution and least of all in the Constitution Act, 1982.

I repeat that my colleague will have an opportunity, in committee and during the debate on the resolutions in this chamber, to consider and discuss these issues. I do not think Oral Question Period is the right time or place to try to interpret all the clauses of this resolution.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—TABLING OF RESOLUTIONS

Hon. Jean Bazin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. As a senator from Quebec, I, of course, want to stress the importance of the unanimous constitutional agreement reached today by all political leaders in this country.

My question concerns a mere technicality. According to the text of the Accord, the resolutions are to be tabled in the Senate and the House of Commons as soon as possible.

Have any commitments been made at the provincial level regarding the time factor or does the text speak for itself, and are we to understand that for each province there is a commitment to table the resolutions as soon as possible?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the commitment is the same for both the federal government and the provincial governments. They are all committed to tabling the text in their respective legislatures as soon as possible.

There are of course a number of provinces, including Nova Scotia, where the Legislative Assembly has already adjourned for the summer recess.

As far as Quebec is concerned, I have the impression they are going to proceed very shortly, since the Meech Lake accord has already been the subject of a very lively debate in one of the parliamentary committees.

As far as the federal government is concerned, we intend to proceed very shortly.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT

Hon. Azellus Denis: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate. If I understand correctly, that accord is to be approved as is by the Legislative Assemblies and Parliament. So there is no question of either those Assemblies or Parliament bringing in amendments. My question is this: Is it possible that a self-evident amendment and that would be made available to all provinces at the same time as Parliament, either by letter or otherwise, could be accepted by the First Ministers of Canada?

If I understand correctly, there is no question of changing even one word in that accord. There may be a committee, a hearing. But whatever the result of those hearings, it must be accepted without amendment anyway. That is the question I am putting to the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, let me say quite simply that nothing prevents my friend or any other senator or M.P. from proposing amendments to the constitutional proposal. In all good faith, we would have as a government to consider them. This being said, I must add that the Canadian and provincial governments are committed to abiding by those texts. The First Ministers made a very clear commitment to abide by the texts that were approved and ratified today. Let me repeat that nothing prevents a senator or M.P. from putting an amendment forward. In all good faith, we would have to consider it.

Senator Denis: If I understand correctly, all sorts of amendments may be put forward at the Canadian government level, and legislatures can do the same. But in the end the resolution must pass as it is. Otherwise, how could we bind the Province of Quebec or the Province of Ontario to an amendment we in Ottawa would have passed? Unless, as I am asking, through some kind of process, this amendment was notified and approved by all provinces and Parliament. What you are saying is that we may bring in amendments but they would be to no avail.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—PRIORITY OF CONSIDERATION
BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, I have a question following the same line. I think we would all agree that it is important that the process by which Parliament and the legislatures examine the proposed resolution should be as expedient and as efficient as possible.

I wonder if the leaders of the governments have considered the possibility of the following timetable, namely, that the resolution would be dealt with first in the House of Commons so that the legislatures of the several provinces would have before them an assurance that the text on which they were passing was one which had been found acceptable to the House of Commons. Otherwise, we can envision the situation where one legislature might amend its resolution in one particular while yet another legislature might amend its resolution in yet another particular, and the whole thing might become quite confused. Should there not be some sort of order so that the legislatures, when they deal with the proposed resolution, know that it is the one which has already had the imprimatur of the House of Commons?

Senator van Roggen: And the Senate.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, Senator van Roggen added, "And the Senate." Indeed, I was going to observe, given the rapport des forces as between the parties in this place, it might be equally useful for a premier to know what disposition the Senate had made of a constitutional resolution.

All I can say for the moment is that I appreciate the points raised by Senator Stewart, but he will know from even a cursory glance at the Accord that the First Ministers have gone no further than to commit themselves to present these resolutions in their respective legislatures as soon as possible.

Senator Stewart: Honourable senators, I did not mention the Senate because, as the Leader of the Government in the Senate knows, the power of the Senate in relation to a constitutional amendment of this kind is quite different from that of the House of Commons. We have, in a sense, an advisory role. Some might call it a constitutional suspensive veto with a suspensive veto period which runs from the time that the House of Commons has dealt with the resolution.

I was not suggesting that the provinces be asked to hold the matter in abeyance until the House of Commons and then the Senate had dealt with the proposed resolution. That is why I did not mention the Senate.

I ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if it is his proposal that the consideration by the Senate and the House of Commons proceed simultaneously, in view of the fact that the constitutional powers and process for the two houses is quite different now under the Constitution.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, I have not given any thought to the last part of my friend's question. What I have given some thought to, and what the government has decided to do, is to propose a special joint committee of this place and the other place to consider these resolutions.

Senator Stewart: May I ask then if, when the government made this decision, it took into consideration the fact that, first, the powers of the House of Commons and the Senate are really not in tandem in this situation; second, that the responsibilities of the Senate are quite different in that we are not here to deal with the federal government or provincial governments but are here to represent provinces or regions; and, third, the fact that under the Constitution our role is, as I said earlier, advisory rather than decisive?

I raise that point to suggest that we have a special kind of responsibility here, which might oblige us to retain independence to ensure that we can discharge our responsibilities. Has the Leader of the Government taken those points into account?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we have. I appreciate the comments of the honourable senator concerning the different responsibilities and the different role or powers of the Senate with regard to constitutional amendments, and we will, presumably, exercise our responsibilities when the resolution comes before us.

Meanwhile there does not seem to the government to be any good reason for preventing the constitution of a joint committee of this place and the House of Commons to study these texts.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—POSSIBILITY OF RECALLING PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators, my question is along the line of Senator Bazin's question. The Leader of the Government stated that certain provincial legislatures had already adjourned for the summer. In such cases, will the legislatures be recalled or can they wait until the normal fall session?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Frankly, honourable senators, I do not know.

[English]

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—VENUE FOR CONSIDERATION
BY PARLIAMENT

Hon. George van Roggen: Honourable senators, my question is directed to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. It is not my intention in any way to put him in an unfair position.

[Senator Denis.]

As a result of a lunch which I was hosting this afternoon, I escorted my guest to the Speaker's Gallery of the House of Commons where I tarried for half an hour during Question Period before coming over here. In response to questions from the Leader of the Official Opposition on this question of process within the Parliament of Canada, the Prime Minister, as I heard him in the other place, was quite specific in not saying directly that it would be referred to a committee of the House of Commons or a joint committee; he simply said that the usual parliamentary process would follow, and that the Deputy Prime Minister and government house leader would consult with his opposite numbers in the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party to decide on that process.

That seems to be a somewhat more reticent answer to this question than the very forthcoming answer given by the Leader of the Government in the Senate to the effect that, indeed, it has been decided by the government that there will be a joint committee. I wonder which version I should accept.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I trust I have not missed any signals from the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister, and I trust that no conversation I have had in recent days with the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister have been overtaken by events. That is altogether possible. However, I must say that on the basis of my discussions, it was the intention of the government to propose the creation of a joint committee of this place and the other place to study these texts.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—CONSIDERATION BY ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate along the lines of that asked by Senator Bazin as it pertains to the Province of Ontario.

Last week the Premier of Ontario indicated that, in any event, he intended to put over any consideration of a resolution leading from the Meech Lake Accord to the fall session of the legislature. The Ontario Legislature is currently in session. I take it that, based on the Constitutional Accord as now set out in legal terms, "as soon as possible" would oblige the Premier of the province to put the resolution before the Ontario Legislature forthwith.

● (1440)

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the honourable senator is asking me for an interpretation of that clause, which I am hesitant to give. I suppose that much depends on when the prorogation or, indeed, the dissolution of the present Legislature of Ontario will take place. My honourable friend will be in a better position than I to know that.

Senator Grafstein: I used to be, honourable senators, but that is no longer the case.

1987 CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD—CONSIDERATION BY NOVA SCOTIA LEGISLATURE

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, in view of Senator Murray's response, might I ask him if in the case of Nova Scotia, where the session has been terminated, there has been any commitment by Premier Buchanan to call the Legislative Assembly of that province back into session before the time at which it would normally meet? Has any understanding been reached in that respect, or is that a matter to be decided by the authorities in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, it is a matter to be decided by the authorities in Nova Scotia. I myself have not discussed the matter with Premier Buchanan or any of his colleagues. It would not be unprecedented for that historic Legislative Assembly, which is the seat of responsible government in this country, to meet during the summer or the fall.

Senator Stewart: Am I to understand that the Leader of the Government is saying that discussion of that point was not thought to be necessary, and that the Premier is entirely open to decide this matter without any suggestion of a commitment to the Prime Minister or to any other federal minister?

Senator Murray: All I can say, honourable senators, is that I have not discussed the matter with the Premier of Nova Scotia or with any of his ministers. Nova Scotia's commitment is the same as that of all other provincial governments and of the federal government; that is, to table those constitutional texts in the Legislative Assembly as soon as possible.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. Jeremiah S. Grafstein: Honourable senators, a number of questions were asked of the Leader of the Government in the Senate following the Meech Lake accord. The leader said at that time that he would delay responding to those questions until, I think, this time. Could he let us know now whether he intends to respond to those questions? Some of them dealt with important principles. Does he intend to wait to respond to those questions until such time as this chamber or other chambers have had a fuller opportunity to deal with the detailed resolution?

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): I would prefer the latter course, honourable senators. Nevertheless, I acknowledge the fact that there may be outstanding some delayed answers to questions of my honourable friend and others. I will undertake to bring to the chamber prepared replies to those questions.

Senator Grafstein: I appreciate the leader's response. Could he, if at all possible, deal with the question I asked last week on the economic impact? Has the government conducted any studies of the economic impact on the federal spending power as it might apply under the new Accord?

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, without meaning any offence, I think I will have to ask a team of my best experts to try to fathom that question.

Senator Grafstein: I would certainly be prepared to elucidate further.

Senator Murray: Go ahead; I wish you would.

Senator Grafstein: A major question has obviously arisen with respect to the allocation of the taxpayer's dollar as it applies to federal and provincial programs. Some consideration has been given to the thought that something approaching 70 per cent of every taxpayer's dollar is now spent by the provinces of Canada. I just wonder whether the Leader of the Government in the Senate or the Department of Finance have analyzed the Accord to see whether it affects that pattern, which has changed quite dramatically since the Tremblay commission of 1955. The Leader of the Government in the Senate will recall that there was an allocation made at the time of the Tremblay commission in 1955 indicating that a fair equilibrium between federal and provincial spending should be 50-50. We have passed that mark. I simply wonder whether the federal government has now established a danger line beyond which provincial spending should not go in order to sustain federal spending power.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, that is a very broad question. I still have difficulty understanding its relevance to the Meech Lake agreement. However, I will re-read the question that was asked by my friend some days ago and I will reflect on the points he has made today. I will take counsel and will see whether the government has some comment or information that I can bring in at this time on that matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY REPORT—NOTICE OF INQUIRY

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Inquiries:

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, on June 30, 1987, I will call the attention of the Senate to the Report of the Commission of Inquiry on Unemployment Insurance, otherwise known as the Forget commission.

PRIVATE BILL

REGIONAL VICAR FOR CANADA OF THE PRELATURE OF THE HOLY CROSS AND OPUS DEI—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bélisle, seconded by the Honourable Senator Nurgitz, for the second reading of the Bill S-7, An Act to incorporate the Regional Vicar for Canada of the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei.—(Honourable Senator Corbin).

[Senator Grafstein.]

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I intend to seek leave to have the debate deferred and stood in my name.

However I would advise my colleagues that if other senators wish to speak to Bill S-7 I would gladly yield to them while reserving the right to rise at a later time.

Order stands.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 9, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Honourable senators, if leave is granted and if it is the wish of the Senate, I will give a brief explanation.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Doody: Honourable senators, the order paper is now such as to put no immediate legislative demands upon us. From the government's point of view, there is no legislation coming forward immediately. It seems to me that the Senate could be better served if we take the next several days to deal with matters before committees. Most of the committees now have a very full workload. We have run into some problems in terms of scheduling committee meetings when the Senate is sitting. This has been brought before the Senate on several occasions recently.

It seems to me that if the Senate does not sit formally tomorrow, senators could perhaps arrange committee meetings. They can also arrange meetings on Friday and Monday of next week and, of course, during the mornings and evenings of next week. I repeat that I think the time of the Senate would be best served in committee meetings at those times rather than to have sittings of the chamber with the order paper as it now stands.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I agree with the assessment by the Deputy Leader of the Government of the work presently before the Senate. I also agree that most of that work is now in the committees rather than before the chamber. He will understand, however, that I would not want us to lose the opportunity to deal with Order No. 5, standing in Senator Murray's name, which reads as follows:

● (1450)

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.).

May we have an understanding that we will dispose of that one way or the other? I do not want to prejudice in any way Senator Murray's views on it, and no doubt he will want to take advice on whether there has been some discrepancy in signals on the question of the joint committee before he speaks on it. So I can understand his not wanting to speak today or perhaps even tomorrow. However, can we have an understanding that we will dispose of this one way or another next week?

Senator Doody: We have no problem with that, honourable senators. We will certainly deal with it next week. I cannot say that we will bless it next week—

Senator Frith: I understand.

Senator Doody: —but certainly it will be spoken to and perhaps voted on, if it is the desire of the Senate.

Senator Frith: Very good.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 9, 1987, at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 9, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I wish to advise the Senate formally that since we last met the Prime Minister has assigned to me additional responsibilities as a member of the government. I have been named minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which we propose to create by legislation in the fall.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: This agency will have its headquarters at Moncton and its offices in the four provincial capitals of the Atlantic region. The President and Chief Executive Officer of the agency will be Mr. Donald McPhail, a highly respected public servant who is well known to many honourable senators. He is presently the Canadian ambassador to the Federal Republic of Germany, and has had extensive experience in trade and economic development policy in Canada and, in particular, in the Atlantic region. Pending the creation of the agency by legislation, Mr. McPhail will be president-designate and special adviser to the minister. He will chair a board of people from the private and public sectors in the Atlantic provinces.

The mandate of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be to promote the development of small and medium sized business and industry in the Atlantic provinces and, in this regard, to develop policies and implement programs in cooperation with the provincial governments and the private sector. The agency will also have a mandate for the coordination and planning of all federal activities contributing to economic growth in that region, particularly procurement, training and skills development, job creation, technology infrastructure development, and local investment promotion. The agency will thus have a dual mandate—a responsibility for actions as a regionally-based agency and a responsibility for advocacy at the level of national policy and programs. The offices of the four federal economic development coordinators in the Atlantic region are being brought together to form the nucleus, the administrative base of this proposed new agency.

There will be transferred to my ministerial responsibility the powers and functions now exercised by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion under the Industrial and Regional Development Act so far as the four Atlantic provinces are concerned, and so far as any loan or grant is below $2 million in a given fiscal year or $10 million over a five-year period. This includes programs under the Atlantic Enterprises Program and Enterprise Cape Breton. Also transferred to the agency and to my ministerial responsibility are the Special Areas Act and the Small Business Loans Act insofar as these apply to the Atlantic provinces. Most of DRIE's ERDA subagreements are being transferred to my responsibility and will be managed by the new agency. The exceptions to this are those subagreements which are firm-specific or which relate to the restructuring of major industrial sectors.

The financial commitment announced by the Prime Minister for this agency last Saturday is $1.05 billion over a five-year period in new money. That is in addition to what we are spending on ERDA's and other federal economic development programs in the region. The programs and responsibilities that I referred to earlier, which are being transferred to me from other departments and agencies, will come to me with their budgets and person years. They will not, of course, be financed out of the $1.05 billion that the Prime Minister has committed to the agency for the next five years. That amount is new money for a new agency and for new programs. I will preside over a committee of ministers from the Atlantic provinces which will monitor the activities of the agency and meet on a frequent basis with the president to review the mandate of the agency.

Honourable senators, in creating this agency the Prime Minister sends a strong message to all in Ottawa, or to all in the region who are interested in these matters, that the battle against regional disparity is the Prime Minister's priority. While some exception has been taken in the other place to the appointment of an honourable senator to have responsibility for it, the fact of the matter is that the Prime Minister wanted to have a minister who was not already burdened with heavy departmental responsibilities and who was responsible for a central agency that cuts across departments and agencies of government and has a government-wide mandate. The Prime Minister is also sending a strong message that an effective attack on regional disparity is vital to any proper concept of national reconciliation and national unity.

I would like to say one word to honourable senators with respect to my duties here. Every time that I undertake something in addition to my responsibilities in this place as Leader of the Government, it increases the workload on my colleagues, the Deputy Leader of the Government, Senator Doody, and the Chief Government Whip, Senator Phillips. Therefore, I wish publicly to thank them for their cooperation and forbearance, and to acknowledge the considerable assistance that they have been to me in relieving me of many of the responsibilities that I should be carrying as the government leader in this place.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to congratulate the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the confidence that the Prime Minister has shown in him by adding to his ministerial responsibilities, and I take the opportunity to encourage the government to increase ministerial responsibility in the Senate. In this particular case it has not increased the number of ministers, but it has increased the size of the ministerial responsibility.

I was watching the proceedings in the other place yesterday, and I wish to tell the minister something that he may already know. There was something that could be, by way of understatement, expressed as disappointment in the opposition in the other place, namely, that the minister chiefly responsible for this initiative would not be available to them for information, criticism and opposition. The Minister of Transport rallied round to say that he would also be adding to his now manifold responsibilities the responsibility to answer in the other place for Senator Murray. I have also heard that there is some criticism of this initiative, that it is not really an increase in contributions to the Atlantic provinces when all the factors are taken into account. But that is secondhand information. However, I do want to assure the minister that if these criticisms and disappointments expressed in the other place are going to worry him, we mean to make up here any deficiencies in that regard to the best of our ability.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to say a few words about the announcement the minister has just made. When I listened to him explain his responsibilities and, indeed, the structure, it occurred to me that it was exactly the same as the program this government phased out some two and a half years ago; namely, the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development. I want to join with my deputy leader in congratulating the minister and the Prime Minister on giving this responsibility to a member of this place. I certainly support the idea and concept that matters having a major regional dimension, as this one has, ought to be entrusted to the Senate. I have no problem with this policy at all. I think it is appropriate that a senator should be appointed the principal minister in charge of a central agency, the responsibility of which is to promote regional economic development.

However, I have a great deal of difficulty with this announcement, because I am sure that all the words the minister just uttered were taken from the text of the speeches made when MSERD was set up in the first place. They are exactly the same. I am glad to see that the minister and his government has come full circle to promoting what was in place and what they destroyed. Now, under some new concept—

Senator Murray: It was DREE that was destroyed.

Senator Olson: It was not DREE that was destroyed but the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, and the acronym for that is MSERD. All the great things that the minister has said about what they are going to do were there in that original announcement.

Senator Austin: It involves the same bureaucrats.

Senator Olson: Let us not have any misunderstanding that this idea that has been advanced for the Atlantic region, or for any other region, is a new idea. I hope the minister will get the responsibility from the government and the Prime Minister soon to do something along these lines for the other parts of Canada that are deserving of regional development as well, particularly western Canada.

Whether or not this $1.05 billion of so-called new money will materialize is a question that we will take, I think the popular expression is, with a grain of salt until we see it. In a few minutes I will be asking the question: What happened to the $1 billion that the government promised the grain farmers of western Canada? Thirty per cent of that amount was paid earlier this year, and not one bloody red cent since. In other words, 70 per cent of that money is still outstanding, and we would like to know why.

Senator Frith: Pay up!

Senator Olson: The honourable senator might want to know what happens in giving a transfusion to a corpse—it is too late. Why not give us the money now?

Senator Argue: Why not last fall?

Senator Olson: Yes. Where is the program for 1987, when you have not paid 70 per cent of the program for 1986? We are starting to wonder about these things. In any event, I wish the minister success, but he should not have come along announcing that it was a great new concept, because it is almost a perfect duplicate resurrection of a program and administration that was in place and that his government destroyed, threw out.

● (1410)

Senator Murray: But you were a member of the government when the administration of John Turner did away with that.

Senator Olson: I want the record to show accurately that this government completely abandoned regional economic development on September 4, 1984, when they were elected. Now they have finally come to recognize that there was a program in place with all the trappings, all the details, which the minister has enunciated today. We had FEDC officers in place in every provincial capital in Canada. They threw them out. Now they are coming along with a great idea that they are going to do it for the Atlantic provinces first, and the minister has said that they are going to transfer a large number of the programs from DRIE and from ERDA. Well, where were they before they took them out? They were in the program under MSERD.

Senator MacDonald: Who destroyed MSERD?

Senator Olson: You guys.

Senator Frith: We are glad you asked that. Are there any other questions?

Senator Olson: Let it be clearly understood so that there is no misunderstanding that this program has been in effect before. We hoped that it would work then, and we hope it will work now, but let there be no misunderstanding that there has been any new thought. They have resurrected old thoughts.

Listening to the minister I was amazed. His speech was exactly the same as the speeches I made at that time, so I hope it works.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I regret I was delayed briefly in coming into the chamber and for that reason I asked my colleague, Senator Frith, to make some initial comments, because he had heard the full statement, which I had missed in part.

However, I have at least a reasonable grasp of the import of the minister's statement based upon material which he had circulated earlier and the announcement made by the Prime Minister.

I congratulate the Leader of the Government in the Senate on, as my colleague has said, the confidence the Prime Minister has placed in him, and I welcome the opportunity of giving the question of regional development, insofar as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, even higher profile in the Senate. I believe that will be a positive development, good for the program and good for the region.

I am not quite certain precisely what philosophy of regional development the Government of Canada espouses. In the initial budget presentation of the Minister of Finance, it was very clear that it was expected that the private sector would become the principal engine of development in the Atlantic provinces and the public sector would be subordinated in regional development policy.

Indeed, in that concept, the energy industry was expected to provide a fundamental thrust to the development of the Atlantic region. Of course, that expectation was not realized, and as the government philosophy of private sector development was implemented, it was discovered that it was inadequate and that it was still essential to maintain a good deal of public sector involvement in the Atlantic provinces.

Not so long ago, when the free trade debate was held in the House of Commons and here in the Senate, it was held out to us that the major future prospects for the Atlantic region rested upon the successful conclusion of a free trade arrangement with the United States. I thought at that time that the government had reached a development policy which was based upon the negotiation of a free trade arrangement with the United States. But now, more than two and a half years after it assumed office, we have a new program and a new thrust by the government. We can only conclude that the government has realized rather belatedly that its efforts to date have been ineffective, or to put it another way, have not achieved the objectives originally held out.

It is easy to see why the government should reach that conclusion. The Canadian economy has moved out of the recession, and economic growth is reasonable on the basis of national averages. But the fact of the matter is that the recovery and the growth have been concentrated, in the main, in the province of Ontario and, to some extent, in the province of Quebec. The recovery, for reasons well known, has bypassed western Canada because of agriculture developments and because of energy policy and developments.

It is obvious that the recovery has bypassed the Atlantic provinces completely. In my province, the economy is weaker today than it was during the recession. That is the fact. The unemployment statistics for April of this year for Nova Scotia were higher than they were during the recession. That is not good news, and that is just the average for Nova Scotia. Speaking from memory, the unemployment rate in April of this year was the highest April rate in my province since the Dominion Bureau of Statistics began to keep statistics in, I believe, 1966. That is a reflection of what has happened in the Atlantic provinces.

I make this point, honourable senators, to underline the fact that a new thrust in regional development is urgently required. After we examine the new program, we hope to be able to determine whether it has the capability of achieving the objectives that have been set forth.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I welcome the appointment of Ambassador McPhail as the head of the new economic office in the Atlantic provinces. I believe he has an excellent grasp of the economics of the Atlantic provinces and will prove to be understandable and approachable in the administration of these programs. I wish to emphasize that this is a new stage and a major challenge for the minister, because at this moment the economics of all of the provinces of the Atlantic are quite weak and need new impetus.

Hon. L. Norbert Thériault: Honourable senators, I, too, want to join with my colleagues in offering congratulations to the Honourable Senator Murray, first, because he is one of us, and, second, because he has a good knowledge of New Brunswick, having been the Deputy Minister to the Premier of New Brunswick.

I, like most New Brunswickers and I presume all people from the Atlantic provinces, watched with care and attention the announcement that we knew was coming. If we can accept the word of the Prime Minister this time that this will be $200 million of new money, then we all have to rejoice, but, as my leader just pointed out, after almost three years of this government, this is sadly needed in his province, as it is in my province.

What concerns me, and is starting to concern a number of people in my province, is the fact that the announcement also stated that the agency would require 300 people. The Leader of the Government has stated that these programs will be in addition to the programs—the joint programs and others—already existing in the Atlantic provinces where the federal government is involved. So, I have to ask myself—and perhaps the minister could look at this and give me an answer some time—where are those 300 people to come from? It is nice to say that we will have all of the same programs; but we all know that it takes people to administer programs. So, if the government is to recruit 300 people from those who are already engaged in various programs to the benefit of the Atlantic provinces, then we start worrying.

• (1420)

I really do not know whether it should be 300 people or 500 people, but what I am concerned about—and what the people of New Brunswick are starting to look at—is the fact that if we get those people who are now working in existing programs, and bring them into this new agency, it will be hard to convince New Brunswickers that this will be an addition to all of the programs that already exist.

Sometimes we have to listen to what is said and also to what is not said. If this is new money, then it is new money on top of what? If it is new money on top of money that has been expended in the Atlantic provinces by this government, then it does not amount to new money, because it would be less than what has been expended in years gone by. If it is new money, then I want to know that it is new money, and that it is new money on top of what? I want to know if it is going to include joint programs, whether some of that money will be used for joint federal-provincial programs, or whether it will be $200 million per year added to what should have been there and what was there prior to 1984, as has been pointed out by Senator Olson and Senator MacEachen.

In closing, I would say that there is potential there. The Leader of the Government is raising the hopes of people in the Atlantic provinces. You did that in 1984, and then sadly disappointed them. We accept your appointment; we accept the $200 million; but we have to reserve our jubilation for a year down the road.

Senator Olson: Action first.

Hon. M. Lorne Bonnell: Honourable senators, I would be remiss in my duties as a senator if I did not congratulate Senator Murray on taking on this task. Senator Murray is a man who understands Atlantic Canada, and although he represents that riding in Ontario, he still has his heart in Atlantic Canada. I feel that the Prime Minister could not have picked a better man, unless it were myself.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Frith: You are number two. That's not bad.

Senator Bonnell: Senator Murray, as Leader of the Government, does a good job here. When answering questions he keeps cool, he conducts himself in a pleasant manner, and we all like him. However, there is one thing about which I feel a little sad. He will have to spend a lot of time now in Atlantic Canada, because the problems there are tremendous. I would like to suggest to him that he go to the Prime Minister and ask that he appoint either Senator Doody or Senator Phillips as a member of the government, not necessarily with a portfolio, so that we can get answers in the Senate and be informed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: Why not both of them?

Senator Bonnell: I really believe that we in the Senate deserve someone here all the time to answer questions on behalf of the government. But at the same time I do not want Senator Murray to be here all of the time since the job that he has to do in Atlantic Canada is very important if we are to bring that part of the country back into Confederation, because it has been forgotten.

The other day, when he talked about Meech Lake, I thought that if I were the Premier of Prince Edward Island, I would have said, "Yes, I want special status for Prince Edward Island." The reason why I want special status for Prince Edward Island is because I cannot even visit New Brunswick, the next province, without having to pay for the simple fact of setting foot in the province. If I were in Ontario, I could go to Manitoba, and if I were in Manitoba, I could go to Saskatchewan. I could go to Ontario. I cannot even have the privilege of having a friend of mine come from Nova Scotia to see me without having to pay for crossing from one province to another. But someone from British Columbia can go to Alberta and it does not cost five cents to do so. As a Prince Edward Islander, I need special status, along with people from Newfoundland, to put me on an equal footing with the rest of Canada. I say to the Leader of the Government in the Senate that with this $105 billion the first thing we should do is equalize the transportation system in those two provinces, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, as promised in Confederation, and take away that fee so that I can travel freely among the provinces as I should be able to do in the same fashion as all other Canadians.

After that, perhaps we will have a few dollars left over for some other things. The next thing I would suggest by way of special status for Prince Edward Island is a pipeline. Trans-Canada Pipelines has a pipeline that can bring cheap gas down to Ontario, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, but I, as a Prince Edward Islander, have to pay the high price for gas. Therefore, the next thing you might do with the $1.05 billion is make sure that we get that gas down in Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland at the same price as they are paying in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Then, Mr. Minister, the next thing you should look at is transportation. In Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland you took away our railroads. Perhaps we should now have an up-to-date road system so that we can transport our goods. I say to you, Mr. Minister, before you do anything else with that $1.05 billion, perhaps you should inflate the status of those two provinces so that we are kind of half equal with the rest of the provinces, instead of having special status.

The next thing you should then look at is protecting our fisheries so that we do not let the French or the Americans take them away. Perhaps if we get that area straightened out, we will end up a little more equal with the rest of Canada, before you start spending the rest of that money.

Therefore, Mr. Minister, if I had been the Premier of Prince Edward Island during the negotiations on that Meech Lake accord, I would have said, "I am prepared to sign this accord. I think it is wonderful to have Quebec rejoin the family.

However, we need special status for Prince Edward Island." I am sure Senator Rossiter would agree.

I would then say, "Let's go back to the old days when the farmers of Prince Edward Island could have their potatoes inspected free by the federal inspectors, and thus return to the way things have been done since Confederation, and not have to pay that inspection fee."

Then I would say, "Perhaps we should then stop charging those poor potato farmers a fee for dredging out the harbours in the wintertime in order that they can sell their potatoes to Africa or South America." That fee was started two years ago, and I say we could return again to the way things have been done since Confederation by stopping that charge.

After we have done all of these things, we could finally see ourselves getting to the point where we were almost on an equal basis with the rest of the country. However, by this time we have probably spent the $1.05 billion, so perhaps we should then look for some more. I for one would like to see Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland getting almost to the point where we could start to talk to the other provinces on an equal footing. Therefore, Mr. Minister, you see the problems you are facing.

Honourable senators, I have a further point that perhaps the minister could take into consideration. Mr. Minister, since you are now the minister, you know there are many senators in this chamber who have a great deal of knowledge and experience of Atlantic Canada. There is Senator Macquarrie, Senator Phillips, Senator Rossiter, Senator Doody, Senator Rowe, Senator MacEachen, Senator Thériault and others from the Atlantic provinces. Perhaps, Mr. Minister, you could form a committee of Atlantic senators to assist you in making decisions on how best you could help that area and make it grow. Perhaps you could put all the brains, ability and energy that you have here in the Senate to work to assist you in making Atlantic Canada grow and thus show the Canadian people that this Senate is behind you 100 per cent in making that region prosper. With that kind of support, and with Senator Phillips or Senator Doody acting on your behalf in the cabinet as the minister without portfolio to answer here to the other senators, I think that together we could do something for Atlantic Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate our colleague the Leader of the Government in the Senate, Senator Lowell Murray, on his new responsibilities. I do not doubt that, given his huge talent and his dedication to the Atlantic Provinces, he will want to do all he can to iron out disparities.

All the same, I would like to ask him a few questions. First, does he really believe that a yearly budget of approximately $200 million, which represents less than one fifth of one per cent of the yearly federal expenditures, will effectively help to iron out regional disparities?

[Senator Bonnell.]

Second, can Senator Murray tell us what are the government objectives? Does it want to reduce disparities by 20 per cent in the next 10 or 25 years? Does it want to reduce them by 30 per cent in so many years? I think we must know that if we really want to appraise the efficiency of that new federal agency.

Finally, I would like to remind the senator that all his efforts to iron out disparities will be in vain unless an agency also coordinates the activities of the other federal departments that control more than 99 per cent of the budget, the 30 other departments that spend more than $110 billion a year. For his efforts to be successful, he must also be able to coordinate the activities of other departments. So, those are a few preliminary reflections that I wanted to address, along with my congratulations, to Senator Murray. Thank you.

AGRICULTURE

DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS TO WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF SECOND INSTALMENT

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, as I gave notice a few minutes ago, I would now like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate when the farmers in western Canada can expect the other 70 per cent of the grain acreage—or whatever other name it is called—payment. I am referring to the $1 billion of which 30 per cent was paid, I believe, in January of this year. The other 70 per cent has not yet been paid.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the most recent information I have on that matter is that the cheques were to have been sent out early in June. I acknowledge the fact that this is June 9, and I shall make inquiries later today to see exactly what the status of this matter is.

Senator Olson: I thank the Leader of the Government for that answer. I suppose there is no other supplementary question I can ask, since he has said that he will inquire. That's great, but I want to give him notice today that I will be asking the same question tomorrow. Some people have spent a very large part of that money for their spring seeding operations on the basis upon which the government promised it. The people to whom they owe that money for fuel and all of the other input costs are waiting, and this payment is approximately six weeks late. I hope that the minister will have an answer, but, while a reply is important, what is even more important is that the cheques get into the hands of the people who expect them as soon as possible.

DIEFENBAKER CENTRE, UNIVERSITY OF SASKATCHEWAN

FINANCIAL CRISIS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Sidney L. Buckwold: Honourable senators, it may surprise some of my colleagues across the way to know that a number of my warmest and best friends are members of their party. The one I honour most is the late Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, who, naturally, was from Saskatchewan and was one of our local heroes.

The question I want to raise involves the Diefenbaker Centre, which is located on the campus of the University of Saskatchewan. It was named after this illustrious son of the prairies, and is a very worthy museum, educational centre and recipient of many of the Diefenbaker memorabilia and other artifacts associated with his work.

The centre is facing a financial crisis, as it has since it opened in 1980. As I have said, it is part of the University of Saskatchewan, and that university has in recent years actually been funding the operation of the Diefenbaker Centre to almost the entire cost of the financing. Because of cut-backs in university funding, which I suppose go on in all provinces, and perhaps especially in Saskatchewan, the President of the university, Dr. Kristjanson, has indicated that there will be no further university funds available for this national shrine. The cost of operating the centre is $350,000 to $400,000 a year. I think it is shameful that the benefits of this important museum should be paid for by a university that has its own financial problems. Federal governments, both Liberal and Tory, have been asked to support this national institution. Each has found reasons for not doing so. I now have to advise honourable senators that the centre is in danger of closing—that has been made clear by the President of the university. In my opinion it would be shameful if that fine institution closed for lack of federal support. Surely we have enough interest and pride in our former prime ministers and in our local heroes that we can support, in a modest way, the cost of that centre.

My question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate is this: Would he and his cabinet colleagues review once again this situation in light of the developments that I have announced and because of the likelihood that the centre will close? Will federal funds be made available to support this centre? Federal funds are provided to Laurier House, and Pearson College of the Pacific can tap the proceeds of a $4 million federal trust fund. Can the people of Canada, especially the people of western Canada, be assured that this centre will continue to operate? Can the thousands of people who come there each year continue to visit?

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

NATURAL GAS EXPORTS—U.S. REGULATORY COMMISSION'S DECISION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if a reasonably satisfactory solution has been found to the dispute that was acknowledged by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and others respecting a decision that was made by the regulatory body in the United States on transportation charges for natural gas. I do not know whether the minister is familiar with the details of that dispute, but I expect that he is. FERC, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission of the United States, passed a regulation prohibiting certain transportation charges. Unless some resolution is found, somewhere between $140 million and $400 million per annum will have to be paid by the gas producers in Canada, most of whom are in Alberta. It has been approximately ten days since this was a hot item. I have not seen much of it lately, but I also have not heard whether or not the government—and I know that they had good intentions, because they were stated by the Minister of External Affairs and others—was able to reach a satisfactory resolution of this problem with the United States.

● (1450)

DELAYED ANSWER TO ORAL QUESTION

TRANSPORT

CN MAINTENANCE SHOPS, MELVILLE, SASKATCHEWAN—PROPOSED LAYOFFS

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 28 last by the Honourable Senator Argue regarding Transport—CN

[Senator Buckwold.]

Maintenance Shops, Melville, Saskatchewan—Proposed Layoffs.

(The answer follows:)

The Melville layoffs relate to a company-initiated, country-wide program to reduce operating costs prompted by recent technological improvements in the railway industry and a much more competitive marketplace.

The work which occupied the 47 employees in question is not being transferred to Winnipeg or elsewhere. The work has come to an end because of technological improvements in methods of operation and because of a reduction of over two million tons in Saskatchewan-based potash traffic since 1980.

The mayor of Melville met Monday, June 1, 1987, with Ron Lawless, Chief Executive Office, Canadian National in Montreal. Mr. Lawless undertook to review whether any further work could be found for Melville.

ANSWER TO ORDER PAPER QUESTION REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRY—ENTERPRISE CAPE BRETON

Question No. 7 on the Order Paper—By Hon. B. Alasdair Graham.

3rd February, 1987—Of the 511 offers of assistance made to industry by Enterprise Cape Breton as of October 7th, 1986, (i) how many of these offers have been accepted; (ii) what sums of money have been paid out to each individual enterprise; (iii) how many jobs are currently in place in each of such individual enterprises and (iv) what plants and how many jobs are now in place in Cape Breton as a result of the Cape Breton tax credit?

Reply by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion:

(i) As of October 7, 1986, of the 511 offers of assistance made to industry by Enterprise Cape Breton, which also includes offers made by the Industrial Development Division (IDD) of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, 352 offers were accepted. Of this, Annex 1 lists the 134 companies/individuals to which funds were disbursed.

(ii) and (iii) Answer is provided in Annex 1.

(iv) As of October 7, 1986, 10 Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit certificates were issued which aided in supporting the creation of 52 jobs. Under the Income Tax Act, the identification of specific companies must be excluded.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have no wish to speak to this matter. If anyone else wishes to move the adjournment, I will certainly yield.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, perhaps it is a good idea to note at the same time that we have a committee studying this bill.

Order stands.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Bosa, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, for the second reading of the Bill S-8, to amend the Citizenship Act (foreign spouses).—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. C. William Doody (Deputy Leader of the Government): Honourable senators, I have asked the department for some information on this act. I have not yet received it, but if anyone wishes to speak on it, I will yield to him. I have no intention of trying to delay the passage of the bill, but I am interested in it.

Order stands.

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION TO REFER FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

(1) Where no numbers are present, either (a) no funds were disbursed as of October 7, 1986, (b) they are funds for studies which do not involve capital expenditures and therefore do not create jobs, or (c) the information on jobs created/maintained is not readily available.

(2) Jobs created/maintained also include part-time and/or seasonal employment.

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.).

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I yield to Senator Phillips.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, following my questioning of Senator MacEachen when he introduced the motion, I indicated that I would probably not be speaking on this subject. However, my son recently gave me a package of memos entitled: "Everybody is Entitled to My Opinion." Perhaps it is in that mood that I am speaking today.

Senator Frith: I suppose that we cannot waive that right!

Senator Phillips: Yes, you can; you can withdraw the motion!

Senator Frith: That is not what I said.

Senator Phillips: The subject has not been discussed in our caucus—I rather anticipate that it will be tomorrow—so today the views are mine and no one else's.

There is no objection on this side to examining the Meech Lake accord. In fact, we are happy with it, and are rather pleased that this government was able to cooperate with the provinces and bring them all into Confederation. The Prime Minister in his media remarks last week indicated that he, too, favoured an examination of the accord, and hoped that this would be carried out during the coming months.

The question that faces the Senate is: In what manner should the examination be carried out? We have two options: we have the Committee of the Whole, as indicated in the motion; we also have the probability of a joint committee.

Perhaps my interpretation of Senator MacEachen's remarks is not entirely accurate, but I interpreted them the other day as indicating that his party was not in favour of a joint committee. At that time I do not think that Senator MacEachen had an accurate indication that a joint committee would be proposed. However, since that time Senator Murray has indicated that the government is considering a joint committee.

Let me deal briefly with the concept of a Committee of the Whole. It is based on what I call the "codfish concept," where the Senate went into Committee of the Whole to consider the codfish treaty between Canada and France. Despite Senator MacEachen's opinion that the committee was a success, I cannot agree with him on that point. The committee set out and made phone calls by the thousands. In fact, Bell Canada almost had to put in new lines between Ottawa and the maritimes to handle the invitations extended by Senator MacEachen and his group to people to appear before the committee. We have had five committee hearings since February 10, 1987. That is one committee hearing a month—hardly a success! The committee is still floundering around caught in some trawl net, and there is no possibility of the committee's proceeding and presenting a report before the end of the session.

There are a number of questions that should be asked about the Committee of the Whole. In what manner will it proceed? Who will receive invitations? Will the Senate be thrown open to everyone who wants to come in and criticize the Meech Lake agreement? Will the committee report before the end of the present session? This is a most important question, honourable senators. Those who have been here for a number of years realize that about the middle of June the floodgates open in the House of Commons and we are deluged with legislation. The Senate has often tried to meet this urgency by having pre-studied the legislation coming in at the last minute. However, we are now facing a heavy agenda for the remainder of June. We anticipate considerable debate when the committee reports on Bill C-22. All senators seem to be awaiting that report before proceeding with their arguments. The completion date for Committee of the Whole, therefore, becomes most important.

The House of Commons will be adjourning on July 1, 1987.

An Hon. Senator: Hopefully.

Senator Phillips: However, there is no obligation on the Senate to adjourn at that time. We can continue on and deal with the legislation and study the Meech Lake accord in the Committee of the Whole, if that is the wish of the Senate. I am not advocating that. However, if it is the wish of the Senate, I will be here and hope that other senators will be here also.

Senator MacEachen: If it is the wish of the Senate.

Senator Phillips: Yes, if it is the wish of the Senate. I shall go along with the wishes of the majority.

• (1450)

It is possible that a joint committee and a committee of the whole Senate could co-exist and proceed at the same time. However, it is very likely that a joint committee would be given a date to report back to their respective houses, probably some time in the coming fall. If that were the case, it would be urgent and incumbent upon the Senate to have a similar termination time for its Committee of the Whole. It would be rather ridiculous for the Senate, having participated in a joint committee which has already submitted its report, to continue with its Committee of the Whole. If we follow our usual procedure for the rest of June and meet on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, we will have six sitting days after the committee is formed. We will lose a day, as is customary, to celebrate Saint Jean Baptiste Day, reducing the number of sitting days to six. It then becomes an impossible task to deal with all the legislation coming in from the other place and to have a committee of the whole Senate on the Meech Lake agreement. Therefore, honourable senators, I propose that if the Committee of the Whole procedure is adopted by the Senate, it meet on Mondays and Fridays. We could begin our sittings at 10 o'clock in the morning, carry on until noon, omit Question Period, and continue on until the evening. That would allow us approximately six and a half to seven hours on the Meech Lake accord each day. I would like to suggest—

Senator MacEachen: You are all heart!

Senator Phillips: —that we could proceed by inviting the—Senator MacEachen: Why don't you suggest Saturdays and Sundays, too?

Senator Phillips: —honourable member for Saint-Henri-Westmount to appear in the morning. In the afternoon we could have the honourable member for York South-Weston, Mr. Nunziata. I am sure honourable senators would want to receive his views. We could also receive the views of the honourable member for Laurier, and we could be very fair and invite the honourable member for Papineau to appear in rebuttal to the honourable member for Saint-Henri-Westmount.

Senator Frith: Everybody has a right to their opinions, as your son would say.

Senator Phillips: That is correct, and I am suggesting that you give these people the opportunity to express their viewpoints.

Senator MacEachen: And would you put Mr. Babushka on the list, too?

Senator Doody: Senator MacEachen wants to sit on Saturdays and Sundays.

Senator Phillips: He does? Well, I would agree to that.

Senator MacEachen: We will bring Mr. Babushka in on Saturday.

Senator Phillips: I think the Meech Lake accord is so successful that it merits the type of study suggested. We should also have some agreement on who will be invited. Certainly we would want to invite the ten premiers. There was some difficulty in getting Premier Peckford to appear before the Committee of the Whole on the Canada-France Fisheries and Boundaries Agreement, but he eventually found a time that was satisfactory, and I am sure that we could do the same with all the other premiers.

Senator Marshall: And the territories?

Senator Phillips: And the territories, too.

Senator Frith: Why not, indeed? An excellent suggestion!

Senator MacEachen: We would need maps for Mr. Peckford.

Senator Marshall: How about Colonel North?

Senator Phillips: Today's newspapers had a very interesting item, and I quote the one from the Montreal Gazette, which is headed, "Turner not opposed to Senate study of accord." That is rather encouraging and very generous of him. Then the article has a sub-heading, "Trudeau touted." It reads:

Most Liberal senators are thought to oppose the deal, even if it means undermining Turner, who is trying to convince his caucus and party to support the pact because it secures Quebec's formal recognition of the Constitution.

The next paragraph begins with the sub-heading, "In Ottawa": —Royce Frith, deputy Opposition leader in the Senate and a strong critic of the accord, said he is hopeful the Senate hearings would be televised and that former prime minister Pierre Trudeau would appear.

"I would certainly like that to happen," he said. "I would hope that all the big players would come," suggesting the government might like to call some of the premiers as witnesses.

The honourable senator and I find ourselves in agreement on one point.

Senator Frith: On more than one. You will see.

Senator Phillips: The senator goes on to criticize the provinces for receiving too much power, but that is really irrelevant.

Senator Frith: That does not usually stop you.

Senator Phillips: I am intrigued by Senator Frith's idea of calling in the big guns. We on this side of the Senate always thought that Senator Frith was one of those big guns, but he wants to move up and join the big players. I really have no objection to that, and if he would like to join the big players, that's fine with me, but why not do it before a joint committee or something of that nature?

There is perhaps an advantage to a Senate study that I can see, and that is the public will be watching to see what Liberal senators are going to do. Are they going to take the high road with their leader, Mr. Turner? Are they going to follow Mr. Trudeau's low road, or will they amble down the MacEachen bridle path? I know the public is waiting to see what they are going to do.

Senator MacEachen: As long as we get to Loch Lomond!

Senator Phillips: As soon as the pact is signed, the honourable senator will be in Loch Lomond. The Honourable Senators MacEachen and Frith have a great desire for TV. Senator MacEachen's ego is such that he was telling us the other day that he could not operate, could not think, and could not be reasonable without the glare of the TV camera upon him.

Senator MacEachen: I will be a changed man.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition operated in the other house for years under the glare of the TV cameras, and there is not a shred of evidence that says that his performance was improved by the presence of a TV camera. In fact, I cannot say that TV improved his performance, because I do not think that it could have been much worse if he had been operating without the benefit of a TV camera.

Senator Frith: More of the high road.

Senator Phillips: Perhaps, before a decision is reached, we can anticipate someone from the other side rising and explaining why they must have TV. Perhaps, when they do that, they would be kind enough to explain to us where they would like the cameras located.

Senator MacEachen: I have been impressed with the British Tories and Lords who love TV. That is my inspiration.

Senator Phillips: What rules will guide the television cameras? Will they show the whole Senate, as my friend Senator Roblin once expressed it, warts and all, or will we be limited to the benefit of seeing one senator only? Will the camera focus on one senator, and switch to the witness when the response is made?

• (1510)

Senator Marshall: Will they just focus on the empty seats?

Senator Phillips: Perhaps we could invite some of the staff in to fill the empty seats. That may be the answer.

Senator MacEachen: It would be better to bring senators in.

Senator Phillips: Recently I attended a meeting of the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources when it was considered essential to televise the proceedings. There were six cameras, three along each side of the table, and there was hardly room for senators. Let us bear some of these things in mind when we are satisfying the ego of the honourable senators who want to appear on television.

Honourable senators, we should consider what will happen if the Senate refuses to join in a joint committee that will probably be proposed by the government. You will remember that the Senate participated in a joint committee in 1982 when the Constitution was being developed. I think honourable senators made a worthwhile contribution to that committee. I would be curious to hear from the honourable senators opposite as to why a joint committee was desirable in 1982 and is not desirable in 1987.

Senator MacEachen expressed the viewpoint that the Senate should not join in a joint committee because the Senate has no veto over constitutional amendments. Is the honourable senator suggesting that the Senate in Committee of the Whole would have a veto? Is anyone going to pay any more attention to the views of the Senate in Committee of the Whole than they would to a joint committee?

Senator MacEachen: Yes.

Senator Frith: Next question.

Senator MacEachen: That is a clear yes, because senators could not express their views in a joint committee where the majority would be from the House of Commons.

Senator Phillips: Senator MacEachen is suggesting that the Senate did not make its views clear or that they were ignored in 1982. I do not think that is the case at all.

The Senate would probably have five members on the joint committee. I am not trying to coach Senator MacEachen and suggest who he would want to nominate, but let us consider the nomination of Senators Frith, Gigantès and Stewart, as an example. Is he suggesting that those three senators are so mediocre in their talents that they would not be able to influence a joint committee? I do not believe that at all. I think those three gentlemen would make an impact on that committee, and one that would be worthwhile hearing. I could suggest Senators Kirby, Pitfield, Argue or Austin, and certainly all of those individuals are capable of making their views known.

Another advantage of the joint committee would be that it would, doubtless, have TV coverage, and if the honourable senator is interested in TV coverage, he can get it in that joint committee. He does not need TV cameras in here.

Senator MacEachen: I might change my mind. That is the best argument yet.

Senator Phillips: The committee would also, doubtless, invite former Prime Minister Trudeau. If you want to hear from Mr. Trudeau, I am sure you can do that in the joint committee.

Senator MacEachen: Are you ready for Babushka?

Senator Phillips: Can honourable senators imagine the former Prime Minister refusing to appear before a joint committee because he wants to appear before the Senate? That would be a very unusual step for the former Prime Minister to take. I would fully expect that, having established a joint committee himself, he would prefer to appear before the joint committee. That only seems logical. I think the honourable senator is being very unfair to the former Prime Minister to even suggest he should appear before the Senate and not before a joint committee.

Again, honourable senators, I say that there is no objection to studying the Meech Lake accord. My concern is that the Senate would refuse to participate in a joint committee. If that be the case, honourable senators, consider the criticism. A number of senators are now sensitive about the criticism received by the Senate. We have not heard any criticism yet. Let the Senate refuse to join a joint committee and listen to the justified criticism that will undoubtedly occur.

The Senate is supposed to represent the provinces. May I remind the Senate that it was the federal government and the governments of the ten provinces that agreed on and urged examination of the Meech Lake accord, and they agreed upon a joint committee.

Honourable senators, I hope that the Senate will still consider a joint committee, and that it will participate in the proposal which will undoubtedly be made by the government. It is a proposal that has been approved by the federal government and the ten provinces. Surely the Senate is not going to be the odd man out.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. John B. Stewart: Would Senator Phillips permit me to ask a question? He said many controversial things and he made many points with which I would disagree completely, but towards the end of his speech he made one point which I think he would want to clarify. As I recall, he said that senators represent the provinces, and that the premiers of the provinces have already indicated quite emphatically where they stand. Does he really mean to say that senators are here representing the premiers or even the legislatures of the provinces?

My understanding is that the premiers speak for the provincial governments in areas within their jurisdiction whereas senators are members of a federal body, selected to represent the provinces in federal matters. Surely we have not yet gone to the point—this constitutional amendment has not yet carried—where senators represent premiers. Is there not a distinction there that Senator Phillips is not recognizing? I wonder if he would clarify that point.

Senator Phillips: I attempted to say that senators represent provinces, and I think we do represent provinces. I certainly did not intend to imply that senators represent the premiers. I am sure that a number of premiers would not want us representing their provinces. However, we do represent the provinces in the federal sense.

Senator Stewart: I thank the honourable senator for making it quite clear that he does not represent Premier Ghiz and that I do not represent Premier Buchanan.

Senator Phillips: Again, I say that I do not think either premier would want us.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, over the weekend I had an opportunity to study the "Langevin Resolution," as I call it, and compared it with the Meech Lake accord and how those two documents fit into the Constitution Act, 1982. I can only say that after approximately three hours I realized I was into a legalistic document of the first order, very technical in its details and with very significant underlying connotations.

● (1520)

I have grave reservations about this important and probably one of the most significant matters we have had before us in years being referred to Committee of the Whole. I will give you my reasons for that.

I have spoken to several people I think would be of great value in interpreting both the meaning of these documents from a legal point of view and their effects over the years on our judicial system and on our parliamentary system. I have found already that some of those people, whom I know the Senate would want to hear, would be very reluctant to appear before a Committee of the Whole whereas they would be pleased to appear before a committee of the Senate or a joint committee of Parliament, if necessary.

In trying to analyze that reluctance, I came to the conclusion that, as we exhibited here ourselves, the Committee of the Whole tends to break down into histrionics, wherein the evidence given by the witnesses becomes secondary to that fact. Therefore, I would like some of my friends on the opposite side of this house to consider how we may delimit ourselves and delimit the country by adopting the Committee of the Whole procedure, although it may appear to some to be politically attractive.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, there seems to be no doubt that all honourable senators support a study of the Meech Lake accord and of the Constitutional Resolution which, I assume, will be coming—in fact, we can count on the fact that it will be coming separately to the Senate, because it is part of the accord that that should happen. Senator Murray acknowledged that last week.

So, the questions, as Senator Phillips has put them and as Senator Lang has put them, are: Should we consider it in one of our own committees and, if so, should that committee be the Committee of the Whole? Or should we study it in a joint committee of Parliament?

Senator Phillips started by criticizing, or least not supporting, the Committee of the Whole procedure on the basis that, in his opinion, the Canada-France deliberations by the Committee of the Whole were, to quote him, "not a success" whereas Senator MacEachen has said that they were a success. That is a matter of opinion. On this occasion I must find myself, by conviction, on Senator MacEachen's side rather than on the side of Senator Phillips. Those to whom I have spoken outside of the Senate, who were aware of the proceedings on the Canada-France question, supported the step the Senate took and found that that procedure was a success. However, I do not think we should approach a matter of this kind on the basis of whether the Committee of the Whole on the Canada-France matter did or did not enjoy good reviews. I think this is something we should approach quite independently.

There are, it seems to me, separate reasons for deciding, first, that we should not participate in a joint committee but that we should conduct our own study. In 1982 the Senate, the House of Commons and all of the provinces necessary to bring about a constitutional amendment decided what the role of the Senate, the House of Commons and the legislatures should be in all future amending proceedings. That was as recently as 1982. We must assume that the provinces which signed the Meech Lake accord and the House of Commons intended the Senate to fulfil the duties assigned to it in 1982.

What did they ask the Senate to do? How did they suggest the Senate should participate in this amending procedure? Did they suggest, for example, that the House of Commons should propose a resolution and then send it to the Senate to ask the Senate to concur in that resolution with the House of Commons? Did they suggest the provinces should propose an amendment and then send it to the House of Commons and, finally, to the Senate for approval? No, they did not. All of those people who are signatories to the Meech Lake accord and the House of Commons agreed in 1982 that amendments to the Constitution should:

—be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by

(a) resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons;

As well as resolutions of the legislative assemblies.

So all parties had and still have an independent role to play. None is there simply to rubber stamp what is done by the others. We can launch a resolution amending the Constitution in the Senate by ourselves. We do not have to wait for the House of Commons to launch a resolution in that regard, or for the legislatures to launch resolutions in that regard; we can do that ourselves. So can the House of Commons, as can any of the legislatures. We all have, under the Constitution of Canada, our own duty, including the Senate.

The Senate is also singled out in section 47, which provides that the amending procedure can take place without the consent of the Senate in certain circumstances.

So, the Senate was asked by the House of Commons, told by itself, and asked by all of the legislatures to deal with a resolution itself. That is why, it seems to me, we would be abdicating the duties imposed upon us by those representatives of the people of Canada—that is, members of the House of Commons, members of all the legislatures and ourselves—to play our role in constitutional amendments if we decided that, as a part of the process, we would hand over part of our duty to a joint committee that would be dominated by members of the House of Commons.

Of course, the membership of that joint committee would be dominated by the House of Commons. One could not blame them for asking that the committee be dominated by members of the House of Commons. Does any honourable senator think for one minute that the members of the House of Commons, when they invite us to join them on a joint committee, are going to say, "Honourable senators, we know that you have an individual responsibility under the Constitution, the same responsibility as we, the members of the House of Commons, have to make up our own minds about constitutional amendments." That is what the Constitution says. It says that the House of Commons must make up its own mind and must decide on its own resolution, and that the Senate must decide on its own resolution. Does any honourable senator think that, with that background, the members of the House of Commons will send the Senate an invitation to join the members of that house on a joint committee and say, "We don't mind, because of your special and distinct responsibilities, if you have a majority on the committee. We will let the Senate have more members on the committee, because we know senators want to do their own job as required by the Constitution." Of course they will not.

So, a committee dominated by the House of Commons should do the job of the House of Commons and not the job of the Senate. That is why there are definite reasons, in this case particularly, to have a separate committee.

● (1530)

Why a Committee of the Whole? Why not a standing or special committee? Senator Phillips asked rhetorical questions suggesting that it might not operate. How would it operate? How would it decide who is to come? We had no difficulty in connection with the Canada-France fishing agreement. We set up a steering committee. The committee decided what witnesses should be called and got in touch with them. When the witnesses were able to come, they did so, and the procedure was handled quite effectively. I never heard anyone complain that the steering committee did not do its job, or that the committee was unable, to quote Senator Phillips' words, "to operate." It operated quite smoothly and efficiently.

When will it report? I do not know that the question has any separate significance for a Committee of the Whole. When will it report? It will report as part of the process. And what is that process? The process requires the House of Commons to have a resolution passed; it requires the Senate to have a resolution passed—these are to lead up to the proclamation—and a resolution of the legislatures. For some of the subject matters in the Meech Lake accord, it will require the unanimous support of the legislatures.

We are part of that process. When will we report? We will report, I suppose, when we have completed our investigation—the same as the other institutions involved in this process. Let us take, for example, Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia Legislature has adjourned for the summer. Therefore, it will assume its role in the process—which is no less important than ours, in fact, it is just as important—in the fall.

Premier Peterson said that he intended to make sure that everyone had a chance to be heard. So one of our partners in this important constitutional process, an important partner—namely, the Province of Ontario—will hold hearings apparently in the fall. Premier Peterson pointed out that the process could take as long as three years, and the idea of its taking that long did not seem either to surprise or alarm him.

Will we take that long? Who knows? We will do our job; and when we have done our job, we will report. I do not see any pressure on us either to hurry or delay the process. We will play our role as given to us in the Constitution.

With reference to sitting in the summer, it is very possible that that could happen. But I do not think there is any reason for us to feel hurried. Senator Phillips said that the House of Commons was going to adjourn on June 30. Assuming that is so, what is the implication—that the House of Commons will finish its resolution by June? If so, that's fine, if it wants to do that, because that is its job. It can do it any way it wants. But that is one reason why it seems to me that we should not be looking at a joint committee, if that is the kind of hurry it has in mind, when many of the other partners in the process, such as the provinces, do not see the situation as requiring that kind of closure.

On the question of co-existence—that is, whether we can have a Committee of the Whole and also have a joint committee—there is one reason why that could happen. I suppose there is no procedural difficulty. In fact, I believe there are examples. I believe it took place in connection with Bill C-60, for example. So there is no procedural reason against it.

But there are two good reasons against it. One is that if we agree to a joint committee, then we admit that our reasons for having a separate committee are not valid. The reason for having a separate Senate committee and not a joint committee, instead of or in addition to, is that we have our job to do, and we should not be looking for help from a joint committee with the House of Commons or with the Legislature of Ontario, or the Legislature of New Brunswick, or a joint committee with whomever. Should it be with everybody? Why not have a committee with everyone? Why not have a committee of all of the legislatures and of the two houses of Parliament? Why is that ridiculous? It is ridiculous because that is not what the Constitution asks us to do. It asks all of us to do our job separately.

The other reason against it is that it just would not work. How could we have a separate study here, studying it in the Senate, and yet have some senators on a joint committee? What happens when they report? Perhaps they would report differently. What happens to those senators who are on the joint committee and who are also in the chamber? What would they say? They could say, "I am a joint committee senator, I am not a Committee of the Whole senator." It is just absurd.

So, there are two very good reasons why we should not do it. First, because it is not what the Constitution contemplates, and, second, because it would not work to have the two.

On the question of sittings, that, of course, would be up to the steering committee to decide. Senator Phillips knows that I am very much in favour of having Monday and Friday sittings of committees, and I see no reason why the committee could not sit on Mondays and Fridays, or Tuesdays, Wednesdays or Thursdays. I want to make it very clear—and if this is the point which Senator Phillips is raising; and if so, it is a valid one—that if Senator Phillips is objecting to the Committee of the Whole because he believes that it is our intention to limit the sittings of the Committee of the Whole to Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays when the Senate normally sits, that is not the purpose, and I put it on the record that that is not the purpose.

I thank him for the list. We have a steering committee, and it can decide on sittings. We will be grateful for that list of proposed witnesses, which Senator Phillips outlined in his intervention. I thank him also for reading the newspaper article regarding some scheme to undermine Mr. Turner. I welcome the opportunity to point out that the proposal for a separate committee and for a Committee of the Whole were advanced here before any intervention by Mr. Trudeau. The burden of the suggestion is that some senators are doing the work for Mr. Trudeau. I know that the senators who support this approach are doing it for themselves and not as a group supporting any cabal to undermine anyone. It is being proposed, as we see it, for the benefit of the Senate, and for the reasons I have described—namely, that the Senate has to play its own role given to it in the Constitution.

On the question of television, Senator Phillips has spoken on several previous occasions on the question of televising the proceedings of the Senate. I must say that he is entitled to the tribute of consistency—to mono-consistency. He seems to feel that the only reason why anyone would want to televise the proceedings in the Senate is because of the ego of the person proposing it.

Some Hon. Senators: Shame!

Senator Frith: Does the honourable senator hear his colleagues? I join with them. I, too, say "shame" for having that as the only reason. I do not understand why he seems to think that it is only other people who, in their opinion, would show up well on television. We saw Senator Phillips perform today. It was a terrific act. I think he would have shown up very well on television today.

Senator Perrault: There's no business like show business!

Senator Frith: The honourable senator is much too modest if he thinks that the only reason for appearing on television is because of ego, and that somehow he thinks that his ego would not be so served. However, that is not the reason.

• (1540)

I do not understand any other reason for Senator Phillips to be opposed. I know he is not by nature a secretive or mean-spirited person. I know that his style is generous; that he is a populist, a true democrat, and for those reasons I ask him to engage that side of his character in looking at how television will aid the people of Canada in gaining access to the proceedings of the Senate on a very important issue; an issue that they are entitled to hear about.

We know that the greatest communicating device in modern times is television. For example, everyone seems to agree that television has done great things for the House of Lords. Therefore, I do not understand, when we are engaged in such important work, why we should not want to have the people of the country join in the proceedings in order to get the benefit of what, I think, is part of the role that the Senate should play in exposing matters of this kind to public scrutiny. I think we should welcome the opportunity to do so through the medium of television, in addition to radio and print.

Honourable senators, that leaves just a couple of points: The question of why, in 1982, we engaged in a procedure by joint committee as opposed to our present suggestion that we ought not to do so. I remind honourable senators that the situation in 1982 was not the same. For one thing, the amending formula that now exists did not then exist, and the formula that I have underlined and relied upon as a reason for us to take our individual responsibility is the formula that is contained in the pact of 1982. In any event, nothing that happened in 1982 should deter us from that acceptance of our responsibility.

The next question is: Will there be criticism? This is another thing we constantly hear. As senators, I am sure that we all understand that agreeing to become a Canadian senator is accepting a fundamental Catch-22, or dilemma, and that is: If one as a senator, or if the Senate as a whole, does nothing, it is criticized for doing nothing. The minute it does something, it is criticized by way of people saying: "How come you have the nerve to do something?" Therefore, whether we do things or refrain from doing things, we are criticized, and I do not complain about that. Anyone who takes this job has to expect that kind of trouble, because we all know that that is the role or the position that you accept when you become a senator. Therefore, as a result of that, when we do propose to take action, especially important action such as that which faces us now—and that is a separate study and a Committee of the Whole on this proposed amendment—we anticipate criticism.

Is Senator Phillips right when he says that there will be criticism of us for deciding to stiffen our spines and take our responsibility? Of course he is right; of course there will be criticism. But surely the question is, if we are right—and I think we are—should we let that deter us? I hope not. I hope we will not let that deter us.

I respect the opinion of any senator who thinks that there should be a joint committee as I respect the opinion of any senator who disagrees with my view that if there is a separate committee, it should be a Committee of the Whole. However, honourable senators, let us not decide anything of this kind on the basis of fear of criticism. When the Fathers of Confederation set up this body, they must have known that there would always be criticism directed at it for its activities when it accepted its responsibilities, if those responsibilities were unpopular with the press or with members of the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, I have nothing further to say about the question of a joint committee, because I have outlined why I think it would be a terrible mistake and an abdication of our duty to go with a joint committee on this occasion. However, on Senator Lang's question of whether it should be a Committee of the Whole or a select committee, I remind honourable senators of the intervention by Senator MacEachen, when he introduced this motion, as to the reasons why we should have a Committee of the Whole. In summary, those reasons that recommend themselves to me are: I believe that this is the kind of matter in which all senators should be present for all proceedings, and that those proceedings should take place right here in the chamber. I think the Committee of the Whole is eminently suitably designed for this procedure.

Also, I think we can take heart from the proceedings that we held on the Canada-France question. I thought that they were dignified. No witness who ever appeared here objected, and I recommend that to Senator Lang's potential witnesses. I do not know how much they know about the procedure of Committee of the Whole in the Senate. Senator Lang says that they have some fear that there will be too many histrionics. In fact, I have seen more histrionics in select committees than I ever saw in Committee of the Whole. Senator Lang has been here longer than I have, but I have been here for more than ten years, and every time we have had Committee of the Whole, it has either been on the Canada-France matter or it has been when we have had some special bill: for example, the question of a strike that required legislation for settlement, or other occasions when it was suitable to have the minister appear before Committee of the Whole. Honourable senators, on none of those occasions do I recall any histrionics. Certainly there was none on the Canada-France hearings. Perhaps Senator Lang was not present for those, but I do not remember any histrionics on the Canada-France hearings, and I would have been very proud to have those proceedings produced on television. I never heard a complaint from a witness.

Therefore, I thank Senator Lang for having studied the two versions and having come up with what I believe is a true and correct analysis; that there are many technical issues and questions on which we must have advice. However, there are also some very broad issues, and on the broad issues I think the Senate Committee of the Whole would be a perfect vehicle to deal with them in the same way as we did with the Canada-France agreement. I also think it would be the perfect vehicle to deal with the detail. For example, someone who has publicly made some comments on the technical aspects of the Meech Lake accord: John J. Robinette. Why should all of us not have the benefit of Mr. Robinette coming here? We are not going to pull any histrionics on Mr. Robinette. We are going to listen to him and hear what he has to say, and we are all going to benefit from his advice.

Therefore, honourable senators, I really believe that this is a classic example of an undertaking by the Senate of Canada to fulfil its responsibilities under the Constitution; to do so separately; to accept its separate and distinct responsibility, and I do believe that the Committee of the Whole is the perfect place in which to do it, because I think we should all be present and all participate and be enlightened and edified at the same time, and together, for this important process.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, before I direct a question to Senator Frith, let me congratulate him on the progress he is making with his drama lessons. You are doing very well, sir.

Senator Frith: I am not taking any lessons, but I am prepared to give some, if you wish—for a fee.

● (1550)

Senator Phillips: The question I would like to ask in an effort to get clarification is this: I believe the Honourable Senator Frith said that the motion introduced by Senator MacEachen was made prior to Mr. Trudeau's nailing his edict on the doors of Parliament. Is that correct?

Senator Frith: No, the notice of the motion was given prior. As I recall it, the notice was given on a Tuesday. Mr. Trudeau's declaration, or whatever the right word is, was made on the Wednesday of the same week. I may be wrong, but I believe I am right. Check it.

Senator Phillips: I will do that.

On motion of Senator Doody, for Senator Murray, debate adjourned.

THE ESTIMATES, 1987-88

INTERIM REPORT OF NATIONAL FINANCE COMMITTEE—DEBATE CONCLUDED

On the order:

Consideration of the Eleventh Report of the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance (Main Estimates 1987-88), presented in the Senate on 28th May, 1987.—
(Honourable Senator Leblanc (Saurel)).

Hon. Fernand-E. Leblanc: Honourable senators, the report tabled on Thursday, May 28, is an interim report. It explains the work done by the Committee on National Finance regarding the estimates. In conclusion, it gives an indication of the work to be done. Considering the evaluation of this report, I did not ask the Senate to concur in a report that deals simply with past and future work. If no one else wishes to speak on this report, that is comprehensive in my opinion, I think we could now conclude the debate.

The Hon. the Speaker: If no other senator wishes to speak, the debate on this item is concluded.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX "B"

(See p. 1175)

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

TUESDAY, June 9, 1987

The Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

INTRODUCTION

1. In compliance with its Order of Reference from the Senate dated April 15, 1986, and its Order of Reference from the House of Commons dated April 15, 1986, both of which dealt with the 1985 Annual Report by the Commissioner of Official Languages, your Committee discussed with the Commissioner amendments to the Official Languages Act, and considered the situation of Canada's official-language minorities, concentrating in particular on education in the language of official-language minorities.
2. In response to a recommendation by the Special Joint Committee on Official Languages in its Fifth Report, tabled in April 1983, the government changed the Committee's status to that of a Standing Committee. In February 1986, following adoption of the new Standing Orders of the House of Commons, the Committee was re-named the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages.
3. The Committee held 18 public hearings between October 1985 and June 1986, at which many witnesses were heard. On the subject of amendments to the Official Languages Act, it heard the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Secretary of State. On the subject of education in the language of official-language minorities, the Committee heard the following witnesses: representatives of associations such as the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, Alliance Québec, the Société nationale des Acadiens, the Association canadienne d'éducation de langue française, the Canadian Teachers' Federation, Canadian Parents for

French and the Commission nationale des parents francophones. Lastly, a number of expert witnesses spoke with the Committee: Messrs. Bastarache, Lachapelle, Caldwell, Castonguay, Cartwright, Foucher, Scott, Goldenberg and Churchill. (Appendix I contains a list of the witnesses heard and the meetings held during the First and Second Sessions of the Thirty-Third Parliament.)

4. This Report therefore deals with the two areas mentioned above (the bill to amend the Official Languages Act and education in the language of official-language minorities) and contains three related recommendations.

Amendments to the Official Languages Act

5. The Official Languages Act was passed in 1969 with the support of all parties, and has never been amended. Since its creation in 1980, the Committee on Official Languages of the Senate and the House of Commons has been considering the application of the Act in the policies and programs initiated by the government. To do so, it has frequently invited to appear before it representatives of the central agencies responsible for implementing the Act within the Public Service, as well as outside it, among the official-language communities themselves. The Committee has also heard representatives of various government departments and bodies. And also, it has on a number of occasions discussed possible improvements to the Act with the two most recent Commissioners of Official Languages. It has regularly tabled to Parliament Reports concerned with such improvements: in July 1981, June 1982, April 1983 and June 1985.
6. The Committee is thus in an excellent position to assess the appropriateness of the changes the Government is planning to make to the Act. Its members, both Senators and Members of the House of Commons, share a lively interest as well as a broad range of expertise in the area of official languages. It seems reasonable, therefore, that the Committee on Official Languages should consider the bill, rather than a legislative committee. Such a measure would also help expedite the procedure, as the two Houses would be considering the bill simultaneously.

For this reason the Committee recommends:

RECOMMENDATION 1

THAT the bill to amend the Official Languages Act be referred to the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages.

Official Languages in Education

7. Education in the language of the official-language minority has been and continues to be, a subject of controversy in a number of provinces. Although education falls under provincial jurisdiction, by virtue of section 93 of the Constitution Act, 1867, the teaching of the language for the official-language minority is subject to the provisions of the Constitution, under section 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
8. A number of witnesses appeared before the Committee to describe the persistent difficulties facing education in the language of the minority. The chief difficulties raised were:
 - Most provincial legislatures still do not comply with the requirements set down in section 23 of the Charter with respect to access to education in the language of the official-language minority and to governance of institutions serving such minorities; the result is that many cases are now being heard by the courts and others are being prepared;
 - It has been indicated to the Committee that the financial assistance given by the federal government to the provinces in support of official languages in education is not always used towards the aims for which it was intended; this question should be studied seriously on the eve of discussions intended to lead to renewal of the bilateral agreements in this regard;
 - The Committee heard numerous complaints about the lack of post-secondary education in French outside Quebec; since the federal government contributes on a large scale to post-secondary funding, it might therefore be useful to work towards the development of post-secondary education for Canada's French-speaking minority.

For this reason the Committee recommends:

RECOMMENDATION 2

THAT the government call a federal-provincial First Ministers' conference early in 1988 to discuss official languages in education at the elementary, secondary and post-secondary levels throughout Canada.

RECOMMENDATION 3

THAT the government add to the agenda of the forum on post-secondary education that is to be held in Saskatoon, in October 1987, the question of the lack of post-secondary education for Canada's French-speaking minority.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 10, 1987

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

THE SENATE

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I should like to attempt to correct a comment in yesterday's Hansard following the statement of the Leader of the Government with respect to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the establishment of which was supported generously by a number of senators, even though some may have had misgivings. It was particularly supported by those senators from the Atlantic region—Senators MacEachen, Thériault, Bonnell and De Bané. I find it difficult to understand some of the comments, and that is why I rise at this time. My difficulty is with respect to remarks attributed to Senator Olson.

Senator Frith: Which page are you referring to?

Senator MacDonald: These comments appear at page 1171, where Senator Olson said:

... I am sure that all the words the minister just uttered were taken from the text of the speeches made when MSERD was set up in the first place. They are exactly the same.

Colleagues will know that MSERD is the acronym for Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development. He went on to discuss the merits of what was known then as MSERD, at which time Senator Murray interjected:

It was DREE that was destroyed.

Senator Olson said:

It was not DREE that was destroyed but the Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development, and the acronym for that is MSERD. All the great things that the minister has said about what they are going to do were there in that original announcement.

Then there follows a discourse between some honourable senators. Then Senator Murray said:

But you were a member of the government when the administration of John Turner did away with that.

Senator Olson replied:

I want the record to show accurately that this government completely abandoned regional economic development on September 4, 1984, when they were elected. Now they have finally come to recognize that there was a program in place...

and so on. I then asked him:

Who destroyed MSERD?

I put the question to Senator Olson, to which he replied:

You guys.

Then Senator Frith said, cheekily:

We are glad you asked that. Are there any other questions?

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): What did I say? Honourable senators, could I ask two questions? First, under what heading are we in terms of procedure? Second, could I ask Senator MacDonald which adverb it was that he just used?

Senator MacDonald: The adverb, Senator Frith, was "cheekily".

Senator Frith: Thank you.

Senator MacDonald: The key question, before I was distracted, was: "Who destroyed MSERD?" I asked a simple question. "You guys," said Senator Olson. "Are there any other questions?", cheekily asked Senator Frith.

I have to say that both MSERD and the other agency, which is not part of this, were abolished by Order in Council P.C. 1984-3036 of August 31, 1984, to be effective the following day, September 1, 1984. They were abolished under the prime ministership of the Right Honourable John Turner. I simply ask Senator Olson if he will be kind enough to acknowledge the correction.

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I will be happy, for the sake of accuracy, to say that I was aware that there was an order in council passed prior to the term of office of John Turner. But you guys destroyed the structure that was set up. That has not changed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: It was still in place. There was an election on September 4, but you did not get into office until September 17—you should remember a little more carefully—because it took a few days for the old government to resign and move out and for you people to move in. If you bothered to read the rest of what I said, you would find that I said that what was in place was an organization known as MSERD, with all of the trappings and details and the administrative requirements that are there to make it work, and so on—exactly the same thing that Senator Murray described in his speech yesterday. There is no question in my mind as to who destroyed that whole thing.

If you want to be accurate, I should point out that Senator Murray said:

But you were a member of the government when the administration of John Turner did away with that.

I was never part of that administration. If you want to speak of accuracy, then let us have it completely accurate. There is a bit of a problem here, because I do not really know on what basis Senator MacDonald occupied the floor at this stage. If one disagrees with someone in debate, I guess that one can get up and say, "I disagree with you. I want to correct it," and so on. But there is no question of privilege, because I did nothing to offend any member of the Senate. Is there any point of order?

Senator Frith: I was the one who was cheeky, not you.

Senator Olson: Yes, it was the honourable senator who was cheeky, not me. Are we setting up something that is new, a new question of something? Possibly it is a question of disagreement. It is not a question of privilege and it is not a point of order. What reason did Senator MacDonald have for rising in his place?

Senator Roblin: You were just wrong, that's all.

Senator Olson: Senator Roblin knows enough about the rules in a democratic forum to know that one does not jump to one's feet for nothing. I am not sure on what basis Senator MacDonald is making what he alleges to be a correction. Really, it is a difference of opinion as expressed in debate.

Senator Roblin: It's a fact.

Senator Olson: I know when the P.C. order was passed. But you guys destroyed the whole structure that was set up.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: This gives me an opportunity to tell Senator Murray one or two things that I think he ought to know, which is that he will come back here day after day saying that he has not had enough time to get the infrastructure and all of the trappings that he needs in place so that he can deliver some effective regional economic development. I can predict that now. I will just tell him that had he left what was there, set up by competent bureaucrats and politicians, including support from some Conservatives, he would not have to waste all that time in putting it in place now.

As a matter of fact, the person whom he named—I am not quite sure of this; I will check it. I think it is a Mr. McPhail—to be the head bureaucrat of this new agency was, in fact, the FEDC officer in New Brunswick when they destroyed it. I am not sure whether it is the same name, so I want to be careful.

Senator Murray: It was DREE before that.

Senator Olson: So now you are bringing them all back. It is a lot of garbage to say that you are coming in with a new program. You are so bankrupt of ways of doing things in areas where you know you have responsibility that you are going back to look at stuff that is already five or six years out of date. I am glad that at least you acknowledge that there were some good things going then that you feel you must resurrect now. It is a little late. The sad part about it—and I hope Senator MacDonald is listening—is that you have wasted all this time. It is too bad.

Senator MacDonald: Why should I listen? You are never going to make the point anyway.

Senator Olson: If honourable senators opposite look at the polls that came out this morning, they will find that the kind of garbage they are perpetuating in here is not being bought by the people out there. The people want some action. They want this government to demonstrate what it can do, and not come along with a bunch of fancy ideas and words that really involve the resurrection of something that was set up months and, in many cases, years ago.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacDonald: Honourable senators, possibly some honourable experts in this house can indicate to me, as a relative newcomer—only two and a half years tenure—the proper procedure for drawing to the attention of the Senate a statement made, in this case yesterday, which is totally incorrect. Perhaps someone could advise me as to what my privileges are with respect to getting up and pointing out this inaccuracy. I am not making a case, good or bad, for MSERD. I am simply asking Senator Olson—

Senator Frith: Checkily!

Senator MacDonald: —to acknowledge, without distracting us by raising matters involving Mr. McPhail, previous events or anything else, that he was wrong when he answered my question, "Who destroyed MSERD?" He says, "You guys." It was not us guys, it was you guys! Just acknowledge it! I shall not hold up the proceedings of the chamber any longer.

Senator Olson: Peace!

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN GALLERY

Hon. Rhéal Bélisle: Honourable senators, I would like to draw to your attention the presence in our gallery of a parliamentary delegation from India led by the Honourable D. Shankaranad, Minister of Water Resources, and the High Commissioner of India, Mr. S.J.S. Chhatwal.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

THIRD REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Dan Hays: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its third report respecting power to incur special expenses pursuant to the procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

A Clerk at the Table:

Wednesday, June 10, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has the honour to present its

THIRD REPORT

Your Committee, which was authorized by the Senate on May 6, 1987, to examine and report upon Farm Finance to assess the gravity of the current problems facing the Canadian Agricultural Industry, to consider the degree to which existing government policy and programs have been successful in meeting their objectives and to make recommendations on how to better meet the needs of the Canadian Agricultural Industry,—

Some Hon. Senators: Dispense.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, I would like to have the report read.

A Clerk at the Table:

—respectfully requests that it be empowered (i) to engage the services of such counsel and technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of such study, and (ii) to adjourn from place to place within and outside Canada for the purpose of such study.

Pursuant to Section 2:07 of the Procedural Guidelines for the Financial Operation of Senate Committees the budget submitted to the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration and the report thereon of that Committee are appended to this report.

Respectfully submitted,

DANIEL HAYS
Chairman

(For text of appendices to report, see p. 1209.)

• (1410)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the report be taken into consideration now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I think it would be appropriate to let us have a chance to read the report before it is debated.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I am sorry, I did not hear Senator Roblin.

Senator Roblin: I would much prefer if it were dealt with at the next sitting of the Senate and not now.

Senator Hays: Honourable senators, I have not had an opportunity to speak to the deputy chairman about this, but if the matter could be adjourned in his name, so that it can be dealt with during my absence next week, that would be appropriate.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: What about tomorrow, that is, at the next sitting of the Senate?

Senator Hays: Very well.

On motion of Senator Hays, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—AVAILABILITY OF CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO FRANCE AS WITNESS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, yesterday Senator Phillips, in his address to the Senate, referred to the examination of the Canada-France fisheries and boundaries agreement by the Committee of the Whole. His intervention brought to mind that that subject still remains an item of unfinished business that takes on additional urgency in light of the announcement that the French are now proposing to undertake explorations in the disputed zone off St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Honourable senators, the steering committee had been interested in securing the evidence of Mr. Lucien Bouchard, the Canadian Ambassador to France. However, at that time we were notified by the department that Mr. Bouchard was deeply involved in the preparations for the visit to Canada of President Mitterrand and could not attend. I wonder whether the Leader of the Government would assist us in determining whether Ambassador Bouchard could come to the committee now so that we could get a French perspective on these developments. I know that when he was in Ottawa, the ambassador made himself available to the party caucuses, and I thought that it would strengthen our hand in having him appear before the Senate Committee of the Whole, in view of his availability to address the Liberal caucus, the NDP caucus and, I presume, the Conservative caucus.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Opposition for reminding me that I had agreed to convey to our colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the considerable interest of honourable senators in hearing Ambassador Bouchard. I did follow through on that undertaking, and I did send a message to my colleague, but I have not yet heard back, and I will make inquiries shortly.

FRENCH EXPLORATION IN DISPUTED ZONE—ROLE OF PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): I thank the minister for that assurance of assistance.

I should like to ask a somewhat related question, and that is whether President Mitterrand alerted the Government of Canada to the possibility of France's undertaking exploration in the disputed zone.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have no reason to believe that that was the case.

Senator MacEachen: The minister said that he has no reason to believe that that was the case, which is not a complete answer to the question. I should like to have it confirmed with a "yes" or "no" whether the President of France came to Canada, had discussions on this sensitive question of boundaries with the Government of Canada, and did not tell the Government of Canada that his government was proposing quick action in asserting its jurisdiction in the disputed zone.

It is obvious that a decision to explore is an assertion of jurisdiction, and anticipates the negotiations that were to take place to determine the boundary.

Perhaps the minister does not have the answer today, but I should like to have some information on that point, because I think it says something about the frankness of the exchanges between the two governments, if President Mitterrand did not convey the intention of the Government of France with respect to exploration in the disputed zone.

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Government in the Senate said yesterday that he would bring some information to the Senate today respecting the 70 per cent of the $1 billion that was to be paid in deficiency payments to western grain farmers and that has not been paid.

He also indicated that he was going to bring to the Senate information respecting whether or not Canada was successful in making representations to the Government of the United States, dealing with the regulatory order made by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission prohibiting sellers and transporters of Canadian natural gas from adding on transportation costs, so that there could be a flow through of those costs to the utilities and the consumers. He said that he would give the Senate information on that today.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with regard to the first part of the question, I am informed by the Minister of Agriculture that the cheques are or will be in the mail this afternoon.

Regarding the second question, I have no further information on the FERC decision, but I do hope to have something tomorrow.

DELAYED ANSWERS TO ORAL QUESTIONS
THE CONSTITUTION

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—INTERPRETATION OF TEXT RE
AGENDA FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 28 last by the Honourable Senator John B. Stewart regarding The Constitution—First Ministers' Accord—Interpretation of Text Re Agenda for First Ministers' Conferences.

(The answer follows:)

Clause 13 of the Schedule found in the Constitutional Accord signed on June 3 by First Ministers clearly states that the annual constitutional conferences "shall have included on their agenda" the matters referred to in the Honourable Senator's question. This agenda is thus mandatory for the first and subsequent conferences.

Understandably, First Ministers could agree to repeal this obligation, for example, once Senate reform had been achieved.

FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD—TERMINOLOGY OF TEXT—DANGER OF CLASSIFYING FRENCH-CANADIANS UNDER TWO CATEGORIES

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a delayed answer in response to a question asked in the Senate on May 28 last by the Honourable Senator Pierre De Bané regarding The Constitution—First Ministers' Accord—Terminology of Text—Danger of Classifying French Canadians Under Two Categories.

(The answer follows:)

The proposed amendments, which are appended to the constitutional accord signed by First Ministers on June 3, recognize the existence of "French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada . . ."

This recognition will not create, as suggested by the Honourable Senator, two groups of French-speaking Canadians. Rather, it makes clear that the existence of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians, no matter where they live, is a fundamental characteristic of Canada.

As for the use of the words "promote" and "preserve", it should be noted that Parliament and provincial legislatures will not in any way be limited in efforts to promote the fundamental characteristic of Canada described in the constitutional text. It represents, for the first time in Canadian history, a common commitment of governments to the linguistic duality of Canada. Parliament has played and will continue to play a major role in promoting respect and understanding in this area.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, while this item is adjourned in the name of Senator Doody, he is willing to yield to any other senator who wishes to speak on it.

Order stands.

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION TO REFER FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.—(Honourable Senator Murray, P.C.).

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, the motion before us has to do with the parliamentary procedure to be followed in the case of the resolution to amend the Constitution.

I do not intend today to speak to the subject matter of the resolution itself. In the near future I will have an opportunity to open the debate on the motion in this House. However my position and that of the government are very well known.

However the position of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate is not as clear. He did not take the opportunity—

Senator Frith: The Leader of the Opposition in the Senate?

Senator Murray: The position of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate is not very well known.

Senator MacEachen did not take the opportunity of his speech last June 2 to state clearly his position on the constitutional project. As far as I know he has yet to endorse, at least publicly, the courageous, crystal-clear and unequivocal position of his national leader, the Right Honourable John Turner.

Still, the statement on the Meech Lake accord made in this house by the Leader of the Opposition last May 5 as well as his interventions during the oral question period since then enable us to draw certain conclusions concerning his approach to this project.

According to his May 5 statement, the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate claims that the accord would represent a significant shift of power and authority from the Parliament of Canada to the provinces. He seems to denote a weakening of Parliament and the federal government to the benefit of the provinces.

[Senator Phillips.]

During the oral question periods since May 5, Senator MacEachen, with the support of Senators Frith and Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough), has led an attack against the Meech Lake accord.

Hon. Senators: No.

Senator Murray: They all seem very concerned, if not scandalized, about the recognition of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada in the Constitution and about what they see as the implications. Most of their questions and comments in the house on the Constitution were, in fact, about the issue of recognizing Quebec as a distinct society in our Constitution.

As my colleague, Senator Phillips, said yesterday, considering the tone and scope of the questions and comments we heard from these three senators, we may conclude they are not lining up behind their present leader, Mr. Turner, but behind the former leader, the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

We do not know whether the Liberal caucus in the Senate supports the approach taken by the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, or if the Liberal senators stand solidly behind their national leader, Mr. Turner.

In any case, honourable senators, there are several aspects of the public debate on the Constitutional accord on which I would like to comment briefly this afternoon.

First, I notice to my great satisfaction the very positive reception given by Canadians to the accord. According to all the polls, Canadians support the accord by a very impressive majority. Fifty-one per cent are in favour, 27 per cent are against, and 21 per cent are undecided, according to the poll by Maclean's magazine. In fact, all the components of the accord seem to be receiving solid support in the various polls.

What is even more satisfying and revealing is the massive support shown by Quebecers. The headline in Le Devoir of June 4: "Canada says yes to Quebec", seems to summarize in one sentence what a majority of Quebecers had been waiting for since 1982.

This accord will enable Quebec to take its place at the constitutional table with, to borrow a phrase from Prime Minister Mulroney, "honour and enthusiasm". I think our fellow Canadians are very impressed with the unanimous support the accord received from the eleven First Ministers. Canadians have waited a long time for a sign that federal and provincial governments are capable of working together in the national interest.

Fortunately, this unanimous support is now being echoed in the Parliament of Canada, at least by the leaders of the three political parties in the House of Commons. And as I have said before, we must not forget the extraordinary leadership and national vision of Prime Minister Mulroney, without whom this accord would not have been achieved.

May I also commend Mr. Turner and Mr. Broadbent, who are giving the constitutional proposal a non-partisan aspect that will make it still more legitimate, impressive and convincing.

The position taken by Mr. Turner on the accord is in basic agreement with the statements he made over these last two years and the policies voted by the Liberal Party's national convention. I would say roughly the same for Mr. Broadbent and the New Democratic Party.

The five conditions set by Quebec to its concurrence to the 1982 constitutional agreement were put forward by Mr. Bourassa and the Quebec Liberal Party during the provincial elections, in December 1985. That was an integral part and a major component of his electoral platform. As we know, Mr. Bourassa and his colleagues received quite an impressive mandate at that election.

Since then, Quebec's premier and Minister Rémillard elaborated on many occasions on Quebec's five proposals. Notably in May of last year, at Mont-Gabriel.

Mr. Turner, for his part, publicly commented in a very open and positive way on Quebec's proposals. In particular, he gave a long interview to Le Devoir on June 13, 1986.

Senator Frith: The reference is always to process, rather than substance, as you promised.

Senator Murray: That involves the process that we just started in this house and in Parliament. It is very unfortunate indeed if my friend finds it hard to accept the information I am providing him.

Mr. Turner, as I said, commented publicly, in an open and positive way on Quebec's proposals, in an interview with Le Devoir, on June 13, 1986. That interview dealt with almost every component of the constitutional, Canada-Quebec matter.

On November 29 and 30 last, the National Convention of the Liberal Party adopted a number of resolutions concerning Quebec, the Constitution and even the Senate. There is therefore nothing surprising about Mr. Turner's support for the accord. In fact, the opposite would have been a surprise. I would have been most astonished had he opposed it.

[English]

Mr. Turner, of course, has taken the position that there are details in this accord that he thinks might have been done differently and, in his view, might have been done better. He intends, as is his right and duty, to draw attention to these matters in the course of the parliamentary proceedings. He has also made it clear, however, that the official position of his party is that its members will vote for the accord as it is at the end of the debate.

I raise these matters now not to discuss the affairs of the Liberal Party but because the point, the very important and essential point, that Mr. Turner has made touches upon the parliamentary process that we are discussing today. It seems to me that Mr. Turner recognizes, first, that whatever reservations he may have on certain details are outweighed by the attainment of the goal that we all share—the voluntary assent of Quebec to the Constitution. Put another way, his reservations on certain details are not such, he believes, as to justify his attempting to block the achievement of Quebec's reintegration.

Second, as a practical matter, Mr. Turner knows that there will be a second round. It is provided for in the accord. Indeed, there will be annual conferences on the Constitution, during which some of the proposals he and others are now putting forward can be considered. He can use, and obviously intends to use, the parliamentary process we are now embarking on to have these proposals discussed in the hope that we might reach agreement on them at a future conference.

Third, he knows that if the present resolution does not pass Parliament and the legislatures, there will be no second round. Our constitutional evolution would continue to be blocked, or at least badly impeded, by the refusal of Quebec to participate in it.

Fourth, Mr. Turner knows that in the present process no Parliament, no legislature, can unilaterally effect a change in the resolution. Any amendment, unless it already enjoyed unanimous agreement, would require that we begin again at zero; that is, that we commence the process all over again. So he is, as a practical matter and as a matter of principle, prepared to make his points strongly this round and to vote for the resolution at the end of the day.

Fifth, of course—and here I may be stepping somewhat on to territory that is not my own—he has said, and properly and correctly so, that he is on the right side of history. I cannot but recall that, while attention is paid to dissenting voices from time to time, history will always judge in the near and the longer term where the leader and the party stood on such a matter. My mind goes back—not with a great deal of pleasure, but, nevertheless, it does go back—to the year 1969 when the Official Languages Act was going through Parliament. Mr. Stanfield and the large majority of his caucus voted in favour of the bill. Some 16 or 17 members stood in opposition to it. The experience did not destroy or ruin the Progressive Conservative Party. The large majority, in any case, stood together. What would have destroyed the Progressive Conservative Party for some time to come would have been if the leader of the caucus had officially been opposed or, worse, tried to equivocate on a matter of fundamental and national importance.

[Translation]

I referred earlier to the headline in Le Devoir of June 4, 1987—"Canada says yes to Quebec". It is my ardent hope there will never be cause to change that headline to read: "Canada says yes to Quebec, but Liberal senators say no."

[English]

The debate on the motion that is now before us has touched to a great extent on the different roles of the Senate and the House of Commons in constitutional amendment. It has been pointed out that our roles are different, and that we in the Senate have only a suspensive veto. As honourable senators know, our powers, in principle at least, are virtually equal to those of the House of Commons in most other respects. It follows, it seems to me, that those who framed the Constitution in 1982 wanted to give the Senate a lesser role, even a subordinate role—a suspensive veto—vis-à-vis that of the House of Commons.

Senator Olson: It was not for that reason, either.

Senator Murray: I am not aware that my honourable friend was one of the framers of the Constitution in 1982 so that he can speak clearly to the motivation behind it.

Senator Frith: But you don't have any such inhibition and you were not any such framer.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, we have the evidence that a constitutional amendment must pass the various provincial legislatures, it must pass the House of Commons, and it will pass the Senate after six months if the House of Commons re-introduces it. We have only a suspensive veto.

Senator Frith: In that case, it will not pass the Senate. It will pass without the Senate.

Senator Murray: It will pass without the Senate, quite. What that amounts to, and surely Senator Olson will agree to this, is a lesser role for the Senate in the process of constitutional amendment—a role that is less than that enjoyed by or accorded to the House of Commons. That is a fact. It is not an interpretation. It is not a statement of anyone's motivation, it is a fact.

Senator Olson: It is your interpretation.

Senator Murray: Under the circumstances, I raise the question as to whether this house should not, as we normally do, defer to the elected chamber insofar as the process is concerned. We have a motion before us to refer this matter to Committee of the Whole. I must inform the Senate what I am sure most senators already know, that the government proposes that there shall be a joint committee of this place and the House of Commons. The Deputy Prime Minister has made a proposal, as of last Monday, to the house leaders of the other parties in the House of Commons. Indeed, he has left with them a draft joint order for the creation of a joint committee. So it seems as certain as one can be that we in the Senate will be confronted in a couple of days with a motion from the House of Commons asking us to concur in the creation of a joint committee of this place and the other place to study the constitutional resolution.

Surely we are not, therefore, going to anticipate that motion, which we know is coming, and which is based on a proposal for a joint committee, which we have known for some days was on the table. Surely we are not going to anticipate this by rushing ahead today and referring the matter to a Committee of the Whole. Is the Senate going to put itself in the position of refusing to concur with a motion which we know is coming to create a joint committee? I certainly hope not. I would have hoped that honourable senators opposite, and the Leader of the Opposition in particular, knowing what they know, would have agreed that the Leader of the Opposition withdraw his motion, or at any rate adjourn it, until we have heard from the House of Commons as to its desire in connection with the parliamentary process.

[Senator Murray.]

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I have an amendment to the present motion which I believe will accomplish the purposes of which I speak. My amendment, seconded by Senator Phillips, is:

That the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended to read as follows:

That unless a message is received from the House of Commons by Wednesday, June 17, 1987, inviting the Senate to participate in a special joint committee on the Constitution, the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Argue: A good try, but it won't work.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Murray, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Phillips:

That the motion be not now adopted, but that it be amended to read as follows:

That unless a message is received from the House of Commons by Wednesday, June 17, 1987, inviting the Senate to participate in a special joint committee on the Constitution, the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

POINTS OF ORDER

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I know that Senator Olson wishes to address this question now, but I would like to make it clear that I wish to raise a point of order on the amendment, which I regard as a new substantive motion requiring notice. In other words, it is not an amendment.

Senator Frith: Quite right. You could look it up.

Senator MacEachen: It is a substantive motion in itself, and its purpose could be achieved by a straight negating of the main motion.

Senator Frith: Agreed. Exactly.

Senator MacEachen: I simply assert that it is out of order, and I will be arguing that point.

Senator Argue: A double negative.

Hon. Eymard G. Corbin: Honourable senators, on another point of order, I question the acceptability of the motion, procedurally speaking, inasmuch as it attaches a condition; and I would like that matter to be debated and examined, and perhaps we should also have a ruling on that aspect of it.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I presume that the comments of Senator Corbin and myself have been noted and that it is clearly understood that there are two points of order before the chamber to be dealt with in the normal way.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I will be interested to hear from the Leader of the Opposition on his assertion that Senator Murray's motion in amendment is a substantive motion. It does not alter the principle of the motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition. All it does is ask that the house delay a decision. I believe the motion in amendment is in order, and I am interested in the fact that his colleague, Senator Olson, is now prepared to speak. On what will he be speaking?

Hon. H.A. Olson: I did not know that the Leader of the Government was going to move an amendment.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): You gave us no notice that you were going to move an amendment.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, speaking first to the point of order that has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition, I fully concur in his view that this is not a proper amendment to the motion that is before us. I have to say also that I fully agree with Senator Corbin's assertion that this makes the motion before this chamber conditional on some action being taken in the other place. That is unprecedented. There is no provision of any kind in the rules of which I have ever heard that says that one can move something on the floor of this chamber, some assertive action, provided that somebody else does something in the meantime. That is the most ridiculous condition to a motion that I have ever heard.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Olson: I think that both Senator Corbin and the Leader of the Opposition are right. Quite frankly, I wanted to make a speech, because I have some very firm views on some of the matters contained in the Meech Lake accord. The motion, as I knew it up until five minutes ago, was to bring it before this chamber in Committee of the Whole so that we could discuss it, and I wanted to give reasons why I consider that to be an excellent idea. However, if the Leader of the Opposition is ready to proceed with his point of order, we should probably deal with that first. If not, I am prepared to give my speech. I agree with Senator Corbin's assertion. In my view, it is ridiculous that this chamber can accept a motion on the condition that somebody else does something.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I am quite prepared to proceed with my point of order; but before making my argument, I would like to get a copy of the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Government and read it, because as I heard it read, it results in the removal of the motion which is before the house and the substitution of a new motion.

Senator Olson: That's right, unless something happens by Wednesday.

Senator MacEachen: The amendment is to strike out the existing motion and put in a new motion—at least, as I read it—that the motion be not now adopted. In other words, that we defeat it and that it be amended. So, it is not an amendment. The words “be amended as follows” are not applicable. The motion that is before the house is totally struck out and a new proposition is put before the house.

What is the amended motion? The amended motion is: “That the motion be not now adopted, but that there be substituted therefor, that unless a message is received . . .” So it is clear that that is a new proposition. It does not even purport to amend or change the main motion. It is a total substitution. I believe that it is elementary in matters of procedure that it is impossible to introduce a totally new proposition unless it is by notice and in the form of a substantive motion. That is all the argument I want to make, because the procedural objection is, I think, quite self-evident.

• (1450)

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, I wish I were as confident as my honourable friend that the motion in amendment is out of order. I am not nearly as sure as he is that it should not be accepted. Regardless of the wording that the honourable senator has read to us, what is the substance of this matter? Are we saying that we should not have a Committee of the Whole? No, we are not.

Senator Olson: Yes, you are.

Senator Roblin: We are saying that we will have a Committee of the Whole unless something else happens. We are saying that there is a condition precedent; namely, that we should have heard from the other place as to whether or not we should have a joint committee. If we do not have a joint committee, then we will have a committee of our own. It seems to me that this is not a new motion, as my honourable friend states, but that it is clearly a modification of the existing motion. It modifies that motion as to time. That is what it does, and that is the only thing it does.

Senator MacEachen: May I ask Senator Roblin in what way it modifies the existing motion? It makes no effort to modify the existing motion. It substitutes a new motion for the existing one. If it were an amendment to the existing motion, then I would have to reconsider my position. If this motion were put by the Chair, the motion which I have put will disappear, and, therefore, it is not a modification.

Senator Roblin: I just do not agree with my honourable friend. I think it modifies the original idea by imposing a time element that was not previously there. That is what it does. It modifies the motion with respect to time, and that is all it does. I think it is an amendment and not a new substantive motion.

I am perfectly well aware that we will not settle this particular argument here today. At least, I would be surprised if we did. However, speaking for myself, I cannot accept the objections raised against this amendment. I think it is in order and that it ought to be proceeded with, and if there is substantial objection by honourable senators, then I think we ought to ask the Speaker to tell us what the rules are.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I rise on the point of order. I point out to the Senate that it was the intention of the opposition originally to have a vote this afternoon, and later on their position changed and they decided they would adjourn the debate this afternoon. All this motion does is delay a decision until next Wednesday, which involves one day, for the specific purpose of finding out the intention of the House of Commons. In no way does it eliminate the Committee of the Whole. Unless by next Wednesday the House of Commons has extended an invitation or passed a resolution, the Senate is still free to proceed with the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole would not have proceeded before next Wednesday under any present circumstances, so it is not interfering with the committee. It is not altering the intention of the original motion in any way. I ask that the Chair, in making its ruling, bear this point in mind. The committee which would follow from the intention of the Opposition at the present time would not exist before next Wednesday in any event, so this motion in no way alters the original motion.

Senator Frith: Do you want to wait until next week and move the adjournment of the debate?

Hon. John B. Stewart: Honourable senators, Senator Phillips has not addressed the point of order. He has talked about what would happen in a possible sequence of events, but what we have before us is a point of order. I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition is correct. Let us see what the minister is proposing to do. He is proposing two distinct steps. He is proposing, first, that the Senate agree that the main motion be not now adopted. If the minister wishes to vote against Senator MacEachen's motion, he does not have to attempt to amend it. He can simply rise and vote against it. That would be in order.

However, the minister is not satisfied to do that. He wants to put a new and different motion on the order paper of the Senate. There is a technique by which the minister can put a new motion on the order paper of the Senate. He can give notice of his motion, notice of quite a different motion, the one he is attempting to smuggle in by means of a purported amendment. I submit that he cannot achieve the setting aside of Senator MacEachen's motion by a purported amendment, which would have the effect of replacing that motion with an entirely different proposition. He is eliding two things illicitly here; consequently, his motion in amendment must be ruled out of order.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I simply draw your attention to the fact that the original motion moved by the honourable the Leader of the Opposition is:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

The amendment that I am proposing would add the following words:

That unless a message is received from the House of Commons by Wednesday, June 17, 1987, inviting the Senate to participate in a special joint committee on the Constitution, the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord—

That does not seem to me to negative the original motion; it modifies it. Frankly, I was seeking a procedural way to save time. I did not want to put the Senate in the position where we would have to start all over again if we accepted this motion and then received a message from the House of Commons asking us to concur in the formation of a joint committee. We would have to have another debate, at which time the Senate might find itself in the very unwelcome position of having to defy a message to concur from the House of Commons.

Senator Frith: Perish the thought! Are we never supposed to do that? Is nothing sacred?

Senator Murray: I thought that this amendment I proposed covered us on all fronts, that if the House of Commons sent us a message asking us to concur in a joint committee—

Senator Guay: If!

Senator Murray:—we would then agree to that, as is almost always—certainly always in my experience—the disposition of the Senate. If the House of Commons did not send such a message within a week, if, for example, they decided to have a committee of their own, then we would do as the Leader of the Opposition proposes and go into Committee of the Whole. I thought that I had come upon a way of saving time, of protecting and preserving the traditional relationship between this chamber and the other place, and of moving this project along. I regret if that turns out not to be the case, but naturally I place myself and my amendment in the good hands of Mr. Speaker.

● (1500)

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the form of the amendment is improper because the new motion calls for the defeat of the motion which I made. If Senator Murray's motion were put and carried, it would defeat the original motion.

Senator Murray: It would amend it.

Senator MacEachen: It would be not now adopted; it would be defeated.

Senator Murray: It would amend it.

Senator MacEachen: It says:

... be not now adopted.

In other words, it would be defeated. Those are the words. The words mean something, and, in parliamentary terms, the words "That the motion be not now adopted" mean that it is defeated. Then, by the use of the word "amended" there is substituted a new motion in form, so that I have an objection in form, which is as valid as an objection in substance.

However, as the Leader of the Government has just now said, if this alleged amendment were put and carried, we would then establish a joint committee.

I have another objection which may not be quite procedural, but which is, I think, very substantial, and that is that it is offensive to me that the Leader of the Government would attach a condition to the motion which he himself is in a position to influence, because he knows what is happening in the government; he knows what discussions are taking place as to whether there is to be a motion put before the House of Commons by the government, and we do not know. Also, he is putting a condition in the form of an amendment, a condition which he is able to influence and about which he probably has definite knowledge. So why not come straight out—

Senator Murray: I indicated that to the Senate.

Senator MacEachen:—and then if your intention is to oppose the Committee of the Whole, the clear-cut way to do it is to vote against this motion.

Senator Murray: I was trying to make things easier for you.

Senator MacEachen: I am not having any difficulty, and if I were, I would not expect my honourable friend to help me very much. It has not been my experience in the past that he has been helpful.

I would just reiterate that if I were to retreat to the most certain procedural objection, that objection would be to the form of the motion, and that is enough to rule it out of order.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, perhaps the motion could be amended to say that the debate on this question be postponed until next Wednesday. Would that settle the case?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, the amendment must be dealt with as it is written. We cannot fiddle around to fix it up.

The Hon. the Speaker: I assume that the Leader of the Government would withdraw his motion in amendment and substitute a motion to debate the question next Wednesday. However, I am not an expert.

Senator Frith: But the point of order has to be dealt with, Mr. Speaker, and of course it must be raised when the breach of order takes place, and that is what has happened here. Therefore, what is before you, Mr. Speaker, is a disagreement on a question of order. Under our system, senators settle their own points of order if they can, but we clearly have a disagreement as to whether this motion is in order, so it is now in your hands to rule on that matter. That, of course, interrupts all other proceedings. Therefore, whether at some point someone is going to move the adjournment of the debate on the original motion with the amendment ruled out of order—or with the amendment in order—the question before you right now is: Is the amendment in order? That was the point of order that was raised when the alleged breach took place, and that is what has to be dealt with.

The Hon. the Speaker: In that case, honourable senators, I will take the matter under advisement. I will review the arguments that have been put forth and come with a ruling to the next sitting of the Senate. In the meantime, I suggest that debate on the main motion continue today so as not to delay this matter.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, someone is asking me what I am speaking on. I have heard the Speaker's suggestion that he take the arguments on the point of order under advisement and give a ruling at the next sitting, which I suppose will be tomorrow. If it is agreeable to honourable senators, what I will do is make my views on the original motion known, perhaps discussing as an aside the amendment that was made and giving an indication of what my views would be on that. However, if some senators have some problem with my proceeding on that basis, I am certainly willing to yield the floor. Otherwise, I will carry on as if tomorrow we will get a ruling on the propriety of the amendment that has been moved.

Senator Phillips: I would be quite willing—and, in fact, pleased—to hear the honourable senator, provided he is speaking on the main motion, and does not inflict himself upon us a second time at a later stage by saying that he spoke on the amendment and now he is speaking on the main motion.

Senator Frith: Nice try; he does not have to do that.

Senator Olson: That is a nice try by the honourable senator. I probably would not be speaking a second time anyway, but I can tell Senator Phillips that I am not giving him any undertaking as to whether or not I would be disposed to speak on any motion when I have a right as a senator so to do. Therefore, as someone said, it was a nice try, but I give him no such undertaking.

Honourable senators, my view is that the Senate has a direct constitutional obligation to deal with this matter. It is provided that the Senate must introduce and deal with a resolution that considers amendments put before it. There are some other provisions, such as a six months' suspension, if the Senate does not agree with what is contained in that resolution, but I do not intend to get into that at the moment.

My problem with our failing to set up a committee of the Senate, as is called for in this resolution, is that we would not be carrying out our obligations. Senator Frith's speech dealt at some length with that matter, and I just finished re-reading that speech. I do not intend to raise all of those points, but I can tell you—and I might as well be frank about it in this debate—that I am not willing for the Senate to subject itself to the usual structure following from the difference in numbers between the House of Commons and the Senate, and therefore to be dominated by the House of Commons in carrying out our constitutional and statutory obligations.

Senator Murray: It did not seem to bother you in 1981-82.

Senator Frith: It was a different situation then.

Senator Olson: It was a completely different situation at the time.

Senator Frith: It was a different amending formula.

Senator Olson: I want to tell Senator Murray that what troubles me more than anything else about this Meech Lake accord is that if the changes to the Constitution are carried to their ultimate conclusion, there are a number of things in there that I do not believe can be remedied, even when there is a more responsible government in office federally. The most important problem is the requirement of unanimity for any further amendments to the Constitution in a number of areas. That will put us back into the straitjacket that we suffered for more than 50 years.

● (1510)

Senator Murray came before the Senate and made comment after comment about what he thinks Mr. Turner thinks. Has he anything written down on which to base his opinion that that is what Mr. Turner thinks? Or has he simply gained that impression from what is reported in the newspapers, and then superimposed his own interpretation on that, which has been demonstrated to be faulty over and over again?

Senator Murray: Is Mr. Turner not in favour of this accord, and did he not say that he would vote for it?

Senator Olson: That is not the point. The leader went into more detail, and one of the things he said was, "In the second round we can consider a number of other things." I suppose that was to be the great persuasive argument.

I will ask the Leader of the Government now whether there is going to be another opportunity to remedy the unanimity required in the amending formula in the second round? The answer is, "No." He knows very well that the amending formula, and asking the provinces to give back the veto, is not going to be on the agenda for the second round, or what he has described as the second round. That, honourable senators, is the danger of accepting the Meech Lake accord.

Senator Murray: What is your preferred amending formula?

Senator Olson: There is an excellent one in place now. That is one amending formula. There may be other modifications made, because no government, no matter how good—and the last one was a good one; it lasted 21 years, so it must have been fairly good—and no matter how smart its members are, can predict what the requirements will be of a Constitution, of a government, of a federal structure, and so forth, forever into the future. Therefore, there needs to be a reasonable amending formula.

The problem we had prior to 1982 was that there was the assertion, the concept, or what have you, that there had to be unanimity. When one gets right down to it, that was not really the case. The Supreme Court of Canada was asked to decide that, and said, "Yes, the provinces need to agree." But it did not say how many of the provinces needed to agree.

Senator Murray: You provided for unanimity on some subjects.

Senator Olson: On some, yes.

[Senator Olson.]

Senator Murray: So we are adding to the number of subjects.

Senator Frith: Like all!

Senator Olson: Senator Murray is the Leader of the Government in the Senate. He is also the minister the members of this chamber and the members of the other place look to to lead the discussion, although I know that the Prime Minister is the boss—I have been there before. Is the amending formula going to be on the agenda when the second round takes place?

Senator Murray: It says, "Other subjects." If somebody wants to bring that up—

Senator Olson: Did the leader ask the provinces if they wanted a veto for a little while?

Senator Murray: Well, I told you.

Senator Olson: No, you did not—well, I will accept that. I do not believe that any province is going to give the veto back, and I do not think the leader believes that either. That is what makes this dangerous. I do not believe that we can correct or remedy the straitjacket position that we will have been put into.

Many people blame this on Quebec. It was not always Quebec that held up amending or patriating the Constitution. There have been attempts to amend the Constitution on more than one occasion when it was not Quebec that was the hold out. My own province, once or twice, and even before my political career began, held out. I only need to read history to know that.

Senator Bosa: And Saskatchewan.

Senator Olson: Yes, Saskatchewan and others.

Honourable senators, to be brief, I am not prepared to subordinate the Senate's responsibility to a joint committee of Parliament that will be dominated by members of the House of Commons. Senator Murray's amendment, even if it is found to be in order, is absolutely unacceptable to me, and I hope that my colleagues will share that view, because we have an obligation, and I think it is the Senate's profound responsibility, to take a sober second look at this. Here, in my opinion, is a government going ahead with something as vital to the country as amending the Constitution, and, in my view, doing it in such a way that when this government is tossed out of office—which will be as soon as an election is held—a new government will not be able to remedy the defects, because that unanimity, that straitjacket, will then be in the Constitution if we accept what is now being proposed. A new government will not be able to remedy the situation, because the provinces will not give the veto back.

The Senate's responsibility is to take a sober second look once in a while, and, if not necessarily to stop, then at least to place some stumbling blocks in the way of a government that is proceeding down what I regard to be an irresponsible track.

You do not need to say that someone who does that is not in favour of Quebec joining the Constitution; that is not true. I am as anxious as any member of the Senate to have Quebec sign the Constitution.

By the way, it may not surprise anyone in this chamber to know that we could have had a deal with Quebec a long time ago, including a deal with the separatist government of René Lévesque, if we had offered Quebec a veto. That is no great achievement. But this government gave away more than that. It gave away the authority of the spending power in many fields to the point where we will not have any national standards in some programs in the future.

Senator Murray: Come on!

Senator Olson: Senator Murray ought to know that we know enough about human nature to realize that a province will take the money. I do not care whether it is Alberta, Quebec or Ontario—although perhaps some of the smaller provinces may have a problem with this—but if the provinces are told to bring in the program the way the federal government has set it up, or is offered fiscal compensation for the program, the provinces will take the money every time.

Senator Murray: And?

Senator Olson: And so we will no longer have programs that have a national minimum standard, and that, as far as I am concerned, is a tragedy.

Senator Murray: You clearly do not understand the text.

Senator Roblin: What about the Federal Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Established Programs Financing Act?

Senator Olson: I know about that. When we set that block funding up, it was highly agreeable to the provinces, and for good reason. Yet, we have realized such distortions as some provinces, under a concept of a 50-50 spending arrangement, receiving over 100 per cent of the costs for some of their programs, namely, their program for post-secondary education. Even some fairly wealthy provinces received up to 85 to 90 per cent of the cost under that program, so I know that that has not worked.

Senator Roblin: Perhaps we can make this retroactive and correct some of your mistakes.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, all I am trying to do is make sure that the Parliament of Canada does not make a mistake that cannot be corrected. Therefore, I think the Senate should take its responsibility and establish a committee of the Senate and call whatever witnesses the committee would like to hear. I suppose the committee may want to call the Honourable Senator Murray, although we can question him from his seat in the chamber as far as that is concerned. However, there are a number of other people the committee might want to invite. The committee might want to invite some of the premiers of the provinces to determine whether or not they are ready to give back the veto in the second round.

Senator Barootes: The premiers have already agreed.

Senator Olson: They have agreed, but I want to know whether what Senator Murray said a few minutes ago regarding waiting until the second round has any validity. I do not know whether Premier Bourassa has agreed to say, "We will take the veto for a little while, and for that we will sign, but when the second round comes up, it goes back on the agenda." That is the implication of what he just said. I asked him directly, "Is it on the agenda?" I think his answer was: "I do not think it was; it said other things."

• (1520)

I did not want to make a long speech, I just wanted Senator Murray and other senators to know of my deep concern about this matter. I do not believe that Canada should be thrust back into a straitjacket, but I do not believe that we can avoid it if we pass this accord. Therefore, the Senate should take on its responsibility and go through the process that will lead to that kind of responsible action by this chamber.

Senator Murray: Would the honourable senator permit a question?

Senator Olson: I would like that!

Senator Murray: The honourable senator indicated two reservations that he has about the accord: One relates to the fact that the list of subjects requiring unanimity for an amendment of the Constitution has been added to; and the other objection that he took was to the provision regarding new shared-cost programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

His national leader, Mr. Turner, has already announced that, notwithstanding various reservations that he may have or matters that he thinks can be improved, these matters do not outweigh the important achievement that is realized by this constitutional resolution, and, therefore, he and his colleagues will be voting at the end of the day, if necessary, in favour of the resolution in its present form. Is that Senator Olson's position?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I suppose I can take another 12 or 14 minutes to repeat my position, but I thought that I had set it out clearly and succinctly. I know the trap that Senator Murray is trying to set for me, but I am like an old coyote: I have been around long enough to know that you do not put your feet in those funny little traps, and I will not do so.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will someone adjourn the debate?

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I will move the adjournment.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith, that further debate on the motion be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I should explain that it would be better to have the procedural situation clarified before proceeding.

Senator Roblin: I wonder whether we should adjourn the debate under the circumstances, because it might involve certain problems when the item comes up again, depending on the ruling. I think it should stand on the order paper without the adjournment until the Speaker rules.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, is it agreed?

Senator Frith: No, honourable senators. I agree in a way with Senator Roblin. Certainly if we adjourn the debate until the next sitting of the Senate, when it comes up on the order paper, it will appear as "the motion" and "in amendment." I agree that if at that point the Speaker has not ruled, it will stand over. However, I think that we should adjourn it until the next sitting in the hope that we will have that ruling tomorrow. If we do not, I agree that we will not proceed.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator MacEachen, debate adjourned.

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

CONSIDERATION OF SIXTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget of Agriculture and Forestry), presented in the Senate on June 9, 1987.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I move that the report be adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, that the report be now adopted. Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, if I have found the correct place on the order paper, we are now dealing with these reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration that have to do with allocations of funds to committees. If that is the case, could we be brought up to date as to where we stand? Since the new fiscal year began, we have had substantial appropriations for committees, and my hunch is that we may have substantially overspent the budget that was set up for this matter in the first place.

It is a bit difficult to know where the matter falls when we see half a dozen resolutions with different sums. No doubt we could get a roundup on it to find out how much money we budgeted for and how much money we have allocated up to the present time. I do not know whether it is worth looking into the future, but there may be some other demands on our budget that are foreseeable.

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I can assure Senator Roblin that we have not overspent our original budget for committees.

Senator Roblin: But you have over-appropriated.

[Senator Roblin.]

Senator Frith: However, it is true that if these reports are all adopted, and if each committee spends the full amount allocated, we will be over the budget and will require supplementary estimates to carry on the work of our committees.

If Senator Roblin wants details of that, I would be glad to adjourn the debate and give him the figures tomorrow, but I can tell him that that is the situation. If he wants the actual figures to reflect that situation, I would be glad to adjourn the debate and bring it forward tomorrow.

Senator Roblin: If I could answer the question, I would say that I would be obliged to my friend if he would do that. I am interested to know the total amount of money appropriated, because it is my guess that if it is appropriated, the odds are fairly good that it will have been mostly spent. I want to know where we stand and whether a supplementary estimate appears probable. If, at the same time, my friend can give me any sort of forecast as to where he thinks we will end up, I would be glad to have that, because it looks to me as if we will be substantially over budget.

Senator Frith: I have been given some figures that may be sufficient for Senator Roblin, but he may want a breakdown.

Senator Marshall: They are in the minutes of the committee.

Senator Frith: If the committees spend 100 per cent of this budget, the Senate will be about $660,000 over the original budget for its committee work.

Senator Roblin: What was the original budget?

Senator Frith: I do not have that figure, but I have something else which I will provide.

In past fiscal years we have spent between 60 to 70 per cent of our budget. We need the original figure so that we can make the comparison.

Senator Marshall: Are the figures not in the minutes?

Senator Frith: The figures are contained in the minutes of the Internal Economy Committee. If Senator Roblin wanted them discussed here, then that is where I planned to get them. However, Senator Roblin is right, they are not shown in these reports. In other words, you have to do the arithmetic. The arithmetic has been done, and these totals have been worked out, and $660,000 would be the amount over budget if the committees spent all of their allocations. That has never happened in the past; it has always come to about 60 or 70 per cent. However, for Senator Roblin to know exactly how that 60 or 70 per cent works out in comparison with the $660,000, we will have to have what the budget was and the allocation for it.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, it is my understanding on the points that have been raised that the 60 or 70 per cent of the appropriations which have been spent in the past are history, and those are facts based on past experience. However, am I not correct in saying that when we come for an appropriation for the Senate that it is a rather general appropriation, and if we do not spend money on one particular detail of the Senate administration and there is a surplus there, that that money can be made available within the global Senate budget for committees? I may be in error—this is only my opinion—but it is not separated in all of the details, so that if you go over in one you have to have another appropriation. I think that we have an overall appropriation of money, and that covers our general budget and our general expenditures. If the budget is over by $50,000 for committee work, my guess is that there is a surplus some other place where that money could be found, without necessarily coming back here for another vote.

• (1530)

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I would like to say to Senator Argue that I think he is right, but what disturbs me in his remarks is that he says we will have to guess that the money will be available from another source within the Senate appropriation.

Senator Argue: Someone who knew would have to tell us.

Senator Phillips: I must admit that when we are more than $660,000 over budget, I am beginning to have some doubts about finding it elsewhere.

Senator Argue: But 70 per cent of the total.

Senator Phillips: For clarification, I should like to ask Senator Frith if the $660,000 he quoted included the $315,000 for the Senate Special Committee on the subject matter of Bill C-22, and if it also includes the supplementary budget for the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry that was moved today? Are those items in addition to the $660,000 to which he referred?

Senator Frith: Honourable senators, I have taken note of the question and I will try to get an answer. The figures I gave were figures that were just handed to me.

Senator Roblin: May I adjourn the debate in order to give my friend an opportunity to get the answers?

Senator Frith: Perhaps I should do that in order to furnish the figures. I think it is best that the debate be adjourned in my name.

Senator Roblin: If you do that then I will not have an opportunity to speak again, because you will be closing the debate.

Senator Frith: I started to speak on this order, and I am asking if you will allow me to adjourn the debate. It is only after the matter has been completely discussed that I get my right of reply, and I am not finished with my comments.

Senator Roblin: I am a purist in these matters. Senator Frith has made a speech and I have made one, so the senator has exhausted his right in the first instance. Someone else ought to adjourn the debate, and not Senator Frith. I will undertake that arduous task.

Senator Frith: I think it will result in exactly the opposite situation. When someone speaks on a debate, they are entitled to ask the Senate for an adjournment of the debate in their own name, as Senator Marshall has done on the NFB matter. It is quite acceptable for a senator to speak to an order and then, rather than sitting down, ask to adjourn the debate in his name. The senator has not then exhausted his right to speak and can continue. If that application is refused, that senator cannot then speak on the debate.

If we do not adjourn it in my name, and then Senator Roblin speaks, say, tomorrow, and then I speak, then I will be closing the debate. Someone else may want to speak. I would find myself in the position of not being able to provide any of the answers because I would be closing the debate.

For that reason I think it is better that the debate be adjourned in my name, and I will continue tomorrow and give the figures. Then, if I speak later, it will close the debate.

Senator Roblin: My point is on an entirely different matter altogether. I am not questioning the custom we have here of a speaker adjourning the debate before he is finished and allowing him to continue again later on. I am simply saying that there has been intervening business in this discussion, namely, my speech, and that has foreclosed Senator Frith from adjourning the debate, because he is through on his first go around. I do not think it is worth any more than a casual comment, but it seems to me that I am right.

Senator Frith: Have it your way. It seems to me that it just makes it worse. Carry on however you wish.

Senator Roblin: I do not care.

The Hon. the Speaker: Would someone else move the adjournment?

Senator Frith: If someone else moves the adjournment of the debate, let us be clear, it means that I have finished. I have spoken once on this matter. Then, tomorrow when everyone is waiting for the figures and I stand up and give the figures, I will be closing the debate.

Senator Argue: We will give you unanimous consent to give the figures without closing the debate.

Senator Frith: Why not give me the right to adjourn the debate now? That respects the rules.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Roblin—

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The Hon. the Speaker: —that further debate be adjourned until the next sitting of the Senate.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SENIOR CITIZENS

OBSERVATION OF SPECIAL WEEK IN TRIBUTE—ORDER STANDS
On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Croll, seconded by the Honourable Senator Robertson:

That the Senate recommends to the Government of Canada and to individuals and organizations in Canada that, in honour of the senior citizens of this country, the last complete week of August of this year and of each and every year thereafter, be kept and observed throughout Canada as "Senior Citizens' Week" as a way of paying tribute to the diverse contributions being made to Canada by the older citizens of our society.—(Honourable Senator Marshall).

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I adjourned this debate a couple of weeks ago, but I am willing to allow anyone who wants to speak to it to do so before I speak in about a week or so.

Order stands.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION TO REFER FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—MOTION IN AMENDMENT—POINTS OF ORDER—SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I should like to make my ruling on Senator Murray's motion in amendment to Senator MacEachen's motion of yesterday.

Honourable senators, in my opinion, Senator Murray's amendment is beyond the scope of the motion proposed by Senator MacEachen. It sets forth a new proposition which was not contemplated by Senator MacEachen's motion.

I have carefully consulted the parliamentary authorities and I find the following citations:

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 437, (1) and (2), read as follows:

(1) An amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved. Journals, February 26, 1923, p. 122.

(2) An amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice. Journals, October 16, 1970, p. 28.

A similar precedent occurred in October 1980, which may be found on page 474 of the Senate Journals. On that occasion the Speaker ruled the amendment out of order, based on citation 437 of Beauchesne's.

I came to the same conclusion in reading May, 20th Edition, page 557, which reads:

Furthermore, an amendment may not be moved to insert words at the beginning of a clause with a view to bringing forward an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause.

I must therefore rule that the amendment is out of order.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, with regard to the ruling of the Speaker, naturally I accept it with as much good grace as I can summon in the circumstances. I simply observe that His Honour found the motion out of order not for the reasons advanced by Senator MacEachen; I believe Senator Corbin can take more credit for the decision that was made.

HON. ROBERT MUIR
HON. HEATH MACQUARRIE

TRIBUTES ON THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST ELECTION TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that today four of our colleagues begin their 31st year as parliamentarians. It was 30 years ago yesterday, on June 10, 1957, that four of our colleagues were first elected to the House of Commons. I refer to the Honourable Senator David Walker, the Honourable Senator Orville Phillips, the Honourable Senator Heath Macquarrie and the Honourable Senator Robert Muir.

As honourable senators know, Senator Walker served in the House of Commons until 1962, at which time he was appointed to the Senate. He also served as a member of the Diefenbaker administration. Senator Phillips served in the House of Commons until 1963, at which time he was appointed to the Senate. Senator Muir, if my memory serves me well, was appointed to the Senate in 1978, and Senator Macquarrie was appointed to the Senate in 1979.

Naturally, I feel that I, and the members of my party, owe Senator Phillips a special debt because of the excellent work he does in the difficult and exacting job as Chief Government Whip in the Senate. Senator Muir is a long-time friend with whom I have been associated since his first election in 1957 in what was then the constituency of Cape Breton-North Victoria. Senator Macquarrie has also been a close friend of mine during most of the 30 years that he has spent on the Hill, and he is a well known and respected internationalist as well as a staunch and loyal son of Prince Edward Island.

I simply rise to draw the attention of the Senate to this remarkable anniversary, and to express the hope that these four colleagues will continue in good health in their service and in contributing to the work of this Parliament, this chamber and their country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I want to say just a brief word to associate myself with the comments made by the Leader of the Government. Each of these senators, who are celebrating such an important anniversary, served, before his arrival here, in the House of Commons. I had, I think, the honour of serving with them in the House of Commons, where I got to know both their great virtues and maybe some of their inadvertent lapses. All I can say is that the Senate has not changed them entirely, and certainly not in the case of Senator Phillips.

Hon. Joyce Fairbairn: Honourable senators, I believe there has been a glaring omission. There is another one among us who was first elected at that time as well, and he is a very loyal Albertan of whom we in Alberta are very proud, Senator Bud Olson.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, we are proud of all the members of this chamber, whether they are celebrating a birthday, an anniversary or the number of years they have contributed to the House of Commons and the Senate. However, I think we would be remiss today if we did not mention the fact that Senator Denis was first elected in 1935, and that he has been in the Senate since 1963.

Senator Argue: The Dean of Canada.

Senator Murray: Honourable senators, so strong is historical myth that I had come to believe that only Progressive Conservatives were elected in that first Diefenbaker Parliament. As it happens, it was a minority government that Mr. Diefenbaker formed, and it was not until the next year, 1958, that he swept the west.

Senator Hastings: Whipped us all.

Senator Murray: I thank Senator Fairbairn for drawing to our attention the fact that Senator Bud Olson was elected, along with a number of other members of the Social Credit Party from western Canada, in that election in 1957. He had a brief sabbatical from Parliament, I believe. He was defeated in 1958. He returned in 1962, and he remained in the House of Commons until 1972. He has had a very remarkable career. He made himself something of an expert on the rules in the House of Commons, and has made himself an expert on just about everything else since he came to the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator Murray: I wish him much happiness and continued service.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT ADJUSTMENTS (PENSION PAYMENTS) BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-50, respecting the treatment of pension payments in determining certain unemployment insurance benefit entitlements and to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

[Senator MacEachen.]

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that Bill C-50 be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I have spoken to Senator Phillips about how we might deal with this bill. I have no objection to its being dealt with later this day, but, if we are to have a vote, as anticipated, on the motion to establish a Committee of the Whole on the Meech Lake accord, leave must be conditional on that taking place before the debate on Bill C-50 starts.

Senator Phillips: In an effort to meet the coercion being exercised by Senator Frith, might I suggest to him that we have the vote in the Maple Leaf Lounge at the airport?

Senator Frith: Why don't you have your vote there and we will have ours here?

Senator MacEachen: Well spoken.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted?

Senator Frith: On that condition. I believe that in the Orders of the Day, Bill C-50 appears before the vote on the establishment of a Committee of the Whole because of the precedence given to bills. However, in this case, since leave is necessary, the leave would be conditional on its coming up after the vote on the order dealing with Committee of the Whole.

The bill can stay where it is on the Orders of the Day, but, when it is called, I reserve the right to say that I do not give leave to proceed at that point. I would be quite happy to proceed with it immediately after the order dealing with the constitutional matter.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is that condition acceptable to Senator Phillips?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: With leave of the Senate, and notwithstanding rule 44(1)(f), it is moved by the Honourable Senator Phillips, seconded by the Honourable Senator Kelly, that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day. Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Senator Frith: Later this day, in the context I mentioned.

The Hon. the Speaker: The condition was accepted by Senator Phillips.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-59, to provide for payments in respect of exploration for or development of lands for the production of hydrocarbons in Canada other than coal.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, June 16, 1987.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG PRICES

EFFECT OF PROPOSED PATENT ACT AMENDMENT— PRESENTATION OF PETITION

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present the following petition:

TO THE HONOURABLE THE SENATE OF CANADA, IN PARLIAMENT ASSEMBLED

The petition of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your Petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy,

HUMBLY SHEWETH

WHEREAS, the proposed changes to the Patent Act will affect directly all Canadians who are not protected by private or governmental medicare programs, and

WHEREAS the federal government's proposals will raise the cost, already high of the provincial health-care programs, and

WHEREAS the monopoly granted to innovative pharmaceutical companies will prevent competition from generic companies and will result in an increase of drug cost and prices and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs, and,

WHEREAS the proposed changes to the Patent Act are another example of the Canadian government's concession in the Free Trade negotiations with the United States, at the expense of everyday Canadians.

WHEREFORE, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

PRIVATE BILL

WINDSOR-DETROIT TUNNEL—FIRST READING

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition) presented Bill S-11, to authorize the City of Windsor to acquire, operate and dispose of the Windsor-Detroit Tunnel.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

On motion of Senator Frith, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Tuesday next, June 16, 1987.

BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

FOURTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. Ian Sinclair: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce has the honour to present its Fourteenth Report respecting power to incur special expenses pursuant to the procedural guidelines for the financial operation of Senate committees.

I ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and the Debates of the Senate of this day and that it form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of report, see Appendix "A", p. 1224.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Sinclair, report placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED AND PRINTED AS APPENDICES

Hon. Earl A. Hastings: Honourable senators, the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has the honour to present its Third and Fourth Reports respecting power to incur special expenses pursuant to the procedural guidelines and the financial operation of Senate committees.

I ask that each report be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate and to the Debates of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(For text of Third Report, see Appendix "B", p. 1227. For text of Fourth Report, see Appendix "C", p. 1230.)

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these reports be taken into consideration?

On motion of Senator Hastings, reports placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting of the Senate.

PRIVATE BILL

YELLOWKNIFE ELECTRIC LTD.—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Joan Neiman, Chairman of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs, presented the following report:

Thursday, June 11, 1987

The Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs has the honour to present its

EIGHTH REPORT

Your Committee, to which was referred the Bill S-10, An Act to revive Yellowknife Electric Ltd. and to provide for its continuance under the Canada Business Corporations Act, has, in obedience to the Order of Reference of Tuesday, June 2, 1987, examined the said Bill and now reports the same without amendment.

Respectfully submitted.

JOAN B. NEIMAN
Chairman

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

On motion of Senator Phillips, bill placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Orville H. Phillips, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), moved:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 16, 1987, at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I wonder if Senator Phillips would mind standing his motion until Senator Frith returns. I want to make sure that he is apprised of the proposal.

Senator Phillips: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES RELATIONS

NATURAL GAS EXPORTS—U.S. REGULATORY COMMISSION'S DECISION—REQUEST FOR ANSWER

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate if he has a report that will be in the Delayed Answers today in reply to questions about the natural gas transportation charges that I raised the day before yesterday.

Honourable senators, I would also like to give notice that next Wednesday I will raise some questions about the Acreage Deficiency Program for 1987. I want the Leader of the Government in the Senate to know that I appreciate the reply I got yesterday that the payments for 1986 have finally been put in the mail. But we have not yet heard what the government intends to do with respect to this for 1987, bearing in mind that the price of wheat went down a further 18 per cent. I am not asking the question today, but I want him to know that next Wednesday I will.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, I do not have anything under Delayed Answers, but I have some notes on the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission matter.

My notes indicate that over the past six months four Canadian ministers and the Prime Minister have raised the issue with their American interlocutors as part of a coordinated collective effort to deal with this important issue. In addition, our embassy has pursued the matter vigorously. Despite our efforts, it appears that we have not succeeded.

The Canadian government is extremely disappointed at the FERC order agreed at the commission meeting on May 27. The ruling marks a serious setback in our joint efforts to move toward market-oriented energy trade, and runs counter to the joint undertaking on trade made by the President and Prime Minister at the Quebec Summit in March 1985.

• (1420)

This decision will not serve the long-term trade objectives of either the Americans or Canadians, their major trading partners. The decision is particularly disturbing in light of our extensive mutual energy interests. The ruling interferes with contracts which had been freely negotiated in accordance with guidelines established by our two governments.

The implementation of the decision will extend U.S. regulation into Canada, with the resulting extraterritorial effect on Canadian toll design. This is inconsistent with the long history of acceptance of each other's regulatory practices.

CANADA-FRANCE FISHERIES AND BOUNDARIES AGREEMENT

FRENCH EXPLORATION IN DISPUTED ZONE—ROLE OF PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, yesterday the Honourable Leader of the Opposition asked me whether the President of France, when he was here some days ago, had alerted the Canadian government to the possible issuance of licences in the disputed area around St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Yesterday I stated that I had no reason to believe that that was the case. I have since confirmed that the President did not discuss this matter in advance with the Canadian ministers during his stay here.

TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PUBLIC PARKING

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government in the Senate and I hope that he will be able to get an answer for me from the Minister of Transport.

At the Winnipeg International Airport there were approximately 100 parking spots available for citizens to park their cars whilst picking up or dropping off passengers. This parking area was directly opposite the main door to the airport, with easy access to Air Canada and CP—which has now been renamed “Canadian”. For 25 cents, citizens could park their cars for 15 minutes, and if you wanted to leave your car for half an hour it cost 50 cents. This was very convenient.

However, recently five rental-car companies, including Budget, Hertz, Tilden, Avis and Thrifty, have been allowed to park their cars in that lot, and they take up 50 of those parking spots. Now, when citizens, for whatever reason, must park at the airport, they have to park a considerable distance away from the airport. I am sure that these 50 spots could be better utilized by the public in general.

Therefore, my questions are: First, I would like to know why this situation has developed. My second question is: How much do those car rental companies pay for those spaces, since I am sure the revenue from the public parking in that area would be just as great?

Honourable senators, this is rather an urgent matter not only for myself but for the public in general. Last weekend there was a real schemozzle at the airport, because people could not find a place to park. Surely these rental car companies could park their rental cars a little farther afield, since they usually have jockeys who go and pick up the cars to bring to their customers at the airport, especially since their use of this parking area is causing great inconvenience to the public in general.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move:

That when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, June 16, 1987, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

PATENT ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Cogger, seconded by the Honourable Senator David, for the second reading of the Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.—(Honourable Senator Doody).

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, if any senator wishes to speak to this matter, Senator Doody will yield.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): I believe that most of us are awaiting the report of the committee.

Order stands.

THE CONSTITUTION

MOTION TO REFER FIRST MINISTERS' ACCORD AND AGREED TEXTS TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE—DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.—(Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C.).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, I must inform the Senate that if Senator MacEachen speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

MOTION IN AMENDMENT

Hon. Finlay MacDonald: Honourable senators, I accept the fact that there are possibly some senators who have not embraced the accord with the same enthusiasm as I have. I would have thought that the position of those senators—who might, for whatever reason, be opposing or suggesting amendments to the accord—would be appreciably enhanced were public hearings to be conducted through a joint committee of both houses. Those senators could speak at length against the accord or could propose certain amendments to it. They could possibly delay those proceedings, thus hampering the resolution in the other house.

Therefore, in an effort to be of some assistance to them, I move, seconded by Senator Barootes:

That the motion be amended by deleting the words "Committee of the Whole" and substituting the following words therefor: "Special Joint Committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons, to consist of five senators and twelve members of the House of Commons, to be appointed at a later date".

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Shall I put the motion in amendment?

Senator MacEachen: I am rising on a point of order. This motion is so transparently out of order that it almost ought not to be dealt with in this way. This is a substantive motion—one that is entirely different from the motion which is before the house. A motion cannot be amended by bringing in a totally different proposition. This amendment requires notice to place it on the order paper, as would any substantive motion. What is before the house is a proposal to establish a Committee of the Whole. In the normal course, that motion would be dealt with—it would either be adopted or negatived—and that is the proposition.

Senator MacDonald has brought forward a separate proposition to establish a joint committee. The two are totally separate propositions. If, for example, this motion to establish a Committee of the Whole were carried, we would expect, as the Leader of the Government has said, a message to come from the House of Commons proposing a joint committee. That would be dealt with in the normal course. That motion would require notice, because it would be a separate and substantive motion of its own.

● (1430)

If I may read the ruling of the Speaker made a few moments ago, he stated:

I came to the same conclusion in reading May's, 20th Edition, page 557 which reads:

Furthermore, an amendment may not be moved to insert words at the beginning of a clause with a view to bringing forward an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause.

So, it is an alternative scheme. I think the understanding of the situation is somewhat enhanced by stating that the Senate can come to a decision on the question of the Committee of the Whole. Whichever way it goes, it leaves the Senate open to deal with a joint committee, which is a separate proposition. It is surprising to me that an alternative scheme could be advanced in the form of an amendment so quickly upon the authoritative ruling of the Speaker. I simply say that it is out of order. When this motion is disposed of one way or another, it will be open to the Senate to deal with the question of a joint committee on its own merits, as has been done in the past by the Senate.

[Senator MacDonald.]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacDonald—

Hon. H.A. Olson: Honourable senators, I think the first thing the Speaker has to do is rule on whether the motion is in order.

Senator Frith: No, because he has not been asked to.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: I was not asked to rule on that. I have to put the motion before the Senate.

Senator Murray: There is an amendment to the motion.

Senator Petten: That was ruled out of order.

Hon. Lowell Murray (Leader of the Government and Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Honourable senators, an amendment has been moved by Senator MacDonald to which the Leader of the Opposition has taken objection. He has contended that the amendment was out of order. Whatever else he may be, he is not Pope Pius IX. We do not accept his word as necessarily infallible. I would ask Your Honour to rule on the matter.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, let us be clear. The Vatican is in no way involved. Perhaps Senator Murray has forgotten that our procedure is that senators decide their points of order. If a senator rises on a point of order, expresses his or her point of order, and if no one quarrels with that, then the Speaker is not called upon to make a ruling, as the Speaker pro tempore has said.

If you are now asking him, that is fine, but do not try to impeach the earlier proceeding when the Speaker was absolutely right. Nobody had asked for a ruling. Nobody had quarrelled with the interpretation given by the Speaker and read by Senator MacEachen. So the Speaker pro tempore correctly made no ruling.

If you are now asking for a ruling, and if you disagree with it—

Senator Murray: I am asking for a ruling.

Senator Frith: Just so we get it straight. The leader is now asking for a ruling.

[Translation]

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, Senator Murray has been seeking a ruling from the Speaker. On the basis of the ruling given by the Chair earlier today, it is difficult to consider the motion in order because it completely changes the substance of the main motion. Bound as I am by the Speaker's ruling, I must find the motion out of order.

[English]

Senator Frith: Question, please.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, if the Honourable Senator MacEachen speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion.

Senator MacEachen: Honourable senators, I will not take a long time in closing the debate, because I think the major points have been made.

I listened with great interest yesterday to the Leader of the Government in the Senate on the motion to set up a Committee of the Whole to examine the Meech Lake accord and subsequent texts. Of course, his address consisted mainly of political comment and analysis of the alleged situation with the Liberal Party, a puff piece on the Prime Minister, and an effort to elicit my views on the Meech Lake accord. He suggested that there was a break between the leader of our party, Mr. Turner, and the Liberal caucus, and between Mr. Turner and myself on the Meech Lake accord. Nothing that has been said justifies that allegation whatsoever.

However, if there were a break between the leader of our party and a member of the party, it ought not to scandalize the Leader of the Government, because he has been an adept practitioner at breaking with the leader of his own party. I cite only two occasions when he did so.

Yesterday he talked about the Prime Minister, and I quote him:

And as I have said before, we must not forget the extraordinary leadership and national vision of Prime Minister Mulroney, without whom this Accord would not have been achieved.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear!

Senator MacEachen: That is what I call “puffing up” the Prime Minister.

But he did not always have that view about this man of “extraordinary leadership and national vision.” I remember reading in One-Eyed Kings Mr. Murray’s assessment of Brian Mulroney’s constitutional views when Mr. Trudeau’s amendments were before the country, and I quote:

“Brian tends to be pretty simplistic when it comes to strategy,” said Lowell Murray, who had gone to university in Nova Scotia with him.

Who would know better? The simplistic approach has been exchanged now for “extraordinary leadership and national vision.” His appreciation for the Prime Minister will undoubtedly increase as his standing in the cabinet and his assignments improve and are enhanced.

Maybe I should read another one. He stated:

“He goes for the big splash. He supported Trudeau’s constitutional position not because he had thought about it for five minutes, but because he was so thrilled by the sheer bravado of it all. That position would not have served us very well.”

I do not mind that. Why not have a different view from the leader of your party? But surely a man who has that kind of skeleton in his closet should not twit the rest of us. One should look in the closet first to see what is there.

Then, again, we have the case of the constitutional changes, with the votes in the House of Commons and the Senate in December 1981. It is interesting to look back, because memory is faulty. The actions of an obscure senator like Senator Murray in those days did not attract great attention, but now they are of even historical interest, because he has become an architect of our nation. So what did this architect do in 1981 when his leader, Mr. Clark, supported the constitutional resolution in the House of Commons? Well, when it came to the Senate, he voted against it. He voted against his own leader, as did the then Leader of the Opposition, Senator Flynn. They voted against the view of the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons. When I get to that point—

• (1440)

Senator Murray: We are waiting.

Senator MacEachen:—it will be time to talk about breaks. So I just say, don’t raise these questions at all, because there is no validity in them with respect to this particular caucus and with respect to this motion that is before us.

The motion seeks to have an examination on the Meech Lake accord and the subsequent texts. It makes no judgment upon the substance. It makes no pre-judgment of how the Senate or any individual senator will deal with the resolution when it comes. That resolution will be the moment of truth for each one of us, because at that point each senator will either vote for or against it. In my experience, it would be unwise to anticipate the results, for example, of the examination that will be made by the House of Commons and the possible amendments that might be made in the House of Commons. It is conceivable that the present government will be as amenable to amendments sought by opposition parties as was the former government, when it changed its proposals as a result of public hearings and after hearing the views of the opposition. So it is conceivable that there will be amendments. The Constitution-makers, in assigning a role to the Senate—it is quite true, as the Leader of the Government said yesterday, that it may be a different role from that of the House of Commons—assigned it a different role which envisages that the Senate will take into account the constitutional resolution as it is finally passed by the House of Commons, because the clock starts ticking on the Senate when the constitutional resolutions are passed in the House of Commons.

When the resolution is dealt with in the House of Commons, the Senate has 180 days within which to deal with the constitutional proposals. As the Leader of the Government said yesterday, if the proposals fail to pass in that period, the Senate would not block nor could it block the conclusions reached by the House of Commons. So, today, it is quite impossible to know what will be before the Senate or, indeed, what will finally be passed by the House of Commons. However, what we are interested in is to hear witnesses so that we will understand better the meaning, the implications and the impact of this important agreement. Presumably, if we establish an inquiry, senators will be listening carefully and will hear every point of view. Indeed, those who have misgivings may have those misgivings removed by the explanations that are given. Certainly it is my expectation that our understanding will be much improved by this inquiry.

Yesterday the Leader of the Government said that the House of Commons will be forwarding to us a resolution asking us to establish a joint committee. He wondered whether we would defy the House of Commons if they were to make that proposal to the Senate. I suggest that that proposal, if it does come, can be dealt with by the Senate as it chooses to do so.

Senator Murray: What will your position be?

Senator MacEachen: The decision on this particular motion will not pre-judge or preclude any subsequent action by the Senate. I have only to cite one precedent that will clarify the situation, and I thank Senator Godfrey for bringing it to my attention. In 1978, when Bill C-60, dealing with constitutional change, came before the Senate of Canada, the Senate joined in a joint committee with the House of Commons, and it also set up a special committee of the Senate itself to deal with the constitutional amendments. Senator John Connolly, in proposing his motion to establish a Special Committee of the Senate on the Constitution—

Senator Murray: But not a Committee of the Whole.

Senator MacEachen: —said that the Senate could make its own input in a special committee or a separate committee, and it could also join in a joint committee with the House of Commons. So, the adoption of this motion stands on its own feet. When the message comes from the House of Commons, the Senate will then decide whether it wishes to join with the House of Commons. If the Senate decided to join with the House of Commons, the present situation would be identical, except in one respect, to the situation I described in the case of the constitutional amendments of 1978. The only difference is that in this case it would be a Committee of the Whole whereas in the former case it was a special committee of the Senate. However, in both cases the Senate will have conducted its own inquiry and will have left the door open, if it wishes, to participate with and assist the House of Commons. That is all I have to say. I wanted to make those clarifying comments before the Senate was asked to dispose of this motion.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator MacEachen, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Frith:

That the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord and texts subsequently agreed to be referred to a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of hearing witnesses and making a report.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Yes.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

[Senator MacEachen.]

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators in favour of the motion please say, "yea"?

Some Hon. Senators: Yea.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Will those honourable senators who are against the motion please say, "nay"?

Some Hon. Senators: Nay.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: In my opinion, the "yeas" have it.

● (1450)

And two honourable senators having risen:

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Please call in the senators.

Motion agreed to on the following division:

● (1510)

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, at this stage it would be normal for the Senate to resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to deal with the election of a chairman and steering committee and to discuss the business of the committee.

However, I suggest that we take the opportunity to confer with the leadership on the other side, and confirm that this matter will appear in that form on the order paper for next Tuesday.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: That is satisfactory, or the whip could nominate the members of the steering committee if that would expedite the procedure. We would be happy to accept that.

Senator Frith: I hope that the two whips will confer and speak to Senator Doody, Senator Murray, Senator MacEachen and myself, and we can finalize our recommendation to the Senate about it.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFIT ENTITLEMENT ADJUSTMENTS (PENSION PAYMENTS) BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Brenda M. Robertson moved the second reading of Bill C-50, respecting the treatment of pension payments in determining certain unemployment insurance benefit entitlements and to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971.

She said: Honourable senators, I am pleased to speak about the provisions contained in Bill C-50. This bill contains changes needed to implement certain measures that were announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration some time ago, which will enable the Employment and Immigration Commission to commence payment of benefits to thousands of people affected by the legislation.

Before we continue, honourable senators, we must remember what unemployment insurance represents. Unemployment insurance is an element of great importance, historically, to the fabric of Canadian life.

Unemployment insurance began in Canada in 1940. In the years since then Canada has evolved greatly. There has been rapid change in the economy, in the labour market and in social legislation and values. Honourable senators, unemployment insurance today remains a temporary income protection for many—retaining its original reason for being—while for others it has become an income maintenance plan.

Unemployment insurance, during this past decade, has consistently paid out more in benefits per year than any other single program at any level of government, except old age security.

The introduction of seasonal benefits in the 1940s altered the strict insurance principles of the program. Supplementary benefits in 1950 and the special program of benefits for self-employed fishermen were even greater departures from the insurance nature of income protection between jobs.

The bill before us today, honourable senators, is a bill containing special measures—measures needed to implement certain promised changes.

Honourable senators, Bill C-50, the law which takes pensions into account in determining the eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits, and which modifies the 1971 Unemployment Insurance Act, will make three important changes for Canadian workers. The measures proposed in this bill will affect many Canadians directly. This bill proposes changes that demonstrate the commitment of this government to ensuring fair and equitable treatment for all workers.

You will remember that on April 5 of this year certain changes were made to the pension regulations. Passage of Bill C-50 is needed to make the effect of these regulatory changes to the pension regulations retroactive to January 5, 1986.

Since January 5, 1986, pension income from employment, whether as a lump sum or as a regular payment, has counted as earnings for unemployment insurance. Some people have claimed that they received inaccurate information on the subject of the changes made on January 5, 1986, concerning pension income. The government recognizes that some people decided to retire before January 5, believing that they could benefit from unemployment insurance. We took their concerns into serious consideration and decided to provide a transitional period for these people. It will allow CEIC to treat all claims for unemployment insurance benefits filed before January 5, 1986, under the rules in effect at that time.

During the month of January 1986 claimants found that the amount of their unemployment insurance benefits was either eliminated or reduced because of their pension income. Under the provisions of this bill, any claim for unemployment insurance benefits filed before January 5, 1986, will not be affected by pension income.

Basically, the change is this: Those who applied for unemployment insurance prior to January 5, 1986—those who applied under the previous rules—will have their entitlement to benefits determined under the previous rules. Equally straightforward, those who applied for benefits on or after January 5, 1986, will be governed by the new provisions.

Honourable senators, this bill will also allow the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission to apply the recent April 5 change on subsequent employment retroactively to January 5, 1986. It will allow for full UI benefits to be paid to claimants receiving a pension if their claim was based on employment obtained after the start of the pension.

● (1520)

This provision, honourable senators, takes into account the fact that there is a difference between people who retire and leave the labour market and people who retire and begin subsequent careers. These people should be treated fairly and equitably as active members of the labour force. Should they become unemployed, they will be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits based on their income, regardless of their previous pension income.

Finally, to ensure fairness and equity in the treatment of separation payments, this bill will allow the CEIC to extend either the qualifying or benefit period of any claim for UI benefits when separation payments prevent the payment of UI benefits or delay the start of a UI claim.

Under the present regulations, separation pay can delay the start of a claim and can, in certain cases, reduce the number of insurable weeks that CEIC counts to establish a claim for benefits.

The passage of Bill C-50 will allow the qualifying period or the benefit period to be extended by the same number of weeks represented by the separation pay, up to a maximum of 104 weeks. This will ensure that most people do not lose the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Program.

In conclusion, honourable senators, these changes to the pension legislation are consistent with the government's belief that persons who have retired from the labour market should not look to unemployment insurance as a supplementary source of income. At the same time, we are assuring that those people who retire to undertake a new career are treated in a fair and equitable manner, considering that they continue to take an active part in the labour market.

I do not know whether honourable senators want this bill referred to committee or whether you want to debate it here on Tuesday and conclude all stages in the house, so I await your direction.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, Senator Marsden will be speaking on this bill for our side. She is not here today; she is in Quebec City. We expect that she will speak to it on Tuesday, and that is the normal time to decide whether it should go to committee or not. I believe that she intends to have a word with Senator Robertson and discuss that.

Senator Robertson: Fine.

Senator Frith: We will be open to whatever motion they settle upon, either for third reading without committee study at the next sitting, or for reference to the committee, in case they feel there is an advantage to have a committee study.

On motion of Senator Frith, for Senator Marsden, debate adjourned.

[Senator Robertson]

INTERNAL ECONOMY, BUDGETS AND ADMINISTRATION

CONSIDERATION OF SIXTEENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Frith, seconded by the Honourable Senator Langlois, for the adoption of the Sixteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration (budget of Agriculture and Forestry), presented in the Senate on 9th June, 1987.—(Honourable Senator Frith).

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition): Honourable senators, I now have the information that I did not have yesterday with respect to this report in answer to some questions raised by Senator Roblin. I am quoting from the Report of the Subcommittee on Budgets, which is a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. That report is dated Thursday, June 11, 1987—today—and I can report to honourable senators that the main committee adopted this report today.

I quote the report as follows:

The total amount of committee budgets approved by the committee for the fiscal year 1987-88, including the two aforementioned budgets . . .

That is, the Standing Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on the study of natural gas in Canada and the study of the production and use of coal in Canada, those two budgets being $22,964 and $73,774 respectively.

. . . is $1,791,288. As stated in other reports of your Sub-Committee, the total amount allocated for committees in the Senate Estimates is $1,075,000. If committees spend 100% of their budgets, the expected shortfall is therefore $716,288. However, as your Sub-Committee has also noted, during the last few fiscal years, committees have only spent between 60% and 70% of the total funds allocated to them. Your Sub-Committee recommends that the budgetary situation regarding Senate Committees be reviewed later in the fiscal year.

So the decision and the recommendation of our colleagues on that committee are that, since historically we do not spend the full amount of the allocations, at the moment no problem exists in terms of availability of funds, and that, therefore, they do not recommend that the government seek supplementary estimates at this stage to look after the possible shortfall based on the difference between the amount approved of $1,791,288 and the budgeted amount of $1,075,000.

In case Senator Roblin has some further questions, I have detailed breakdowns that I do not propose to put on the record now. Also, I do not intend to ask for adoption of the report if anyone feels that we should wait until Senator Roblin is present. As was the case yesterday, I think it would be better for me to adjourn this order again in my name, so that Senator Roblin can ask some questions, rather than stopping now, and then having the effect of closing the debate if I spoke later.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: I think that would be perfectly agreeable and would show simple courtesy to Senator Roblin.

Honourable senators, yesterday I asked the honourable senator if the amount included the $315,000 for the study of Bill C-22. I am afraid I was distracted this morning in committee. I should have asked that question in committee, but I now ask my honourable friend that question.

Senator Frith: My understanding is that it does include the study of Bill C-22. In other words, honourable senators, these are the figures right up to date.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

CONSIDERATION OF SEVENTEENTH TO TWENTY-EIGHTH REPORTS OF COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the seventeenth to twenty-eighth reports of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, presented in the Senate on June 9, 1987, approving budgets of the following committees:

- 17th Banking, Trade and Commerce;
- 18th Energy and Natural Resources;
- 19th Fisheries;
- 20th Foreign Affairs;
- 21st Legal and Constitutional Affairs;
- 22nd National Finance;
- 23rd Official Languages;
- 24th Regulations and other Statutory Instruments;
- 25th Social Affairs, Science and Technology;
- 26th Social Affairs, Science and Technology;
- 27th Standing Rules and Orders;
- 28th Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

Hon. Royce Frith (Deputy Leader of the Opposition) moved the adoption of the reports.

He said: Honourable senators, in this case also, I think I should move the adjournment of the debate in case Senator Roblin or other senators have some questions on the basis of figures presently before them or available to them.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tempore: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

On motion of Senator Frith, debate adjourned.

HEALTH CARE

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Hazen Argue, pursuant to notice of March 12, 1987, moved:

That a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system and report upon the role that preventative medicine and other preventative measures, together with the provision of a wider range of health services, can play in providing a more effective health care system, thus contributing to the health, happiness and longevity of Canadians; and further to examine how such an improved health care system might modify or control the ever increasing costs of health care;

That twelve Senators, to be designated at a later date, four of whom shall constitute a quorum, act as members of the special committee;

That the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee; and

That the committee present its final report to the Senate no later than twelve months following its establishment.

He said: Honourable senators, I am pleased at this time to move this motion, standing in my name, that a special committee of the Senate be established to examine Canada's health care system. I think honourable senators will agree that over the years Canada has made great progress in establishing a health care system that has been of tremendous value to Canadians. I put this motion forward in a constructive manner, believing that the health care system which we now have needs improvement and change.

Trends across the country indicate that the system is not only very expensive at the moment but that costs are increasing province by province at a rapid rate. The amount of money committed by the people of Canada to the health care system of this country is very large. Canadians, in 1985, spent $39 billion on health care. The federal government spends some 8 per cent of its total budget on health care. Approximately 25 per cent of the provincial budgets is spent on health care. Health care in Ontario represents almost 30 per cent of its budget. Projections suggest that costs will rise at an accelerating rate.

• (1530)

One of the main reasons for that is an aging society. As the years pass, a larger and larger proportion of Canadians will be 65 years of age and over. Therefore, the costs of medical care will rise. Individuals 65 years of age and over accounted for 10 per cent of the population in 1985. That figure will rise to 20 per cent by the year 2031. The proportion of those 75 years of age and over will rise at an even more dramatic rate.

The trend has direct implications for health care costs. While the average number of days in hospital for Canadians of all ages was 1.1 in 1981, the figure was 8.85 for those 65 years of age and over and 14.9 for those 75 years of age and over. Similarly, in the long term care sector, individuals 65 and over average seven times as many days in special care or extended care facilities as do Canadians of all ages. Those 75 and over average 16 times more care days per capita than the population as a whole.

There is a problem in terms of providing adequate care in Canada for our elderly citizens. Sometimes some of those elderly citizens who are not in good health are admitted to hospital for treatment, and after the treatment has been completed and they are ready for discharge, I am informed that in too many cases nobody really comes to take them from the hospital to care for them. The hospitals have a discharge backlog. A number of elderly patients who are ready to be discharged will not be discharged for the reason I have given.

As to the provinces—and I speak mainly about the western provinces, but I suppose that all provinces are having budgetary problems—whether it be Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia, each of them in their budget announcements in 1987 withdrew some of their medical services or made those medical services more expensive. I regret to see this happen. I think that too often it will be the poor who will suffer most. I understand that the law, the rule and the practice now is that there will not be deterrent charges for hospitalization, and I agree with that. But some provinces have worked very hard to reduce the amount of money available to certain patients. I refer to those with diabetes, by way of example. And there is also a reduced amount of money available to those needing chiropractic services per call, per treatment. Alberta has reduced the amount for physiotherapy by some 10 per cent, and British Columbia has asked patients to pay an additional $5, which reduces the provincial expenditure for a physiotherapy treatment from $11.20 to $6.20.

In Saskatchewan there has been an announcement that some 17 teaching positions in Regina will be terminated. After the announcement of the provincial cutbacks in Saskatchewan, we were informed by doctors on television and through other media that 8,500 people in Saskatoon are awaiting surgery, and that any province that cuts back hospital beds or facilities will add to that growing list.

Honourable senators, a question is then raised. There are people who could take both sides, or who could answer the question differently, but that question is: Will these cutbacks result in earlier deaths for some of those people for whom the services will no longer be available or for whom a waiting period will be extended? This is a problem, and it is a serious one, indeed. We need to look at this question in a thorough and constructive way, taking into account all of the facts, hearing representations from people from all parts of Canada—the professions, governments, elected members of legislatures, the many organizations that are interested in health questions, and the rank-and-file people who wish to come forward to contribute.

The aging factor adds to costs. The environment, polluted by one means or another, certainly adds heavily to medical costs. Hazards in the workplace add to medical costs. A survey which I believe was conducted in 1981 in the province of Quebec came forward with findings on the relative costs for and the amount spent on treatments for various kinds of illnesses or afflictions. The No. 1 cost resulted from stress.

[Senator Argue.]

Those people who suffer stress cost the Quebec system more money than people treated for other ailments or afflictions. As our society develops, facing unemployment or the current agricultural crisis as we do, facing technological change and the unemployment resulting from that, I think the stress factor is likely to increase. That is something that should also be examined, and it needs to be considered in any study of Canada's health costs and needs.

There is a growing body of thought to the effect that we should be spending far more on preventive medicine than we now spend. I read that expenditures on preventive medicine amount to only 2 per cent of budgets, and this certainly is a small amount.

The committee could consider preventive measures and what such measures might accomplish, and could consider representations on such diverse and wide ranging régimes as homeopathy, osteopathy, reflexology, holistic medicine, acupuncture, allergy treatments, naturopathy, chiropractic, meditation, herbs, massage, psychic therapy, health foods, diet and exercise.

● (1540)

Exercise is important, nutrition is important, massage treatments can be very healthful. Chiropractors have been brought into the system in many places, and they are considered by the medical profession to be able to make a positive contribution to health.

Meditation and counselling have made an important contribution. One can go across this country and go into a community, even a rather small community, and find a health food store. Those stores are there because people think some of our foods are contaminated, that there are too many additives and that some may be a hazard to health. So, there is an emphasis on raw foods and health foods and alternatives to excessive use of drugs.

I am amazed by the number of Canadians who take an interest in health questions, who give a great deal of thought to the various kinds of treatments and therapies. Ordinary citizens in many, many communities meet together from time to time, on an informal basis, to discuss health questions, to discuss nutrition, to discuss meditation, or perhaps to practise meditation and to engage themselves in a kind of self-help way to improve their health and the health of people with whom they are associated.

It seems to me that ordinary Canadians, not having had the advantage of medical training, nonetheless, are reading widely and studying the whole field of medicare and health practices, and are coming forward with suggestions concerning the health of Canadians and how it should be improved. More and more people believe that health foods have a beneficial effect, that the so-called light medicines such as vitamins and herbs can make a valuable contribution.

There are people in the medical field who believe that Vitamin C, in the main, and Vitamin E, perhaps, as well as higher rates of calcium, can make a contribution to the mental health of Canadians and reduce hypertension and separately and together make a valuable contribution to improved health.

These kinds of therapies or procedures or health practices could be available at a minimum cost, and this is something the committee could assess.

It seems to me that when people are meeting in groups, some small, some large, in many parts of Canada to deal with the subject of improved health, to deal with nutrition, to deal with preventive medicine, to deal with access to a greater range of health procedures, that should tell us something. That should tell us that Canadians are looking not to replace the system that we now have but to make modifications to provide changes and to provide a new perspective on health care and health practices in Canada.

I could go on at great length. I have attended conferences put on by lay people to discuss some of the procedures that do not include dependency on drugs or on surgery, but who are looking to other less costly and less sophisticated means. I spoke at a conference in Winnipeg a few months ago where there were 400 people in attendance. I addressed a conference in Saskatoon where there were some 200 people in attendance, and another health conference in Regina with an attendance of some 200. I was not at a recent health conference in Toronto, but I believe 3,000 people attended. These are people outside the medical profession, who freely volunteer their time and effort to acquire and share knowledge in the health field. They feel that there is room for change, that there are other measures that could add to the system that we now have—preventive measures, less costly measures, measures which would improve the health, the longevity of Canadians and would bring to the whole health care system a greater efficiency and an improvement in the value that we obtain for our dollars.

Another of the aspects of health care that I think seems to be lacking is dedication to the proposition that a healthy mind can result in a healthy body. I have read a survey which took a given number of cancer patients in one group, another given number of cancer patients in another group, the first group taking the attitude "It is all over. I am here for a limited time. There is no hope. The cancer will succeed and I will fail." The other group took the mental attitude "I have a chance. I will lick the cancer. I will get well. I am going to win." The result was that those who were optimistic and programmed their minds to believe that they were going to be well had a higher recovery rate than those who accepted defeat and who programmed their minds for defeat.

We have a conscious mind and a subconscious mind. The subconscious mind is important in the life of any individual. I think part of mental health may well be that we have an optimistic outlook on life, that we say we can win, that we program ourselves for good health and greater accomplishments.

All of the things I have been talking about, I believe, can make a very important contribution to improved health and to getting the whole issue of ever-increasing costs, at some point, under control. This is a very big field. This is a very important field because of the tremendous costs to Canadians and to governments for the health services we now have. This is a tremendous question, a tremendous concern to thinking Canadians, because the cost will increase at a rapid rate because of the ever-increasing age of our population.

The Senate and committees of the Senate are in a good position to make a constructive study to bring in constructive recommendations. Senators represent all areas of Canada. Senators come from all of the provinces of Canada. Over the years our committees have taken an objective approach to the major subjects that have come under review and study. I believe that senators on both sides of the house, if they should agree to support this motion and see that the committee is established and goes forward, will be able to play a constructive role in the interests of financial economy, in the interests of improved health, and in the interests of bringing people together who have various points of view so that collectively in all parts of Canada we can keep all of the good features—of which there are many, and we are proud of them—of our present medical care system. After looking at the problems and opportunities, I am sure we will come forward with recommendations that will be of value to governments and to Canadians in general. Such a committee could consider recommendations to broaden the health services that are available, to bring a greater measure of democracy to the health system, and could make whatever other recommendations that might seem appropriate to help Canadians achieve improved health, happiness and longevity.
